G. W. Goudy was a brickmason and plasterer by trade, and in 1859 came by way of Panama to California, engaging in mining at the Sierra mines, Placer county, until the breaking out of the Civil war. He joined Company K of the Seventh California Volunteer Infantry, his service being mostly against the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged. He then located at Saratoga, Santa Clara county, where he followed the mercantile business and while there was married, May 1, 1871, to Mrs. Harriet E. (McGuire) Purdy, born in Lee county, Iowa. Her father, William McGuire, was born in Kentucky and was brought up in Chillicothe, Ross county, Ohio. On reaching his majority he began farming first in Ross county, Ohio, then in Miami county, Ind., Hancock county, Ill., and Lee county, Iowa. When he went to Iowa the Indians were still wild, and at first the families, for mutual protection, had to live at Fort Keokuk. He served in a company of dragoons in the Black Hawk war and his last days were spent in Fulton county, Ill. The grandfather, Thomas McGuire, was born in Virginia and settled in Kentucky, where he served as fife major in the war of 1812, and the great-grandfather, Thomas McGuire, served in the Revolutionary war with the same rank. William McGuire married Mary Ingersoll, who was born in New Jersey and was the daughter of Benjamin F. Ingersoll, who was an early settler of Ohio, later of Peoria county, Ill. He was also a fife major in the war of 1812. One of his sons, Robert Green, was the father of the celebrated Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Mrs. McGuire died in St. Louis. Of her family of seven children four are living, two of the sons having enlisted in the Civil war: Thomas Jefferson served in a Kansas regiment and resides at Ft. Scott, Kans.; the other, George W., enlisted from Arizona and now resides in Cuba, Ill. Mrs. Goudy was the youngest child and was reared and educated in Lee county, Iowa. In 1860 on account of ill health, she came to California, accompanying the family of Frank Sweeney across the plains in an ox-train to Sacramento, thence to Santa Clara county, where she made her home till 1871. They then removed to Portersville, Tulare county, residing there till 1875, when they located in Hanford. At that time there were only sixteen houses in the town. Five years later they went to Santa Maria, Santa Barbara county, where they resided until September, 1885. All this time Mr. Goudy was engaged in the building business, but on coming to Fresno in 1885 they purchased a five-acre tract of land one mile from J street and eight months later sold it at a big advance. Mr. Goudy died April 26, 1890. He was a Christian gentleman, an Adventist in religion, and as an honorable old soldier was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mrs. Goudy was first married in Gilroy to Stephen Disbrow Purdy, born in Ohio, and who came across the plains to California in 1852. By her first marriage she had two children: Effie May, who died at three years of age, and Charles W., a machinist and musician in Fresno. By the second union there was one child, George Washington, a fruit inspector of Fresno. Mrs. Goudy is a member of the Ladies' Circle of the Grand Army of the Republic, is also a member of the Adventist Church, and is an ardent Republican.

FIELDING GUY BURNS. The years which have passed over the head of Fielding Guy Burns, one of Tulare county's oldest pioneers, have brought to him and to the country many changes. When he first came to this section of the state the country was unimproved and uncultivated, antelopes and elk and other wild animals were roaming over the plains, and there was nothing to presage the prosperity and growth of which the county was capable. To such men as Mr. Burns obstacles existed only to be overcome, and with the courage and industry of the early pioneer he directed his best efforts toward the growth of this section, and his own personal success. Both results have been accomplished, Tulare county ranking with the best in the state, and Mr. Burns holding place with the first men of the section.

Born in Sherman, Grayson county, Tex., November 2, 1850, Fielding Guy Burns was the youngest of two children born to his parents, his brother, John Franklin Burns, now residing near Tucson, Ariz., where he is engaged in the stock business. His father, Jephtha, and grandfather, Uriah, were both natives of Tennessee, the elder man locating in Texas, and in 1853 crossing the plains to California. He became a resident of Monterey county, where his death occurred. As a resident of Texas, he was one of the staunch supporters of the rebellion in that state, and most eager for annexation to the United States. He also took part in the Mexican war. Jephtha Burns was a stockman in Grayson county, Tex., where he remained until 1853, when he started to cross the plains with his father and two brothers, John and Charles, residing respectively in Merced and Monterey counties, the latter being ninety-one years. In Elm river, Tex., where the brothers were fishing while on the trip, Jephtha Burns was drowned. His wife, formerly Amanda Virginia Bacon, died February 15, 1851. She was born in Franklin county, Mo., a daughter of Fielding Bacon, a native of Virginia and a farmer and stockman of Grayson county, Tex. He came to California in the same train with the Burns family, in 1853. He first located at Elmonte, near Los Angeles, where he engaged in the stock business until the spring of 1856. In that year he came to Tulare county and settled on the St. John's river, ten miles east of Visalia, where he entered land and improved a farm. In the years that followed he gave his attention to the establishment of his personal success, which has been the result entirely of his own efforts. When he first came to California he brought with him a few cattle, for which he had traded his land in Texas, and after keeping them for a time in Los Angeles county, sold the two hundred for $125 per head in Graysonville, in the San Joaquin valley. This money was sent by the Adams Express Company to Los Angeles, while he went by boat to that city, finding on his arrival that the express company had failed. Out of this deal he lost all but his fare and $1,500. With this comparatively small amount he started again in the making of his fortune. He immediately bought of P. O. Pico three hundred head of cattle at $5 per head, which he paid for, and another three hundred on credit. He immediately took them to Sonora and sold them in the southern mines at good profit. Returning to Los Angeles, he once more invested in stock. In the fall of 1855 he bought one thousand head of cattle and drove them to Tulare county, where he began the stock business which brought him such lucrative returns in the passing years. He became very successful, accumulating land in Tulare county until he owned eleven thousand acres. At a cost of $12,000 he put up a fine brick house, the brick for which was made on his place, while the woodwork was hauled from Fresno Slough. In the flood of 1867 his house sustained such injuries that he built another residence on the Cottonwood, where he had entered land, and made that his home for five years. At the end of that time he located in Visalia, where he lived until 1882, when he moved to Los Angeles, where his death occurred at the age of eighty-nine years. His wife, formerly Sarah Bell, a native of Virginia, also died in Los Angeles. Of their four daughters Mrs. Burns was the eldest, her death occurring in Texas in 1851.

Fielding Guy Burns was reared in Tulare county, a member of the family of his grandfather, Fielding Bacon. He received his education in the public schools of Visalia and in a private seminary. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he engaged in the stock business in Humboldt county, Nev. He continued there for three years, when he returned to Tulare county and engaged in the sheep business on the plains for the ensuing five years. Following this he engaged in the raising of grain, operating two thousand acres of the property of his grandfather. He has met with success in his work and has accumulated considerable property, now owning six hundred and twenty-six acres on section 32, township 17, range 25. It was originally a section, but the valley railroad took fourteen acres of it. It is fine, productive land, in the vicinity of Elbow creek, and is devoted to alfalfa, grain and stock. He also owns three hundred and sixty acres on sections 18 and 19, township 17, range 26, on the Cottonwood, a productive and well-improved farm, which he rents. In his political affiliations Mr. Burns gives his support to the Democratic party.

GEORGE ROBERT PHENEGAR. During his life, which spanned a period of nearly fifty-four years, George R. Phenegar followed diversified occupations. His success in a financial way was due to his splendid ability to make good bargains and to his thorough knowledge of live stock, to which business as a dealer he devoted many years of his life in Merced county, where he also won an enviable reputation as a successful rancher and fruit grower. Born July 25, 1833, in Columbus, Ohio, he grew up on a farm, and up to 1854, the date of his removal to California, his life was comparatively uneventful. In Mariposa county he followed mining until the breaking out of the Feather river excitement, and following the tide of immigration to the latter place he continued mining until he decided to remove to Merced county. For a time he devoted his time solely to buying and selling stock, meeting with success, and in 1879 he purchased forty-seven hundred acres of land in Merced and Mariposa counties, and from that time turned his attention to farming in connection with the stock business. He was one of the first men in his locality to engage in fruit culture. At the time of his death he owned, in addition to his ranch, a fine fruit farm near Selma, Fresno county.

In 1879 Mr. Phenegar was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary (Anderson) Shaug, formerly of Missouri and a daughter of John Anderson; who crossed the plains from the latter state to California in 1857, and for years was a prominent resident of San Luis Obispo county. Mr. and Mrs. Phenegar became parents of four children: George Leonard, who died in August, 1904; Chauncey Anderson; Bert Washburn, who died aged six years, and Georgia Roberta. Mr. Phenegar was a man of strict integrity of character and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. As a business man he possessed more than ordinary ability, was broad-minded, public-spirited and aided materially in developing the natural resources of the various communities in which he lived. Upon his death, October 15, 1887, Merced county lost one of her most progressive citizens.

EARL POWERS FOSTER. Within the limits of the San Joaquin valley the entire life of Mr. Foster has been passed, and here he has achieved a degree of success both gratifying and well deserved. For a considerable period he has had charge of two thousand acres of land, two and one-half miles from Tulare, the property being owned by James Turner. Of this large tract one hundred acres are under alfalfa and twelve hundred acres under grain, in the sowing and harvesting of which two eight-horse teams are utilized. A specialty is made of raising beef cattle of high-grade Short-horn breeds. In all of his work Mr. Foster employs modern methods and machinery. Practical, resourceful and energetic, he manages the large acreage with wise judgment.

In the county of Tulare, where he now lives, Earl Powers Foster was born November 4, 1867, being the eldest among six children, four of whom are living. His father, Leander P. Foster, a native of Vermont, came to the Pacific coast in early life and settled on a stock ranch in Tulare county, but later moved to San Joaquin county and bought three hundred and twenty acres near Atlanta, where he engaged in grain farming until his death in 1875. After coming west he married Hattie Munson, who was born in Maine and now makes her home in Pacific Grove. During girlhood she came to California with her father, Nathan Munson, who remained in this state until his death in Humboldt county.

At the time of his father's death Earl Powers Foster was a boy eight years of age. Afterward he remained on the home farm near Atlanta and early acquired a thorough knowledge of agriculture, besides having the advantage of attendance at Woodbridge College. After coming to Tulare county in 1894 he took up grain and stock farming, and has given his attention closely to this work. He votes the Republican ticket. His marriage, in 1892, solemnized at French Camp, San Joaquin county, united him with Sarah, daughter of James Turner, and a native of San Joaquin county. They have three sons: James, Powers and Forest Frederic.

The Turner family was founded in America by John Turner, an Englishman, who settled in San Joaquin county, thence removed to Stanislaus county, and died in Tulare county when ninety-two years of age. James, son of John Turner, was a pioneer of 1850 in California, whither he came with ox-teams across the plains. During the first winter in the state he made $400 in the mines, later he took up teaming, and in the spring of 1852 settled eight miles from Stockton, where he bought a quarter section of land. At this writing he owns two thousand acres of tillable land in the same locality and there makes his home, being still at the head of his large interests, and hale and robust for a man who has passed seventy-three busy years. In politics he is a Republican and in religion holds membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Hannah Blosser, was born in Pennsylvania and died at the California homestead in 1882. She was a daughter of Jacob Blosser, a pioneer of 1850, who crossed the plains with oxen and settled on a large tract of raw land in San Joaquin county, later removing to Mendocino county, where the last years of his life were passed.

FRANK E. BLACK. The personality of Frank E. Black has won for him many friends, while his business ability has given him a competence among the citizens of Tulare county. Liberal, broad-minded and enterprising, he takes a keen interest in the public affairs of the community, and at the same time gives his attention to the advancement of his own welfare. A native of Ohio, he was born near Maxville, Perry county, July 19, 1863. He was reared in the home of his maternal grandfather, Henry Black, who, with his five sons, served in the Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Infantry during the Civil war, one son dying in service. His education was received through the medium of the public schools, which he attended for a short time, but became dependent upon his own efforts while still a lad. When sixteen years of age he secured a place as section hand, then became a brakeman on the Ohio Central Railroad, September 26, 1884, his run being between Bucyrus, Corning, Columbus and Toledo. In the spring of 1885 he was employed in the same capacity on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, between Fort Wayne and Crestline, Ohio. He remained with that company for six years, when, in 1891, he came to California and secured employment with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, as a brakeman, working out of Tulare. In June, 1894, he was promoted to conductor, running out of Fresno, and November 1, 1901, he took his present run, which is between Portersville and Mendota, going twice over the road each day, a distance of two hundred and thirteen miles traveled. He is a very successful railroad man, stands high with the officials, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of the traveling public. He has been in the work for twenty years and has never had an accident.

In Fort Wayne, Ind., Mr. Black was united in marriage with Marguerite Current, a native of that vicinity, and the daughter of Sylvester S. Current, who was employed in the car shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for thirty-eight years, when he retired from active duties. Mrs. Black was brought up in Fort Wayne, where she was educated. They have one child living, Clinton Ellsworth. Mr. Black owns a stock farm on White river, thirty-five miles from Portersville, which is their mountain home. He was made a Mason in Portersville Lodge No. 303 and belongs to the Portersville Chapter, R. A. M., of this place, and Visalia Commandery, K. T. He is a demitted member of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Order of Railroad Conductors No. 404, of Kern City, and politically is a staunch Democrat.

THOMAS FEEMSTER, M. D. A prominent place among the professional men is accorded Dr. Feemster, of Portersville, where he has been located since 1896. He was born in Columbus, Miss., May 28, 1850, a son of William D. Feemster, the representative of a prominent family of South Carolina, where his birth occurred in 1826. The grandfather, Silas D. Feemster, born in North Carolina, was a minister in the Presbyterian Church, locating first in South Carolina, then in Columbus, Miss., where he died. His father, William Silas Feemster, was a native of North Carolina, and with his oldest brother, Samuel, served valiantly in the Revolutionary war, the old flint-lock musket of the latter being still in the possession of his descendants. The history of the family is traced back to Norway, through England and Normandy, the first ancestor on English soil being with William the Conqueror. After their settlement in the southern states and during the Civil war (as they were staunch Abolitionists, several members of the family serving in the Union army) they suffered much at the hands of the Confederate sympathizers and lost much valuable property. William D. Feemster was a farmer in Mississippi until 1880, when he removed to Kansas, locating near Fulton, where he followed the same occupation. His wife, formerly Frances H. Robinson, was a native of South Carolina, and the daughter of Dr. Elam I. Robinson, of North Carolina. He was a physician of the Eclectic school, having graduated from the old Worthington Medical College before it was merged into the Eclectic Medical Institute. He then engaged in the practice of his profession in South Carolina and later in Mississippi, where he died when nearly ninety years old. Mrs. Feemster died in Mississippi in 1860. Of the two sons and one daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Feemster one son and one daughter are living.

The oldest son of his father's family, Thomas Feemster was reared in Mississippi until he was nineteen, receiving a preliminary education through the medium of the district schools in the vicinity of his home. He then entered the Greenville and Tusculum College, of East Tennessee, from the scientific department of which institution he was later graduated. Following this he was engaged for two years in teaching school in Mississippi, when, in 1875, he went to Missouri and near Gainesville homesteaded a farm. In 1876 he entered the American Medical College of St. Louis, where he took the first course and then engaged in the practice of medicine in Gainesville for nearly five years. In the spring of 1881 he removed to Kansas, locating near Mound City, when he became a student in the American College, from which he was graduated in 1882 with the degree of M. D. He continued to practice in Mound City until 1896, in the meantime graduating from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of St. Louis, in March, 1895. While in Kansas he was president of the United States examining board of pensions. In 1896 he came to California, locating in Portersville in December of that year, since which time he has continued in the practice of medicine and surgery, meeting with a success which has already enrolled him among the prominent professional men of Tulare county. In addition to his professional interests the doctor is identified with the horticultural life of the community, owning a ten-acre orchard of bearing Washington navels, adjoining the site of Portersville, his place being under ditch and also equipped with a pumping plant. He also owns eighty acres on Deer creek, six miles from Portersville, which land is devoted to the cultivation of grain.

In East Tennessee Dr. Feemster was united in marriage with Frances H. Malloy, of Alabama, and they are the parents of the following children: Elam I., a graduate of Emporia (Kans.) State Normal, now a practicing attorney of Visalia; Robert, a graduate of the Ft. Scott normal school and Heald's Business College, of San Francisco, and now manager of the Portersville Citrus Association; Lola D., the wife of William H. Gould, of Portersville; and Ethel A., Linnie J. and Russell A., at home. Dr. Feemster gives his support to the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member. The doctor is a member of the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society.

QUINTIS VERNILE PLEASANT DAY.

During the progress of the Mexican war Pleasant Day, who had been a farmer in Missouri, enlisted in the service and was given employment as a teamster, going to the front, where he remained until his death. Before entering the army he had engaged in farm pursuits in Buchanan county, Mo., where his wife and three children were left at the time of his departure for the front. His wife, who had been Ver-linda Linville, was born in Jackson county, Mo., being a daughter of Rev. Zachariah Linville, a farmer and also a minister in the Christian Church. During the great emigration to California in 1849 Mr. Linville joined a party of gold-seekers, whom he accompanied across the plains. He prospected in mines near Placer-ville until his death, which occurred the same year. After the death of her first husband Mrs. Day became the wife of Daniel Dunnegan, with whom in 1857 she crossed the plains to California and settled on a farm in Sonoma county, thence removed to Yolo county, where Mr. Dunnegan died at Woodland. His widow is now making her home in Lake county. Of her first marriage there were two children who attained mature years, namely: Q. V. P., who resides in the suburbs of Dinuba; and Tenicia Eveline, Mrs. Thompson, of Lake county.

In Buchanan county, Mo., where he was born February 4, 1843, Q. V. P. Day passed the years of childhood, from there going to Mills county, Iowa, in 1855, and in 1857 crossing the plains with a company who spent seven months en route. While on the Humboldt they were attacked by Indians and the eleven men forming the train bravely kept back the red men until help arrived. In Sonoma county Mr. Day attended Santa Rosa Seminary, and in 1859 became one of the first students in Hesperian College at Woodland, where he remained a student a part of two years. On taking up work for himself he clerked in a Woodland store, where he remained for eighteen months. His next venture was the purchase of a stock of groceries. Later he also carried on a livery business, but this he sold after one year. At Woodland, October 13, 1868, he married Araminda Giddings, a native of Wisconsin, being a daughter of Edwin Giddings, who crossed the plains in 1852 and for seven years served as clerk of Yolo county. The year following his marriage Mr. Day removed to Stanislaus county and settled on a ranch near Grayson, where he engaged in the stock business. Later he took up merchandising in Lake county, where he had a store at Middletown for three years and at Lakeport for several years. While there he held the office of treasurer of Lake county for one term of two years. In the fall of 1890 he came to Tulare county and settled one and one-half miles southeast of Dinuba, where he has an orchard of five acres. At the same time, while managing his little homestead, he carries on an insurance and real estate business in town. His two children, Mrs. Maude Redpath and Mrs. Mabel Weddle, both reside in Dinuba, and the entire family are associated with the Christian Church, in which he officiates as an elder. At one time he was active in Masonry, but now is demitted. In national politics he favors Democratic principles, but during local campaigns he gives his support to men whom he considers best qualified to represent the people in office, irrespective of their political views. In his views on the currency question he favors the platform of the People's party, and in 1898 he was their candidate for county clerk, but the party is in the minority here as elsewhere, and he suffered defeat with the balance of the ticket. During the long period of his residence in California he has witnessed the development of the state from a sparsely populated and desolate region to one of the most prosperous commonwealths in the entire country, and no one rejoices in its development more than does Mr. Day.

B. L. CARPENTER, D. D. S. The Carpenter family was established in California by A. B. Carpenter, a well-known and highly esteemed farmer residing eight miles southwest of Portersville, Tulare county. He was born near Albany, N. Y., the representative of a sturdy eastern family, and in young manhood he became a farmer in Tioga county, Pa. Deciding to seek the more abundant opportunities of the Pacific coast, he brought his family to California in 1875, locating as a farmer in Portersville. Two years later he purchased his present property, where he has since made his home. Although seventy-seven years old, he still takes an active interest in his farm, and in addition to general farming gives much attention to a fine apia-ry which he owns. His wife, formerly Euphrasia Redfield, a native of Watertown, N. Y., is living at the age of seventy-three years. Of the six children born of their union four are living, the youngest son being B. L. Carpenter, a successful dentist of Portersville.

The birth of B. L. Carpenter occurred May 20, 1866, in Westfield, Tioga county, Pa., where he was reared until he was eight years old. His parents locating in Portersville at that time, he received his education by attending the public schools in this place, the Rocky Ford district school near Poplar, and the San Jose State Normal. To acquire funds for his normal course he taught one term of school, and after completing the course he taught another year. He then took up dentistry, studying under Dr. F. L. Argall, of San Jose. Entering the dental department of the University of California he was graduated in 1895 with the degree of D. D. S. Returning to Portersville, in July, 1895, he opened an office and has since continued successfully in this location, building up an extensive practice and one that has brought him large financial returns. He is also interested in the horticultural life of the section, owning a fifteen-acre orchard of navel oranges five miles east of Portersville.

In Portersville Dr. Carpenter was united in marriage with Minnie Loyd, a native of Plano, Tulare county, and they are the parents of one child, Byron Leonard, Jr. Fraternally Dr. Carpenter is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Portersville, being past grand of his lodge, and is past chief patriarch of the encampment. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is one of the board of trustees. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and in the line of his profession is an active member of the State Dental Association.

WILLIAM MILTON PHILLIPS. The ranks of the pioneers are fast thinning out, and the number of men in whose brain is a clear remembrance of the features which distinguished the coast country during the early '50s are becoming fewer and fewer. Around these early apostles of adventure is a certain strength and heroism not connected with any other time or place or people, for necessarily force and determination were required to leave comfortable conditions in the east and travel towards the practically unknown with no assurance of arriving at one's destination. To this class of brave and resolute travelers belongs William Milton Phillips, whose residence of fifty-two years in California has shifted from the noisy mining camps through various stages of development to the peace and plenty of a farm of one hundred and twenty acres three miles from Los Banos.

This highly esteemed pioneer was born in Newton, Hamilton county, Ohio, July 30, 1829, his family having been established in the Buckeye state by his paternal grandfather, James Phillips, who came from Germany, served in the War of 1812, and who lived to the extreme age of one hundred and ten years. His son, the father of William Milton, also named James, was born on the Ohio farm, eventually removing to Montgomery county, Ind., and from there to Paulding county, Ohio. In 1839, when William Milton was ten years old, the family located in Polk county, Iowa, where his father purchased a farm within half a mile of Des Moines, dying there when sixty-six years of age. He was fairly well-to-do, reared a family of three sons and four daughters, two sons and one daughter surviving him. William Milton Phillips had the advantages of farm and educational training in Ohio, Indiana and Iowa, his schooling having been acquired in the crude log school houses of that time; he sat on a slab, hewed flat on one side, and wrote with a quill pen. His life was uneventful until he started out on his own responsibility in the spring of 1851, going south to New Orleans, where he worked for a time on boats plying the Mississippi river. The spring of 1852 found him a member of a large and enthusiastic emigrant train, bound for the state of California. Owning a fine horse, and being a skilled marksman, he was chosen hunter of the expedition, and during the four months journey brought down many trophies of the chase, including bear, deer and kindred inhabitants of the plains. In his tramps abroad in search of food he encountered many Indians, with whom he was always on the friendliest of terms, giving them a handshake upon meeting, and evidencing a deep interest in their affairs. His knowledge of the best way to keep on friendly terms with the red men was of long standing, for in both Ohio and Iowa he had become familiar with their traits, and had learned considerable of their vernacular. Consequently, he was rarely molested in his search for food, and both received and gave many favors. The party came by way of the Carson route, past Johnson's cut-off, reaching Hangtown, now Placerville, in August, 1852.

After mining in Eldorado county for a couple of years Mr. Phillips removed to a farm in Contra Costa county, later locating in Lake county, and in 1872 took up his present farm in Merced county. This property he devoted to grain and alfalfa in the early days, and still raises large crops of alfalfa, for the past four years also running a dairy of thirty-five cows. His improvements are modern and practical, and his thrifty methods and successful management are apparent to all who are privileged to visit his hospitable and pleasant home. September 30, 1869, he was united in marriage with Sarah J. Phillips, a native of Ray county, Mo., and daughter of William P. Phillips, a Missouri farmer, who crossed the plains in 1852. For several years William P. Phillips engaged in general farming and stock-raising in the vicinity of Oregon City, Ore., removing in 1865 to Antioch, Cal., later to Hollister, and still later to Fresno. In 1889, in the latter city, he met a tragic death in the burning of the Dexter stables, whither he had gone to rescue some papers from the flames. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Hartman, was also born in Missouri, a daughter of John Hartman. The circumstances of her death were scarcely less pitiable than those surrounding the death of her husband, for while on the way across the plains, when her heart was full of hope regarding the future, she was stricken with mountain fever and succumbed to the dread disease a week after arriving in Oregon. At the time her daughter, Sarah J., was but six months old. A son, Andrew J., died in California at the age of twenty-six years. Mrs. Sarah J. Phillips was reared in California and educated in the public schools. Into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips seven children have been born: Lenora E., a graduate of the San Jose Normal, the wife of T. L. Baldwin of the Los Banos district; Florence, who is a graduate of the Stockton Business College, and who became the wife of C. O. Freeman, of Los Banos; Ephraim, the owner and manager of a dairy farm adjoining his father's ranch; Elmer, manager of his father's dairy; Ivy Eleanor, a graduate of the San Jose Normal, and at present engaged in educational work in Los Banos; William, attending the Polytechnic at Oakland; and Vivian, who died in 1898 at the age of nine years. Mr. Phillips is a member of the German Baptist Church, while his wife is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Previous to the war Mr. Phillips was a Democrat, but since then has voted the Republican ticket. His interest in education has been pronounced for years, and is evident, not only from the superior advantages he has given his own children, but from his insistence on ample funds and proficient instructors while a member of the school board.

JOSEPH VOSSLER. Germany has furnished the United States with many of its most substantial citizens, and in every state the natives of that country have become prominently identified with the various industries. The Germans deserve much credit for the pioneer work they have done in the west, as they have at all times been in the van of the settlers. Mr. Vossler is no exception, for he has for many years been a resident of California, and during his residence here he has taken an active part in the work of development. Coming to this country without a dollar or a friend, he has, by his own individual efforts, accumulated a comfortable competency and attained a position of affluence in Tulare county.

Born in Germany, March 4, 1840, near Rottweil, a town located in the vicinity of the famous "Black Forest," he is a son of Simon and Johanna (Schuler) Vossler, both of whom spent their entire lives in the old country.

Joseph Vossler is the eldest in a family of eight children, and is the only one to locate in California. His early life was spent in his native country, where he attended the common schools and when old enough began learning the trade of a butcher in his father's market. After serving his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman butcher, traveling through Switzerland and visiting the principal cities. Later he returned to Germany, but remained there only a short time, when, in 1868, he bade good-by to home and sailed for America, the land of promise. While he has been in this country many years, Mr. Vossler has never regretted his decision to leave the place of his nativity, as in that country the chances for advancement are limited, while here every man stands alone, and if it is in him to succeed he can do so.

Soon after arrival in the United States his attention was attracted to an advertisement of the Central Pacific Railroad, offering $5 per day for laborers. In company with a partner he came west and for a time worked for the company, but as the road employed a great many Chinamen, Mr. Vossler decided to seek employment elsewhere. With that idea in mind he went to Sacramento in 1869, where he soon secured work on a farm near the city. For the following five years he continued working for others, but in 1874 he came to Tulare county, and with the money he had saved from his earnings, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he at once began to cultivate and improve. Engaging in grain-raising and the hog business he was soon able to buy more land, adding to his original purchase until he now owns seven hundred and twenty acres, of which two hundred and forty acres is located two miles east of Woodville. This place is improved and equipped with all the modern appliances necessary to carry on a successful farming business. His pumping plant is of twenty-four horse power, which supplies all the water necessary for irrigation and other purposes. While he devotes considerable of his land to the growing of grain and alfalfa, he is also engaged in the cattle and dairy business.

Mr. Vossler was in the Tule river irrigation district and was a member of the committee that brought about the liquidation and took an active part in the settlement of the affairs which led to the paying of the bond in 1904.

In Modesto Mr. Vossler was united in marriage with Nannie Gabriel, who was born in Holstein, Germany. To this union have been born six children, all of whom are living in the vicinity. In order of birth their names are as follows: Fred, Charles, Joseph, Andrew, Cora and Herman.

Mr. Vossler believes in the rights of mankind and in political belief is strongly in favor of the principles as promulgated by the Socialist party. Taking a deep interest in educational matters, he served for many years as trustee of his school district, and during his tenure of office labored earnestly for the bettering of the existing conditions. Fraternally he is a welcome visitor in the Odd Fellows' lodge rooms, while in religion both he and his wife are associated with the Christian Science Church at Portersville.

JOHN N. LARSON. A prominent business man of Portersville, Tulare county, John N. Larson has met with a success which has numbered him among the representative men of this section. He was born in Chicago, Ill., October 16, 1859, a son of Nels Larson. The latter was a native of Norway and a ship carpenter by trade, who became an early settler of Chicago, where he worked in the first shipyard until his death. His wife, formerly a Miss Lindgren, was a native of Sweden, and her death also occurred in Chicago. Of their three children, two are located in California, A. J. Larson being engaged in the real estate business in Lodi.

John N. Larson was the youngest of the three children of his father's family. He was reared to the age of fifteen years in Chicago, attending the public schools in pursuit of an education. At that age he made his first trip to the coast, for eighteen months remaining in Oakland, where he was employed as a lather. Returning to Chicago, he attended school until the spring of 1877, when he came back to Oakland. In the same year he went to Leadville, Colo., where he followed the building trade, in 1880 going to Durango, before the railroad came through. Returning to California about 1881 he located in Lodi, where he engaged in contracting and building, later spending a short time in Colorado, then going to San Diego during that city's rapid growth. There he found abundant employment in contracting and building for a time, after which he again located in Lodi, remaining there until the spring of 1897, when he came to Portersville, and bought the Greeley ice business.

Mr. Larson has enlarged the plant, carrying on a wholesale and retail ice business, and has erected a soda works in connection. He is also interested in the ice and soda water business in Tulare, the firm being known as Frame & Larson, and they are also interested in the Visalia soda works, of which Mr. Larson was one of the incorporators and is now president of the company. He is a business man of unquestioned ability and shrewd judgment and with the practical points of his work thoroughly in hand.

In San Francisco Mr. Larson was united in marriage with Mattie A. Cochran, who was born near Lawrence, Kans., and they are the parents of two children, Verda and Helen. Mr. Larson has always taken the keenest interest in the growth and progress of his adopted city, being a participant in movements calculated to advance the general welfare. He was active in the organization of the First National Bank of Portersville, of which he is a director; has been a director of the Board of Trade since its organization; and is also a member and director of the county Board of Trade of Tulare county. As a Republican he has often been called upon to serve in positions of trust and responsibility. Upon the incorporation of Portersville he was elected councilman, serving his first term from 1902, and was re-elected in 1904, at present acting as chairman of the finance committee, as well as serving on various others. During his first term he gave effective service as chairman of the street committee in the laying of new sidewalks, etc. He is also a member of the county central committee. In addition to his business interests Mr. Larson is also identified with the horticultural interests of the section, owning a ten-acre orchard of navel oranges near town, while in addition to this he is setting out twenty acres. Fraternally he was made a member of the Knights of Pythias in Durango, and is now a member and past chancellor of Portersville Lodge. He is also identified with the Independent Order of Foresters.

REV. FATHER JOHN COEN. The work being done by Rev. Father John Coen as pastor of St. Ann's Church, in Portersville, is such as to place him in the front rank of those who are adding immeasurably to the moral and spiritual welfare of this section. A native of Ireland, he was born in County Mayo June 24, 1871, next to the youngest in a family of six sons and six daughters, of whom four sons and four daughters are living, he being the only one in America. He comes of an old and distinguished family of Ireland, which formerly flourished in England, from which country an emigrant located the name in the Emerald Isle, Thomas Coen, the father of Rev. John Coen, was a farmer and merchant in County Mayo, dying there in 1893. His wife, formerly Mary Scanlon, a native of County Sligo, and the representative of a worthy family, survives him, making her home on the old residence in Ireland.

When only a lad in years John Coen began the study of the classics. After completing a seminary course he entered Carlow College, where he took theology, philosophy and scripture. Upon the completion of this course June 13, 1892, he was ordained by Bishop Comerford in the college, and was assigned by Bishop More of Los Angeles to work in Hollister. He immediately took passage for Los Angeles, Cal., and upon his arrival became assistant in the Church of the Sacred Heart of Hollister. After four months of service he was appointed pastor of the Watsonville parish, and the following year, at his own request, was returned to Hollister as assistant. He remained in that position until November, 1896, when he received the appointment to his present pastorate, since which time he has continued in charge of the parish. A man of liberal views, earnest consecration and a devotion to his work which admits of no question, Father Coen has won the love and respect of his congregation and has brought about movements which have resulted very materially to the betterment of the people. This congregation was first started by meetings in various houses and halls, the church being built in 1892 by Father Farrelly. In 1902 the presbytery was built through the efforts of Father Coen. He has also organized the congregation at Woodville, Tulare county, and while he has in his pastorate all the eastern portion of Tulare county to the Mono and Inyo county lines, he also visits the South Tule Indian Reservation. He has organized an Altar Society, and in all matters pertaining to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the people Father Coen gives his most earnest and undivided efforts.

CHARLES A. BISHER. Self-made in the best sense implied by the term, Charles A. Bisher enjoys to an unusual degree the high regard of all with whom he has come in either business or social contact, and as a practically retired citizen of Visalia is rounding out the years of an active and successful career. The third in a family of seven children, of whom three are living, Charles A. Bisher was born in Muscatine, Iowa, March 11, 1855, the son of Charles August and Annie Elizabeth Bisher, both of whom died in Iowa, the father when their son was seven years old and the mother when he was eleven years old. The father was a native of Germany who settled in Muscatine and engaged as a wheelwright and cabinet maker.

Until he was twelve years old Charles A. Bisher remained in Muscatine, Iowa, and was then bound out to Hiram Kirkpatrick, a farmer, who lived near Cairo, Iowa. He remained there for three and a half years, his first years work being to rake bundles off the old McCormick reaper. During this time he attended school but two months in the year. On seeking new employment he found work with a neighbor for $18 per month, with whom he remained for some time, in 1873 deciding to locate in California. He accordingly made the trip west and located in Visalia, securing employment with the Weston dairy, where he remained twenty-two months. Being defrauded of his wages he sought and found employment with Henry Hartley, and for five years conducted a dairy ranch near Visalia and again on Elbow creek in Tulare county. Having accumulated sufficient capital he then entered the livery business, becoming proprietor of the Visalia Stables in partnership with W. W. Coughran. Two years later he bought out his partner's interest and continued alone for some years, when he sold to W. H. Moffett. With J. B. McKinley he then established the Kaweah Stables, which were conducted under the firm name of Bisher & McKinley for some time, Mr. Bisher only buying an interest till his friend was well established. This was the only brick stable in the city, and the largest in dimensions, and was well equipped in every particular. After one year he sold out his interests and withdrew entirely from active business, spending his time in looking after his property, which consisted of one hundred and eighty acres, eighty of which is devoted to alfalfa. He has lately disposed of this ranch. He has been successful in all his undertakings, whether as a farmer or business man, and in his display of ability and unerring judgment has won a place of prominence among the business citizens of this section.

Mr. Bisher's home at No. 501 North Cottonwood street, is presided over by his wife, formerly Ida Hartley, a native of Visalia, where they were married. She is the daughter of Henry C. Hartley, who was born in Independence, Mo., November 6, 1833, the son of George Hartley, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., and an early settler of the middle west, where he was located in Missouri, Illinois and Iowa. In 1853 Henry C. Hartley crossed the plains by horse train as far as Salt Lake City, when they completed the trip to California by pack train. On the journey he became ill and was left by the party and came near dying in the wilderness, but recovered and made his way alone to California. In September, 1853, he came to Tulare county and in Tulare has since made his home. He has been a very successful farmer and stockman and now, owns a fine ranch on Elbow creek, seven miles northwest of Visalia. He married Isabelle Baker, a native of Ohio, and the daughter of James Baker who brought his family to Tulare county in 1857. She died in Visalia in 1898, leaving a family of four children, namely: Laura, the wife of Mr. Moye; Charles, a farmer near Visalia; Ida, the wife of Mr. Bisher; and George, a stockman near Visalia. Mr. and Mrs. Bisher have one child, Merle Elizabeth.

Mr. Bisher is a Democrat in his political convictions and is an earnest and broad-minded citizen and gives his support to all movements and enterprises best calculated to advance the general welfare. For one term he served efficiently as a member of the city board of trustees.

GEORGE W. SMITH. The life history of George W. Smith is indissolubly connected with the irrigation interests of Tulare county, as he was more closely identified with projects of this nature than any other man in this section. He was a surveyor and civil engineer and surveyed the majority of the longest canals and ditches in Tulare county. He was one of the organizers of the Uphill Ditch Company, and served as its president for many years, as well as surveying and superintending its construction. His last work was for the 76 Canal Company, on what is now known as the Alta Irrigation District, acting in the capacity of chief engineer. His death occurred October 24, 1896, at the age of seventy years, removing from the community a man who held the esteem of his fellow citizens for the sterling qualities which distinguished his character.

Born in New York August 26, 1826, George W. Smith was a son of David and Lovisa (Palmer) Smith, both of whom were also natives of the same state. He was the descendant of English ancestry, his great-grandfather having emigrated from his native land and settled in Rhode Island, where his grandfather, Seth Smith, was born. His maternal ancestors were among the early settlers of New York state. George W. Smith was one of a family of nine children, of whom he was the eldest son. He remained in his native state until he was twenty-three years old, receiving his education in the meantime. In 1849 he decided to seek his fortune in the gold fields of California. Sailing from New York City on February 6, a passenger on the Clarissa Perkins, he landed in San Francisco September 12, and immediately entered upon the life of a miner. His first location was at Hawks Bar, after which he went to Rattlesnake creek, where he was the first man to strike a pick. He was very successful as a miner, but for a time was less so as an investor, as he lost the greater part of his earnings in the organization which turned the course of the Tuolumne river, and after paying his debts and working for a time, lost again in the erection of a quartz mill. For a time previous to this second venture he was located in Mariposa county, where he drove ox teams and delivered logs to the saw mills. He later engaged in the butcher business at various places and met with the success which attended the greater part of his efforts.

In 1865 he located on a half-section of land in Tulare county, about seven miles northwest of Visalia, and afterward homesteaded other land, engaging on the entire property in farming and stock-raising. He made this his home until 1887, when he purchased four hundred and eighty acres of land three miles north of Visalia, where he built a handsome residence, substantial barns and outbuildings, improvements which placed his ranch among the most valuable in this section of the county. Until his death he engaged in general farming operations and stock-raising on this property, as well as continuing to take a broad interest and active participation in his work as an engineer and surveyor. For several years he served as county surveyor, holding the office two terms by election and twice by appointment. In 1878 he was elected deputy sheriff of the county, and later was a prominent candidate of the Democratic party for the office of surveyor-general of the state. Fraternally he was associated with the Odd Fellows and Ancient Order of United Workmen, and was a Knight Templar Mason, becoming a Master Mason in Carson City in 1863.

The marriage of Mr. Smith occurred in Aurora, Esmeralda county, Nev., July 23, 1864, and united him with Nancy Caroline Parker. She is a native of Newton county, Ark., and was the youngest of two daughters born to her parents, Anderson and Mathilda (Kelley) Parker. Her father was a native of Tennessee, as was also his father, Alvin Parker, who as a farmer removed to Arkansas and in 1853 crossed the plains to California and became a stockman in Tulare county. Anderson Parker was a farmer in Arkansas and died there when his daughter, Mrs. Smith, was but one year old. Mrs. Parker was a native of Mississippi, but removed to Arkansas, in which state her father died. In 1857 Mrs. Parker crossed the plains to California by ox teams, bringing her two daughters. The six-months trip was made by Salt Lake, and was full of peril through the ravages of the Indians, the train requiring a guard each night of the journey. Upon her arrival she settled upon a farm near Visalia, where her death occurred at the age of forty-two years.

Nancy Caroline Parker was ten years old when the memorable trip was made to California, and upon her arrival made her home with her uncle, B. G. Parker, who had acted as captain of their train, as he had made the trip in 1853 and was familiar with the route. She was reared to womanhood in the west and after her marriage made her home in the vicinity of Visalia. In June, 1904, she built a handsome residence in the city at the corner of Northwest First avenue, and has rented her farm, which now consists of three hundred and twenty acres all under irrigation and given over to the cultivation of grain and stock-raising. She has proven herself a woman of rare business ability and has managed her affairs with admirable skill and judgment since her husband's death. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Charlotte is the wife of E. Baker of Kingsburg; Crosby is located at Richmond, Cal., engaged in the livery business; Seth is a farmer and stockman, located on a ranch in the neighborhood of Visalia; Luther died February 24, 1895, at the age of twenty-five years; Burton is located in Los Banos, where he holds the position of superintendent of the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal and Irrigation Company; Lavonia is the wife of T. Cortner of Tulare county; Lovisa is the wife of Samuel Bond of Tulare county; Luina is at home with her mother; and Lawrence died December 15, 1897, at the age of twelve years. In her political convictions Mrs. Smith is a Democrat and though unable to cast a vote herself wields no little influence with those who are.

HIRAM F. BREY. Liberal and enterprising, Hiram F. Brey has contributed no little to the successful upbuilding of Portersville and vicinity, making his personal efforts lie parallel with those for the material welfare of the section in which he has made his home since 1889. A native of Napoleon, Ohio, he was born November 10, 1848. His father, Gideon Brey, was a native of Pennsylvania, who became a farmer in Ohio, marrying Hannah Frease in Stark county, of which she was a native. Her father, John Frease, was also a native of Pennsylvania and an early settler of Stark county, Ohio, where he was engaged as a farmer. Mr. Brey was located as a farmer in Henry county, Ohio, until his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-five years, his wife having died in 1853. They were the parents of five children, all of whom are living.

Hiram F. Brey was reared to the age of sixteen years on the paternal farm in Ohio, receiving his education through the medium of the district school in the vicinity of his home. At sixteen he entered the store of an uncle and followed clerking for the ensuing four years. In 1869 he decided to cast in his lot with the pioneer element of a more remote west, and accordingly came as far west as Laramie, Wyo., where he engaged as a clerk for one year. Following this he became fireman on the Union Pacific Railroad, which position he retained until January, 1873, when he became conductor for the same company. In December of that year he went to Nevada, and was employed as a conductor until 1876, his run being between Toana and Winnemucca. Following his work in Nevada he accepted a position as conductor with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, running out of Vallejo, Solano county, for four years, when he went to Oregon and was employed by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company between The Dalles and Walla Walla, Wash. After one year he came back to California and was again employed as a conductor on the Southern Pacific Railroad, his run being from Oakland to Sacramento. Resigning from this position in 1884, he accepted the position of bookkeeper with the West Valley Lumber Company, at Dixon, Solano county, and later was manager of a lumber yard at Reno, Nev., for two years. He then returned to California and in the spring of 1889 located in Portersville, where he became yard manager of the San Joaquin Lumber Company. After four years this company sold out to the Puget Sound Lumber Company, with whom he continued in the same capacity until 1895. In that year Mr. Brey organized the Portersville Lumber Company, which bought out the interests of the Puget Sound Company at Portersville, and this he conducted until 1903, in the fall of the year previous having assisted materially in the organization of the Central California Redwood Company, which bought out the interests of the Portersville Lumber Company, the Enterprise Lumber Company and mill, and West Pacific Lumber Company and mill, the three consolidating and forming one of the most extensive lumber firms in this section. They at once rebuilt the mill at Dillonwood site, which has a capacity of forty thousand feet per day, their product being shipped principally to the eastern states. The large redwood trees above twelve feet have to be blasted, while upon trees up to that size the Mulay saw, which forms a part of their equipment, is used. During the summer they run sixteen ten-horse teams and employ a large number of men, this enterprise adding no little to the industrial supremacy of this section. Mr. Brey was elected secretary of the new company and is also manager of the company business, his extensive knowledge, the result of long experience in this line of work, making his services of great value to the firm. In addition to his business interests Mr. Brey has also been identified to some extent with the horticultural life of the community since 1890, when he set out an orange orchard of twelve acres one mile from Portersville, and at the present time he is setting out sixteen acres additional. He has been identified with the Portersville Water Development and Improvement Company since its organization in 1898, this being the first company to pump water for irrigating purposes in the vicinity of Portersville.

In Virginia City, Nev., Mr. Brey married Ada Lackey, a native of that place, and the daughter of Albert Lackey, a pioneer miner of Nevada. They have two children, Alberta and Marie. Mr. Brey is a director of the Board of Trade, with which he has been connected since its organization, and is also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Portersville. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Winnemucca, Nev., and in 1890 became a charter member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M., of which he was its second master. He became a Royal Arch Mason in 1903, in Portersville Chapter No. 85, R. A. M., and belongs to Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T., and Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco. His wife is a member of the Episcopal Church. Politically he is a Republican in national politics, while locally he reserves the right to support the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. He is a member of the San Joaquin Valley Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, after its organization becoming its second secretary, which office he held for eight years.

JAMES WALLACE OAKES. As a pioneer of the state James Wallace Oakes is accorded a prominent place among the citizens who have given the best part of their lives to the establishment and upbuilding of a western commonwealth. Almost a half century has elapsed since he came to California and the greater part of that time has been passed as a resident of Tulare county, in the development of natural resources. Born near Victoria, Ontario, he is the son of Hammon Oakes, a native of the same locality.

The Oakes family came originally from France and located in New Brunswick where the name was prominent for generations. James Oakes, the son of John W., who died in New Brunswick at the advanced age of one hundred and two years, left the place of his nativity after many years spent as a lumberman on the St. John's river and located near Port Ryerse, where he engaged as a farmer and stockman until his death, which occurred in his eighty-sixth year. He was a pioneer of heroic mould, taking up his land in an entirely new locality, clearing it of timber and bringing it to a high state of cultivation. His son, Hammon Oakes, also became a farmer in that locality and was extensively interested in stock-raising, owning three farms. He lived to be seventy-three years old. His wife was in maidenhood Isabelle Phillips, a native of New York, and the descendant of an old New England family. He located as a farmer and stockman near New London. Mrs. Oakes died at the age of sixty-eight years.

Of the eleven children born to his parents, six of whom are living, James Wallace Oakes is the fifth in order of birth and the only one who ever came to California. His birth occurred September 1, 1836, and on his father's farm, where he was reared, he received a practical training which has made its influence felt throughout his entire career. He attended the district school in his youth. In 1855 he came to the United States and located in Jackson county, Iowa, where, in the vicinity of Sabula he located until the spring of 1856 when he bought a farm in Harrison county, Mo., consisting of one hundred and sixty acres of prairie land, and twenty acres of timber. He then bought a yoke of oxen and with six others broke his prairie land and proceeded to an improvement of his property. In the spring of 1857 he went to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and found employment as a driver of a team for freighters under Upton Hayes, between that point and Camp Floyd. He then went to Salt Lake and from that point came with fifteen others by ox-teams to California, making the trip via the Carson route. At Genoa they sold their teams and made the rest of the journey on mules, and after their arrival in Placerville Mr. Oakes followed the precarious fortunes of a miner in that county and also in Butte. In Nevada county he engaged in quartz mining for four years, then spent one year in Marysville and in the fall of 1868 came to Tulare county and rented a ranch owned by B. G. Parker, on Elbow creek, where he followed farming on a large scale for that time. He conducted three farms at the same time and also improved his own ranch, operating about seven hundred acres of land. He now owns two hundred and eighty acres of land two and a half miles east of Visalia, which is all under irrigation and highly improved. Both Mill creek and Packwood creek run through his property, and a ditch which he and a half dozen others built. About one hundred and thirty acres are devoted to alfalfa, the largest interests of the place being given over to the dairy business, in which he was engaged for sixteen years. He has had as many as eighty-five milch cows at one time. He now rents his ranch for dairy purposes and furnishes the stock. He also has a stock ranch of twenty-three hundred acres at Cherokee, Tulare county, about thirty-five miles east of Visalia, all fenced, where he engages in the raising of cattle and horses.

In Visalia Mr. Oakes married Mrs. Margaret I. (Houston) Allen, a native of Arkansas, whose ancestry is given at length in the sketch of W. W. Houston, which appears in another part of this volume. Fraternally Mr. Oakes is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. He has never allowed his name to be mentioned as a candidate for office, but has never shirked the responsibilities which have devolved upon him as a citizen. For two years he served as deputy sheriff under Alfred Balaam, after which, for three years, he served under Chris. Franks as deputy United States marshal, and as such settled up the Mussel Slough trouble between the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the settlers of that section. This position called into play the exercise of great tact and diplomacy, for the people were naturally suspicious of anyone who attempted an amicable settlement of the dispute. Before undertaking it Mr. Oakes was given his own methods by the railroad company, and in a short time he won the confidence of those with whom he was attempting settlement and was thus given a chance to make satisfactory terms with all interested. No one has ever filled that office with greater efficiency nor returned to private life with more commendation than did Mr. Oakes. And it is only just to add that he well merits the high esteem in which he is universally held.

AZEL B. HAMILTON. Six miles north-east of Merced is located the forty-acre ranch which belongs to Azel B. Hamilton, a progressive and enterprising farmer of this section, and one interested as well in the material welfare of the community. A native of Johnson county, Mo., he was born November 10, 1853, a son of A. B. Hamilton, Sr. The elder man was a native of Tennessee, where he married a Miss Alexander, also of that state, who died when Azel B. was quite young. The family located in Missouri, where Mr. Hamilton carried on farming and stock-raising in Johnson county.

In Missouri Azel B. Hamilton, Jr., attained his majority, and in the same year he left home to become dependent upon his own resources. He came west to California in 1874, visiting Merced county and spending a year in travel in various parts of the state. He also made a trip to Mexico, but in 1876 returned to California and passed the ensuing year in the Sacramento valley, when he located in Merced county, satisfied to make this his permanent home. Until 1899 he raised wheat on Bear Creek, when he located on his present ranch, which is located in Rotterdam colony and consists of forty acres of fine farm land. In addition to the cultivation of this property he also rents one hundred and twenty-five acres, while a part of his interests lie in the conduct of a dairy which is supplied by thirty cows. He owns his own separator and carries on the work with much profit. A part of his land is devoted to an olive grove.

Mr. Hamilton has been married twice, the first ceremony being performed in Mariposa county and uniting him with Sarah C. Laird, who died in 1894. They were the parents of the following children: Paris R., Elsie A., Everett B., David, and Myrtle. In 1899 Mr. Hamilton married in Merced county Lillie F. Ward, who is a native of Merced county. In his political preferment Mr. Hamilton is an adherent of the principles of the Democratic party, in the interests of which he is now serving his second term as supervisor of his district, having acted as chairman of the board for two years. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

MOSES DAVIDSON. A citizen of much worth and integrity, Moses Davidson enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of all who have known him during his residence in Portersville and Tulare county, and to no man is greater credit due for the development of the orange industry of that section. A native of Beaver county, Pa., he was born March 20, 1837, a son of John Davidson. The elder man was a native of North Ireland, whence he emigrated with his parents to Beaver county, Pa., his father, Thomas Davidson, becoming a farmer in that section. In manhood John Davidson also followed farming in Pennsylvania until 1855, when he removed to Brooklyn, Poweshiek county, Iowa, where his death occurred in 1880, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically was a Republican after 1864. His wife, formerly Mary Ann Thompson, was a native of Pennsylvania and the daughter of James Thompson, a farmer of Pennsylvania, who died in Butler county. Mrs. Davidson died in Iowa at the age of fifty-nine years. They became the parents of fourteen children, thirteen of whom attained maturity, while five sons and one daughter are now living.

The youngest of his parents' living children, Moses Davidson was reared in Pennsylvania until 1855, receiving his education through the medium of the district school in the vicinity of his home. In that year his father emigrated to Iowa, Moses Davidson and three brothers crossing the country by team on a four weeks' trip, while the remainder of the family traveled by train to Davenport. Until the breaking out of the Civil war he remained at home with his father, in August, 1862, enlisting in Company H, Twenty-eighth Iowa Regiment Volunteer Infantry, being mustered into service at Iowa City. He served at Helena, Ark., then during the siege of Vicksburg, on the Red River Expedition under General Banks and the retreat that followed this disastrous venture. He was then sent to Savannah, thence to Washington, serving in the Shenandoah Valley under Sheridan, taking part in the battles of Winchester and Cedar Creek, and continuing in active service until the close of the war. He was mustered out in Savannah, Ga., in July, 1865, being honorably discharged in Davenport, Iowa. Following his service, Mr. Davidson spent one year in an attempt to recover his health, which had been more or less impaired by the rigors which he endured while in the army. He then engaged in a mercantile business in Brooklyn, Iowa, and later began farming, purchasing a farm in the vicinity of that place. This property consisted of two hundred and forty acres, devoted to the raising of grain and stock purposes. He became prominent in public affairs in the county, serving for several terms as township supervisor. On account of poor health he returned to a commercial life, engaging in the sale of agricultural implements, in which work he remained for two years. Deciding to locate in California, he made his first trip to the coast in 1887, but returned shortly afterward to Iowa, where he settled up affairs, disposing of the greater part of his interests there. In 1888 he located near Portersville, and engaged in the raising of wheat. He met with success and in 1890 purchased his present property, and the following year set out the first orange grove in this vicinity. His home farm consists of nineteen acres one mile east of Portersville, all in navel oranges, and where he has built a fine residence and installed a pumping plant, operated by electricity, furnishing a fifty-five-inch stream. Two miles from the town he bought eighty acres, where he put down a well, and built a pumping plant operated by an electric motor. He set out an orchard of twenty acres, and afterward sold forty of the original purchase. Of the balance of forty acres he has set thirty-five to oranges, of the entire forty having given twenty acres to his son, Carl A., while the other twenty he still owns. In addition to this he also owns one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Terra Bella.

In Iowa Mr. Davidson was united in marriage with Eva Rogers, who was born and died in that state, leaving two children, namely: Carl A., a horticulturist, and Eva, who died at the age of twenty months. In Missouri Mr. Davidson married Elizabeth J. Perry, a native of Illinois. Of the four children born of this union two are living, Mabel P. and Alice E., both at home. Mr. Davidson has been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1854, and is now acting as chairman of the board of trustees of the church of Portersville. He also served for some time as the superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is a stockholder in the Syndicate Wells for supplying water for orchards, and is a member and director of the Portersville Citrus Exchange and a stockholder in the Exchange buildings. Politically he is a staunch Republican, which ticket he has voted since 1864, refusing to endorse the Chicago platform, which pronounced the war a failure, up to 1900, when he began voting the Prohibition ticket. He is a broad-minded and public-spirited citizen, taking an active interest in all movements which have for their end the betterment of the community.

JAMES C. PAINE. The president of the Malaga Packing Company, a corporation which has in no small degree advanced the fruit interests of Fresno county, James C. Paine is a citizen of great personal worth, and one whose forceful methods and business ability have won for him the respect of his fellow horticulturists. He is prominent as a vineyardist and fruit grower of the Fowler district, having a hundred-acre ranch which is one of the largest in the vicinity, finely developed and improved, fifty acres being given over to the cultivation of raisin grapes, thirty-five acres to various fruits, and the rest to general farming.

A native of Tippah county, Miss., Mr. Paine was born May 4, 1853, a son of James W. and Eliza (Blackard) Paine. Both parents were natives of Tennessee, the father a son of Hardin L., a native of North Carolina. He was a farmer by occupation. About 1856 James W. Paine removed to Missouri and located in Dallas county. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he removed to northeast Missouri, finally locating in Macon county. In 1886 he came to California and died here at the age of seventy-three years. His father, Hardin L. Paine, took his slaves to Texas upon the outbreak of the war and spent the rest of his life there.

Reared to manhood on his father's farm in Missouri, James C. Paine received a thorough agricultural training, and on starting out on his own resources at the age of eighteen years sought his livelihood in the same occupation which had employed his boyhood years. He remained in Missouri until 1879, when he went to Tennessee and farmed until 1886. In the last named year he came to California. Locating in Madera county, he leased about three thousand acres of land and engaged in wheat raising for twelve years. In the meantime, in 1891, he had purchased his present farm in Fresno county. In 1898 he permanently moved his family upon it, since making this location his home. In 1903 he organized the Malaga Packing Company, incorporated, of which he was elected president. The company purchased the property of the Malaga Co-operative Packing Company, which it now operates.

In Tennessee Mr. Paine married Fannie Jeffries, a native of Mississippi, and the daughter of John Jeffries. The children born of this union are as follows: James S., Victor A., Lyman H., Jesse L., Harry F., John C., Sarah J., and Robert Treat. In his political convictions Mr. Paine is a staunch Democrat.

JEREMIAH SULLIVAN. While Mr. Sullivan has resided in Tulare county but a short time, he has already taken a prominent place in the ranks of the leading men of the county and is highly respected by all with whom he has become acquainted.

Born in Ontario, near Ottawa, Canada, September 2, 1854, he is a son of Michael and Mary Ann (Laffin) Sullivan. The father was a blacksmith by trade and later in life removed to Grand Forks, N. D., where he lived at the time of his death. Mrs. Sullivan is still living, making her home in Spokane, Wash. She is the mother of seven children, six of whom are living.

Jeremiah Sullivan was reared in Appleton, Ontario, where he was educated in the public schools. Under the direction of his father he learned the trade of a blacksmith and in 1877 went to Smith's Falls, Ontario, where he worked at his trade until removing to South Dakota. Subsequently he located in St. Paul and later went to Emerson, Manitoba, to take charge of a machine shop. This he conducted for a few years until finally he started a shop of his own, which he owned up to the time of his removal to California, the change being made necessary on account of his health. While living in Emerson he became prominently identified with the public, taking a leading part in political affairs and serving as mayor of the city for two years, and councillor for thirteen years. So popular did he become that the citizens gave him a banquet on the eve of his departure for California and presented him with a set of engrossed resolutions, expressing their sincere respect and deep regret that circumstances had made it necessary for them to part.

It was in 1902 that Mr. Sullivan first came to this state. At that time he purchased land near Portersville and then returned east, the following year bringing his family, also a party of sixteen prospective homeseekers. He now owns one hundred and sixty acres near Plano, (adjoining the city of Portersville) of the finest foothill orange land. On the farm where he resides is one of the best equipped pumping plants in the county. His irrigation flumes are of cement, a fifteen horse power electric motor being used to pump the water which furnishes enough to irrigate the entire tract of one hundred and sixty acres, forty of which he planted to orange trees. In addition to his farming interests, he opened the "Summerland" on October 1, 1904. The entire house was refurbished throughout and the rooms are now the finest in the city and are always occupied.

While living in Smith's Falls, Mr. Sullivan married Sarah Frances Paquette, who is a native of that town. To them have been born three children: Herbert J., Mabel and Armond P.

Fraternally Mr. Sullivan is quite prominent, being a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of the Maccabees and the C. M. B. A. Politically, while living in Manitoba, he was a Conservative, but since coming here he has not identified himself with any party.

No doubt Mr. Sullivan will, as in his former home, make a success of his ventures, and it is safe to say he will at all times be found ready and willing to perform his part as a citizen. He is well read, being posted on the important questions of the day and with a ready command of language he can, at any time, express himself clearly and concisely.

MRS. MARY VICTORIA ARNOLD. Ten miles northeast of Visalia, Tulare county, on section 30, township 17, range 26, is located the ranch which belongs to Mrs. Mary Victoria Arnold, one of the successful horticulturists of this section. She was born in Texas, near Marlin, Falls county, next to the youngest in a family of five children, of whom four are now living, and is the only one located on the coast. Her father, Victor Wyres, a native of Georgia, became a farmer and stockman in Texas, in which state his father, Robert Wyres, followed the same occupation. Victor Wyres was located in Falls county (then known as Edwards county), his death occurring in Junction City, Tex., in 1901. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Ray, of Alabama, was a daughter of Dempsey Ray, a farmer of Texas, in which state she also died.

Mrs. Arnold, then Mary Victoria Wyres, received her education in the public schools of Falls and Bell counties, Tex., where she was married in 1878 to George Arnold, who was born in Alabama. In 1882 they came to California and located near Grangeville, Kings county, and engaged in general farming. Later they removed to the Mussel Slough country, and in 1884 settled in Tulare county, homesteading a claim near Monson. This quarter section proving alkali land they left it in 1885, pre-empting a quarter section in the vicinity of Visalia. At that time there were no roads through this part of the county, and but few improvements on the neighboring farms. The improvements since made on the property have brought it to rank with the most valuable and productive ranches in the county. Up to within six years ago the land was devoted to the raising of grain, and since that time stock-raising and a hundred orange trees are the principal sources of revenue. The land is irrigated by means of wind-mills, modern methods being a feature of the work, and Mrs. Arnold is deservedly mentioned as one of the most successful horticulturists and stock-raisers of the county. She is the mother of four children, namely: Lizzie, the wife of O. B. Kiteley; Archie, Arthur Lee and Dollie, the three last named being at home. In her political convictions Mrs. Arnold is a staunch Democrat, and though unable to cast a vote still wields a marked influence in this direction.

OLIVER O. HENRY. The record of the life of Oliver O. Henry, one of the most esteemed and useful members of the society of Portersville, is closely identified with much that has marked the progress of Tulare county during the last thirty years. He was born in Frederick county, Md., April 13, 1833, the descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, John Henry, came from his birthplace in the north of Ireland to America and located in Lancaster county, Pa., a pioneer of the state. His son, Francis Henry, was born in Lancaster county, in manhood removing to Maryland, where he became a prominent citizen. He followed the occupations of farmer and merchant, and was also an extensive railroad contractor. A man of much oratorical ability, he served in the Maryland legislature, where he won considerable renown. In time he removed to Michigan, thence to Ohio, in the latter state engaging as a railroad contractor with the Erie Company, building up a large business, while he also engaged as a merchant. Locating finally in La Grange county, Ind., he engaged as a farmer and contractor, taking a large drainage contract which called for an unusual display of executive ability. He became prominently known throughout the state, servicing in the Indiana legislature two terms and making a record for himself and his cause. He was always a staunch Democrat and gave his support to the principles of this party. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch Mason. His death occurred in Indiana at the age of eighty-eight years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Formwalt, was born in Maryland and died in Indiana, at the age of sixty-two years. Her father, John Formwalt, was born near Westminster, Md., and in manhood became a farmer, locating later in life in Ohio, where his death occurred. Besides Oliver Osborn Henry, mentioned as the subject of this narrative, Mr. and Mrs. Henry were the parents of the following children: Catherine Jane, who became the wife of O. B. Taylor and died in Portersville; Albert Reese, who died in Portersville; and Margaret, who died in youth in Ohio.

Oliver Osborn Henry received his education principally in the common schools of Ohio and Indiana, also received instruction from a private tutor. He was but thirteen years old when he accompanied his parents to La Grange county, Ind., their home being in the heavy timber lands of that state. With the self-reliance of the pioneer lad he set to work to assist in the clearing of the lands about their home, at an early age becoming engineer of his father's sawmill, which he conducted for five years. When twenty-three years old he married, after which he located on timber lands which he cleared and cultivated. In the spring of 1864 he crossed the plains by Halliday's coach to Nevada and for a time engaged in mining. Coming on to California he spent a short time here, later returning to Indiana by the Isthmus of Panama. He remained on his farm until the fall of 1878, when he sold out and coming to California once more purchased the farm which has remained his home ever since. This was then a vast wheat field and since that time has been transformed to a modern ranch, in addition to the raising of grain the setting out of all deciduous trees and grapes occupying considerable time and attention. When Mr. Henry purchased the land in 1881 he paid $10 per acre, and seven years later sold five acres for $1,000, another five acres for $875, showing the great advance in prices caused by the improvement and cultivation of the property. In 1878, with his brother Albert, who had purchased one hundred orange trees in Los Angeles, he set out an orange orchard on his place, these being the first budded orange trees at Portersville. He met with a success in this venture as well as in his other efforts, and soon established a nursery of both deciduous and citrus trees, supplying the greater part of the trees for the early orchards throughout this section. Of his original property eighty acres was under the Pioneer Ditch, and of this he still owns twenty acres, the balance having been divided among his children. Twelve acres are devoted to the cultivation of oranges, while the remainder is in alfalfa.

December 18, 1856, occurred the marriage of Mr. Henry, uniting him with Catherine Lydia Dawson, who was born in Sandusky, Ohio, in which state she was reared until she was seventeen years old, when she accompanied her parents to Indiana. Her father, John Dawson, a native of Pennsylvania, was a farmer and an early settler of Ross county, Ohio, whence he removed to La Grange county, Ind., in 1853, following the occupation of farmer until his death at the age of seventy-six years. He was a man of strong, earnest convictions, and at the age of sixty-six years enlisted in the Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Infantry, for service in the Civil war. His wife, formerly Lydia Huddell, was born in Ross county, Ohio, and died in Indiana, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. Of their family of five daughters and two sons, all but one son and one daughter are deceased.

To Mr. and Mrs. Henry were born three children, namely: W. Willshier, who died in Portersville November 3, 1902 (for more complete details refer to his biography which appears on another page of this work); Clara A., a graduate of the University of California, the wife of Prof. George Louderback, of the Chair of Geology, in the University of Nevada; and Edith F., a graduate of the San Francisco High School and a course in the San Francisco Normal School, the wife of S. A. Barber, M. D., of Portersville. In his fraternal relations Mr. Henry was made a Mason in Ionic Lodge, at Wolcottville, Ind., of which he is past master, and is a charter member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M. Both himself and wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star of that place. In his political convictions he is a staunch Democrat and has always given his support to the principles he endorses. He is active in party work in Tulare county, having served efficiently as a member of the county central committee.

BURTON U. HEBERLING. A prominent position among the business men of Visalia is accorded B. U. Heberling, a successful contractor and manufacturer, and one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of the community. He has been a resident of the city since 1887 and for several years engaged as a carpenter and builder, in 1894 entering into partnership with D. M. Toothacre, and two years later establishing their planing mill which has brought to them such satisfactory returns. Among the buildings which they have put up are the Lucier Building; the high school and its addition; telephone building; Spaulding residence; the building for the California Fruit Cannery's Association; the cannery; Wallack Building; the Methodist Episcopal Church South; the Huey residence, as well as those of Brownfield, Harp, Emery, Marks and others too numerous to mention; the Oak Grove and Angiola schools, etc. Their work has been of a high grade and first class in every particular, and they have legitimately won the position which they hold today as contractors.

Mr. Heberling is a descendant of German ancestry, the paternal grandfather having brought his family across the water and located them in Wayne county, Pa., where he became a farmer. In his family was a son, Frederick, who was born in Germany and accompanied his parents to their new home in America. He also became a farmer in manhood, remaining on the old home place, which he cleared and put under cultivation. His death occurred in 1875. He left a widow, formerly Sarah Leeper, of Northumberland county, Pa., who was left an orphan in childhood. She died in 1902. Of her family of three sons and three daughters, one daughter and two sons are now living. B. U. Heberling, the only one of the family in California, was the youngest in the family and was born in Wayne county, Pa., March 4, 1862. He was reared on the paternal farm until he was fourteen years old, and attended the public schools. He then sought employment among the neighboring farmers and also in the sawmills of Alleghany county, Pa. He spent one season in the timber camps of Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and then returned to Wayne county, Pa., where he remained for a time. In 1887 he came to Visalia, Tulare county, and began to work at the trade of carpenter. In forming the partnership with Mr. Toothacre the firm name became Heberling & Toothacre, and from a small beginning they have risen to the position of the leading contractors in the city. After their establishment of the planing mill in 1896 they have engaged in the manufacture of all kinds of building material and carry on a large business in Tulare county. In addition to this interest Mr. Heberling is associated with the Pioneer Brick Company, as one of its organizers, and is its secretary and treasurer. This company manufactures its brick in Visalia.

The home of Mr. Heberling, which he built at No. 318 Northwest First avenue, is presided over by his wife, formerly Mary A. Akers, of Wayne county, Pa., where they were united in marriage. Three children were born of this union, namely: Alice, Marvin and Floyd. Fraternal Mr. Heberling is associated with the Woodmen of the World, the Independent Order of Foresters, the Independent Order of Good Templars, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, now serving as trustee of the same and superintendent of the Sunday-school. An enterprising citizen he is a member of the Board of Trade and takes an active and intelligent interest in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community.

J. A. Coley,

JOHN A. COLEY, a prominent business man of Escalon, San Joaquin county, is a self-made man in every respect, his success in life being due to his own industry and perseverance. Of distinguished ancestry, he is of English descent on the maternal side, and of Irish descent on the paternal side of the family. His grandfather, William Coley, was born in North Carolina, removing in early manhood to Russell county, Va., where he became the owner of a large plantation. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and was wounded in battle. His son, George W., the father of John A., although born in North Carolina, was reared on the old Virginia plantation of his father in Russell county. He also followed agricultural pursuits in his native state, in the vicinity of Bristol, for years, but during the after part of his life was engaged in commercial pursuits. At the time of his death, in 1901, he was fifty-eight years old. By his marriage, with Polly Ann Agner, he became connected with another old and distinguished family of Virginia, and his widow still survives him, having in March, 1904, reached the age of fifty-eight years. She has been twice married, having two children by her first marriage now living and six living of those born of her second marriage, one being deceased, and of the latter family, John A. is the eldest but one.

It was near Bristol, W. Va., that Mr. Coley was born, August 31, 1868, just five years after West Virginia had started her existence as a new state. He was brought up on the home farm, which was located twenty miles west of Bristol. Here he attended the district school during his boyhood and early youth, and remained an inmate of the home until he attained his majority, assisting in farm work. October 8, 1889, he left home en route for California, arriving in San Joaquin county on the fourteenth day of the same month. His home has been in this vicinity ever since and he has been prominently identified with the business interests of this county, first as farmer and afterward as grain dealer. The first two years of his residence in this county were spent upon a ranch in the present Escalon district, and the land upon which he then worked is now owned by him. In 1891 he began farming on his own behalf, beginning in a modest way with one team and wagon. The first year he cultivated only one hundred and sixty acres; this was increased the second year to three hundred and twenty, and the third year to twelve hundred and eighty acres, and he then had three teams. Soon after this Mr. Coley was enabled to purchase three hundred and twenty acres. In connection with operating this farm, Mr. Coley entered the employ of G. W. McNear of San Francisco, and for seven years he was grain buyer for this firm at Escalon and Avena. In their interests, he superintended the building of their extensive warehouses at these points. December 7, 1903, he purchased these warehouses and since then he has continued in the grain business on his own behalf. The warehouse at Escalon has a capacity of twenty-four hundred tons and the one at Avena is equally as capacious. He has sold the latter, however, but nearly all the grain raised in this vicinity is handled by him. He still owns a farm of three hundred and twenty acres on the French Camp road.

Quite recently Mr. Coley built a fine, substantial residence in Escalon, and he also erected the Escalon Hall for lodge purposes and public stores. In San Francisco, he wedded Sadie Florence Wade, a lady also born in Bristol, W. Va., and they have one child, Cyril L. Fraternally Mr. Coley is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Woodmen of the World, and the Masons, affiliating with Oakdale Lodge No. 275. Politically a Democrat, he is not active in political affairs, but he is intensely interested in educational affairs, officiating as he does as clerk of the board of school trustees, now building a new and commodious school house in Escalon. Mr. Coley takes a fitting interest in his home place and its surroundings, and in connection with grain buying he also handles insurance to some extent.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS RIDGWAY. A native of Missouri, Mr. Ridgway was born April 27, 1859, a son of J. D. and Martha (Baldwin) Ridgway. The father was born in Missouri, where he lived at the outbreak of the Civil war. Enlisting as a private in a regiment from his native state he served until 1864, when he was honorably discharged. Soon after he and his family crossed the plains to California, the first winter being spent in Lassen county. The following spring they located in Solano county, where for the next five years Mr. Ridgway was engaged in farming near Elmira. At the expiration of the five years he returned to Lassen county and in 1893 went to Los Angeles county. There he followed farming for some years, but is now living retired from active pursuits, making his home with his son, the subject of this review. Mrs. Ridgway was a native of Kentucky and died in Lassen county in 1875. She was the mother of five children, of whom Christopher C. is the oldest.

Christopher C. Ridgway was reared on his father's farm, receiving his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. He remained at home until after the death of his mother when he started out to make his own way in the world, and since that time he has had many ups and downs, but success has rewarded his efforts and today he is one of the substantial men of Tulare county. For a time, after leaving home, he worked at anything he could get to do, but finally became engaged in the stock business near Susanville, where he had two hundred acres under ditch. This he sold in 1891 and went to Los Angeles county, where he became interested in the dairy business. In 1894 he became identified with the creamery business at Compton, which he conducted as manager for two and one-half years. At the expiration of this time he located at Hynes, where he became identified with another co-operative creamery. This he managed for five years, or until 1901, when he located near Portersville, where his brother had located a year previously. In partnership they bought a farm of four hundred and eighty acres, one hundred and seventy-five of which are devoted to alfalfa, while the balance is used for grazing and general farming purposes. The brothers erected what is now known as the "Sunflower Creamery." This model plant has a daily capacity of one thousand pounds of butter, which is shipped to the Los Angeles and San Francisco markets.

In Lassen county, Mr. Ridgway was united in marriage with Sarah A. Hodges, who was born in Missouri. To this union have been born five children, as follows: Oscar, Ernest, Fred, Archie and Joseph.

In politics Mr. Ridgway is a Republican, but has neither the time nor the desire to take an active part in political matters. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, while both he and his wife hold membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ANDREW LESLIE. The sterling traits of character which have distinguished the citizenship of Andrew Leslie, a successful miller of Portersville, Tulare county, are an inheritance from a long line of Scotch ancestry, his birth having occurred in Roxburyshire, Scotland, September 5, 1848. His father, also called Andrew, was a native of Berwickshire, Scotland, where he engaged as a farmer until 1855, when he took his family to Ontario and located in the vicinity of London. There he made his home for the remainder of his life, attaining a prominent position in the citizenship of that place. The family records of the Leslies are intact back to the year 1300, and the descendants take pride in the staunch integrity and honor of their ancestors. Andrew Leslie, Sr., married Elizabeth Allan, also a native of Scotland, whose death occurred in Ontario. They became the parents of nine children, all of whom attained maturity, while six are now living.

Andrew Leslie, Jr., was next to the youngest child in his father's family, remaining in his native land until removing to Ontario with his parents. In November, 1865, when a little more than seventeen years old, he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a miller near London. He remained in that location for three years, when, in 1868, he came to the United States and located in Milwaukee, Wis., where he followed his trade. Later he was located in the southern part of Illinois until 1872, when he came to California. After following his trade in Sacramento for a time he went to Marysville, working in the Buckeye mills, and was then employed in the Star mills at Vallejo. Deciding to engage in the milling business independently, he established a business in Balls Ferry, Shasta county, later removing to Red Bluff, where he entered into partnership, the firm being known as Willard & Leslie, proprietors of the Red Bluff mills. October 9, 1889, he came to Portersville and assumed charge of the mill which he now owns, conducting the same for about a year, when he entered into partnership with John T. Manter. This relationship continued until 1893, when Mr. Leslie purchased the entire property, since which time he has operated the mill alone. In 1897 he put up a new mill on the old site, a four-story brick building, 64x30 feet in dimensions, equipped with a modern Plansifter system of bolting and operated both by water (from the Pioneer Ditch Company) and by steam, the mill having a capacity of sixty-five barrels per day. He caters to the local trade in Portersville and vicinity, and has a lucrative business.

In Cottonwood, Shasta county, Cal., Mr. Leslie was united in marriage with Carrie Leschinsky, a native of Philadelphia and the daughter of John Leschinsky, who was born in Poland and immigrated to Philadelphia, where he made his home until 1856, when he brought his family to California via the Panama route. He located in Shasta and engaged in business as a blacksmith, later following farming and stock-raising in Cottonwood. He is now retired from active cares, making his home in Redding. His wife, a native of Germany, died in Cottonwood. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Leslie, namely: Andrew Allan, foreman in his father's mill; William Walter, a graduate of the Portersville high school, and now attending the University of California as a student in the dental department; John August, a graduate of the high school, and employed as a clerk in the store of Wilko Mentz; and Fred Arthur, a graduate of the high school, who in 1905 entered the dental department of the University of California. Mr. Leslie is identified fraternally with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in national politics is a staunch Democrat.

JAMES CHARLES McCABE. The participation of J. C. McCabe in business affairs in Portersville, Tulare county, has resulted in financial returns for himself and an increase of commercial prestige for the city. Of distinct ability, unswerving integrity, and a broad and liberal interest in all movements pertaining to the general welfare, he has taken a prominent position in the place, and is esteemed by all who know him. A native son of the state, he was born at Marysville March 3, 1857. His father, Owen McCabe, was a pioneer of the state, coming from New York City to California via the Isthmus of Panama in 1849. Unlike many others who thronged to the west in that year, he did not seek his livelihood in mining but engaged in the hotel business in Marysville. During the flood of 1862 his residence was carried away, but undaunted by the misfortune he moved into another house in that place and continued his efforts. In 1877 he located near Modesto, Stanislaus county, where he engaged in farming for many years, even now in his ninety-ninth year, looking after the interests of his place. His wife, formerly Margaret Fitzpatrick, died in Marysville many years ago. They were the parents of five children, all of whom are living.

The third in his father's family, J. C. McCabe was reared in his native city until 1867, when he located with his uncle, Owen Fitzpatrick, in Modesto, Stanislaus county, a stock-raiser of that place. He attended the district school in the vicinity of his uncle's home until attaining manhood, when he engaged in the stock business. In 1878 he went to San Francisco and served an apprenticeship as an upholsterer, three years later going to Colfax, Wash., where he engaged as an undertaker. Returning to California, he located in San Diego and assisted in the furnishing of the Hotel Del Coronado. After a year he went to San Francisco and took up the undertaking business. In 1880 he located in Tulare and after a few months purchased, with Mr. Carruthers and R. Black, the undertaking establishment of H. N. Denny, of Visalia. For one year he conducted the business, when he sold out, and coming to Portersville established a furniture and undertaking business under the firm name of Parks & McCabe, and continued the manager for seven years. The partnership was then dissolved and, since that time Mr. McCabe has conducted affairs alone. He is an expert in his line of work, having taken seven courses in embalming in San Francisco. In addition to his business interests, Mr. McCabe owns eight acres adjoining the city, five acres of which is in eight-year navel oranges. He also owns a handsome residence at the corner of Murry and Putnam avenues.

In Tulare Mr. McCabe married Maggie Griffin and they are the parents of three children, namely: May, Charles and Oren. A staunch Republican in his political convictions, Mr. McCabe has often been called upon to serve his party in various positions of trust and responsibility. In 1894 he was nominated on that ticket for the office of county coroner and public administrator, and was elected over two candidates by a plurality of five hundred, being one of two Republicans elected that year. He took the oath of office in January, 1895, and served efficiently until 1899, at that time refusing further candidacy. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Encampment, of which he is past chief patriarch, Foresters of America and Modern Woodmen of America.

HENRY CARL WILLIAM PETERSON. In his work as a horticulturist Mr. Peterson has won an unusual success and is deservedly prominent among the representative men of this section, although but a brief time numbered among this class of citizens. A native of Sleswick, Germany, he was born April 8, 1865, a son of John Peterson, a mason and contractor by trade. Both father and mother, the latter formerly Annie Mathewson, died in that locality. Of the seven children born to them two sons are now living. The education of Henry C. W. Peterson was received in the schools of Sleswick, which he attended until he was fifteen years old, when he was apprenticed to learn the barber's trade. He continued for four years in that work, after which he traveled throughout Germany and Austria for the same length of time. He then spent two years in Berlin, after which, in 1889, he came to America and located in Elgin, Ill. He followed his trade in that location until 1890, when he removed to St. James, Minn. That city remained his home for five years, when he came to California and in Portersville, Tulare county, purchased the Pioneer Barber Shop, and continued in the prosecution of his trade until November 15, 1904, when he sold out to Gus Long. When he first located in Portersville he purchased land five miles north of the city and at once began setting out navel oranges, now having a bearing orchard of twenty acres. Since that time he has bought and set out ten acres of land one mile north of Portersville, where he has now built a handsome residence and laid out fine grounds. He has a large well adjoining the place, operated by an electric motor, thirty-horse power and of large capacity, now being used to irrigate one hundred acres of oranges. He is also interested in the Hilo Water Company, of which he is a director and secretary. In 1905 he contemplates an extended tour throughout Europe and especially in Germany, his native land.

In Elgin, Ill., April 7, 1889, Mr. Peterson was united in marriage with Louisa Michaels, a native of Grasse-Spiegel, Germany, and a daughter of William, a contractor and builder, who came to America in 1902 and now resides with his son-in-law. He was accompanied to the western state by his wife, formerly Augusta Kupplin, a native of the same place in Germany. Of their six children all are living. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have one child now living, namely: Rosa Anna Helen; another child, Elsie, died at the age of six years. They are members of the German Evangelical Association. Mr. Peterson is a member of the Portersville Citrus Union and politically casts his ballot with the Republican party.

THOMAS E. HENDERSON, an enterprising citizen of Tulare county and a stock-raiser of considerable note, was born in Huntingdon county, Quebec, January 7, 1851, the youngest and only one in California of a family of eight children, four of whom are living. His father, James Henderson, was born on Grampian Hills, Scotland, inheriting from a long line of Scotch ancestors those qualities of manhood which distinguish the citizens of that country. As a young man he came to America and became a farmer in Quebec, near Franklin Centre, near the line of New York state, where he made his home until his death when over eighty years of age. His wife, formerly Eliza Brower, was a native of Vermont and the descendant of German ancestry.

Reared on the paternal farm, Thomas E. Henderson received his education in the district school and the Huntingdon Academy, from which institution he was graduated in 1864. He then entered McGill University, taking the classical course until the close of the Sophomore year when he left school and went to Malone, N. Y. He there studied law under the Hon. W. A. Wheeler and was admitted to the bar in November, 1869, after which he came directly to California. He located in Santa Clara county until July, 1870, when he came to Tulare county, and became a resident of Visalia. For several years following his location in this section he managed the Broder ranch and later followed the stock-raising and butcher business, and owned two ranches near Visalia. In 1875 he located on the Tule river, three and a half miles from Portersville, where he bought new land and engaged in stock-raising until 1881. He then sold out and the following year purchased the property which he now owns, consisting of one hundred and twenty acres of land on the Tule river, under irrigation from the Porter's Slough and Hubbs & Miner Ditch. This property is devoted to alfalfa and stock, while he also owns one hundred acres on the Tule river three miles below this property. Although educated for the law and in every way fitted to make a success of the profession, the free, open life, the healthful activity, and the simplicity which comes from close contact with the primitive labors, have meant more to Mr. Henderson than the honors which might have been his in the other field. He has not, however, allowed his early training to be lost, but has brought it to bear in many cases which came up before him as supervisor of the First District, to which office he was elected in 1884 on the Democratic ticket, taking the oath of office in January, 1885. In 1888 he was re-elected over two candidates by a large plurality, his majority the first time being only forty votes. Elected again in 1892, he went into office with the largest majority in the county, holding the office until January, 1897, or twelve consecutive years. From 1891 to 1897 he was chairman of the County Board, during which time the new hospital was built, as well as the jail and sheriff's office, and hundreds of miles of road in the county.

Near Rocky Ford, Tulare county, March 16, 1884, Mr. Henderson was united in marriage with Serena Young, a native of Stanislaus county, Cal., and the daughter of Daniel Young. The latter was a native of Benton county, Mo., from which place he crossed the plains to California in 1849. He became a farmer and stockman near Modesto, in 1872 locating near Rocky Ford, where his death occurred at the age of sixty years. His wife, formerly Martha Maxwell, was a native of Arkansas, and a daughter of Thomas Maxwell, who brought his family across the plains, and located near Knights Ferry, where he died. Mrs. Young is still living and makes her home in Dinuba. Mrs. Henderson was the eldest in a family of eight children, all of whom are living, and was reared to womanhood in Tulare county. Born to Mr. Henderson and his wife are the following children: Edwin, Robert, Fred, Maurice and Ralph, all of whom are at home. Formerly Mr. Henderson is a Mason, having been made a member of this organization in 1874 in Visalia Lodge, No. 128, and is a charter member of Portersville Lodge, No. 303. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and is a member of the county central committee.

RICHARD B. FENTEM. The founder of the Fentem family in the United States was an English merchant bearing the name of Richard Fentem, who brought his family across the ocean to America and settled in Missouri. From that time until death ended his activities he engaged in merchandising in addition to cultivating a farm in Lincoln county. His son and namesake, who was born at Manchester, England, learned the carpenter's trade and for years followed the building business, but eventually engaged in the raising of stock and grain, continuing to reside in Lincoln county until his death in 1862. Years afterward his widow died at the home of her son, Richard B., in California, when seventy-seven years of age. A native of Kentucky and bearing the maiden name of Clarissa Palmer, she was a daughter of Burton Palmer, a Virginian, for some time resident in Kentucky, but later a farmer in Missouri.

In the family of the second Richard Fentem there were twelve children, of whom seven daughters and one son attained mature years, and five daughters and the son still survive. The latter, who was given the name of his father and grandfather, forms the subject of this article. He was born near Troy, the county-seat of Lincoln county, Mo., July 28, 1848, and was the youngest in the large circle of children. The district schools and Troy Seminary gave him fair educational advantages. After leaving school he engaged in trading in stock for a year, but malaria had seriously affected his health and a change of climate was rendered imperative. Hoping to be benefited by the change, in 1869 he came to California, arriving at Stockton in September and without delay securing employment on a ranch. In January, 1870, he bought a flock of sheep and embarked in the sheep business in the San Joaquin valley, where he bought a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres on Orestimba creek. For some time he was extensively engaged in raising sheep, but in 1878 sold off his entire flock and turned his attention to grain farming on the west side. Buying four hundred acres four miles south of Newman, he engaged in its cultivation with gratifying success. On disposing of that property, in 1892 he bought forty acres at the corner of the Hill and Creamery roads, which being under the ditch furnishes an excellent location for the raising of alfalfa. The residence and barns were erected by the present owner, a wind mill has been put in and other improvements made. About fifty head of high-grade Short-horn, Durham and Holsteins may be seen on the place and twenty-five of these are milch cows, for the dairy industry is one of his principal interests. On the inception of a plan to establish a creamery he aided the enterprise and bought stock in the New Era, which was the first creamery built in the valley and proved a success from the start. As a member of the first board of directors he was instrumental in planning a policy that brought success to the creamery company and encouraged the establishment of similar plants throughout the valley. Besides his home place he has three hundred and twenty acres on the west side of the canal, which is excellent grain land and will be under the new Sunset canal. While his interests are largely connected with those of the agricultural community of Stanislaus county, his home place lies in Merced county, just across the line from Stanislaus, two and one-half miles south of Newman. Under his control at this writing there are twelve hundred and eighty acres, the care of which demands his entire attention, making him one of the busiest ranchers in all this region.

Two sons (Warner, who died here, and Ray, a farmer of this locality) were born of the marriage of Mr. Fentem and Miss Thane South, who was born in Pike county, Mo., and died at their California home. After her death Mr. Fentem was united in marriage with Miss Ella Clare, who was born in Lincoln county, Mo., and remained there until after her marriage. She is a daughter of Frank Clare, an agriculturist through all of his active life, but now taking the rest to which his four score years entitle him. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Fentem there are five children, namely: Bessie, a student in the San Jose high school; Hiram, Alton, Benjamin and Elberta. The family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Fentem officiated as ruling elder and clerk for about twenty-four years and also held the office of Sunday school superintendent. In political views he favors the principles of the Democratic party.

EDWARD HILL DALE. The dairy business claims the attention and efforts of Edward Hill Dale to the exclusion of all else except the raising of stock, his work along agricultural lines having been abandoned in 1900. Up to that time he farmed about twenty-five hundred acres, but finding the returns more or less precarious he sold off the greater part of his land in 1900 and has since turned his attention into another channel. He is located in the vicinity of Poplar, Tulare county, and is esteemed as a liberal and broad-minded citizen. Born near Carrollton, Carroll county, Ga., July 7, 1849, he is a son of John M. Dale, whose biographical history is given more at length in the sketch of Samuel E. Dale, found in another part of this volume. Until attaining young manhood he remained a resident of his native state, removing in 1868 to Tennessee, thence to Illinois. Returning south he was located in Arkansas and Mississippi for about fourteen years, six of which were spent in the former state, his work during this period being the operation of stationary engines. In March, 1882, he came to California and in Tulare county homesteaded the claim where he now lives, the southwest quarter of section 4, township 22, range 26, having to pay $1,200 in cash. He began the raising of grain, which continued uninterruptedly until 1900. He then turned his attention into his present line of work, meeting with a success. Twenty-five acres of his land—all of which is under irrigation from the Poplar Irrigation Company ditch, of which he is a director—is devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa.

The marriage of Mr. Dale occurred in Monroe county, Ark., and united him with Virginia C. Thompson, a native of Tennessee, and they are the parents of the following children: James G., engaged in the oil business in Kern county; Mary, the wife of Thomas Phillips, of this vicinity; John, a graduate of Ramsay's Business College, and now the principal of the commercial department of the Tulare high school; Addie, the wife of Howard Bachman, of Berkeley; Elmer, at home; Edward, located in Berkeley; Maud, the wife of J. B. Sailors, of Berkeley; and Kate, at home. Mr. Dale gives his support to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which his wife is a member. Politically he is a staunch Democrat.

JAMES LOONEY MINER. A prominent citizen of Tulare county, James Looney Miner is widely esteemed both for his business ability and the sterling traits of character which have distinguished his residence in this section. A native of Gallatin (now Saline) county, Ill., he was born October 16, 1835. His father, Daniel Looney Miner, was a native of Tennessee, from which state he served in the war of 1812. He became a pioneer farmer of Illinois, his death occurring in Saline county, at eighty-four years of age. In young manhood he married Polly Bays, a native of Virginia, who was reared in Tennessee. She made her home with her son, James L., until her death, which occurred at the age of eighty years. Of the twelve children born of this union one son and two daughters came to California, of whom two are now living.

The tenth child in order of birth, James Looney Miner was reared on the paternal farm in Saline county, receiving his education in the subscription schools in his home neighborhood. When not quite twenty years of age—on March 3, 1855, he married and started in farming pursuits in Saline county. Responding to the need for men during the Civil war, he enlisted August 2, 1861, in Company E, Third Illinois Cavalry, and was mustered out September 5, 1864, after a service of three years, one month and three days. After enlistment the first move of the regiment was to start to Benton Barracks from Springfield, thence to St. Charles after three days, then to Jefferson City, Mo., and on to Springfield. They returned to Rolla, Mo., in October, and the following February went back to Springfield, Mo., thence to Cross Hollow or Elkhorn Tavern, where Pea Ridge fight occurred March 6, 7 and 8, 1862. They then rambled in many directions, making cavalry dashes throughout the south that lay west of the Mississippi river, finally reaching Helena, Ark. Thence his company was sent to St. Louis as bodyguard of General Carr, then first colonel, and there they remained during the winter of 1862 and '63. Going to Vicksburg in February they took part in the siege of that place, after its capitulation going to New Orleans, and then to Burwicks Bay, out on a scout, during which Mr. Miner's horse was shot under him, being struck in the flank, behind the shoulders and in the head. As his horse fell Mr. Miner sprang from him and was immediately taken prisoner and compelled to ride a mule forty-five miles before he was given anything to eat. He remained under guard sixty-six days before he was exchanged, when he returned at once to his regiment and again entered into active warfare. He found the regiment at Port Hudson, where they remained until being sent to Memphis, Tenn., thence to Springfield, Ill., where they were mustered out of service.

Mr. Miner returned to civic life as a farmer in Illinois, continuing in that location until 1867, when he decided to come to California, making the trip via the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. He first located near Bloomfield, Sonoma county, remaining there for one year, when he went to Yolo county, near Woodland. October 10, 1869, he came to Tulare county, locating five miles west of Portersville with his family. In the fall of 1871 he purchased his present property, where he has since made his home with the exception of the years 1890 and '91, which he spent on his homestead, southwest quarter of section 32, township 24, range 28, the same being still in his possession. He now owns one hundred and fifty-seven acres of the original purchase along the Tule river, which is under irrigation from the Hubbs & Miner Ditch. He also owns the west half of the southwest quarter of section 28, township 21, range 27, less four acres, and the west half of the northwest quarter of section 33, township 21, range 27, less nineteen acres. He also owns mountain timber in this county, as follows: the south half and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 21, range 31; the south half of the northwest quarter of section 8, township 21, range 31; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8, township 21, range 31; and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18, township 21, range 31, two hundred and eight acres in all.

Mr. Miner has been married twice, his first wife being Christian Elizabeth Smith, of Kentucky, who died in Saline county, Ill. She was the mother of four children, namely: John Asbury, whose farm adjoins that of his father; Phoebe Elizabeth, the wife of William H. Hensley, of Los Gatos; William David, who died young; and Mary Jane, the wife of J. X. Siewczynski, a farmer near Portersville. In Saline county Mr. Miner married Mary Elvira Oglesby, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of four children: James Willis, engaged in farming with his father; Hiram Robert, a farmer in this vicinity; George Alfred, at home; and Larrender Margaret, the wife of D. K. Wallace. Fraternally Mr. Miner was made a Mason in Saline county, Ill., then joined the Portersville Lodge, No. 303, from which he is demitted. Mrs. Miner is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. Politically Mr. Miner is a Jeffersonian Democrat.

HON. FRED E. HARDING. The state of California owes much to eastern men of wealth who have used their money in developing various industries here. To this class belongs Mr. Harding, who has spent many thousands of dollars in improving and developing the resources of Antelope Heights, Tulare county. A native of New York state, he was born in Richfield Springs in September, 1847. His father, Hon. Henry G. Harding, was a native of Connecticut, from which state he removed to New York where he became a prominent business man and farmer. He was also a leading politician and served in the legislature as a representative from Otsego county. In 1857 he migrated westward, locating in Monmouth, Ill. There he became a member of the firm of C. Harding & Co., bankers. By his marriage with Elvira C. Hubbard, he became the father of two children, Fred E. being the eldest.

Fred E. Harding was a youth of ten years when his father removed to Illinois. His preliminary education was secured in the Monmouth public schools, later graduating from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., with the degree of A.

B. He immediately engaged in the banking business as bookkeeper in the National Bank, of Monmouth. Two years later in 1874 the Second National Bank of Monmouth was organized and Mr. Harding was appointed as assistant cashier. From that position he was steadily advanced until in 1892 he was elected president, which connection he still retains. Aside from his interests in this bank, he assisted in the organizing of the Peoria Home Savings and State Bank. He is also a director in the State Bank of Roseville, Ill., and is connected with the National Bank of the Republic in Chicago. Aside from his banking interests he has been engaged in the manufacturing business in Monmouth, and was also engaged in farming in Warren county, Ill.

In about 1891, Mr. Harding began spending his winters in California. The possibilities of orange growing in the highlands attracted his attention and in 1898, in partnership with Mr. Pattee he purchased one thousand acres of land, which has since been improved and developed. A large portion is now devoted to the growing of oranges, which venture has proved a complete success and "Antelope Heights" is one of the best paying orange properties in Tulare county. The place is equipped with all modern improvements including pumping plant, packing house, etc. As before stated, these improvements have cost many thousands of dollars, the spending of which has done much for this section of the state.

Mr. Harding has for many years been active in political matters, and in addition to serving as a member of the Monmouth city council, in 1894 he was elected to the Illinois State Senate by the Republican party. During the time he filled this office it was his pleasure to assist in the election of Senators Cullom and Mason. As is usual with a successful business man Mr. Harding demonstrated his ability, and at the expiration of his term his constituents expressed their satisfaction in the work he had accomplished.

In Monmouth he was united in marriage with Lucy A. Nye, who was born in Massachusetts. Since becoming interested in the Antelope Heights district they have won an enviable place for themselves in the esteem of their friends.

CHARLES WESLEY TRABER. As one of the active young men in his community to advocate progressive ideas and improvements, Mr. Traber has ever been a willing promoter of every plan to advance the business development of his section, and much of the progress of Parlier is traceable directly to his influence. A native of Mendocino county, Cal., he was born March 25, 1868, a son of Charles P. and Mary

E. (Coates) Traber, the former a native of New York state and the latter born in Wisconsin in 1833. The union of this esteemed couple took place in Wisconsin, and in 1861 the father came west to seek a home, locating in Mendocino county, and a couple of years afterward he was joined by his wife. Of the three children born of this union, two are sons and one a daughter, namely: George L.; Charles W.; and Loretta, wife of Samuel J. Harp, deputy sheriff of Fresno county. The father, after locating in Mendocino county, engaged in the flour milling business and for a period of thirteen years ran a mill near Willits, in that county. In 1874 he removed to the San Joaquin valley, being one of the original settlers on the plains south of Selma, Fresno county. There he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres of government land in the vicinity of Parlier, and he it was who superintended the construction of the Church ditch, or the "Long cut," which has been of untold benefit to the settlers, bringing as it does the water necessary for agricultural pursuits. He also ran a mill at Centerville for a short time, in connection with his farm pursuits. His active career was closed by his death in 1878, aged forty-five years.

The mental training of Charles W. Traber was gleaned from his attendance at the public schools. His school days over, he engaged in farming and stock-raising. He is now joint owner of the paternal farm with his brother George L. They have one hundred cows, and the high brand of their dairy products is unrivaled. Their extensive vineyards cover forty-five acres devoted to the raisin grape, which alone yields them a comfortable income. The balance of their one hundred and sixty acre farm is used in raising alfalfa, which yields several successive crops each season, in addition to furnishing pasturage for several months. Mr. Traber is unmarried, and with his mother still resides on the home place, and it is needless to add that she is well cared for by her sons, who anticipate her every want. Although he has abstained from political aspirations, Mr. Traber is active in the advancement of the Republican cause and has proved himself a useful member of his party. Fraternally he is allied with the Knights of Pythias of Selma and the Native Sons of the Golden West.

JOHN HILTON. Prominent among the successful farmers of Tulare county is John Hilton, who is located a mile and a half east of Portersville on property which he purchased in the fall of 1876. He is a native of Oswego county, N. Y., where he was born June 8, 1827, the third in a family of twelve children, of whom all attained maturity and eight are now living. His father, John Hilton, Sr., was born in New York state, the son of a Revolutionary soldier, in manhood becoming a farmer in Livingston county, Mich. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California and upon his arrival engaged in mining in Placerville until his death, which occurred the following year. His wife, Hannah Wrought in maidenhood, was born in New York state and died in Michigan. One son, George, enlisted in the Third Michigan Cavalry and died in the service.

John Hilton was reared in New York state until 1836, when he accompanied his parents to Livingston county, Mich., where he received his education in the subscription schools of that section. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he began farming at Casnovia, Muskegon county, clearing a farm of heavy timber. He continued to improve and cultivate eighty acres of land until 1864, when he decided to bring his family—wife and seven children—to the more remote west where opportunities for advancement were more plentiful. He accordingly outfitted in March of that year with horse-teams and with twelve wagons in the train, going from Grand Haven to Milwaukee by boat, when they drove across Wisconsin and Iowa to the Missouri river. At Council Bluffs they laid in a new supply of provisions and continued on their journey, having to wait, however, two weeks to cross the Missouri river, as there were forty-two hundred wagons ahead of them. The journey to Oregon was safely accomplished via Fort Hall, and from Oregon City they went to Marion county and located within twelve miles of Salem, where Mr. Hilton engaged in farming until the following year. He then took his family to Mariposa county, Cal., and followed farming for a year; thence to Sonoma county until the fall of 1867, when he located on land he pre-empted twelve miles south of Portersville, Tulare county. In 1876 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres where he now resides, which he devoted to grain and stock-raising. In 1898 he set out twenty acres of navel oranges in addition to his other interests. Of his original purchase he still owns one hundred and fifty-five acres, all of which is under irrigation from the Pioneer Ditch.

In Michigan Mr. Hilton married Eliza Averill, who was born in Onondaga county, N. Y. Her father, Samuel H. Averill, was a native of Vermont and an early settler of Onondaga county, N. Y., where he farmed and engaged as a lumberman. In 1848 he removed to Ottawa county, Mich., where he engaged as a farmer until his death at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth McFerran,

Andrew J Lapever

of New York state, also died in Michigan, at the age of seventy-five years. Of their family of twelve children eight attained maturity, two sons serving in the Civil war, one dying in service. Mrs. Hilton was the fourth in order of birth. To Mr. Hilton and his wife were born the following children: Nellie, the wife of Robert Baker, of Portersville; Julia, wife of James Montgomery, of Los Angeles; Carrie, the wife of George Brown, of Bakersfield; Frank P., a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, being Forest Ranger of the Southern division of the Sierra Forest Reserves, having charge of the Kern river division near Isabella; John, a miner, of Portersville; Delbert, a farmer at Hanford, Kings county; Adella, residing in Portersville, the widow of C. T. Graef; and Mary, the wife of Frank Woodley, of Los Angeles. Mr. Hilton is a Socialist in his political affiliations, having withdrawn his allegiance from the Republican party in 1894.

ANDREW J. LAFEVER. Of the old army of '49, composed of men of positive natures, and sufficient number of years to realize the importance of the events into which they were ushered, comparatively few remain. Soon their deeds and hardships will be told only by their children and children's children, or gained through the medium of narrative and history. The charm of the brave and courageous and unusual surrounds these men, not only those who have passed the borderland which separates them from their fellows, but those who remain to tell their own stories and dream their own dreams of the past. To the latter class belongs Andrew J. Lafever, the inheritor of a name connected with early American history, and a representative of a family which on both sides has counted fearlessness and justice as priceless heritages. Mr. Lafever was born in Knox county, Tenn., November 14, 1826, and is the third child in a family of fourteen, seven sons and seven daughters, who, with the exception of one daughter, attained maturity.

Before the war with England the paternal great-grandfather, Henry Lafever, came to America with his family, and for two years made his home in Virginia, after which he returned to France. Later, when LaFayette came to this country to help liberate the colonies, he accompanied him, and when the war was over again returned to France. He also served under Napoleon in the battle of Waterloo. The grandfather, John Lafever, was born in Virginia, but the greater part of his life was spent in Tennessee, where he attained a competence as a cotton raiser. He served through the Revolutionary war and gave up his life for his country in the war of 1812. During the Revolutionary war some British soldiers sought to refresh the inner man by stealing some sweet potatoes from the farm of this soldier, and his wife, in maidenhood Lucy Barbankez, with the courage of her side of the house, shot seven of them and was arrested for the deed. She was, of course, never prosecuted, as the soldiers were appropriating her property, and she gained a deserved reputation for courage and justice. She became the mother of two children, and died at the age of eighty-seven years. William Lafever, the father of Andrew J., was born in Tennessee, moved to Missouri in 1834, and purchased and entered land in Ray county. In time he became one of the large land owners of that territory, raising hemp, tobacco, corn and stock, and having many slaves to do his bidding. He took a great interest in the state militia and in the training of soldiers. He served in the war of 1812, Black Hawk war and Seminole war. A temperate and moderate life told in his favor, for at the time of his death he had attained the age of ninety-seven years. Longevity appeared on the maternal side also, for his wife, formerly Elizabeth Roberts, a native of South Carolina, lived to be eighty-four years old.

Andrew J. Lafever was the third in order of birth of fourteen children. What early education he received was in a private school, and he worked at cotton scraping with the slaves, and engaged in horse trading on his father's plantation. In 1846 he enlisted as a volunteer under General Taylor, being assigned to Colonel Willcock's division; he re-enlisted in 1847 and was assigned to Company C, Santa Fe Battalion, U. S. A., becoming sergeant under Gen. Sterling Price. In 1847-48 he was one of the escort of the general, as his second choice, and in 1848 he returned to Missouri, stopping for about twenty days at Independence, where he was discharged from the service in October, 1848. November 4, 1848, he cast his first presidential vote for General Taylor. Engaging in a butchering and packing business in Camden, Ray county, Mo., he had opportunity to hear much of the great gold discovery on the coast, and April 4, 1849, set out across the plains with ox-teams, eventually arriving at the Peter Lawson ranch, near Bidwell's bar, Cal., at the end of about seven months' travel. For the first thirteen months he engaged in mining at Bidwell's bar and other camps in the vicinity. While at Bidwell's bar a thief was discovered in camp who had tried to purloin a can of syrup. A quick consultation was held by the other miners and it was decided to hang without ceremony. Mr. Lafever, however, objected, owing to the absence of a code of laws governing such misdemeanors. The life of the man was spared, but an attempt was made to obviate further trouble of that kind by drawing up a code calculated to terrify evil-doers. For the first offense of petty larceny the penalty was forty-nine lashes and expulsion or hanging; for grand larceny, ninety-eight lashes or hanging; for the second offense of petty larceny, ninety-eight lashes or hanging; for the third offense, hanging; and for the second offense of grand larceny, hanging. Willful murder was also punished by hanging. Men condemned to trial had the benefit of the opinion and judgment of twenty-four of the substantial men of the community, and every question had to be answered by the witness.

From Bidwell's bar Mr. Lafever went to the South Fork of the Feather river with a prospecting company, intending to turn the course of the river, a project which signally failed. Removing to Marysville, on the Yuba river, he engaged in mining for a short time, and then followed the tide of fortune-seekers to Gold Lake, which, however, was never found. For a time he prospected in St. Louis, Pine Grove and Howland flat, also Nelson creek and Poor Man's creek, and in 1850 mined in Told's Diggings and Forbestown, starting a general merchandise store and butchering business in the latter camp. He was successful in his store and mining, and in the spring of 1851 built and managed the Lexington house, an unpretentious log structure located beside a spring which he had discovered in 1850. He also conducted a general store. In 1852 he built a new house at Lexington, near the log cabin, sawing the lumber by hand. Successful beyond his expectations, he started a hotel and butcher shop at Spanish Flat, managed the enterprises in both places, but disposed of the Lexington hotel in 1854, and making his headquarters thereafter in Spanish Flat until 1857. In the mean time, in 1856, there had been great excitement in camp over the water ditches, resulting in shooting scrapes, and the organizing of a mob who were going to hang an innocent man, which, however, was dispersed by Mr. Lafever. In the spring of 1857 Mr. Lafever himself escaped serious trouble because of the justifying circumstances surrounding his act. In self-defense he shot and killed Judge John Chapels, the leader of that mob, and though he surrendered to the authorities, nothing ever came of the matter. Mr. Lafever showed wonderful clemency for his fallen foe, hired a man to care for him, and so far ingratiated himself that the dying man shook hands with him, and expressed appreciation of his bravery.

In the fall of 1857 Mr. Lafever went to Marysville, and then started to Mendocino county, but stopped at Petaluma and Santa Rosa for the winter. Purchasing a place near Ukiah, he later started for Colorado, but wintered in Merced county with a band of horses and mules. Sickness invaded his two hundred and fifty head of stock and he was delayed until August, in which month he came as far as Visalia, taking his horses to the mountains for the winter. On two occasions in Mendocino county thieves tried to take his land away from him, and in 1870 he was shot through the left lung by H. Griffiths, in Potter Valley, almost destroying his left hand and wrist. In 1873 he purchased a home near Kings river, in Fresno county, added to it from time to time, until he owned more than a township of unsurveyed land, including a place called Pine Flat, consisting of a quarter of a township, which he presented to his only child and son, Henry C. Lafever. When the fence law was passed he experienced serious trouble with his land, for grabbers resorted to every device to deprive him of it, even waylaying and killing his son, November 17, 1882. During the trial following this brutal murder Mr. Lafever killed Zeb Lashley in the courtyard at Fresno, the outlaw being at the bottom of the difficulties over the land and the killing of his son. The outlaw was surrounded by forty-eight of his gang. Through the prevalence of injustice Mr. Lafever lost his cattle and land, and practically everything that he had in the world. During the Indian troubles Mr. and Mrs. Lafever had several narrow escapes from the savages. In November, 1885, he came to Visalia and purchased forty acres in the outskirts of the town. Here he raised cattle, horses and hogs, and in 1893 he moved to his late home of six acres within the city limits, at No. 409 Watson avenue. May 29, 1904, he lost this home and all his possessions by fire, entailing a loss of $5,000 over and above $2,200 insurance. Here he was extensively interested in raising thoroughbred Poland-China hogs and fine chickens, deriving a comfortable income from this peaceful occupation.

Mr. Lafever's married life began in Marysville, March 19, 1852, his wife, formerly Catherine Trullinger, being a native of Baden, Germany, who came to California in 1850. The tragic death of the only son of this union cast a shadow over the lives of both Mr. and Mrs. Lafever, and was among the heart-breaking disasters which have paved the way for peace in the far west. Mr. Lafever is a Democrat in politics, and is a member of the California Society of Pioneers and a veteran of the Mexican war, in which he has served as commander. Formerly he was a member of the Knights of the Golden Circle. There are few men whose early experiences have been of such a varied character as have been those of Mr. Lafever. The somber side of the camps and mines and trails has seemed to predominate, yet he is a cheerful and optimistic man, believing in the good of humanity, and evidencing at every turn of his busy life generosity for those less fortunate than himself. Books might be written of absorbing interest concerning his life, and he has observed intelligently and faithfully, even impartially, considering the sorrows which have darkened his pathway and the misfortunes which have resulted from man's greed and ingratitude.

ELLIOTT PATTEN. Coming to California in 1881, Elliott Patten has since met with success in his business ventures and has also made scores of warm personal friends who have an interest in his welfare. He is, in all respects, a self-made man, his success coming as the result of his own well-directed efforts.

A son of John and Catherine (Waite) Patten, he was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 9, 1858. John Patten is also a native of the Buckeye state, his father, James, being an early settler in Morrow. On reaching man's estate John Patten engaged in farming and stock-raising, meeting with excellent success while living in Brown county. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Fifty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, being a corporal of his company. During the war he was wounded several times, but received no serious injuries. Mr. Patten was united in marriage with Catherine Waite, who was born in Florida, a daughter of David Waite. This marriage resulted in the birth of twelve children, all of whom grew to maturity and ten are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Patten are passing their declining days in Ohio, surrounded by a large circle of friends and all the comforts that make old age enjoyable.

Elliott Patten was reared in Brown county on his father's farm, receiving such education as could be secured at the district school. At the age of fifteen years he left his home, going to Butler county, where he secured employment on a farm. Here he remained eighteen months, when he went to Maine, where a sister was living. Securing employment as driver of a freight wagon for a lumber firm, he continued at this work for two years. He then determined to seek his fortune in the far west and accordingly made his way to Kansas, locating for one year in Irving. Again changing his place of residence he went to Salina, the same state, where he was employed on farms until 1881, the year of his arrival in Tulare county.

Locating in the foothills he purchased eighty acres of land, which he at once began to improve. Buying a house he moved it to its present location on this ranch and has since remodeled it and made it modern in its appointments.

In addition to his first purchase, Mr. Patten homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, which he has improved. He has also made several purchases, including the place where he now resides, which came into his possession in 1883. Here he erected a fine residence and otherwise improved the place until he has one of the finest ranches in this section of the county. In 1901 he disposed of a portion of the old homestead to the Merryman Fruit, Land and Lumber Company. His total possessions now aggregate two hundred and eighty acres. Aside from the land in the lowlands, he has a ranch in the Cedar Creek mountain range, just below the snow line, which is used for grazing purposes. He is also engaged in well boring, which occupation he has followed several years. During this time he has put down hundreds of wells, most of which have produced at the depth of one hundred feet.

Since coming to California, Mr. Patten married Ellen Fly, a daughter of James C. Fly, a sketch of whom will be found on another page of this volume. Four children have been born to them, as follows: Elsie, Otto, Mary E. and Ernest, who died at the age of eighteen months.

Mr. Patten is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and takes a deep interest in the Sunday-school, having been its superintendent for several years. In politics he is a Democrat, but takes little interest in political matters. He has had a hard struggle with the world, but his efforts have won a victory of which he may feel proud. Many a man would have failed, and where now appears the word "success" we would have read "failure." He has done much for Tulare county and the people unite in giving him credit for what he has accomplished.

LEE LOWREY. Among the younger generation of Tulare county who have early impressed their worth upon the community in which they reside, prominent mention belongs to Lee Lowrey, a native of the state, his birth having occurred near Visalia November 21, 1867. His father, J. E. Lowrey, a native of Tennessee, crossed the plains in 1850 with ox-teams, and upon his safe arrival began mining. Later he located in Sonoma, eventually making two trips back east by way of the Isthmus of Panama, his return trips being made across the plains, when he farmed in Sonoma county. In 1860 he settled near Visalia, Tulare county, three miles northwest of the city, improving a farm and engaging in the stock business. He also bought a ranch in Long valley and followed stock-raising in that location, building a home in the foothills, and setting out an orange orchard of two acres, which is said to produce the finest oranges in the state. On account of having impaired health in his valley home the greater part of his time was spent on his mountain ranch, where his death occurred in June, 1904, at the age of seventy-five years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Parsons, a native of Missouri, descended from the Fosters, of that state, that being her mother's maiden name. Mrs. Lowrey resides in the old home since her husband's death,—of her family of thirteen children, eight of whom attained maturity,—being surrounded by six surviving children, namely: Marian N., a stockman in the vicinity of Visalia; J. D., a stockman in Visalia; D. D., in Alaska; Allie E., at home; W. L., a stockman near Visalia; and Lee, of his review.

Upon his father's farm near Visalia Lee Lowrey was reared to young manhood, receiving his education in the public schools of that city and the Normal School. He also attended and graduated from the Stockton Business College, and for thirteen months following engaged as a bookkeeper in that city. Returning home he engaged in stock-raising, renting the mountain ranch as well as that in the vicinity of Visalia, his brand, a double L, with a bar across the top, being well known throughout this part of the country. Profiting by his business training he decided to enter mercantile activity, purchasing the establishment of J. H. Edwards & Co., of Orosi, in partnership with his brother, the firm name being J. D. & Lee Lowrey. This business enterprise was successfully continued until 1903, in December of that year selling out and dissolving partnership. Mr. Lowrey returned to the stock business on the old Lowrey ranch on Nigger creek, although he still makes his home in Orosi.

In Orosi Mr. Lowrey married Alethea Hitzman, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of Fred W. Hitzman, who died in California. They are the parents of one child, Rema Elaine. Politically Mr. Lowrey is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and fraternally is associated with the Knights of Pythias, of Orosi, and Visalia Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West.

N. B. EDMISTON. Among the old pioneers of Tulare county prominent mention belongs to N. B. Edmiston, who came to California in 1850. He was born in Gibson county, Tenn., April 25, 1827, next to the youngest child in a family of seven, of whom he is the only one now living. His father, Robert Edmiston, was also a native of Tennessee, and a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He served in the war of 1812 under General Jackson. In an early day he removed to Pope county, Ark., and became a pioneer farmer of that state, where his death eventually occurred. His wife, formerly Mary Glasby, a native of Tennessee, died when her son, N. B., was only two years old.

Reared to young manhood in Pope county, Ark., N. B. Edmiston received his scholastic training in the district school in the vicinity of his home. Upon the breaking out of the Mexican war, he became a volunteer in Company A, First Arkansas Cavalry, under Colonel Yell, serving until the expiration of his time (one year), taking part in the battle of Buena Vista. His brother, Andrew, also served as a member of the same regiment. After his honorable discharge he returned home and remained a short time, when, in 1850, in company with his brother Andrew and two comrades, he started across the plains with a wagon and five yoke of oxen. They traveled by the southern route—El Paso, Tucson, and Yuma to San Diego—thence by sailer to San Francisco. Seventy miles east of Tucson they sold their teams and bought pack-horses with which they continued their travels. From San Francisco they went to the mines in Sonora, remaining there for seven months, after which they teamed with ox-teams from that point to the mountains. In March, 1852, Mr. Edmiston returned to Arkansas via Panama and New Orleans, there purchasing cattle, which in the spring of 1853 he started to drive across the plains by the northern route—by the Platte, and Salt Lake, where they wintered, after which they proceeded to Stockton, near Woodbridge, San Joaquin county. A year later he sold the cattle, continuing in the stock business, however, for many years. In 1850 he located in Calaveras county, where he had discovered a copper ledge on Table Mountain, which he opened and operated for a time. In 1874 he located in the northern part of Tulare county, for one year engaging in the sheep business on Sand creek. While a resident of that place he was one of the organizers of the Sand Creek district, building the first schoolhouse, which is now in Orosi. In 1876 he purchased his present property of three hundred and twenty acres from the railroad, being one of the first to locate in this section. The following was a dry year and he lost his sheep, after which he engaged in the raising of grain. After the building of the irrigation ditch he set out a vineyard, now having twenty-seven acres devoted to this cultivation, while the balance of sixty acres, which comprises what is left of his original ranch, as he has sold a few acres from time to time, is given over to alfalfa.

In Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, Cal., Mr. Edmiston was united in marriage with Nancy Howell, a native of Arkansas. Her father, James Howell, a native of Tennessee, and an early settler of Arkansas, came across the plains in 1853-54 with Mr. Edmiston. He married Sarah Bond, also of Tennessee. His death occurred in Newman, Stanislaus county. To Mr. and Mrs. Edmiston were born four children, namely: Sarah J., deceased, the wife of J. A. Bacon, of this vicinity; Allen McD., who is conducting a dairy near Sultana; Theodate, deceased, who married John Toler, also of this vicinity; and Bettie, at home. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he has officiated for forty years as steward. In his political affiliations he is a Democrat.

HARVEY LIGHT. In 1900 the death of Harvey Light removed from the business and social life of Modesto a man whose influence had ever been felt along the lines of advancement and progression in both city and county. Numbered among the pioneers of the state he came to California in 1850, bringing with him the inherited and trained characteristics of the thrifty New Englanders, and with that reserve force, energy and ability, he gave himself to the upbuilding of the western state, his years of usefulness passing considerably beyond the biblical allotment before he was called upon to lay down alike the responsibilities and pleasures of this life.

The family of which Harvey Light was a representative came from the state of Maine, his father, George W., being a native of Washington county. He was a stone-cutter by trade and at the age of twenty years removed to Bangor, Me., where he took up a farm in the midst of wilderness lands and made that his home until his death at the age of eighty-seven years. Through the many noble qualities which were manifest in his character, through his mode of life he came to be a prominent and well-beloved man in the community which knew him intimately for so long a time. He occupied an influential position in the affairs of the neighborhood and his voice was always to be heard on the side of right and justice. Always a Democrat in his political convictions he lived to see the rupture caused by the political factions of the country, and at the time of the war relinquished his earlier convictions and espoused the cause of Republicanism as that which meant right and justice and equality, in regard to both country and the colored race. His wife, formerly Sarah Jane Lurmen, was born at Liberty, Me., and died at Bangor at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom all but two attained maturity. Given in order of birth they were as follows: Harvey, the personal subject of this review, born at Bangor, Me., August 17, 1822; Olive, who died in Bangor; Tillie

Jane, who also died in Bangor; Sarah Ann, who likewise died in that city; Susan, now a resident of Modesto, and of whom a short sketch will be given; Arvilla, who died in Bangor; Henry, who died in Bangor, having served his country in the Civil war; George, an extensive farmer and prominent citizen of Carmel, Me.; Samantha, who died in Bangor; Andrew, who died in Bangor; and Clara, now Mrs. Ed Crabtree, of Oakdale.

Harvey Light was reared to manhood in his native state, receiving his education in the common schools. Upon attaining manhood he decided to come west, starting in 1849 for California via the Isthmus and arriving in San Francisco in the following year. With the majority of those who sought fortunes in the west at that time he became a miner at Marysville, engaging also at LaGrange and various other places before he was satisfied to take up less exciting but more wholesome and profitable labor. After recovering from the cholera, which attacked him while still in the mines, he went to San Francisco and became boss of the gang of men who were driving piles on the Pacific wharf in that city, remaining so occupied until this work was entirely completed. Afterward he was extensively interested in mines and mining operations and at a later date sold his interests to a San Francisco company with considerable profit to himself. In 1874 he came to Modesto, Stanislaus county, and located with his sister, Mrs. Susan Hurd, with whom he lived retired until his death in 1900. Like his father he was a strong Republican in his political convictions, and though never desirous of personal recognition was active in the support of good government.

Mrs. Susan (Light) Hurd was born in Bangor, Me., February 8, 1836, and when sixteen years of age was united in marriage in her native city with A. D. Hurd, also of Bangor. To them was born one child, named Harvey, who died at the age of three years. Mr. Hurd also came to his death in 1854, while engaged in his work as contractor and builder at Hermon, Me., being killed by falling rock. Mrs. Hurd came to California in 1872 via the Isthmus and went to live with her brother at LaGrange, the two afterward locating in Modesto, where she now makes her home. Mrs. Hurd owns considerable real estate in the city, among other property owning the business block at the corner of I and Tenth streets.

L. D. HILLIARD. Five and a half miles east of Visalia, Tulare county, is located the home place of L. D. Hilliard, one of the successful farmers and stockmen of this section. He was born near this same farm on the Hilliard homestead, November 22, 1857, a son of Abraham Hilliard, a pioneer of the state and of this locality. The elder man was born in Northampton, Pa., his home remaining in the east until 1852. In that year he crossed the plains with ox-teams, bringing with him to California his wife and one child. After six months they arrived safe in the state and located in the vicinity of Stockton, where they remained until 1853. Coming to Tulare county in that year, they made their home for a short time in Venice, then the county seat, but soon became established on the farm five and a half miles east of Visalia. Here Mr. Hilliard made improvements, putting up a house (their first home here being in a house where the Indians had killed and skinned a white man a few years before), after which he engaged in the stock business. Later he gave considerable attention to general farming, adding to his land from time to time by purchase until he owned five hundred acres on the Kaweah. His death occurred in 1877, at the age of sixty years, and removed from the community one of the pillars in the foundation of the western statehood. Politically he was a staunch Republican. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Stoops, of Pennsylvania, survives him, and is now the wife of H. C. Arnold, of Plumas county, Cal. Born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hilliard were five sons and three daughters, of whom four sons and the three daughters are living. Of the sons F. M. is a farmer near Traver; W. C. P. is on the old home place; and A. W. is also farming a part of the home property.

L. D. Hilliard was reared on the paternal farm, receiving his education principally through attendance at the district school in Deep Creek district. On account of the illness of his father, he felt it necessary to early assume responsibility, at the age of sixteen years conducting the farm. After the death of his father he gave his attention entirely to the work of the place for several years. In 1884 he rented a farm and began independent operations, his attention being chiefly given to the raising of grain. He finally purchased eighty acres on the plains near Exeter. About sixteen years ago he bought his present property and has since engaged in farming and stock-raising. The farm consists of two hundred and forty acres on the Mineral King road, about five miles east of Visalia, where he has made all the improvements, putting up substantial barns and outbuildings, and in 1904 built a nine-room, two-story residence which adds no little to the value of the property. This is conceded to be one of the finest farm-houses in the vicinity, while the other improvements are in keeping. His herds number among them good graded stock, and Mr. Hilliard has ably demonstrated the fact that he understands the work with which he has been so long and so profitably connected. In addition to the property mentioned (located on sections 31, 32 and 27 of township 18, range 26), he also owns a ranch on Dry creek of four hundred and forty acres on sections 3 and 2, township 17, range 27, six miles north of Lemon Cove.

Near Exeter, Tulare county, September 3, 1884, Mr. Hilliard was united in marriage with Laura B. Teague, who was born in that vicinity, a daughter of John Teague, of Exeter. They are the parents of two children, Carroll Arthur and Effie Elizabeth. Mr. Hilliard takes a deep interest in all local affairs, and for several terms has served efficiently as school trustee of the Deep Creek district. Politically he is a Republican.

WILLIAM STOBIE. A man of great integrity, William Stobie enjoys the esteem and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact, either business or social. He is located on an extensive ranch of five hundred and eighty acres seven miles northwest of Visalia, where he is engaged in the cattle business, having one hundred head of cattle, and meeting with a success which names him among the prominent stockmen of this section. A native of Scotland, he was born near Dunse, Berwickshire, February 17, 1848, a son of Henry Stobie, a shepherd, whose birth and death occurred in the same place. His mother, Elizabeth (Wilson) Stobie, also died in that locality. Of their family of nine children, only three are now living, William Stobie being the only one in America.

William Stobie was reared in his Scottish home, receiving his education in the private schools of that country. When ten years old he became dependent upon his own resources, his first employment being to herd cows. He remained so occupied for six months, after which he worked on farms in the neighborhood. He saved his earnings and in 1872 came to America, spending the first five months in Canada, and going thence to Texas, where he remained four months. In 1873 he came to California, going first to Sacramento, then to Stockton, working in the latter place for seven months. Locating in Tulare county in February, 1874, he found employment in shearing sheep through the summer, working with a sheep raiser in the mountains. In the same fall he bought a thousand head of sheep and herded them on the plains toward Portersville until 1879, when he purchased eighty acres of land a half mile north of Farmersville. He continued in this business in that location until 1890, when he sold out and bought one hundred and sixty acres on Cross creek and began the cattle business. He has added to his land until he now owns five hundred and eighty acres all in one body, parts of sections 2 and 3, of township 18, range 24, and section 32, of township 17, range 24. In addition to this property he also owns twelve hundred and eighty acres on Stone river, on sections 19 and 29, of township 16, range 26. With the passing years the changes which have come into the life of Mr. Stobie have been paralleled by those which the country has experienced. In 1874, when he first came to this section, there were no fences, comparatively no improvements, and little cultivation, even within a distance of three or four miles of Visalia, farmers and stockmen riding at will throughout the country. Prosperity and progress have come to the entire section, the upbuilding and development of the country being the direct result of the efforts of such men as Mr. Stobie.

In Scotland Mr. Stobie was united in marriage with Elizabeth Allen, a native of the county of Heddington, Scotland, and they are the parents of one son, Wilbur Jones. In his political affiliations Mr. Stobie gives his support to the Republican party.

ANDREW R. LAHANN. Although Mr. Lahann was a resident of California but a few years, he made for himself a position that will be honored by his many friends for years to come. Death is always sad, but when the grim reaper takes from our midst one who is young, well-liked, and with a bright future, it is especially sad.

Mr. Lahann was a native of Illinois, being born in Monmouth, November 16, 1867. His father, Reimer Lahann, emigrated from Germany and settled in Monmouth, where he was engaged in cigar manufacturing for many years. He and his wife are now living in Chicago. She bore the maiden name of Catherine Fongardt, and was also a native of Germany. By their union three children have been born.

Andrew R. Lahann was the second child and the only son. He was reared in Monmouth and received an excellent education in the Monmouth college. After completing his schooling he learned the cigarmaker's trade and later engaged in the manufacture of cigars with his father, the two carrying on quite an extensive wholesale business. In 1898 he disposed of his interests in the east and came to California, locating at Naranjo, or Antelope Heights. Here he at once became engaged in the fruit industry, purchasing twenty-two acres of land, which he converted into an orange grove, being the first man to set out an orange tree on the Antelope Heights tract, which was christened "the Catherine tree." Later he purchased a general merchandise store here and for two and one-half years conducted a successful merchandise business, selling to M. E. Brotherton in April, 1904. Mr. Lahann was also interested in the Antelope Heights Water and Irrigation Company, serving as its secretary for some time.

In 1892, while still a resident of Monmouth, Mr. Lahann was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Adelaide Rankin, who is a native of that city. She is a daughter of Cyrus Rankin, who was born in Indiana, from which state he removed to Monmouth, where he became an extensive farmer and stock-raiser. He married Miss Martha Reynolds, a native of Ohio. Both are now deceased, the former dying in 1899 and the latter in 1890. Mrs. Lahann was the fourth of a family of five children and was reared in her native town, receiving her education in the Monmouth college, from which institution she was graduated in 1889 with the degree of A. B. By her marriage with Mr. Lahann she is the mother of two children, Catherine Martha and Reimer Rankin.

On July 27, 1904, the many friends of Mr. Lahann were shocked to learn of his death. He had become very popular since taking up his residence here. Fraternally he held membership with the Phi Kappa Psi and the Knights of Pythias, and in religion was a member of the Presbyterian Church, being one of the most earnest workers in that church. Since his demise Mrs. Lahann has been attending to the business he so well established, demonstrating her ability in this time of need. It is her intention to remain here and give her two children the advantages of a good education. Her large circle of friends wish her prosperity, and while they mourn the death of her husband they feel that he left a comfortable competency which will enable his loved ones to live in comfort.

CHARLES L. DENNEN. No more encouraging example of the self-made farmer is found in Kern county than Charles L. Dennen, owner of a valuable ranch of one hundred and eighty acres in the Fairview district, and also an additional one hundred and forty acres in the Panama district. Mr. Dennen is the child of parents who had little to offer him in the way of pecuniary help, and his youth and early manhood were one succession of struggles for the success which has since come to him. He was born in Oxford county, Me., March 7, 1857, his father, L. W. Dennen, also a native of Maine, being at that time employed in the factories of the great manufacturing and lumbering state.

The elder Dennen is a strong character, and all his life has shown a disposition for adventure and change. As a boy he found vent for an excess of energy by running away from home and boarding a man-of-war, upon which he served with creditable fortitude about four years. The year of his son's birth he removed to Brown county, Kans., settled on a farm of eighty acres, and was busily improving the same at the outbreak of the Civil war. In the service of the Union he attained the rank of corporal, and spent his time principally at St. Joseph, Warrensburg and Sedalia, Mo., actively engaged in fighting guerrillas. From Brown county he removed to Pottawatomie county, Kans., where he improved a homestead and became prominent in politics and government affairs. He was awarded the mail contract for eight years, and for a number of years was postmaster of a station in the county. His next home was his present one in Hennessey, Oklahoma, where he is living retired, and where, at the age of eighty years (having been born in 1824) he is hale and vigorous, and able to enjoy the people and events by which he is surrounded.

In both Brown and Pottawatomie counties, Kans., Charles L. Dennen attended the public schools at rare intervals, but he made up for his educational deficiency by becoming a careful and practical farmer. He was but twenty years old when in February, 1877, he married Mary Davis, a native of Madison county, Iowa. After his marriage he conducted a rented farm for four years, at the end of that time investing his earnings in a farm of his own, which he managed successfully until 1887. He then sold his farm and came to Kern county, Cal., took up a tract of land covered with weeds and brush, proved up on it, and at the same time rented land for a year from the Kern Land Company. He was not particularly successful at the start, and when making arrangements for the nucleus of his present farm, which consisted of twenty acres at $60 an acre, he was able to pay down only $10. A stout heart and hope in the future came to his aid, and with the help of his encouraging and economical wife he toiled early and late and finally had his farm paid for and a comfortable home established for his family. More land was soon required, and finally the one hundred and eighty acres proved also too small. The new farm is valued at $100 an acre, but the prospective owner feels no dread of the future, for he has gained a substantial footing in the west, and his career has been of so honorable a nature, that his word has come to be regarded as would be his bond. He makes a specialty of hay and stock, and averages from eight hundred to one thousand hogs a year. He has a good country house, well constructed barns, and the most practical of modern agricultural implements. Feeling keenly the disadvantages under which he labored in his own youth, because of a limited education, he has given his children a better training, and every advantage possible under the circumstances.

Mr. and Mrs. Dennen have had nine children born to them: Lilly Josephine, the wife of James Hosking; Charles Richard, living in Bakersfield; George Bary, a rancher; Le Roy Alfred; Clara C., deceased; Millie Alline; Lewis William; Mary Myrtle, and Vernon Vivian.

Mr. Dennen is a man of broad and tolerant sympathies, a good neighbor, faithful friend, and generous and indulgent husband and father.

CHARLES H. BAILEY. Five and a half miles west of Merced is located the eighty-acre ranch of Charles H. Bailey, a successful rancher and dairyman of the British Colony, and one of the deservedly prominent men of this section. A native of the state, he was born in Sacramento county, eleven miles from Sutter's Fort, January 17, 1854, his parents being Joshua T. and Susan (Hughes) Bailey, the latter a native of Illinois. The father was born in Wisconsin in 1804, and in manhood became an engineer, one of his most important achievements being the erection of a smelting works in his native state. He also engaged extensively in the lumber business. In 1849, in company with his two sons, Joel and James Bailey, he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, upon their arrival proceeding at once to the mines at Placerville, where they made a fortune digging gold. In 1853 he returned home by the same route and in the same year brought his family to California, crossing the plains with a large drove of cattle and horses. At Ash Hollow they had a severe encounter with the Indians, and lost a part of their cattle. On the trip out Mrs. Bailey was taken prisoner by the Indians, but her recapture was safely effected. She was also useful at one time in making bullets for the soldiers at Fort Laramie. On reaching California a second time Mr. Bailey located in the Sacramento valley and engaged in the stock business, operating on a very extensive scale, and was very successful until he lost much of his stock during the floods of 1862. Soon after that disaster he became interested in fruit culture, setting out a large vineyard which was one of the first in Sacramento county. In this occupation he continued until his death, which occurred at the ripe age of eighty-four years. For so many years identified with the best interests of the state in its pioneer growth, Mr. Bailey is justly numbered among the men who laid the foundation for the present prosperity and greatness of California. Besides Charles H. Bailey his living children are as follows: Joel, on the old home place in Sacramento county; George, located in San Luis Obispo county; Joshua, also of Sacramento county; and Nellie, the wife of A. B. Blair, of Santa Cruz.

The home of Charles H. Bailey remained in Sacramento county until he was seventeen years old, when he became dependent upon his own resources, with the characteristic self-reliance of the young pioneer. Following his early training he engaged in farming until 1884, being located in Yolo county, going thence to San Joaquin county, where he remained four years. Returning home he spent some time on the paternal ranch, when, in 1895, he came to Merced county and purchased his present farm. As before mentioned this consists of eighty acres of fine farm land, which is devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa and grain, while he also successfully conducts a dairy, which is supplied by twenty-four cows, of graded and thoroughbred stock, in which he takes the greatest pride and interest. Mr. Bailey has made a success in his work and is honored throughout the county for the many sterling traits of character which distinguish him.

The marriage of Mr. Bailey united him with Mrs. Kezziah (Melson) Howell, a widow with one daughter, Zoie, now the wife of H. Davis. Mrs. Bailey was a native of Iowa, and the daughter of James Melson. She died April 21, 1904. By this union with Mr. Bailey one daughter, Ethel, was born. In his political preference Mr. Bailey is a Republican and fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Native Sons of the Golden West. Always taking an active interest in the advancement of the general welfare of the community, Mr. Bailey was an invaluable influence in securing rural delivery for this part of the county.

WILLIAM HARRISON LOWELL. The earlier settlers of Kern county were brave, sturdy men, of resolute spirit and determination and full of enterprise. Prominent among these pioneer residents stands William Harrison Lowell, who for nearly thirty years has been actively identified with the industrial progress of Bakersfield, and is now one of its most substantial and respected citizens. A man of unquestioned integrity, business tact and energy, he has achieved success in his undertakings, by strenuous effort and prudent thrift acquiring much wealth, being now one of the leading capitalists and property owners of this section of the state. A son of William Lowell, he was born April 14, 1841, in Somerset county, Me., being lineally descended from a colonial family of distinction, in New England annals no name standing higher than that of Lowell.

Reared and educated in Maine, William Lowell worked as a ship carpenter when young, and was afterward engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state, living there four score years. Coming then to Bakersfield, he spent the declining years of his long life with his sons, dying at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Tyler, spent her seventy-one years of earthly life in Maine. She was a most estimable woman, and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She bore her husband six sons, namely: Wilmot, a pioneer resident of Bakersfield; Danville, who came to California in early life, and died here at the age of fifty years; William Harrison, the subject of this sketch; Henry Harrison, of Boston, Mass., a twin brother of William Harrison; John, of Bakersfield; and Alexis F., also of Bakersfield.

Brought up on the Maine homestead, William Harrison Lowell acquired his early education in the country schools, and assisted in the care of the home farm until attaining his majority. January 14, 1862, he enlisted in the Fourth Battery, Maine Light Artillery, and served for three years with the Army of the Potomac. He was at the front in the battles of the Wilderness, the second engagement at Bull Run, the battle of Slaughter Mountain, and in many skirmishes of minor importance. Returning home at the close of the war he followed farming during the summer seasons, and in the winter time worked in the lumber camps.

Migrating to California in 1876, Mr. Lowell worked on a ranch in Kern county with his brothers for awhile, and later, in partnership with them, embarked in the business of sheep raising, being located near Bakersfield. With characteristic enterprise and foresight they bought two hundred and ninety-three acres of land, now known as the Lowell addition to Bakersfield, platted it, laying out streets and town lots, and have since sold the greater part of it, selling to a syndicate for $175 an acre. Prior to platting the land, however, Messrs. Lowell used it for ranching purposes until 1887. These four gentlemen subsequently bought forty acres of land lying three-fourths of a mile from this city, and set it out as an orchard, devoting it especially to the culture of peaches. Messrs. Wilmot and Alexis F. Lowell at the end of five years sold their shares of the orchard to their brothers John and William, the present owners.

In partnership with his brother Wilmot, Mr. Lowell owns the entire residence block lying between M and N, and Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, and containing ten houses. Mr. Lowell has other property of value, having erected two houses on K street, and also owning two houses on Chester avenue, all of which he rents. Money that he has not invested in real estate or residences he loans, allowing but little of his capital to lie idle.

July 2, 1875, in Maine, Mr. Lowell married Hannah C. Ball, a native of Somerset county, Me., and they have one son, Arthur, living at home. Mrs. Lowell came here with her husband in 1876, and for a few years resided on the ranch, in common with her neighbors enduring hardships and privations unknown in her eastern home. Mr. Lowell is a Republican in politics, and is a member of Hulbert Post No. 127, G. A. R.

ROBERT M. HOLTY. While realizing the extent of the difficulties which beset his path, the pioneer sheep raiser of the coast stands forth as a singularly fortunate seeker for independence, for while his risks were great, his gains also were great, and the freedom of his life, its close association with the elements, and the small demand upon the conventional side of his nature, presents a picture of vigorous opportunity refreshing to the monotonously envired city dweller. Many of the early sheep raisers have indelibly impressed their services upon the past in Kern county, and have assured to their families a share of the opulence of the present. Prominent among these men was Robert M. Holby, whose shrewd manipulation of crude conditions has caused his name to be identified with sheep raising in both Kern and Tulare counties. His death, March 7, 1892, on the anniversary of his birth, in Manchester, Canada, March 7, 1847, was deeply regretted, not only because he represented the typically strong personal characteristics of the frontiersmen, but because forty-five years of existence cut short his happiest years. Coming to Bakersfield in 1891, he erected the comfortable house now occupied by his widow, and it was his intention to plant shade trees and lay out the grounds with shrubs and flowers. The latter part of his dream failed of realization, however, but his plans have been since carried out, with the result that the Holby property is one of the most attractive in the city.

Of English parentage, Mr. Holby was reared in Canada, where his father was a large farmer and land owner. He received a practical education in the public schools, and when nineteen years of age sailed around the Horn to Oregon, and engaged in teaching school for about six months. Discerning the great possibilities of sheep raising, August 26, 1867, he left Oregon and with money given him by his father, invested in sheep along the White river, Tulare county, Cal. and in time was obliged to purchase additional stock and land. His operations finally extended into Kern county, and the extent of his operations may be imagined when it is known that during one winter alone he lost six thousand sheep in the deep snow. Notwithstanding this, he continued for many years, offsetting his losses with large gains, and becoming known as one of the most daring and successful raisers in this part of the state. Though his lands were widely scattered, he selected for his home a ranch twelve miles from Bakersfield, on Poso creek, where he lived for several years. One ranch, known as the Troy ranch, a fine property, where he resided from 1886 until his removal to the city, was one of the most valuable and highly cultivated in the county. This was sold in 1891. During his active life Mr. Holby employed many people on his ranches, and his attitude toward them furnished perhaps the clearest insight into his character. He was always considerate and thoughtful, and had the faculty of inspiring others with his enthusiasm and love of work. As a Republican he was a conscientious voter, but never an office seeker, for his thoroughly honorable and straightforward nature found much that was antagonistic in the manner of securing office. He was of a quiet and reserved nature, but determination and force of character were ever present. His friendships covered many years, and stood every test.

May 6, 1880, Mr. Holby was united in marriage with Celia Woodman, a member of an old New England family of English extraction, who was born at Paw Paw, Mich. Mrs. Holby, who is now the manager of her husband's extensive estate, had excellent educational advantages in her youth. She inherits the refinement and strength of character of ancestors who settled on the New England coast as early as 1635, and her high sense of honor is undoubtedly an additional gift of these religious and liberty loving enthusiasts. One daughter, Roberta, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Holby.

LEMUEL W. VAUGHN. Though not a native Californian Mr. Vaughn came to the state at so youthful an age that he knows no other life than that of her native sons. His father, James Vaughn, a native of Virginia, was the first pioneer of the family, emigrating from the Atlantic coast to Missouri when twenty-five years of age and there engaging in the saw-mill business in pursuit of a livelihood. Attracted to the more remote west by the glowing reports of '49, he crossed the plains in that year and engaged in mining on the American river, in the first seven weeks washing out $8,000 in gold, by placer mining. He remained in the state two years, continuing a success which sent him back to Missouri in 1851 with considerable wealth, the return trip being made by way of Cape Horn. The following year he again crossed the plains, bringing his family with him. He located in Amador county, where he engaged in both placer and quartz mining for twenty years, a greater part of the time being spent on Jackson creek. He is now retired from the active cares of life and makes his home in Shasta county. His wife was in maidenhood Elizabeth Atkinson, also a native of Virginia.

Lemuel W. Vaughn was born in Missouri March 9, 1848, and was but three years old when he crossed the plains to his western home. He was reared to manhood in Amador county, which was then practically a wilderness, the family for days at a time seeing no one but Indians. As occasion offered he attended school at Jackson in pursuit of an education, but in very youthful years began to follow the occupation of his father, and also found remunerative employment in freighting. With the energy and pluck of the early pioneers, Mr. Vaughn allowed no lack of personal effort to stand in his way of success. May 7, 1869, he arrived in Merced county, having walked from Stockton, and for the following eight years remained in this county. He worked for wages for two years, when he rented land five miles east of the present location of Merced and engaged in the cultivation of wheat. From this location he went to Shasta county and freighted for seventeen years. Returning to Merced county in 1896 he located on his present ranch, which consists of thirty-three acres one-half mile from Atwater, and seven and a half miles northwest of Merced. This property is given over to the cultivation of alfalfa and fruits, among the latter a variety of grapes, and sweet potatoes, raising of the last named from one hundred and fifty to two hundred sacks to the acre. His home is a comfortable one-story frame house, while the other buildings on the place are substantial and commodious in every respect, the entire ranch presenting an appearance of neatness and thrift. In addition to this property Mr. Vaughn has valuable copper-mining interests in Shasta county.

The marriage of Mr. Vaughn occurred in Merced county and united him with Mary E. Upton, a native of New Hampshire, and of this union were born three children: Lemuel, William and Theresa, the latter the wife of Thomas Upton. Mr. Vaughn is a Democrat in his political convictions.

WILLIAM M. CARDEN. During his residence in Kern county, William M. Carden has witnessed many changes for the better, and has himself taken a sufficiently active part to be able to share in the general prosperity of the present. Although his present home is a leased farm in the Greenfield school district, ten and a half miles south of Bakersfield, the fact that he has ceased to be a large land owner indicates a desire to avoid responsibility rather than a wish to be less substantially connected with the state of his adoption. Mr. Carden comes of a fine old southern family of English extraction, unexpectedly launched in America by Sir John Carden, a large vessel owner, who, with his ship, was captured by the Americans during the war of 1812. Any bitterness which he might have felt on account of this unceremonious handling seems to have disappeared in time, for he settled in Georgia, where the grandfather of William M. spent many years of his life, and where his son, Thomas J., was born. The family moved to Missouri about 1812, Thomas J. at that time being a young boy, who lived on the home farm until attaining his majority. He married Elizabeth W. Coker, a native of North Carolina, who was reared and educated in Nashville, Tenn. On the maternal side Mrs. Carden was a Virginian. In time Mr. Carden located with his family in Arkansas, where he bought a tract of ten thousand acres with his brother, and engaged in the stock business until the breaking out of the Civil war. The general depression consequent upon the war completely ruined their business, and in 1868 Mr. Carden brought his wife and seven children across the plains, William M., born in Harrison, Carroll county, Ark., May 11, 1849, being at that time nineteen years old. The father located on a ranch near Visalia, remaining there until his death in August, 1871, at the age of sixty-seven years. In 1874 his widow and the children located near Kernville, Kern county, where the mother died when in her sixty-ninth year.

William M. Carden began work in earnest after the family came to Kern county, settling on the south fork of the Kern river, and owning about four hundred and eighty acres of land, eventually known as the Carden ranch. The property proved profitable enough, but after the death of his brother in 1893 Mr. Carden became dissatisfied with the place, sold his interest, and purchased the farm upon which he lived until coming to his present place in 1902. In the meantime, in 1891, Mr. Carden was united in marriage with Helen J. Vandergaw, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., and daughter of Cornelius M. and Anna (Sturgeon) Vandergaw. On the paternal side Mrs. Carden is descended from the first settlers of what was then New Amsterdam, now Brooklyn, her remote sires building the first schoolhouse of the place, and eventually owning the navy yards. The family was established in San Francisco about 1872, owing to the illness of Mrs. Vandergaw, and in the coast city Mr. Vandergaw engaged in business, but died while on a visit to New York at the age of sixty-six. His wife still continues to live in Oakland, where her children were educated, and where Mrs. Carden began school teaching at the age of eighteen. For a time she was assistant principal of the Oakland school, until, on account of impaired health, she came to Kern county and taught on the South Fork until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Carden have four children: Robert E., Elizabeth A. T., Morris and Sarah J. M. Mr. Carden is a Democrat in politics, but is liberal in his views, and votes for the best man regardless of political affiliation. He has served as school trustee for a number of years, and has always sought to establish a high standard of instruction in his neighborhood. Since 1876 he has been identified with Bakersfield Lodge No. 202, I. O. O. F. Mrs. Carden is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THOMAS J. SMITH. Six miles west of Bakersfield, in Kern county, is located the eighty-acre ranch belonging to Thomas J. Smith, who, with his wife—the helpmate of his early life—is passing the evening of his days in peace and plenty, and with the evidence of the country's growth and prosperity all about him. Born in Hempstead county, Ark., November 15, 1834, he was the son of James W. and the grandson of James Smith, the latter being a native of England who came to the United States when a young man and settled as a farmer on the Hudson river, in New York state. James W. Smith was reared in Kentucky and in manhood was engaged as a farmer for some years, when he removed to Arkansas and was interested in the cultivation of cotton. He died in Arkansas in 1871, at the age of sixty-seven years. He had met with considerable success in all his dealings, and at his death was a well-to-do planter of the south. He married Alva Cinda, a native of Missouri, who died at the age of sixty-seven years, the mother of ten children, of whom Thomas J. was the third in order of birth.

The youth of Thomas J. Smith was spent upon the parental farm in Arkansas, where he remained until reaching his eighteenth birthday. March 25th of that year he came overland to California, being one of four to own ox teams, which was their mode of conveyance. Arriving at Merced on the 18th of October, 1852, Mr. Smith at once began mining in Mariposa county, continuing in this occupation for about fifteen years. With his earnings he purchased a ranch located ten miles from Mariposa, consisting of four hundred acres, which he improved and cultivated, devoting the land to hay and stock raising. In 1880 he sold this property, and coming to Kern county became the owner of the eighty-acre ranch which now claims his attention and efforts, raising alfalfa and also conducting a small dairy. When Mr. Smith and his wife first located in Kern county there were but two other houses in the colony, his land being a pre-emption claim, the right to which he purchased at $25 per acre.

On the 25th of December, 1864, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary J. Burt, a native of Sevier county, Ark., in which state she was reared. In 1862 she came to California with her parents, Alexander and Mary (Lock) Humphreys, natives respectively of Mississippi and Alabama. The parents located in Los Angeles, but later removed to Mariposa county, where the mother died at the age of seventy and the father at seventy-seven years. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been born the following children: J. Albert, who is conducting an engine in the oil fields of Kern county; Wiley C., who is manager of the Rosedale Creamery, at Rosedale, Kern county; Thomas M., who is at home; and Charles G., a talented musician and artist, who is located on a mining claim in Inyo county. By her former marriage Mrs. Smith had one daughter, Isabella Burt, who became the wife of C. E. Coughran, and now lives at Long Beach, Cal. In his political affiliations Mr. Smith is a Democrat, but has never cared for official recognition. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, having been made a member of Mariposa Lodge No. 24, F. & A. M. Mr. Smith is a member of the Congregational Church, while his wife belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE DAGGETT. Ever since 1878 the name of George Daggett has been identified with ranching in Kern county, where he has improved several properties, and where he still owns a fine ranch of eighty acres five miles south of Bakersfield. Although the land has but recently come into his possession, it shows the conscientious care which it has always been his habit to bestow upon whatever he has owned, and at the less arduous stage of his career, furnishes sufficient responsibility to keep his mind occupied and his enthusiasm alert. Mr. Daggett has been one of the most active stockmen in Kern county, and is well informed concerning all kinds of stock which flourish in this region. For years he was a member of the stock firm of H. H. Fish & Company, and during this association traversed this entire section, buying, shipping, and raising stock, becoming familiar to everyone in the business, and both influential and prominent in the development of stock interests in the state.

In his youth Mr. Daggett had moderate advantages, attending the public schools in Grand Rapids, Mich., near which town his parents removed when he was a child from Ingham county, the same state, his birth occurring at Vevay,

Jacob Meyer

August 6, 1839. When about twenty-one years old he went to Chicago, Ill., to attend school, remaining there until the breaking out of the Rebellion, when he returned home, and in September, 1861, enlisted at Grand Rapids in Company C, First Regiment of Michigan Engineers and Mechanics, serving for twenty-three months. At the end of the service he was discharged at Nashville, Tenn., on account of disability, and subsequently remained on the home farm until 1864. The rigors of the war experience had completely undermined his health, and subsequent out-of-door work failed to restore him to the strength that he sought. Following the advice of friends and physician, he came to California in 1864 and located at Petaluma, Sonoma county, for a time filling a clerkship in a general store. Confinement, however, interfered with his recovery in an ideal climate, and he therefore turned his attention to ranching near Petaluma for about eight years.

In 1878 Mr. Daggett sold his holdings in Sonoma county, and came to Kern county, settling near Bakersfield, where he has since lived. His present ranch is on the Kern Island canal, and every foot of it can be irrigated. He is engaged in general farming and some fruit raising, and has a comfortable home and a fair share of worldly possessions. However, while fortunes have come and gone Mr. Daggett does not spend time in useless regret, for he has what is better than money, an honored name, and hosts of friends. He is sufficiently high-minded to treasure as his greatest possessions these two evidences of good faith and integrity, and to look calmly and happily at life, notwithstanding the fact that he is denied the boon of good health, and often finds his tasks a burden. Mr. Daggett subscribes to the principles of the Republican party, but has never accepted office of any kind. He is well known fraternally, and identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of Hulbert Post No. 127, G. A. R.

JACOB MYER. Noteworthy for his achievements in industrial, business and military circles, Jacob Myer occupies a position of prominence among the public-spirited and progressive residents of San Joaquin county. A veteran of the Civil war, a prosperous agriculturist, and a man of great force of character and strong personality, he is well deserving of honorable mention in a work of this kind, and a brief record of his life will give pleasure to many of its readers. Of strict integrity and high principles, possessing broad and enlightened views on all subjects, he has ever been among the foremost in promoting the best interests of town and county, and has been influential in advancing the educational and moral welfare of the community. A native of Switzerland, he was born August 13, 1832, in Ober Endingen, Canton of Aargau, where his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth Myer, spent their entire lives, the father, who was a farmer, living to the age of seventy-five years. They reared a family of nine children, of whom five are living, Jacob and two of his sisters being residents of California.

Brought up on the home farm, Jacob Myer attended the public schools of Ober Endingen until fourteen years old, when he began working for wages on neighboring estates. Immigrating to America in 1859, he located first in Seneca county, Ohio, where he pursued his former occupation for two years. In 1861, aroused by the same patriotic spirit that inspired the followers of that Swiss hero, William Tell, Mr. Myer offered his services in defense of the flag of his adopted country, enlisting in Company H, Fifty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and subsequently re-enlisted, serving until the close of the Civil war. He took part in many important engagements of the conflict, among them being the following: Second battle of Bull Run; Gettysburg; Camp Rappahannock; the engagements in the Shenandoah Valley; the battles at Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain; the engagements at Dallas; at Resaca, where he was wounded in the left hip by a spent ball; at Peach Tree Creek; Buzzard's Roost; Kenesaw Mountain; Lovejoy Station; Jonesboro; the siege of Atlanta; was with Sherman in his march to the sea, and with him entered Savannah; was subsequently with Custer in the battle of Goldsboro, and at the close of the war marched with Sherman's army in the grand review at Washington. He was honorably discharged, with the rank of corporal, in Cleveland, Ohio, after which he resumed work in his former home, Seneca county, Ohio, remaining there several years.

In 1871 Mr. Myer was induced by his brother-in-law, Mr. Garrison, a resident of California, then visiting in Ohio, to come to this state to settle permanently. Removing, therefore, with his family to San Joaquin county, he bought Mr. Garrison's two hundred and fifty-acre ranch, located on the Stanislaus river, and embarked in grain and stock-raising. Meeting with eminent success in his agricultural operations, Mr. Myer has since purchased other tracts of land, including one hundred and sixty acres adjoining his original farm; four hundred acres farther down the river, known as the Bailey ranch; seven hundred acres on the west side, four miles from Los Banos, in Merced county, being now the owner of upwards of fifteen hundred acres, eight hundred and ten acres being in the Stanislaus valley. His Merced county ranch, devoted principally to the raising of grain, he rents, but with the assistance of his sons operates the remainder. On his large and finely cultivated home farm, Mr. Myer has made improvements of a high order, having erected a handsome residence, substantial farm buildings, and set out a family orchard. He has also a fine farm about eight miles east of Oakdale, through which the Santa Fe Railway passes, affording fine transportation for his farm productions, which are now marketed at Riverbank, but one and one-half miles distant, while Stockton, which was formerly the nearest market, is twenty-seven miles away. The wonderful success that has followed Mr. Myer in his undertakings is due entirely to his own strenuous efforts, his industry and energy being apparently unlimited, while his enterprise and ability are unsurpassed.

In Seneca county, Ohio, Mr. Myer married Kate Snyder, a native of Bavaria, Germanv, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Frederick, Sidney and Jacob, assisting in the management of the home farm; Mrs. Ann Hall, living near the home ranch; and Mrs. Clara Copeland of Copperopolis. Politically Mr. Myer is a staunch Republican, and an ardent supporter of all temperance reforms. He takes keen interest in local affairs, and for several terms served as school trustee. Socially he belongs to Grant Post No. 9, G. A. R., of Modesto. Religiously he is a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Birneyville, in which he is now serving as steward, as chairman of the board of trustees and as superintendent of its Sunday-school.

PHILIP SCOTT. One of the most liberal, enterprising and respected residents of Fresno is Philip Scott, for many years a popular conductor on the Southern Pacific Railway, but now a successful vineyardist, and chairman of the Fresno County Board of Supervisors. Coming from good old New England stock, he was born near Joliet, Ill., May 3, 1848, a son of the late Jediah H. Scott. His paternal grandfather, Philip Scott, was born and reared in New England, being a cousin of Gen. Winfield Scott, but settled permanently in New York state, where he followed general farming.

A native of New York state, J. H. Scott was born on an island in the St. Lawrence river. Succeeding to the independent occupation in which he was reared, he settled in Will county, Ill., taking up land near Joliet, where he improved a farm. In 1852, with his wife and children, he started across the plains with horse teams, also driving a large herd of fine cattle and horses. Coming along the old Placerville route, he stopped over in Carson valley to feed his stock, when the Indians carried away all of his loose cattle and horses. Settling near Sacramento, he bought three hundred acres of land, and was prosperously engaged in the raising of stock and hay until the memorable flood of 1861, when he was drowned out, losing his entire property. Purchasing then a small place in Sacramento county, on the American river, he lived there until 1885, when he removed to Amador county, where he followed farming a few years. Coming then to Fresno, he was a resident of this city until his death, in 1895. He married Anna Chamberlain, who was born in Canada, a daughter of Franklin Chamberlain, a native of Massachusetts, and the descendant of an early family of New England. She survived him, and is now living in Fresno. Of the children born of their union the following is the record: Franklin was drowned in 1855, aged eleven years; Philip is the subject of this sketch; Jay, a farmer, was for two terms sheriff of Fresno county; Henry was killed by a mining accident in Tuolumne county; Ella is a resident of Fresno; Mrs. Lillie Joy died in Sacramento in 1885; Harriet is the wife of Frederick Berry, of San Francisco; Mrs. Alta Prouty is a resident of Fresno; Benjamin, a farmer, lives in Fresno county; Frank, a farmer, of Fresno, was formerly deputy sheriff; and Mrs. Alice Prouty is a resident of Fresno.

Coming across the plains with his parents when but four years old, Philip Scott received a practical education in the district schools of Sacramento county, and throughout the days of his boyhood and youth assisted in the farm work. Entering the employ of the Central Pacific Railway Company in April, 1866, he served as brakeman between Sacramento and Colfax for a year, and was then promoted, becoming conductor on a construction train. Giving up railroad work in 1870, Mr. Scott assisted his father in his agricultural labors for five years. In 1875 he accepted the position of conductor on the Visalia division of the Southern Pacific Railway, and ran on a freight train between Lathrop and Tulare until 1880. Being then promoted to passenger conductor, he ran from Oakland to Tulare and Bakersfield for ten years, having exceptional success all the time, meeting with no serious accident. In February, 1890, Mr. Scott went from Bakersfield on a hunting expedition, and was shot in the left arm by the accidental discharge of the gun of a brother conductor, receiving such an ugly wound that the arm had to be amputated during his journey home in a wagon. Three months later, May 1, 1890, he took charge of the local train running between Fresno and Portersville, and served as conductor until April 1, 1902, when he resigned his position, and has since devoted his attention to the care of his finely cultivated vineyard, lying seven miles northeast of Fresno, and containing forty acres. In 1895 Mr. Scott took up his residence in Fresno, and opened a livery business, which he managed until it was burned out in 1898. In his vineyard he raises grapes of all kinds, making a specialty of raisin grapes, and in addition to his Fresno vineyard owns eighty acres of land in Tulare county.

In November, 1898, Mr. Scott was elected county supervisor from the third district to fill a vacancy, and in the fall of 1900 was re-elected by a handsome majority for a term of four years, and is now serving as chairman of the board. Under the instruction of the supervisors Fresno county is now erecting a new County Hospital at a cost of $90,000, and is building a new steel bridge which will cost $22,000.

In Sacramento, December 24, 1873, Mr. Scott married Alice Leonard, a native of that city. Her father, the late Albert Leonard, came to California via Cape Horn in 1849, and subsequently married Caroline Merrill, who crossed the plains with her parents in 1849, and who is yet a resident of Sacramento. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Scott four children have been born, namely: William M., of Fresno, horticultural commissioner for Fresno county; Jessie, wife of P. B. Donahoo, of Watsonville; Anna, wife of R. G. Barton, manager of the Barton Opera House in Fresno; and Blanche, wife of J. C. Clark, of Fresno. Politically Mr. Scott is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Mrs. Scott is a member of the Christian Science Church.

WILLIAM UNGER. A son of Frederick and Dora J. Unger, William Unger was born in this state January 3, 1869, and when eleven years old was taken by his parents to Fresno county, where he was reared to manhood. He received a rather limited education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, the greater part of his time being spent in the practical duties of a farmer, to which he was early trained by his father. When twenty years of age he became dependent upon his own resources. He put to fruit forty acres of land on the home place on shares, of which twenty acres then became his property. Upon this he built a residence. He sold this farm in 1903, and in the same year purchased his present ranch, located four miles northeast of Selma, Fresno county, on the Centerville and Kingsburg ditch. This property consists of forty acres, of which five acres is in vines and thirty acres in fruit trees of various kinds, while he also owns twenty acres devoted to vines in the vicinity of the Fruitvale school. Upon his purchase of the property in 1903, Mr. Unger erected a handsome residence and in every way has sought to beautify and improve his home.

In Fresno county in 1893 Mr. Unger was united in marriage with Ada E. De LaGrange, a native of West Virginia, and they are the parents of two children, Bertha E. and Elwood. Politically Mr. Unger is a Republican, and in the interests of his party is now serving as director in the Fruitvale school district.

WILLIAM STONEMAN SIMPSON. Prominent among the leading contractors and builders of Stanislaus county is William Stoneman Simpson, an able representative of the industrial interests of Newman. An eminent writer has said, "Never desert your own line of talent. Be what nature intended you for, and you will succeed." Appreciating the thought of this author, Mr. Simpson has measured his own ability, and straightway followed the path marked out. A native of Illinois, he was born November 26, 1867, in Galena, a son of Thomas and Sarah (Snow) Simpson, receiving the name of "Stoneman" from his mother's mother. Further parental and ancestral history may be found elsewhere in this biographical volume, in connection with the sketch of his brother, Edward Simpson.

Removing with his parents to Central City, Colo., in 1871, William S. Simpson there acquired his early education, attending the public schools. From his boyhood he was familiar with mining pursuits, working in the gold mines of Gilpin county and Leadville, Colo., during the summer seasons. He was subsequently employed in timbering during the winters, and in carpentering in summers. Coming to Newman Cal., in September, 1889, Mr. Simpson followed his trade in this locality for several years. In 1895 he started in business on his own account as a contractor and builder, for five years being at the head of the firm of Simpson & Stamper, and since 1900 being senior member of the firm of Simpson & Tompkins. During all of this time Mr. Simpson has been busily employed, having filled many contracts in Stanislaus and Merced counties, and having erected many of the larger and more important buildings of Newman, including among others the Armisted drug store; Tefts building; the bank building; the John Cadoza and Peter Miller residences; the Acme and New Era creameries; the Rosenthal building; the Catholic Church; and his own residence.

In Newman, Mr. Simpson married Emma Giddings, who was born in Stanislaus county, and is a sister of W. W. Giddings, cashier of the Newman bank. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have two children, namely: John and Vera. Politically Mr. Simpson is an uncompromising Republican, having never swerved from the political faith in which he was reared, and fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

SAMUEL GREGORY. A pioneer high in the esteem of his fellow citizens is Samuel Gregory, who is located on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres two miles west of Portersville, Tulare county. He was born in Cocke county, Tenn., May 23, 1835, a son of William Gregory, also a native of that state. The elder man was a farmer by occupation, who died in 1844, when his son was not quite nine years old. His wife, formerly Susan Meral, was a native of Tennessee, and died nearly two years before her husband. Of their family of four sons and three daughters, all but one daughter are living.

Left an orphan at eight years, Samuel Gregory was taken into the home of Stewart Harris, of Marshall, Saline county, Mo., a saddler and harness maker. He attended the public school, and at the same time learned the trade of saddler. With Mr. Harris he crossed the plains in 1853, the former having made a trip to California in 1849, returning in 1851, and two years later taking his wife, our subject and his brother, Henry, to the west. The journey was made by way of Fort Bridger, Salt Lake, Humboldt and Carson rivers. Upon their safe arrival in the state they located at Woodland, Yolo county, where Mr. Harris engaged in farming and stock-raising. For one year following his arrival in California, Samuel Gregory worked with Mr. Harris, the latter paying him $600 for his services. The following year he engaged in teaming, which occupation he continued for two years. In 1857 he went to Los Angeles and with others bought and brought north a herd of cattle, locating them in Colusa county, where Mr. Gregory took up land. He became the owner of one hundred and seventy acres, which he later sold, engaging in the sheep business in the foothills of Colusa county, where he bought eight hundred acres. After following this occupation for seven or eight years he located in College City, where he engaged in a mercantile business with his son, J. G., and F. J. Steel, now of Hanford. Later he bought out Mr. Steel, and the firm name was changed to Gregory & Gregory. This business was continued successfully until 1897, when Mr. Gregory sold out and located near Portersville, Tulare county, purchasing his present farm and engaging in the dairy business and stock-raising. His entire farm is under irrigation, from the Hubbs & Miner Ditch, while Mr. Gregory is also interested in the Caldwell, McGee and Putnam Ditch.

In Cashville, Yolo county, July 4, 1859, Mr. Gregory was united in marriage with Sarah Elizabeth Calmes, born in Clark county, Ky., and a daughter of Fielding and Cassie (Horton) Calmes, of Kentucky. Mr. Calmes was a farmer in Saline county, Mo., whence he crossed the plains in 1849, returning later and bringing his family to California in 1854. He engaged in the cattle and sheep business in Colusa county, where both himself and wife died. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Gregory are the following children: Cassie, who died in Colusa, at the age of fourteen years; Fielding C., a farmer of Maxwell, Cal.; Lila, the widow of R. H. Mahaffey, now residing with her parents; Belle, the wife of J. M. Kincheloe, of Woodland; Joseph G., a farmer near Portersville; Delia, the wife of W. E. Rise, of Saratoga; H. B., a farmer near Portersville; and Walter, a farmer living at home. Mrs. Gregory is a member of the Christian Church. Fraternally Mr. Gregory is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

WILLIAM HARLEY LEE. While Mr. Lee is a native of Missouri, nearly his entire life has been passed in California. He has been successful in his chosen vocation, and this success is the result of his own labors. Coming to the state, many years ago he has been an eyewitness of the rapid growth and development of California, and has taken a prominent part in the improvement of Tulare county.

Mr. Lee was born October 30, 1849, in Howard county, Mo., which was also the birthplace of his father, William Lee. His grandfather was a native of Virginia, and removed from the southern state to Missouri at a very early date. He died when his son was but a small child. After his father's death William Lee was adopted by a Mr. Waite, who raised him as he would an own child. In those days the youth had few of the educational advantages now offered, merely attending the district schools when the work of the farm would allow. Thus his boyhood was passed, and on reaching man's estate he engaged in farming and tobacco raising, also manufacturing cigars. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, performing the duties of a teamster.

GEORGE J. WEGMAN

In 1850, hearing much of the splendid opportunities of California and the glorious climate, he determined to seek his fortunes in the far west. Now we would think a journey across the plains with ox teams would be almost impossible, but in those days it was the only means of getting overland to the coast, and with ambitious hopes for the future, Mr. Lee bade good-by to home and friends, and with all his earthly possessions started for the Golden West. On arrival here he first engaged in mining on the Feather and Yuba rivers, meeting with fair success. He next located in San Jose, Santa Clara county, near which place he engaged in farming. At one time he was the owner of one hundred and sixty acres where the city of San Jose now stands. After a short residence in the Santa Clara valley he removed to Napa county, where he remained until 1853, at which time he took up his residence in Tulare county, settling in the spring of 1854 near what is now the town of Venus. Here he took up land on the Outside creek, which he improved. He dug the first ditch to be used for irrigation purposes, and it was called the Lee ditch.

In 1869 Mr. Lee made another change of location, this time removing to the Yokohl valley. He purchased railroad land and later pre-empted and homesteaded a tract, owning altogether six hundred and forty acres, mostly in the valley. After taking up his residence in the Yokohl valley he became one of the leading farmers and stockmen of the county, continuing to live there until his death in 1892, at the age of sixty-seven years.

While still a young man Mr. Lee was united in marriage with Elizabeth Fugit, who was born in Missouri and died in California in 1894. She was the mother of ten children, five of whom are still living, as follows: William H., whose name introduces this review; Charles H., a resident of the Yokohl valley; Joseph F., a farmer and stockman living on the Tule river; Louisiana, now Mrs. Daly, who lives near Venus; and May, now Mrs. Dumont, of Yokohl valley.

William Harley Lee was but a babe in arms when his parents crossed the plains, so that his first remembrance of life is in California. Here he was raised on his father's farm and received his education in the Deep Creek school district. In 1869 he located in the Yokohl valley where he engaged in farming and stock-raising. At the age of eighteen he homesteaded the one hundred and sixty acres where he now resides. This place he has improved and placed under a high state of cultivation, making it one of the finest ranches in this section of the county. From time to time he has added to his original purchase until he now owns eight hundred and sixty acres, most of which is in the valley. In addition to farming, Mr. Lee is interested in stock-raising, making a specialty of Short-horn cattle. Aside from his farming and stock-raising, Mr. Lee is also engaged in teaming, using eight horses and three wagons to haul talc or soapstone to Exeter; he is also interested in various other enterprises.

In the Yokohl valley Mr. Lee married Miss Livinia Hector, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of John Hector. Six children have been born to them, namely: Nettie Eliza married Samuel Combs, of Yokohl; Emma Louisa, the wife of George Hall, of Chico; Hettie May married Warren Awbery, and died in Exeter in May, 1903; Laura Belle, at home; William Edmond of Chico, and Rena Ethel, also living at home.

Mr. Lee votes the Democratic ticket, but he has never had the time to take an active interest in politics, preferring rather to devote his entire attention to his own business interests. As a result of this application, he has accumulated a handsome property, and now he and his estimable wife have reached the age when they are in a position to enjoy themselves. Both are very popular and have a large circle of friends who wish for them many years of happiness.

GEORGE JOHN WEGMAN. From the time of his arrival in California until his death more than twenty years later Mr. Wegman was a resident of Tulare county and held an honored position among its energetic farmers. Of German birth and ancestry, he was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, where his father, Michael, owned a vineyard and winery. The years of his boyhood were spent in the school room and as an assistant to his father, under whose training he learned habits of industry, self-reliance and perseverance of inestimable value to him in later life. During early manhood he married Caroline Wennerhold, who was born in Kur-Hessen, and was a daughter of Jacob Wennerhold, an officer in the German army. During his service of nineteen years as a soldier he bore a part in the Napoleonic wars, received many wounds in battle, and participated in the memorable engagement at Waterloo. Subsequent to his honorable discharge from the army he engaged in the hotel business in Germany, remaining there until his death.

The year 1849 found Mr. Wegman and his wife aboard a sailing vessel crossing the Atlantic ocean. Though without means, they had youth and health and hopeful hearts, and to such as these a livelihood is assured in our country. At first Mr. Wegman followed the cooper's trade in Lancaster, Pa., but about 1855 he went west to the Mississippi river and built a cooper's shop at Warsaw, Hancock county, Ill., where he remained for some years, also engaged in farming: After the close of the war in 1865, he removed to Wisconsin and took up a farm in Jefferson county. From there, in May of 1875, he came to the Pacific coast region and settled in Tulare county, where he bought land three miles northeast of Visalia, on Elbow creek. In addition to raising crops suited to the soil and climate he engaged in the stock business, and met with a fair degree of success through his industrious efforts. On this homestead his death occurred December 29, 1896, when he was seventy-five years of age. A few years later, on the same home place, occurred the death of his wife, who passed away June 24, 1903, aged eighty-two years, five months and twenty-three days. In religious belief she was a sincere member of the German Reformed Church, and through a long life exemplified in character the doctrines she upheld. Four children comprised her family, namely: Caroline, wife of Andrew Belz; Theo., who died in Wisconsin at fourteen years of age; Eliza Otelia, who cared for her parents until their death and since then has continued on the old homestead with the Belz family; and Mathilda, who died in California at eighteen years of age.

ANDREW BELZ. As indicated by the name, the Belz family is of German extraction, the ancestral home having been in Germany as far back as the records can be traced. The first of the family to establish a home in the United States was Christopher Belz, a Saxon by birth and a machinist by trade, who, during 1854, crossed the ocean to America and settled in Rome, N. Y., following his trade in that city until his death. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Schnuer, was a native of Saxony and died in the home of her son, Andrew, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. In religious belief Christopher Belz and wife were faithful adherents of the Lutheran Church, and contributed to its maintenance as their means permitted. They were the parents of four children, of whom Andrew, the eldest was the only one to settle in California. He was born in Saxe-Meiningen, Germany, January 31, 1832. During boyhood he learned the machinist's trade under the supervision of his father, whom in 1854 he accompanied to Rome, Oneida county, N. Y. Later he removed to Jefferson county, Wis., where he followed his trade. The year 1865 found him a pioneer of Visalia, Cal., where he followed the blacksmith's trade.

Returning to Wisconsin in 1874 Mr. Belz was there united in marriage with Miss Caroline Wegman, with whom he established a home in Visalia. After his marriage he built a blacksmith's shop and followed the trade in Visalia. During 1888 he discontinued work at his trade and on the site of the shop, near the Southern Pacific depot, erected the Pacific lodging house, which still stands. For some years he has made his home on the Wegman estate, three miles from town. This property is largely under alfalfa and is rented for a dairy and stock farm. Excellent irrigation facilities are furnished by the Mathews ditch, in which the family are financially interested. In politics Mr. Belz votes the Republican ticket, while in religious connections he and his wife, as well as Miss Wegman, are believers in the faith which Dr. Martin Luther established during the stormy period of the Reformation. In the Belz family there are three children. The older son, George Andrew, is a graduate of the San Jose State Normal School with the class of 1902 and at this writing teaches school in Kern county. The younger son, Frank Arthur, is a student in Santa Clara College, and the only daughter, Eliza M., remains with her parents on the homestead.

CHESTER DUSY. Among the native-born citizens of Fresno county conspicuous for their ability and worth is Chester Dusy, a rising young druggist of Selma. He comes of pioneer stock, being a son of the late Frank Dusy, and was born April 22, 1875, in Selma, of Canadian ancestry. Frank Dusy, a native of Canada, removed to the States when a lad of twelve years, and was brought up and educated in Maine, living near Penobscot. After learning the trade of stone-cutter he worked as a journeyman a few years, receiving fair wages. Following the tide of emigration westward in 1852, he came to California in pursuit of gold, and for a number of years thereafter was engaged in mining near LaGrange, in Stanislaus county. Removing to Fresno county in 1869, he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land lying three miles north of Selma, and first embarked in business as a sheep-raiser, subsequently setting out a vineyard, which he managed with good success. Going to Sunrise City, Alaska, in 1894, he prospected and mined there for a while, and then returned to Selma, where he lived until his death in 1898, at the age of sixty-nine years. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Ross, was born in Nova Scotia and died in Selma, on the home ranch, in 1894, aged forty-three years.

The oldest child of the parental household, Chester Dusy, attended the public schools of Selma during the days of his boyhood and youth, receiving his diploma at the high school in 1894. Desirous then of becoming a pharmacist, he worked for two years in the drug store of Webster Brothers, and was subsequently in the employ of E. A. Cutler, druggist, in Fresno two years. Continuing then his studies at the California College of Pharmacy, Mr. Dusy was graduated from that institution in 1901. In January of that year he started in business on his own account, forming a partnership with Mark A. Sawrie, with whom he has since been associated. This enterprising firm has one of the finest stores of its kind in the city, and enjoys a large and lucrative patronage.

Mr. Dusy married, in Selma, Annette M. Levis, who was born and bred in Farmersville, Cal. Politically Mr. Dusy supports the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Selma Lodge No. 277, F. & A. M.; of Selma Chapter, O. E. S.; of Selma Circle, W. O. W.; and of Selma Lodge, F. of A.

GEORGE G. MURRY. A leading attorney of Portersville, George G. Murry is numbered among the representative professional men of that city, his position being won by the ability which has characterized his efforts. He is likewise distinguished as the son of one of the first settlers of the Tule river section, J. P. Murry, known for nearly forty years as one of the most prominent stockmen of this vicinity. He made and lost several fortunes in the stock business, at his death, however, leaving considerable property to be divided among his heirs. He was one of the best known and honored of the early citizens of the country, still retaining a place in the affections of those who remember him, although his death occurred some years ago. By marriage he allied himself with a prominent family of Tulare county, Martha Keeney becoming his wife. She was the daughter of John R. Keeney, a pioneer millwright, who helped build the old flour mills of Portersville, later becoming sole proprietor until his death. He was prominent in public affairs in the county, serving in 1855 as county recorder and later as county clerk. Mrs. Murry died June 10, 1900, having survived her husband a little less than a year.

George G. Murry is the only living child of his parents. He was born in Visalia March 24, 1867, his childhood being spent in Portersville and vicinity. He learned the stock business thoroughly, in all its details, under the capable instruction of his father, with whom he remained associated until 1884. That year he went to New Mexico, and for three years acted as superintendent of a ranch owned by George Hearst and J. B. Haggin. Returning then to Portersville, he engaged as a clerk in the store of R. Porter Putnam, and later for R. W. McFarland. Deciding to take up the study of law, he entered Vanderbilt University, of Nashville, Tenn., in 1893, taking a two years' course. Returning home he continued to assist his father until the fall of 1896, when he was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court, and opened an office in Portersville. With the exception of four years—from January, 1899, to January, 1903, when he filled the appointment of J. A. Allen to the office of deputy district attorney—he has since conducted a general practice in Portersville and has met with a gratifying success. In the fall of 1902, in the Republican convention, he was unanimously nominated for district attorney, but in the election that followed was defeated, as the county went overwhelmingly Democratic. However, he carried his home town by a majority of two hundred and forty-five, an increase of more than two hundred over the usual Republican majority. Since opening his law office in 1903 he has gained the principal clientele of Portersville and vicinity, where he holds high rank for his ability, tact and talent in the line of his profession. Throughout his career he has been associated with Judge J. A. Allen in all superior court work. Mr. Murry is also a member of the county central committee, and is state committeeman for Tulare county, his work in the councils of the party wielding no little influence for the advancement of the principles he endorses.

Mr. Murry also owns a ranch of two hundred and forty acres adjoining Portersville, a part of the original Murry homestead, where he still engages in the stock business. On this property is located the Portersville Golf grounds, Mr. Murry being a member of the club. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Portersville Lodge No. 303, and also belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star. He is identified with Visalia Parlor No. 19, Native Sons of the Golden West.

PRESTON LEANDER BOZEMAN is a native of California, first seeing the light of day near Hanford, in what is now Kings county. He was born October 14, 1865. His father, J. W. Bozeman, was born in Mississippi, which state was also the birthplace of his father, Thomas J., who was a large planter and who came to California in 1852, crossing the plains with ox-teams. He was the first man to pitch a tent at the town of Bozeman, which was named in his honor. Later he took up his residence near what is now the town of Kingston, where he died at an advanced age.

J. W. Bozeman, the father of Preston L., accompanied his father in the journey across the plains, reaching the Golden State in 1852. For a time he was engaged in the sheep business, but in 1875 settled near Lemoore, where he purchased a ranch and became interested in the grain and stock business. Success crowned his efforts so that he is now able to enjoy his old age, living in a comfortable home in Hanford.

Miss Susan Hendrey became Mr. Bozeman's wife. She was born in Indiana, a daughter of Isaac Hendrey, who crossed the plains in the early days with his family. Reaching California a settlement was made in San Bernardino county, where he lived the balance of his life. His wife survived him and died in Hanford in 1900.

Mrs. Bozeman was the mother of eight children. The eldest in this large family was Preston L. Bozeman. His boyhood was passed on the farm near Lemoore, attending the district schools when the work of the farm would permit. Remaining at home until he had reached his twenty-first year, he then engaged in farming near his boyhood home, where he remained for three years. At the expiration of this time he removed to Fresno county, locating in the Coast Range mountains, where he lived for the following two years. He then went to Armona, where he engaged in the fruit business for two years. In 1895 he came to Exeter, where he purchased land and engaged in the orange growing business. He also went to work for others, at one time having the care of one hundred and sixteen acres. He erected his present residence in 1904. In addition to his seven-acre home tract, he owns ten acres near his home.

In Visalia Mr. Bozeman was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie Hill, a native of Missouri and a daughter of R. M. C. Hill, who is now living retired in Visalia. Mrs. Bozeman is the mother of five children, namely: Ethel, Claude, Meady, Robert and Carl.

In politics Mr. Bozeman is a Democrat, while fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World. Here where he is best known he has a large circle of friends. His life thus far has been a success and this is the result of his own efforts.

ALLAN MCGREGOR, a member of the firm of Henderson & McGregor, of Lindsay, Tulare county, came to California in 1884 and has since won for himself a position of prominence among the enterprising citizens of this community. He was born in Ontario, near Ottawa, December 21, 1851, a son of Peter McGregor, a native of Perthshire, Scotland, who immigrated from his native land in young manhood, locating in Ontario, where he followed farming for a livelihood. He married Ann Stewart, also of Perthshire, Scotland, and both himself and wife are now deceased. They became the parents of five sons and three daughters, of whom three sons and three daughters are now living.

Next to the youngest in his father's family, Allan McGregor was reared to young manhood among the scenes of his birth. At the age of four years he began an attendance of the public school in the vicinity of his home, after the completion of which course he entered a grocery store in Sarnia, Ontario, preparatory to learning the details of the business. Later he traveled through various parts of Ontario and the United States, finally emigrating to California in 1884. He located first in San Jose, where he engaged in farming, making that locality his home until 1895. In the last named year he came to Lindsay and two years later bought an interest with Mr. Henderson in the general merchandise business, which they now conduct. Mr. McGregor is also interested in orange growing and takes a strong interest in both the commercial and horticultural possibilities of the section. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN ROY HEPBURN. A native of Illinois, Mr. Hepburn was born at Saybrook, McLean county, September 27, 1874. His father, John, was born in Scotland, and on coming to this country settled in Saybrook. By occupation he was a stationary engineer. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in an Illinois regiment and served until the close of hostilities. On his return to Saybrook, he again took up his occupation of engineer which he continued to follow until October, 1874, when he was killed by an explosion, caused by some one tampering with the engine during a short absence.

Mr. Hepburn married Elizabeth Smith Murphy, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Joseph Murphy, who migrated from Pennsylvania to Illinois, where he followed farming. Mrs. Hepburn now resides in Los Angeles. She is connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church and is engaged in missionary work.

John Roy Hepburn is the youngest of two children, his older brother now living in Alameda. In 1882 the Hepburn family removed to Highmore, Hyde county, S. D., where the mother had homesteaded a fine farm. Here our subject was reared, attending the public schools, and later taking a course in the Mitchell Business College.

In 1890 he came to California, first locating in San Jose. There he entered the employ of Hugh Holthouse, a farmer and liveryman, with whom he remained eight years. At the expiration of this time, in 1898, he removed to Lindsay, where he began budding oranges for K. H. Platte. Continuing with Mr. Platte and Mr. Bagg's until 1901 he secured a position with the Moore Orange orchard, where he remained until March, 1904. He then accepted his present position, that of superintendent of the Giant Oak Fruit Company, near Exeter. Here he has charge of four hundred and forty acres, three hundred and forty acres of which are devoted to fruit. It is said to be the finest fruit orchard in the county, and under his supervision satisfactory results are being obtained.

While in San Jose, Mr. Hepburn was united in marriage with Miss Lillie Foster, a native of Vacaville. Three children are the result of this union: Budd, Merle and Ruth. Being of a saving disposition he has become the owner of eight acres of land where the town site of Lindsay is located. In Mr. Hepburn Tulare county has a man who will surely make his way and become one of the influential citizens.

BENJAMIN L. ROADCAP. The land which forms the present homestead of Mr. Roadcap lies on the St. Johns river in Tulare county and comprises eighty-three acres of the old Henry Perkins estate. Through an excellent system of sub-irrigation the proper amount of moisture can be furnished to the growing crops, but no necessity for flooding the land has arisen. Corn and alfalfa are the principal crops, several hundred tons of the latter product furnishing each year ample feed for the stock on the place, besides giving the owner considerable hay to place upon the market. The raising and feeding of hogs he has made his specialty, and at times there have been as many as four hundred head of fine grade Poland-Chinas in his feed yards.

The Roadcap family is of old Virginian stock. Emanuel Roadcap, a native of that commonwealth, was a soldier in the war of 1812, after which he took up farm pursuits. George, son of Emanuel, was also of Virginian birth and proved his patriotic spirit by serving in the Union army during the Civil war. Later he removed to Texas and settled on a farm near Dallas, subsequently removing to Trinidad, Colo., and eventually coming to California, where he died at the home of his son Benjamin in 1902, at seventy-one years of age. By his marriage to Lean Ritchie he was united with an old Virginian family, her father having been a farmer in that state. She still survives and makes her home with her only child, Benjamin L., near Visalia. The latter was born at Harrisburg, Va., August 14, 1856, and as a boy received such advantages as neighboring schools afforded. In 1880 he ventured upon farm pursuits in Texas, but five years later went to Trinidad, Colo., where he engaged in general contracting. Going to Salt Lake City in 1891 he was there employed for three years as superintendent of streets. The year 1895 found him in California, where he has since made his home on the Perkins farm in Tulare county, at first renting the place, and in January, 1904, acquiring a part of the homestead by purchase.

The first marriage of Mr. Roadcap took place in old Virginia and united him with Florence Koogler, who was a native of that state, and who died in Tulare county in 1900. The children of their union are as follows: Gilbert Floyd, who is interested in baling hay in partnership with his father; Effie Lee, wife of John D. Martin, of Visalia; Leslie Bernard, Wonda Virginia and Harry Niles, who reside on the home place. Mr. Roadcap's second marriage was solemnized in Watsonville, Cal., and united him with Sina Maggie Clauson, a native of that place, and a daughter of Hans and Sina M. Clauson, natives of Denmark and honored citizens of Watsonville, where the mother died in young womanhood. Though not a partisan in opinions, Mr. Roadcap is known among acquaintances as a pronounced Republican, ready to give his time and influence to the party's support. The Woodmen of the World receive his allegiance and he in turn is the recipient of such advantages as the order confers upon its members. While the period of his residence in Tulare county has been comparatively brief, covering less than a decade, he has gained a success that is as commendable as it is gratifying, and at the same time he has built up a large circle of friends among the people of his part of the county.

ELEMUEL M. MILLS. Though a resident of the San Joaquin valley but a brief period, Mr. Mills has successfully established himself in an assured position of financial and social prominence, having already identified his interests with those of the upbuilding forces of the community. He is located two miles northeast of the city of Merced, and with his wife is owner of the magnificent ranch widely known as the Sells property, toward the development of which $80,000 has been spent in the past few years. The property consists of one hundred and fifty acres, given over entirely to horticultural pursuits, among the fruits successfully produced in this section being lemons, oranges, peaches, plums, figs, apricots, pomegranates, almonds, English walnuts, and in fact about every variety known to the California horticulturist. The splendid management which Mr. Mills has exercised since taking possession of the ranch has increased its value, an evidence of which lies in the superiority of the fruit produced, the quantity as well as quality, and the rank which his property takes among the best equipped and most productive of the county. No encomium is needed upon the ability of Mr. Mills, for his work has already proved itself, and he is to-day numbered among the representative horticulturists of Merced county.

Of sturdy eastern stock, Elemeul M. Mills was born in Lancaster county, Pa., September 22, 1860. His father, Nathaniel B. Mills, was a native of Pennsylvania, in which state his father, also named Nathaniel B., settled when he emigrated from his English home. Nathaniel B. Mills, Jr., was a man of remarkable business judgment and foresight, and in Pennsylvania became the owner of large freighting teams, with headquarters at Pittsburg and operating to various adjacent points. He also had extensive interests in copper mines in his native state, and owned considerable real estate in Lancaster, his home. In addition to the business judgment and ability which was his by inheritance he was also supplied with a trade, being an expert mechanic. In 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Ninety-seventh Regiment, Ohio Infantry, in which company he served during the war, in the course of time being raised to the rank of first lieutenant, and in 1871 he secured the contract for the delivery of mail in Coshocton county, Ohio, removing to that location where he also purchased farming lands. He died in Ohio in 1897, at the age of seventy-seven years. In Pennsylvania he married Sarah Hagans, also a native of that state. In his political convictions Mr. Mills was a Democrat. He was a man of much erudition, as well as practical ability, both of which were visible in his life work.

Until he was seventeen years of age, Elemeul M. Mills remained at home, when he went to Columbus, Ohio, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five miles from his birthplace, with the intention of entering good schools and fitting himself for his lifework. During vacations he taught in the public schools, thus earning money to pay his own way in the pursuit of an education. He graduated from Reynoldsburg high school, after which he entered the National Normal University, by which he was graduated in the College of Science, continuing as student and teacher until 1885. He then located in Indianola, Iowa, and secured an interest in a mercantile business with which he remained connected for three years. During this time he was elected principal of the Carlisle school and served with credit to himself and those who gave him their support. Returning to Ohio in 1888 he entered Chautauqua College, from which institution he was graduated with honors in 1892, after which he taught in his native state for eight years. In 1900 he engaged in his first real estate transaction, disposing of some property belonging to the family at Columbus. In the same year he came to California and in Merced county took charge of a $3,000 fruit crop, which was his first experience as an orchardist. In the following year he engaged with J. H. Rucker & Co., a real estate firm in San Jose, and in a very short time had made a record as a salesman, now being considered one of the best real estate men in the valley. In one month he sold eight thousand, two hundred acres of land in the San Joaquin valley to eastern people, in tracts of from forty to three thousand acres. He is now connected with the A. N. Town Company, of San Francisco.

The marriage of Mr. Mills, which occurred in Ohio in 1883, united him with Carrie B. Behm, also a native of Ohio and the daughter of Joseph and Barbara A. (Hessel) Behm. The father was a native of Pennsylvania, which was also the location of the maternal ancestry, the maternal grandfather, Philip Hessel, being a native of the state, whence he removed to Ohio in 1801 and became the owner of considerable property in and about Columbus. To Mr. and Mrs. Mills were born the following children: Ross M., now a student of Stanford University; Harry B., Edna F., and Sarah V. In his political convictions Mr. Mills believes as his father did and is a staunch adherent of the principles of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES BUCHANAN JORDAN. A native son of the state, James Buchanan Jordan was born in Monterey county, near San Juan, November 27, 1856, the youngest in a family of twelve children, six of whom are living. His father, John Jordan, was a native of Illinois and a '49er, for more complete details concerning whose life refer to the sketch of E. F. Jordan, which appears on another page of this work. Since 1857 he has made his home in Tulare county, living first on Chattan's Slough and later on the Kaweah. His father being engaged in the stock business, his boyhood years were spent on a farm, while he attended the district school. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years old, when he went to Arizona and spent six years in prospecting and mining in Globe and Silver King. In 1883 he returned to Tulare county and located east of Exeter, where he engaged in the raising of grain on from five hundred to three thousand acres of land. He used as high as six six-horse teams, and also bought and conducted a combined harvester, meeting with gratifying success in his efforts. He eventually purchased land, first buying two hundred and forty acres of the northeast half of section 25, township 18, range 26, and eighty acres of the south half of the northwest quarter of section 35, township 18, range 26. He still owns this property, but leases it. In 1899 he located in Yokohl valley, where he owns twenty-six hundred acres, all fenced and in one body, and used for stock-raising and general farming purposes, seven hundred acres being under plow. In Kern county, where he made his home from 1886 to 1891, he owns three hundred and twenty acres, which he rents.

In Bakersfield, Kern county, Mr. Jordan was united in marriage with Ellen Myers, on the 23d of March, 1893. She was born in San Diego, Cal., the daughter of Joseph Myers, who was born in Illinois and came to California in the '50s. He now resides on Dry creek, Tulare county, with his wife, formerly Matilda Fancher, a native of California. They were the parents of thirteen children, twelve of whom are living, Mrs. Jordan being the fifth in order of birth and being reared to young womanhood in Tulare county. To Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have been born six children, namely: Claude Allen, Grace May, James Earl, Harvey Hampton, and twins, Preston Scott and Ethel Fern. Mr. Jordan is a Democrat in his political convictions and has been active in his efforts to promote the principles he endorses. He served as a member of the county central committee, and for some time was trustee of the schools in the Kaweah and Yokohl districts. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Kern county and is now a member of the lodge in Exeter.

DR. N. W. WILLIAMS. Born in Ogdensburg, N. Y., Dr. N. W. Williams is the son of Nelson and Mary (Shapce) Williams. The father was born in Liverpool, England, and the mother in Paris, France. They were farmers near Ogdensburg, N. Y., where their death occurred.

Dr. Williams was reared on the farm, having the advantages of the district schools. He spent some time in a store and then served a three years' apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. Not finding it to his liking he came to Oakland, Cal., in 1874. He became interested in photography and soon was an excellent retoucher of negatives. While following that business he became interested in the study of medicine under Dr. D. D. Crowley, and in due time entered the California Medical College, where he was graduated in 1884, with the degree of M. D. He practiced at Lemoore, now Kings county, for a period of three years and then located at Traver, Tulare county, when that town was at its zenith. He had a successful practice there until February, 1903, when he located in Lindsay, where he erected a residence and office and follows his chosen profession.

Dr. Williams is a stockholder in the Lindsay

Rochdale Association. He is a lover of fine horses and owns Dr. W., one of the finest bred and best horses in the state. His first season's record of 2:07½ was made at Sacramento in 1904. Dr. W. was sired by Robert Basler, and his dam was sired by Sacramento, the son of Monroe Chief, and is only four times removed from Hambletonian, No. 10.

Dr. Williams was made a Mason in Potsdam, N. Y., and is now a member of the lodge at Traver. He is a staunch Republican, and is an active member of the California State Eclectic Medical Association. Mrs. Dr. Williams was Zerelda Pitzer, born in Mariposa county, Cal., and is a lady of much culture and refinement.

CHARLES E. MACKEY. The Mair ery stable has for one of its proprietors Charles E. Mackey, one of the enterprising and worthy young men of Exeter, and one who bids fair to be named among the most successful business men of this section. Born in Rockbridge, Ozark county, Mo., December 20, 1871, he is the son of Archie Mackey, a native of Indiana who settled in Missouri at an early day and became a farmer. During the Civil war he served valiantly for three years, after which he removed to Jackson county, Ark., and followed farming until his death in 1876, just on the eve of his departure for California. His wife, formerly Penelope Hawkins, was a native of Gentry county, Mo., and a daughter of Joseph Hawkins, an old settler of the state who died in Gentry county. After her husband's death Mrs. Mackey returned to Ozark county, Mo., purchased a farm and reared her family to useful manhood and womanhood. Of her ten children five are now living, Charles E. Mackey being the youngest and the only one in California.

Charles E. Mackey was reared on his mother's farm in Missouri, attending the district schools until assuming the responsibilities of manhood. When but little more than seventeen years old he came to California, in Visalia entering the employ of J. V. Huffaker for a time, and afterward being employed in the Driving Park with different horsemen. In 1892 he went to Yokohl valley and engaged in farming and stock-raising for four years, in January, 1896, locating in Exeter and buying the only livery business of the place. Since that time he has conducted the same with constantly increasing success, in 1903 taking in a partner in the person of A. L. Montgomery, the firm now being known as Mackey & Montgomery. In 1904 they built a barn, the dimensions of which are 120x50 feet, with an ell measuring 60x75 feet, thorough in all its equipments, and being well supplied with fine horses and vehicles. For several years, previous to the building of the spur, Mr. Mackey conducted a four-horse stage line between Visalia and Exeter, and met with a splendid success in the enterprise.

In Yokohl valley Mr. Mackey was united in marriage with Lou Hawkins, a native of Georgia, and they have one child, Aubrey. Mrs. Mackey is a member of the Christian Church, and supports every movement in its interest. Fraternaly Mr. Mackey is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World, of Exeter. Politically he is a staunch Democrat and is active in the support of the principles he endorses. In 1898 he was elected constable and served for four years, at the end of that period refusing a re-nomination. In July, 1903, he was appointed by the board of supervisors justice of the peace, which office he still retains.

WILLIAM FRANCIS JORDAN. With the passing away of William Francis Jordan from the scene of his life's activity, was lost to the community one of the time-honored landmarks of the early days of the state, a first settler of Yokohl valley, and for many years a potent factor in its development and progress. He was born in Van Zandt county, Tex., November 14, 1838, a son of John and Eliza Jane (Sadorus) Jordan, whose biographical history is given at length in the sketch of E. F. Jordan, which appears in another part of this volume. William Francis Jordan was brought to California when only a small child, being reared to young manhood in Monterey county. In 1857 he came with his parents to Kaweah, Tulare county, where he completed his education in the Kaweah district school. Upon attaining manhood he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, early locating in Yokohl valley, where he bought land, owning at one time twenty-four hundred acres. He was successful in his operations as a stockman and accumulated a comfortable competence. His death occurred September 1, 1901. He was a man of strong religious character, being an active member of the Baptist Church. Fraternaly he affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically cast his ballot with the Democratic party.

Mr. Jordan was married twice, his first wife being Henrietta Ann Brooks, a native of Texas and the daughter of Micajah Brooks. Her death occurred on the home farm in the Yokohl valley. Of her six children two attained maturity, Laura, the wife of Henry Watts, of Bakersfield; and Alma, residing in Bakersfield. Near Exeter, February 15, 1888, Mr. Jordan was united in marriage with Mary Synnor Combs, who was born in Cass county, Mo., where she spent the first few years of her life. Her father, John Cuthbert Combs (a brother of Dr. F. A. Combs, of Visalia, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume), was a native of Kentucky, and in 1875 he brought his family to California, his first trip having been made here in 1849, and several others in the intervening years. Mrs. Jordan was the oldest of ten children. She is the mother of four children, all of whom are at home, namely: William S., Allen Sadorus, John Cuthbert and Samuel Howard. Mrs. Jordan now owns four hundred and sixty acres of land in the Yokohl valley, and since her husband's death has continued the stock business with marked success. She has fine running water on the place, piped throughout, and in every way conducts her affairs in a modern and up-to-date method. She has recently set out a small lemon orchard on her place. In her religious convictions Mrs. Jordan is a Presbyterian, and politically, although she cannot cast a ballot, wields no little influence for the advancement of Democratic principles. In January, 1905, she removed to Exeter in order to give her children better school advantages, though still managing the ranch.

SAMUEL A. BAGGS. There is not a man in the entire state of California who has a more enviable reputation as a horticulturist than Mr. Baggs. Coming to the state in 1887 and locating in the southern part, he had ample opportunity to enter the fruit business. Becoming deeply interested in his work, he has steadily advanced until now he has gained a reputation of which he may feel proud.

A native of Illinois, he was born in Sparta, August 20, 1862. His father, William Baggs, came to America and settled at Sparta, where he purchased land and engaged in farming. He married Amanda Hague, who was born in Sparta and is now living in Arkansas, the wife of Mr. McBride, Mr. Baggs having died in 1860.

Samuel Baggs was a youth of but seven years when his father died and since the age of ten has made his own way in the world. His educational advantages were limited to the district school which he attended while working for his board. Remaining in his native state until 1887, he then came to California, locating at Riverside, where he secured work in the orange orchards. A year later he began pruning and budding and soon gained the reputation of being the most successful budder in the state. Of a saving disposition, he accumulated a small sum with which he purchased two acres of land at Arlington.

In March, 1899, Mr. Baggs came to Lindsav, at once engaging in horticultural work. Later he purchased his present home on which he erected a fine residence and set out orange trees and put two acres into strawberries. This place is highly improved, having a well and a pumping plant run by an electric motor installed at a cost of $1,000.

In addition to looking after his own business, Mr. Baggs has charge of the San Dimas Nursery Company, for R. M. Teague. Since locating here he has budded over thirty-five thousand orchard trees in Tulare county, and since he took up this line of work he has budded hundreds of thousands of trees. Recognizing his worth and ability, the people have made him the horticultural inspector of Lindsay and Exeter and for one term he served as inspector for Tulare county.

While living in Riverside, Mr. Baggs met and married Minnie O. Simms. She was born in Kentucky and when sixteen years of age came to California. Mr. and Mrs. Baggs are the parents of one child, Eva M.

Fraternally Mr. Baggs belongs to Court California No. 551, Independent Order of Foresters, of Riverside. He is also a welcome visitor in the lodge rooms of the Woodmen of the World. In politics he votes the Democratic ticket, but is not greatly interested in political matters.

Mr. Baggs has had to make his own way in the world since he was a mere youth, and the success he has made of his life is the result of his own labors.

JAMES SYLVANUS LEWIS. The identification of James Sylvanus Lewis, an esteemed and highly honored citizen of Tulare county, with the progress and development of this section of the state of California is not exceeded by that of any other pioneer. He was born among the primitive scenes of the early days, reared through boyhood to an understanding of the privations and hardships of pioneer life, and in manhood bent his every energy and effort, not alone to a personal success, but to a material upbuilding of the state that claimed his allegiance.

The Lewis family came originally of southern stock, Kentucky being their home for many years. There Samuel Lewis, the grandfather of James S., was born, grew to manhood and became prominent in public affairs, serving as county judge for some years. He finally removed to Jackson county, Mo., where he served in the same capacity, and in 1849 became a pioneer of California. He spent a few years in Amador county, thence, with the Harrells, about 1853, came to Tulare county. He engaged as a stockman on the Tule river, where he became owner of a large ranch six miles west of Portersville, the first house on the place being built from timber which he split and dressed for the purpose. His death occurred in that location in 1872, at an advanced age. His son, Joseph Lewis, a native of Kentucky, accompanied his father to Missouri, where he was married. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California by means of ox teams, locating in Amador county, where he mined until 1855. In that year he located in Tulare county and became interested in stock-raising, entering a ranch on the Tule river six miles west of Portersville. In 1859 he moved his family to the ranch, where he followed stock-raising. After the passage of the no-fence law he engaged in grain-raising, purchasing land until he owned three hundred and twenty acres. This he afterward disposed of and bought one hundred and sixty acres one mile east of Portersville, where he continued to follow general farming and stock-raising. Disposing of that property also, he then purchased a farm on the Upper Tule, seven miles east of Portersville, where his death occurred October 17, 1904, at the age of eighty years. He was a devout member of the Baptist Church, and politically cast his ballot with the Democratic party. His wife, formerly Ellen Allen, a native of Missouri, survives him, now residing on the old homestead at the age of seventy-four years. Of their nine children, of whom four are living, James Sylvanus is the eldest, and was born in Jackson, Amador county, June 25, 1835.

From the year 1859 the home of James Sylvanus Lewis has been in Tulare county. He first attended the Oak Grove school, which building was put up through the efforts of his father and several neighbors, and later studied in the school at Plano. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he began general farming and stock-raising for himself. In 1876 he purchased his present property, a mile and three-quarters northeast of Portersville, which was all wild land and open plain, antelope and various animals abounding. He at once began the work of improvement and cultivation, putting up adequate buildings, setting out trees and in time making his ranch a credit to the county. He now has seven hundred and twenty acres, which is known as the Hillside Slope farm. In 1891 he set out ten acres of navel oranges and later eight acres more, besides which he engages in the cultivation of grain and in stock-raising. His farm is irrigated from the Pioneer ditch, of which company he was one of the organizers, and for many years acted as a director. He is also interested in the Portersville Water & Development Company, of which he is director and the president.

In Visalia Mr. Lewis was united in marriage with Mrs. Emma (Strout) Sibley, a native of Maine and the daughter of Elijah and Mary A. (Tyler) Strout. Her father was a contractor and resided near Lewiston, Me., where both he and his wife died. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Lewis, Elijah Strout, was a native of Maine, and of German descent. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812 and left an honored name to his descendants. By her first marriage Mrs. Lewis became the mother of two children, Wilfred S. Sibley and Mrs. Angela M. Tyler, of Portersville. Mrs. Lewis is a member of the Baptist Church. Fraternally Mr. Lewis was made a Mason in Portersville Lodge No. 303, and also belongs to Portersville Chapter, R. A. M. Politically he is a staunch Democrat.

MAJOR THOMAS JEFFERSON McQUIDDY. The name of Thomas Jefferson McQuiddy is a household one throughout the length and breadth of Kings county. His rise from obscurity to influence and success is an encouraging tale to the rising generation, and his courage and persistency in combating adverse circumstances along the line of his industrious career have attracted to him the good will and graciousness of whomsoever he chances to meet. Now seventy-six years old, hale and hearty, and full of the joy and expectancy of life, he is as much the friend and sympathizer of the present history makers as he formerly was of the men who worked with him in the pioneer days of trial and adversity. Scarcely an onward movement in this section but has profited by his financial or other support, from the digging of ditches for irrigation to fighting with the railroad company for titles to the land of the settlers. In fact one of the most pathetic as well as interesting epochs in the life of Major McQuiddy is in connection with the struggles of the Mussel Slough settlers for their homes and rights. With others he lost after years of futile effort, but he had already won a competency, and probably no one accepted an unjust and calamitous decision with more philosophy or dignity.

Major McQuiddy was born in Woodford county, Ky., March 6, 1828, and is a son of John McQuiddy, a grandson of another John, and great-grandson of David McQuiddy, the latter of whom was born in Scotland and came to the United States long before the Revolutionary war. The great-grandfather became a large land owner in Virginia, and with his son John, who was born on the Virginia plantation, followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the war for independence. The latter removed from Virginia to Kentucky at an early day, and at one time did about all the gunsmithing and blacksmithing of Woodford county. He was a natural mechanic, and built and owned two mills, and also built and repaired wagons. He was a prominent figure in his county, and lived to be a very old man. His son John, the father of Major McQuiddy, was born in Woodford county August 10, 1790, and during his active life lived on a farm, attaining fair success. During the war of 1812 he shouldered a musket and fought under General Harrison. About 1840, when Thomas Jefferson was twelve years old, he made arrangements to take his family overland to Bedford county, Tenn., a distance of three hundred miles. On this occasion the lad proved true to his training, and became of valuable assistance in managing the expedition. Twenty slaves, besides hogs, cattle and horses, accompanied the family to their new home, and once established, the father turned his attention to cultivating his land and to manufacturing hemp for baling cotton. Subsequently he devoted all of his energy to farming and stock-raising, being thus employed until shortly before his death in 1863, at the age of seventy-three years. On the maternal side Major McQuiddy is also descended from Revolutionary stock, his maternal grandfather, Abraham Dale, having served in the Continental army. The latter was a native of Virginia, and was of Scotch descent, his ancestor having settled in the Old Dominion long before the war. Mr. Dale was survived by his wife, whose death occurred in Missouri at the age of eighty-eight. There were several other children in the Dale family besides Mrs. McQuiddy, who was born in Woodford county, Ky., in 1793, and whose given name was Achsah. She became the mother of six children, who attained maturity, of whom Thomas Jefferson was the youngest, and is now the only survivor.

Major McQuiddy remained on the home farm in Tennessee until his nineteenth year, when he married Jane M. Ruth, a native of Tennessee, who died at the age of thirty-five, leaving seven children. Of these, Achsah is the wife of S. E. Biddle; William R. is an attorney in Hanford, and is represented in this work; John Talbot is a contractor of Sonoma, Sonoma county, Cal.; Katie is the widow of P. E. Jacobs of Hanford, proprietor of the Vendome hotel; Sarah, deceased, was the wife of James H. Sharp of Kings county; Reden Dale is a resident of Santa Barbara, Cal.; and George P. died at the age of twelve. After his marriage Major McQuiddy managed his father's farm until 1849, in which year he moved to Clay county, Mo., and for two years engaged in manufacturing hemp. He then went to Nodaway county, where he became prominent and in 1859 was elected sheriff of Nodaway county, a position which he held at the breaking out of the Civil war. Leaving a deputy in charge of the sheriff's office, he raised a company of eleven hundred out of a voting population of seventeen hundred, and was made captain of what constituted the state guards, serving six months under Sterling Price. He then entered the Confederate service as a captain of Company G, Third Battalion, Confederate Cavalry, under Col. A. W. Slayback, and in four or five months was promoted to the rank of major, in command of a battalion. He was with Price in his first campaign in Missouri, and in 1862 went to Corinth, Miss., and Alabama, in 1863, being assigned to the secret service, where he remained for the balance of the war. In November, 1862, he was wounded at the battle of Corinth two days in succession, the first being a slight flesh wound in the right arm, and the second a more serious injury in the right thigh. For the following three or four months he was confined to the hospital, and upon recovering joined his regiment. While in the secret service he was captured in Tennessee in 1864, but made his escape, and continued the work for which he was well fitted, because of great familiarity with all parts of Tennessee and the south.

Returning to his home after the war, Major McQuiddy took charge of the settlement of his father's estate, the latter having died while his son was wearing the gray of the Confederacy. His wife had also joined the silent majority while her husband was serving in the army. In 1867 Major McQuiddy married Mary J. Huffman, a native of Tennessee, whose grandfather, Peter Huffman, served in a North Carolina regiment in the Revolutionary war.

Mrs. McQuiddy has been a faithful mother to her husband's seven children, rearing them to manhood and womanhood. She became the mother of one child, Lila Cyrene, now deceased, and has reared three grandchildren to maturity.

In 1873 Major McQuiddy came to the Pacific coast and settled on one hundred and sixty acres of land four miles northeast of Hanford, on what is now known as Mussel Slough, soon afterward taking up an adjoining ranch of the same size. He afterward purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land of the Southern Pacific Company, the company making promises in pamphlet form that, upon securing title, the land should be graded at from $2.50 to $5 per acre, improvements made by settlers not to be considered in fixing the valuation. Relying upon the word of the railroad company, about two hundred and fifty families settled on the lands, which were then nothing but an arid sand plain, and cultivated them at an enormous expenditure of time, money and patience. Banding together in a common cause, they organized the Settlers' Ditch Company, diverted water from the Kaweah river, a distance of twenty miles, and in time witnessed the transformation of their desert home. In 1877 the railroad was built through, and in 1878 the company graded lands at from $5 to $45 an acre, thus completely ignoring its former promise. A spirit of intense bitterness prevailed among the settlers, and a league was formed to protect their homes and lands. The company, however, gave no heed, but secured indictments, in many instances evicting holders and selling to other settlers. Their spirit of vindictiveness and persecution resulted in the killing of seven men, May 11, 1880. During this affair Major McQuiddy was the means of saving the lives of United States Marshal Pool and land grader Clerk. Litigations continued through the courts until 1887, when the settlers were obliged to pay for their land according to the assessed value. Major McQuiddy was one of the foremost who exerted strenuous efforts for fair dealing, but he also was obliged to pay the exorbitant demand, and continued to live on his farm until removing to Hanford in 1889. For a couple of years he leased his farm, then managed the same for two years, and later leased six hundred acres, upon which he engaged in stock and grain raising until 1895. Since then he has been practically retired from active life, although at present he is serving as inspector of weights and measures for Kings county. He is entitled to the credit of having raised the first oranges in Kings county, and of being one of the first to discover that alfalfa was particularly adapted to its soil. He devoted about two hundred and forty acres to alfalfa, and had forty-five acres under vines, and the balance utilized for horses, mules and cattle. He was one of the most scientific farmers of the county, and had the finest improvements known to this section.

Since 1857 Major McQuiddy has been identified with the Masonic fraternity, and is a life and charter member of Hanford Lodge No. 270. Both he and his wife are members of the Church of Christ Scientist. He has been interested in many enterprises in Kings county, both before and since it was set aside from Tulare county. At present he owns stock in the Arc Light Mining Company, now operating in Fresno county, and of which he is president. He is also interested in the noted Coalinga oil fields, and is developing gypsum in that locality, being one of the first to discover its richness. He is a lifelong Jeffersonian Democrat, and in 1882 was a candidate for governor of the state of California on the Greenback ticket. His political services have been of the same thoughtful and practical kind, as his other efforts toward the upbuilding of Kings county, and have strengthened the regard in which he is held by the people, regardless of political preferences. He has the sterling worth of the typical western pioneer, but little of the visionary dreamer whose expectation of large wealth was out of all proportion to the amount of work he expected to accomplish. He has been a man of action, of vigorous, infectious energy, and in his opinions and theories has always been guided by a lofty regard for the rights and prerogatives of his associates.

LOUIS HAAS, deceased, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., was a son of Mathias Haas, who was also born in the Quaker City, the descendant of German ancestry. Louis Haas engaged as a butcher in young manhood, remaining in his native city until 1852, when he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Upon his arrival in San Francisco he went to Montezuma Hill, where he engaged in the grocery and bakery business, and later located in Gravel Range, at Dutch Flat, where he bought a mine and entered upon its operation. Later he went to North Butte, Sutter county, and became very successful in his efforts. In 1860 he located in the northern part of Tulare county, where there was a wide range, and there engaged in the sheep business. Subsequently he became the owner of seven sections of land in that locality around Smith mountain, and three sections in the Hanford country, now Kings county. In 1862 he brought his family to Tulare county, but eventually located them in Stockton, where they made their home until 1875, in that year removing to Grangeville, Kings county. When the land became settled Mr. Haas sold his sheep, and in partnership with a Mr. Crow engaged in general farming, although from that time on he was practically retired. His death occurred in San Francisco in 1888, at the age of sixty-four years. In his political affiliations he was a staunch Republican, and was a liberal and progressive citizen, lending his aid and support to every movement which had for its ultimate end the general welfare of the community. His wife, formerly Mary Marsh, a native of Pittsburg, Pa., and daughter of Thomas Marsh, still survives him, residing on the old homestead. Of their four children three attained maturity, viz.: Mrs. Vania Orr, of Visalia; Mrs. Robison, of Hanford; and F. Pierce, in the vicinity of Hanford.

Vania Haas was reared to young womanhood in Stockton, in which city she was united in marriage with Walter Crow. He was a native of Missouri and the son of William Crow of Ripon, Cal. He engaged in farming and stock raising in the vicinity of Grangeville, Kings county, and there met his death at the hands of the Settlers' League, which precipitated the Mussel Slough fight. He was shot dead in May, 1880, at the age of thirty years. They were the parents of the following children: Lola, a graduate of the Stockton high school, now the wife of D. M. Stewart of Oakland; Clarence, a graduate of the University of California, now an electrician of New York City; and Walter, a farmer residing south of Visalia. Her second marriage occurred in Grangeville, and united her with Prof. A. R. Orr, who was born in Illinois March 18, 1855, and who graduated from Kirksville normal in June, 1875. The same year he came to California and located in Visalia, where he became an instructor in the city schools. In 1876 he organized the Visalia Normal and became its president, retaining the position for eleven years. He then accepted a position in the United States land office in the contest department, and maintaining the same for seven years. Mrs. Orr has shown herself a woman of rare business ability, after the death of her first husband assuming control of his extensive interests as a farmer and stockman, as she had also done in her father's estate. She has a stock ranch in Kings county, and owns a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres a mile and a half west of Dinuba, Tulare county, of which four hundred acres are in alfalfa, the chief interest of the place being an extensive dairy. She also has an eighty-acre vineyard at Sultana. At one time she owned thirty-two hundred acres around Smith mountain, but this she has since sold off in small tracts.

SAMUEL LOUIS GIVENS. The Givens family is too closely connected with the early history of Mariposa and Merced counties to need any introduction to the readers of the history of the San Joaquin valley. A worthy scion of this distinguished family is found to-day in the person of Samuel L. Givens. At the age of ten he accompanied his parents to California and in 1879 purchased his home ranch in Merced county, thirteen miles east of Merced, and upon this place he still lives. Born in Union county, Ky., November 8, 1842, Mr. Givens is the youngest of nine children born to Thomas and Catherine D. F. (Richards) Givens, the former born in Virginia December 1, 1798, and the latter born in Kentucky February 1, 1805. The nine children born to Thomas Givens and wife are as follows: Robert R., deceased; Eleazar T., born October 17, 1828; Matilda, deceased; Mrs. Jane R. Pool, of Stockton, Cal., born March 7, 1832; Catherine A., deceased; Thomas Jr., deceased; John H., of San Francisco, born October 15, 1838; Mrs. Mary R. Thrift, of Stockton; and Samuel Louis. December 24, 1852, Mr. and Mrs. Givens with their family started for California, reaching New Orleans January 1, 1853, and on January 4 they embarked on board the Pampero bound for Greytown, which they reached twelve days later. Crossing the Isthmus on the backs of mules, they then took passage on the Brother Jonathan, bound for San Francisco, which they reached February 2 of the same year. In Mariposa county the father purchased the Texas ranch, containing ten hundred and forty acres, and this ranch is now owned by Samuel L. and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Thomas Givens. Here the father died in 1860.

From his tenth year Mr. Givens was educated in Mariposa county, with a finishing course at the University of the Pacific in Santa Clara county. His education completed, he continued to remain on the old home place until 1870, purchasing that year the ranch upon which he still lives, in Merced county, and upon this place the intervening years of his life have been spent. His home place contains five hundred and twenty acres devoted to grain, stock and grazing, and in addition he rents three thousand acres in Mariposa county, the latter utilized solely in raising stock. He has in all six hundred head of stock.

December 20, 1877, in Mariposa county, Mr. Givens was united in marriage with Miss Susan L. Wills, who was born in the above named county December 9, 1855, a daughter of Benjamin Wills, a native of Alabama; he married Miss Amanda Cathey. Mr. Wills made his first trip to California in 1849 and afterward went back to Alabama for his family, who crossed overland to Mariposa county. Mr. and Mrs. Givens have but one child, a son, Archibald. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Politically Mr. Givens is a Democrat. Personally he is active and well built, and claims a popularity which is justly due.

WILLIAM BENJAMIN HARDMAN is the owner of a large and valuable ranch near Volta, Merced county, which invariably attracts the attention of the passer-by as a home of peace and plenty. In the acquisition of this fine property Mr. Hardman labored earnestly and vigorously, and after many years of strenuous effort in his chosen line of work finds himself the owner of four hundred and eighty acres of choice land, well improved, furnished with a substantial set of farm buildings, and all the appliances and machinery required by the intelligent and progressive modern agriculturist. A son of Levi W. Hardman, he was born April 21, 1847, in St. Joseph county, Ind., near South Bend. His grandfather Benjamin Hardman, a native of Pennsylvania, was a farmer and a pioneer settler of Indiana. Leaving there in 1847, he finally located in the Willamette valley, Oregon, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying at a venerable age.

A native of Indiana, Levi W. Hardman was there engaged in farming with his parents until the summer of 1847. Then, a young man, he started with his father and brothers and others for the western frontier, Stephen Broadhurst forming one of the party. Going as far as Missouri, the entire party spent the winter in that state, and April 17, 1848, started across the plains for Oregon, behind ox teams, with Captain Wambaugh in command of the train. Hearing of the wonderful discovery of gold while on the way, Levi W. Hardman and a few of the more venturesome men of the train determined to follow the trail to California instead of going on to Oregon, and accordingly left the main body of the party at Fort Hall. Mr. Hardman, being an expert marksman, was detailed as hunter for the crowd, and in his endeavors to keep the company supplied with buffalo and deer meat had several hairbreadth escapes from the Indians. Arriving in California, he spent a year at the Marysville mines. His health failing, however, he located in Napa, where he purchased land and engaged in ranching. Meeting with good success in his operations, he bought another ranch, lying about four miles from his original purchase, on the Soda Springs road, and in Napa county reared his family. He died whilst on a visit to his son, William Benjamin, December 17, 1897, aged seventy-seven years. He married Alice Broadhurst, who was born in Michigan, and who, now a bright and active woman of seventy-six years, resides in Shasta county. Sixteen children blessed their union, eight of whom grew to years of maturity, and are now living, William Benjamin being the eldest child.

Coming when an infant with his parents to California, William Benjamin Hardman was educated in the district schools of Napa and Napa county, remaining beneath the parental roof-tree until after attaining his majority. Locating in Merced county in November, 1869, he homesteaded and pre-empted three hundred and twenty acres of land, which are included in his present home ranch. The land was in its original wildness, and he at once began its improvement by erecting a rude cabin, hauling the lumber from which it was made from Banta Station, sixty-five miles away, there being no timber in this section of the valley. After his marriage, Mr.

Hardman brought his bride to his cabin, and at once embarked in business as a farmer and stock-grower. Energetic, resolute and persevering, he met with well-deserved success in his undertakings, and subsequently purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land lying about a mile from his home ranch, and has now a fine farm of four hundred and eighty acres, all under irrigation. One hundred acres he devotes to the growing of alfalfa, which he uses largely for feeding stock. He raises fine cattle and horses, the latter being principally English Shires and Clydesdales, among those of the former breed being an imported horse, Scropton Fashion, which he has exhibited twice at state fairs, on each occasion carrying off the first premium. Among his Clydesdale horses of note is Clunie, a handsome four-year-old. He is also engaged to some extent in the raising of poultry, which he finds profitable.

December 1, 1870, in Snelling, Merced county, Mr. Hardman married Alice Broadhurst, who was born in Napa county, Cal., in 1852. Her father, Stephen Broadhurst, was born in Ohio. Her grandfather, William Broadhurst, a native of Pennsylvania, settled first in Ohio, but afterward removed to Michigan, locating as a pioneer near Niles, where he spent the remainder of his life. Five years of age when he accompanied his parents to Niles, Mich., Stephen Broadhurst there grew to manhood on the farm that his father cleared from the wilderness. When twenty-two years of age he started with the Hardman party for Oregon. While spending the winter in Missouri he married Rebecca McCombs, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of Lambert McCombs, a farmer. Mr. McCombs removed from Ohio to Indiana, from there coming across the plains to California in 1849, and settling in Napa county, where his death occurred a few weeks later. Stephen Broadhurst was engaged in farming in Napa county until 1866, when he settled as a farmer and stockman in Merced county. He subsequently removed to Calaveras county, where he resided until his death, in 1886. His widow survived him, dying in 1889. They were the parents of five children, all of whom are living, Mrs. Hardman being the second child in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Hardman have four children living, namely: Icie P., at home; Frank U., at home; Arabella, wife of F. H. Helmer, of Plainsberg, Cal.; and Bertha M., wife of L. P. Raven, of Los Banos. A staunch Republican in politics, Mr. Hardman takes great interest in local affairs, and for many terms served as school trustee, being president of the board a part of the time, and assisting in building all of the school houses in this part of the county. During the Civil war, when but sixteen years of age, he was a member of the state militia, belonging to the Napa Rangers, a cavalry company. He is past master workman of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and belongs to Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82, I. O. F., of which he is past grand. His wife is a member of the Rebekahs.

ALEX R. CARNEY. A resident of California since 1899, Alex R. Carney has become one of the largest orange growers in this section of the state, also an active factor in other lines of business, being interested in the Exeter Lumber Company, of which he was the organizer. A man of exceptional educational ability, he has attained a position in the business world that each year becomes more secure.

Alex R. Carney is a native of Marinette, Wis., a son of Fred and Elizabeth (Corry) Carney. Fred Carney was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick. After reaching man's estate, he engaged in the lumber business, a few years later removing to Marinette, Wis., being a pioneer settler of that place. Here he became associated with Whitbeck & Co., lumber dealers, and for fifty years he continued with the firm, being their superintendent and manager. As time passed and Marinette became an important city, Mr. Carney assisted in organizing several banks. He also became the owner of over one thousand acres of land, which he improved, platting portions of it as additions to the city of Marinette. A Republican in political belief, he always took an active part in the affairs of the state and county, being one of the most influential men of the city. A believer in advancement, he was at the head of many plans calculated to advance Marinette. Mr. Carney married Elizabeth Corry, who was born in Chatham, New Brunswick. As a result of this union six children were born, viz.: Mary, wife of C. G. Andrews, of Los Angeles; Jennie, who married W. J. Davis, of Marinette; Elizabeth, the wife of W. L. Ducey, of San Francisco; Fred, Jr., and Frank L., of Marinette; and Alex R.

Born April 27, 1876, Alex R. Carney was first a student at Notre Dame, Ind., where he was prepared for Harvard University. Entering the university in 1897 he continued his studies at that institution for one year. In 1899 he came to California, locating near Exeter, where his father had already become interested in the growing of oranges, having, in 1896 purchased land and set out part of the orchard now bearing the name of "Bonnie Brae." On his arrival the son at once took charge of the business, which at that time consisted of fifty acres. Since then he has added to the original purchase, until he now has one hundred and ninety acres, all in the family name. One hundred and twenty acres of this are devoted to oranges, all navels and the trees are bearing. Seventy acres are in grapes, the Emperor variety being in the lead. The product of these fine orchards and vineyards is shipped direct to the eastern markets. In addition to the orchard property, Mr. Carney owns other lands and in 1901 he erected one of the finest residences to be found in Tulare county.

While his fruit business has taken most of his time, Mr. Carney has branched out in other lines and in 1900 organized the Exeter Lumber Company, of Exeter. This concern is now on a good paying basis and is one of the city's leading industries.

Mr. Carney was united in marriage at Notre Dame, Ind., with Kittie Culbert, a native of Muskegon, Mich. One child has been born to them, A. R., Jr.

When the contemplated electric car line is built, it will pass Mr. Carney's place, and he is now planning to erect his own packing house, and with the electric power will run a large pumping plant. The Carney ranch is second to none in the county, and with Mr. Carney at the helm modern improvements will be added from time to time which will keep it in the van of others in this section.

GEORGE WARREN FILLMORE. The Fillmore family, well represented in California, is of New York ancestry, members of whom have been prominent citizens in Onondaga county for generations. W. C. Fillmore was a farmer in that location, and as a representative citizen held the office of sheriff. His son, William Cortland, was a native of Onondaga county but in manhood removed to Madison county and in the neighborhood of Chittenango engaged in farming. He lived to be eighty-two years old, his death occurring in 1902. He was a man of strong, forceful nature and public-spirit, and gave his best efforts toward the upbuilding of the community in which he made his home. He gave his support to the Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon for many years. His wife, formerly Harriette Waldo Wing, was a native of Moultrie county, Ohio, whose parents died early in life. Her death occurred in New York in 1893. She left a family of five sons and two daughters, of whom Jerome, who died in San Francisco, February 11, 1902, was general manager of the Southern Pacific Railroad; George Warren is the subject of this review; William C., Jr., who died in Los Angeles in 1894, was also connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad; Nancy became the wife of W. J. Sheldon and died in Chicago in 1904; Wing is a conductor on the Southern Pacific Railroad between Los Angeles and Fresno; Mary is the wife of S. H.

Tuttman, of Hamilton, Mont.; and Edward Luther is associated with the Union Iron Works in San Francisco.

A native of Chittenango, Madison county, N. Y., George Warren Fillmore was born July 1, 1847. He was reared to young manhood in his native state and attended the district schools. About 1865 he became associated with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, acting as foreman during the construction of the second track. Returning to New York he remained for about three years, after which, in 1875, he came as far west as Nevada and engaged as brakeman on the Southern Pacific Railroad, running out of Winnemucca. Two years later he became conductor, retaining this position until 1881, when he was transferred to the western district, running out of Oakland as conductor on passenger trains. Since that time he has made his home in Oakland, having built a residence at No. 965 Jackson street. About 1885 he purchased a farm five miles south of Visalia, Tulare county, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres. Upon this he has made all the improvements, in 1891 having set out an orchard of about forty acres, a part of which is planted to a vineyard. It is universally acknowledged that this orchard of Mr. Fillmore's is the finest in Tulare county, in point of the growth and health of the trees, every care and attention having been given to their cultivation.

In Amsterdam, N. Y., Mr. Fillmore married Anna Wayne, a daughter of John Wayne, a descendant of "Mad Anthony." He was a farmer in New York state, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Angeline Brower, was also of an old and distinguished New York family. Mr. and Mrs. Fillmore have one daughter, Bessie May. In his political affiliations Mr. Fillmore is a staunch Republican. He is a citizen widely known and honored for the many sterling traits of character which distinguish him, and through which he has won the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

JAMES T. CARTER, a successful dairyman of Tulare county, in the vicinity of Visalia, was born in Davis county, Iowa, near Bloomfield, December 11, 1852. His grandfather, Joseph Carter, a native of Kentucky and a patriot in the Black Hawk war, became an early settler of Iowa, where he engaged in farming. Later in life he removed to Barry county, Mo., where his death occurred. His son, William Carter, was a native of Kentucky. He also became a farmer in Iowa, in which state he remained until after the Civil war broke out. During the war he removed to Woodson county, Kans., then to Missouri, and later to Wilson county, Kans..

where he became a pioneer farmer. In 1882 he came to California and located near Three Rivers, Tulare county, where he still resides. His wife, formerly Mary F. Hill, of Kentucky, was a daughter of Robert Hill, of the same state, who removed to Iowa, where his death occurred. Mrs. Carter is still living, the mother of seven sons and two daughters, having lost two children by death.

The fourth child in the family of his parents, James T. Carter was reared on the home farm. Until he was twenty-five years old he remained at home, when he engaged in farming independently near Fredonia, Kans. In 1883 he came to California and in Tulare county entered the employ of James Pogue, with whom he remained eight years. Since that time he has been engaged in general farming, stock-raising and the dairy business. He is located on an eighty-acre tract two and a half miles northwest of Visalia, where he has a dairy of thirty cows. He is a very successful farmer and is one of the representative men of this section. In Visalia, January 25, 1893, he married Mrs. Ovitt (Taylor) Stong, a native of Birkenhead, Chester, England. Her father, W. G. Taylor, also a native of England, conducted a mercantile establishment, selling gloves and hosiery in Liverpool. In 1850 he brought his wife and three children to California on the barque Ocean Queen, via Cape Horn. The ship was wrecked off Cape Horn and the greater part of the year was spent on the sea. Upon their safe arrival in the state, Mr. Taylor went at once to the mines in Mariposa county, and later to Stanislaus county, following mining at Knights Ferry, until 1874. In that year he returned to England, and settled in South Devon, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Ovitt E. Hannon, was born at Birmingham, England, and died at Knights Ferry, Stanislaus county. Of the five children born of their union, Mrs. Carter, the third in order of birth, is the only one now living. She was reared to young womanhood in the state of her father's adoption, receiving her education in the public schools. In 1872, in San Francisco, she married M. S. W. Stong, a native of Illinois. He was a son of Solomon Stong, a farmer of Illinois of German descent. He came to California in 1849, crossing the plains with ox-teams from Missouri, and upon his arrival in San Juan engaged in the mercantile business. After his marriage he removed to Battle Mountain, Nev., and in 1873 located in Visalia, Tulare county, in the latter place following building and farming. In 1880 he located on a farm adjoining the one now owned by Mrs. Carter, this being purchased in 1887, in which year Mr. Stong died. He was a Mason of Royal Arch degree, and politically cast his ballot with the Democratic party. Taking a strong interest in all local affairs he served as school trustee. Of the five children born of her first marriage four are living, namely: Clara M., the wife of W. E. Malone, of Los Angeles; Ovitt E., the wife of A. R. Shippy, of Visalia; David B. Stong, located near Visalia; and Guy W. Stong, at home. In his political affiliations Mr. Carter is a Democrat, and fraternally is associated with the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN HEDBERG, as manager of the Lindsay Citrus Nursery Company, has attained a prominence in the nursery business of which he may well feel proud. Ever since leaving home he has had his own way to make in the world, and by industry and economy he has accumulated a handsome property. A native of Sweden, he was born July 19, 1870, and is a son of Erick and Annie Hedberg. The father is now engaged in farming in the old country. The mother bore four children, two of whom are in America.

John Hedberg remained at home until reaching his twenty-first year, when he entered the Swedish army, remaining in the service one year. At the expiration of that time, in 1891, he bade good-bye to his home and friends and came to the United States, first locating in Madison county, Neb., where he remained one year. In 1893 he arrived in California, securing employment in a vineyard and orchard in Fresno county. Later he entered the employ of Marshall & Wilson, the nurserymen, with whom he continued three years, learning the business thoroughly. In 1895 he came to Lindsay and was the first to engage in the citrus nursery business in a commercial way at this place. For four years he continued in the business two miles from Lindsay, but at the end of this period sold out and purchased eighty acres on the hill-side three miles northeast of Lindsay. At the time of purchase the land was in stubble, but Mr. Hedberg lost no time in beginning the improvement of the place. A well was sunk and a pumping plant installed which now has a capacity of five thousand gallons per hour, enough to irrigate his orange grove of forty-three acres. Since then he has set out twenty acres to nursery, containing one hundred and fifty thousand orange trees, being the largest citrus nursery north of Tehachapi, and in addition has set out other varieties of fruit trees. In the spring of 1905 he set out forty acres more of navel oranges in Round Valley, three miles from his home place, where he also owns two hundred and sixty acres of citrus land. While most of his time is devoted to the nursery and horticultural business, Mr. Hedberg has also become interested in several business enterprises, including the Lindsay Citrus Nursery Company, in which he holds a half interest; the Rochdale Association, and the Lindsay Building and Improvement Company, of which he is a director.

Fraternally he holds membership in the Woodmen of the World, and in politics he supports the policies of the Republican party, but has never taken a very active interest in the politics of the county, preferring to devote his whole time to his business. He has met with excellent success and now has one of the finest nurseries in the entire state. When one considers that Mr. Hedberg has been in this country but a few years, and that he has never had any assistance, his success can be fully appreciated. At the same time he has never neglected his duties as a citizen, and when called upon by his neighbors he has always responded.

WILLIAM P. RATLIFF. The popular postmaster of Tulare is a descendant in the third generation from a native of the Isle of Man who became a farmer in Pennsylvania and whose son, William, carried the family fortunes further west, establishing a home in Indiana and later in the midst of frontier environments in Iowa. At the time of the removal from Pennsylvania John, son of William, was a small boy, and in early manhood he carried on a farm in Iowa, but the spirit of adventure and desire to gain a fortune led him to cross the plains in 1850. For eight years he prospected and mined, and finally returned to Iowa via Panama and New York City. During a brief stay in New York City he married Elizabeth Madden, who was born in Dublin, Ireland, and whose brother, Michael Madden, had been a partner of Mr. Ratliff in their mining operations in California. Intending to settle up his affairs and go back to California, Mr. Ratliff brought his wife to his old farm. In January, 1860, three months after the birth of his son, W. P., and just prior to the intended departure for California, he was thrown from a horse and killed. The widow and orphan child carried out his plans and came via Panama to California in 1860, settling in Plumas county, where later Mrs. Ratliff became the wife of E. H. Holthouse. Born of that marriage are four sons and a daughter, all residents of Santa Clara county. In 1870 the family moved to the vicinity of San Jose and bought a farm near Lawrence Station, where Mrs. Holthouse died in 1902, at sixty-eight years of age, her death being the result of an accidental fall.

While his parents were living at Oskaloosa, Iowa, W. P. Ratliff was born October 12, 1859. However, his earliest recollections are associated with California, where he supplemented a common school education by a course of three years in Santa Clara College. After leaving college he secured a clerkship with T. W. Spring. Coming to Tulare in 1882, he became a brakeman on the Southern Pacific Railroad and a year later was made a conductor between Tulare and Huron. In 1888 he left the railroad and took a position with Braly & Blythe, real estate agents, also agents for the Wells-Fargo Express Company. Resigning from their employ in 1892, he accepted the cashiership of the Tulare County Bank and the Tulare Savings Bank. In August of 1896 he resigned there and became assistant cashier of the Bank of Tulare, continuing in the position until February, 1901, when he was chosen superintendent of two different oil companies in the Kern river oil fields. To assume the duties of the new place he removed to Kern county, but misfortune soon overtook him. He fell a victim to typhoid fever and for five months was unable to leave his bed. Meanwhile he had been removed to San Francisco, in order to have the best possible attention and medical care. Upon regaining his strength he returned to Tulare in November, 1901, and a few months later became cashier of the Bank of Tulare, where he remained until his appointment as postmaster in April, 1902, under President Roosevelt, assuming the duties of that position on the 1st of May.

In Tulare, June 5, 1888, Mr. Ratliff was united in marriage with Alice Harter, a native of Stockton and a daughter of Isaac and Matilda (Parker) Harter, pioneers of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Ratliff have one son, Clinton P. Politically a Republican, Mr. Ratliff has been a local leader of the party, has served as a member of the state central committee, in 1896 was chairman of the county central committee, for one term served as city assessor and for two years held office as city treasurer. In the Board of Trade he has held the offices of president and secretary. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World; Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he is recorder; Olive Branch Lodge No. 260, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason and of which he is past master; and Tulare Chapter No. 71, R. A. M., in which he is past high priest.

WILLIAM WHITFIELD WRIGHT. It is with much pleasure that we present to our readers a brief sketch of the life of W. W. Wright. One of the oldest employes in the service of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and one of the pioneers of California, his life is an interesting recital of the advance of modern transportation. It is impossible for us to go into details, owing to lack of space. If we could, the incidents associated with his life would read like a romance.

A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Wright was born near the city of Milwaukee, January 26, 1856. His father, W. W., was born in Connecticut, but in early pioneer days removed to Wisconsin where he engaged in the tilling of the soil. Later he removed to Illinois, settling in Grant county. There he lived until the news of the discovery of gold in California. The same year he outfitted, and with ox teams made the trip across the plains. The following year he went east for a visit, and on his return to this state he engaged in mining for three years. At the expiration of this period he again went east, where he lived until 1864, when he again crossed the plains, this time accompanied by his family. The journey was made with horses and in the remarkably quick time of ninety-four days. They came via the Platte river and Salt Lake. At the latter place they were addressed by Brigham Young. On arriving here the family settled in San Joaquin county, near Stockton, where Mr. Wright engaged in the raising of grain. In 1872 he disposed of his interests there and came to Tulare county, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres near Buzzard's Roost, ten miles west of Tulare. There he carried on a successful farming business until 1875, when he located in Tulare where he purchased a lot and erected a fine residence in which he lived until his death at the age of sixty-four years. After moving into Tulare he engaged in well-boring for several years. He married Cynthia Oliver, a native of Illinois. After the death of Mr. Wright she married George H. Castle of Stockton, where she resided until his death and then returned to Tulare, in which place she died at the age of seventy-four years. By her first marriage she became the mother of two children: Lizzie, who is the deceased wife of Delos Wilson; and W. W.

William W. Wright remembers well the journey across the plains. His education was secured in the district schools of California. In 1873 he came to Tulare and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad as a hostler in the roundhouse. Two years later he was promoted to the position of fireman, and in 1880 was transferred to the right-hand side of the cab. From that time to the present he has never lost a day, except through an accident and when he desired a vacation. His first run as an engineer was between Los Angeles and Lathrop, pulling freight. In 1892 he was promoted to the passenger service with headquarters at Fresno. Five years later he was sent to Visalia. Later when the road was completed to Portersville, he located here and has since made this place his home. The only accident he has had occurred while running on the "Sunset Limited" between Fresno and Bakersfield. Two side bars on the engine broke and one rod tore through the cab, tearing the seat out and otherwise demolishing the woodwork. It is a wonder he was not killed, but while he was laid up for nine months he was, at the expiration of that time, able to re-sume his place.

On one of his trips, between Fresno and Tulare, the train was held up by Britt and Dan McCall. As there were two deputy sheriffs aboard a fierce fight ensued and one of the robbers was killed. There are many other incidents in connection with his railroad experience, but space will not permit of their being mentioned.

In San Francisco Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Kate Gilmer, a native daughter of California. Her father, Rufus, is now living in Visalia, and a sketch of him will be found on another page of this work. Mrs. Wright was engaged in teaching for thirteen years.

Fraternally Mr. Wright is a Mason, belonging to the Royal Arch Masons and the Commandery. He is also a member of the Mystic Shrine, being associated with Islam Temple of San Francisco. In connection with his life's work he is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Bakersfield, of which he is past chief engineer.

In politics he supports the principles of the Republican party, but has never had the time to take any part in public affairs. His life has been a success. At all times he has been found true to every trust reposed in him, as is evidenced by his many years of service with the Southern Pacific. Both he and his wife are honored by all who know them.

REV. JONATHAN WALTON GRAYBILL, A. B., M. D. In Rev. J. W. Graybill, Lindsay has a citizen whom all take pleasure in honoring. No more earnest worker in the cause of religion can be found, and while he now devotes a good share of his time to other lines, he is still the pastor of three churches, and in the past has been one of the most active members of the profession. Having a desire for greater usefulness, Mr. Graybill also took up the profession of medicine, being a graduate M. D. Since coming to Lindsay, in 1902, he has proved himself to be a very useful member of that section of the county. Progressive, he is always in favor of any movement calculated to be of material benefit to his adopted town and county.

A native of Virginia, he was born at Salem, August 2, 1853, a son of Michael Graybill and a grandson of John, who was also a native of Virginia of Holland descent, from which country George Graybill, the progenitor of the family in America, emigrated and settled at Lancaster, Pa. Michael Graybill married Mary Obenchain, a daughter of Peter Obenchain, who was a large planter in Virginia and also served in the war of 1812, while her grandfather fought for the independence of the Colonies in 1776.

Rev. J. v. Graybill was one of nine children, five of whom are living, but he is the only one that came to California. A brother, Rev. v. T., was a missionary in Old Mexico, where he had been engaged in this work for thirty years. Reared on his father's farm near Salem, J. W. Graybill attended the public schools and the Fincastle Academy. From there he entered the Hampton-Sidney College, from which he was graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1876. After this he matriculated in the Union Theological Seminary at the same place, graduating in 1880. The following year, at Roanoke, Va., he was ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church. After his graduation he studied in the Kentucky Medical School at Louisville, Ky., from which he was graduated in 1882 with the degree of M. D. The same year of his graduation he went to Old Mexico as a Presbyterian missionary. While in that country he held the chair of languages in a theological school, and was also superintendent of four different mission schools. Here it was that his medical training proved useful, for during the time he was in Mexico the yellow fever raged. Dr. Graybill treated over five hundred cases and was also stricken with the dread disease and suffered a severe illness.

Dr. Graybill returned to Kentucky in 1886, locating at Richwood, where he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church for six years. At the end of that time he was compelled to leave on account of ill health. Going to Colorado, he was in charge of the Presbyterian Church at Brighton for three years. From there he removed to Trinidad, where he continued in church work for five years. Then, in 1897 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Palo Alto. While there he did post-graduate work in Stanford University, and two and one-half years later he went to San Rafael. At the latter place he became part owner and one of the head masters in the Tamalpais Military Academy for two years.

In 1900 Dr. Graybill had purchased land near the town of Lindsay, and owing to the ill health of his son, he left San Rafael at the expiration of two years, locating at Lindsay, where he has since made his home. Having become a land owner, he concluded to take less active part in church work and devote more attention to the cultivation of his property. Since locating here he has made additional purchases of land, now owning several fine orange orchards, all being under a high state of cultivation and bringing in good interest on the original investment.

Since his arrival in Lindsay he has organized the Lindsay Presbyterian Church, which is now in a flourishing condition. He has also been instrumental in organizing churches at Exeter and Plano, being pastor of all three. With all his business investments to look after, he finds time for church work and so arranges his work that he is able to look after his congregations in each of the towns mentioned, and when any special movement is inaugurated to better the existing conditions of either church, he is to be found planning and laboring earnestly to make a success of the venture.

In Shelbyville, Ky., August 30, 1881, Rev. Graybill was united in marriage with Luella Crockett, a native of Kentucky, and to them has been born one child, Robert E.

During his residence in Trinidad, Dr. Graybill was made a Mason, and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. In politics a Republican, he is deeply interested in the questions of the day and keeps well posted on current topics.

Socially he and his wife are prominent, and while they have lived in Lindsay but a few years, they have made a large circle of friends. As a business man Rev. Graybill is a success, and those who have had dealings with him are now his friends. He has had an eventful life, but is now in good health and looks forward to many years of happiness.

CAPT. ARTHUR J. HUTCHINSON. Forced to come to California on account of ill health, Captain Hutchinson has become one of the prominent men in the San Joaquin valley, and there is no man who has done more for Tulare county, especially that section about Lindsay. When the captain arrived here most of the land was unimproved, and there was no water for irrigation purposes, but he soon demonstrated that water could be pumped from wells for that purpose. Aside from being the pioneer in pumping water in this manner, he has also been prominent in other lines, his vast experience has fitted him for any position, but he prefers the quiet life of an orchardist to that of any other.

A native of the Island of Bermuda, A. J. Hutchinson was born August 30, 1846. His father, Gen. William Nelson Hutchinson, was born in England in 1800. Entering the English army he was advanced to the position of general. Later in life he went to the Bermudas where for a time he served as governor, this being an appointive office, made by the king of England. In 1894 he returned to his home in Devonshire, England, where he died. His father, Sir William Hutchinson, was a general in the English army and a man of great prominence.

Gen. W. N. Hutchinson was united in marriage with Mary Russell, a daughter of John Russell, D. D., who at one time was the head master of Charter House and one of the canons of the Canterbury Cathedral. Mrs. Hutchinson died in England at the age of seventy-eight years. She was the mother of six children, five of whom are still living.

Arthur J. Hutchinson received a good education, graduating from the Royal Military College in 1864. Soon after he was commissioned an ensign in the Twenty-third Fusiliers and sent to India, where he served until 1870. During this time he was raised to the rank of captain and in the year mentioned was invalided home. Continued poor health led him to seek a more healthful country and in 1871 he came to California. Here he decided to remain on account of the climate, and make it his permanent home. With this idea in mind he sold his commission in the English army and located at Pomona. Purchasing a ranch there he engaged in the fruit business for a time and was the first to have an artesian well. Finally he sold out and purchased an interest in the Cicuega Ranch near Los Angeles, where he became engaged in the raising of fine blooded horses, among the number being Beaconsfield, Hock Hocking, Manzinita, Arthur H., St. David and others.

In 1887 Captain Hutchinson sold his farm and stock with the intention of returning to England, but the following year, while traveling in Virginia, he met and married Sadie Lindsay Patton, and in 1889 they came to California. Taking up his residence in Tulare county, the captain purchased his present ranch. Later the Lindsay Land Company was formed with Captain Hutchinson as director and manager. This company purchased two thousand acres of land, a portion of which was subdivided into town lots and the town of Lindsay was located, named in honor of Mrs. Hutchinson.

During the winter of 1892 and '93 Captain Hutchinson sunk a number of wells and began the improvement of his ranch, setting out orange trees, which have proved a success. In 1893 and '94 about five hundred acres of oranges were set out. This has led to extensions all over the county toward the foothills. These orchards are irrigated from wells, the water from which is directly distributed through pipes to the different sections of the orchards. At the present time there are, within a few miles of Lindsay, over two thousand acres that are planted to oranges and other fruits, all of which are irrigated from wells. This immense business began with one central pumping plant, which secured water from one well. When the captain first planned this extensive business and gave the figures to the company, the others did not think the plan feasible and engineers pronounced it impossible.

However, in spite of all that was said, the captain had confidence in his scheme and finally told the company he would go ahead and do it alone. This he did, and now that it has proved such a success the full credit is accorded Captain Hutchinson. In addition to his interest in the company, he owns fifty acres which are devoted to navel oranges and tangerines, having one of the largest orchards of the latter in the state. His ranch has been finely improved. The first packing house that was built in Lindsay was put up by the captain and still remains in his possession.

To Captain and Mrs. Hutchinson three children have been born, namely: Mary Lindsay, William Nelson Lindsay and Arthur John Lindsay. In politics Captain Hutchinson is a Republican, but has no time to devote to public matters, although there is no man in Tulare county more ready to give of his time and means when called upon to do so, providing the matter is worthy of his support. Such men as he are always at the front to introduce modern methods; Lindsay, in fact the entire state, owes much to Captain Hutchinson. He has met with success, but in gaining his success others have been benefited to a large extent.

ALBEA EDGAR SCRUGGS has every reason to be pleased with Tulare county, for a proper use of its opportunities has resulted in a competence for him. He owns a fine farm nine miles west of Portersville, where he has made many improvements, putting up buildings adequate for his needs and erecting a handsome residence. He is justly named among the representative farmers of this section. A native of Virginia, he was born near Palmyra, Fluvanna county, February 4, 1846, the descendant of southern ancestry. His father, Joseph Scruggs, was born in Buckingham county, Va., where he engaged as a farmer until his death, his wife, formerly Pearley Shepherd, of Virginia, also dying in the same locality. They were the parents of seven sons and five daughters, of whom four sons and two daughters are living.

The youngest in the family of his parents, Albea Edgar Scruggs was reared on the paternal farm in Virginia, receiving his education in the public schools in the vicinity of his home. In manhood he decided to seek his fortune in the more remote west, believing in the abundant opportunities of the newer states. He accordingly came to California in 1867, first locating in Crow's Landing, Stanislaus county. Subsequently he made several trips back east, but his interests remained in California. In 1875 he located in Tulare county, raising stock for a time. In 1876 he bought a ranch of the railroad company and began to make improvements, while at the same time he followed grain farming and the raising of stock. He now owns four hundred acres on sections 28 and 33, township 21, range 26. Of this land one hundred and fifty acres is devoted to alfalfa. In 1892 he began setting out an orchard of prunes, pears and peaches, being one of the first to devote land to this purpose. He now has an orchard of twenty-five acres, while his entire property is under irrigation from the Woods Central Irrigation Ditch, of which company he is a director. He also owns a grain farm on the plains of four hundred and eighty acres. One of Mr. Scruggs' chief interests on his farm is a dairy, noted for the excellence of its products.

Near Portersville Mr. Scruggs was united in marriage with Mrs. Julia (Rhoades) Turner, a native of Texas, and the daughter of William Rhoades, one of the first settlers near Portersville. He had eight children, of whom Mrs. Scruggs was the sixth in order of birth. To Mr. and Mrs. Scruggs have been born nine children, viz.: William J., of Nevada; John E., a dairyman; Pearly, who died at the age of eighteen years; Hugh E., of Berkeley; Clarence; Fay; Clifford; Roy and Ray (twins), the last five named are at home.

Mr. Scruggs gives his support to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Poplar, of which he is a member. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Tulare, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party as far as regards national issues, reserving the right to cast his ballot locally for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

GEORGE BUELL OTIS, a pioneer of California and an honored resident of Berkeley, was born in Chittenden county, Vt., near Bolton, September 16, 1844, and is a son of Albert Hinsdale and Mary (Jewell) Otis. The former was born in Massachusetts and was the only child of Joseph and Viola (Hinsdale) Otis, of English ancestry. Albert Hinsdale Otis was reared in Massachusetts and was there educated, graduating from the Wesleyan University with the degree of D.D. In Vermont he married Mary Jewell, who was a daughter of Jesse Jewell, one of the early settlers of Bolton, Vt. In 1838, with his wife, he went to Wisconsin and bought government land near what is now Kenosha, but was then known as Southport. In addition to his duties as a circuit rider in the Methodist Episcopal Church, he followed millwrighting successfully for years. He improved a farm in Wisconsin, to which state his father later went and took the home prepared by the son, who at once made another home on an adjoining farm. Albert H. Otis and his wife reared a family of five children, one daughter, Ruby, dying in early childhood. Charles Wesley, born in Wisconsin, is a retired merchant now living in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county; Sarah Anna is the wife of George P. Laird, of Cambria, Cal., a retired dairyman and educator; Philo J., a retired farmer of Fresno county, was formerly a teacher in Oregon; and George B. is the subject of this sketch. The father came to California in 1851, locating in Grass valley. He assisted in building the first quartz mill in California and engaged in mill building for some time. In 1854, via the Isthmus of Panama (having crossed the plains in his former trip to California) he returned to Wisconsin and two years later brought his family to California, settling in Sonoma county, where he followed farming. His death occurred in Alameda county on the site of the University of California, in 1865, while his wife died in 1887, and both are interred in Petaluma.

George B. Otis received his education in Wisconsin and Sonoma county, Cal., after which he took a six months' course at the University of the Pacific. In 1864 he went to Nevada and followed mining for a time, but not meeting with success he returned to California and with his brother Philo purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land near Petaluma. The ranch was later disposed of and in 1866 they drove a band of dairy stock to Salinas valley, where they leased a part of a Spanish grant near Castroville. They there added to their stock and continued the dairy business. It was there that Mr. Otis met and married his wife, formerly Elizabeth Roadhouse, who was born near Stockton, Cal., November 20, 1851, a daughter of Joseph Roadhouse. In 1872 the brothers removed to Santa Clara county, their lease having terminated, and there followed the dairy business until 1876, when they dissolved partnership. George B. Otis removed to Fresno county and there in time accumulated six hundred acres of land, now owning eighty acres adjoining the town of Selma. There he established his home and in 1880, with three others, platted the town of Selma. It was Mr. Otis who selected the name by which the town is known. There he erected a comfortable home and resided until his removal to Berkeley. George B. Otis is a direct descendant of James Otis of Revolutionary fame.

To Mr. Otis and his wife were born four children: Albert Joseph was born in Pajaro valley, Santa Cruz county, January 25, 1871; he is unmarried and makes his home in Selma; George Fredron, born in Santa Clara county, August 7, 1873, is married and has one son, Buell; he makes his home in Selma, having charge of his father's business there; Elizabeth, born November 17, 1878, is the wife of Jacob Boehler, of Watsonville; and Earl Norriss, born August 16, 1881, is unmarried and makes his home in Selma. Elizabeth and Earl were born in Selma, Fresno county, in what was formerly part of the original courthouse. Mr. Otis assisted in building up the town of Selma and gave of his time and means to advance its interests. He has never aspired to public office, although he has always been an ardent Republican. He and his family are members of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is an active member of Selma Lodge No. 309, I. O. O. F., being a charter member and one of the organizers of same. He has passed all the chairs of the lodge and is also a member of the Encampment, and has attained the Canton.

JOSIAH MESSER FERGUSON. A veteran of the Civil war and a resident of California for many years, Mr. Ferguson is well worthy of mention in this work. His has been a successful life, the result of his own efforts. In youth no special advantages were associated with his surroundings, and as he advanced in life and gradually attained a position of affluence he could truly say that all was his from "right of conquest."

A native of Georgia, Mr. Ferguson was born March 25, 1843, a son of Champion and Rachel (Duckett) Ferguson. The father was born in Kentucky, where his early life was spent and where he engaged in farming for a time, but while still a young man he removed to the state of Georgia. There he continued his occupation, subsequently migrating to Meigs county, Tenn., where he lived until his death at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife was a native of Georgia and a daughter of Jacob Duckett, who settled in the latter state at a very early date, having removed there from North Carolina. Mrs. Ferguson died in Arkansas. She was the mother of eleven children, three of whom were killed in service during the Civil war.

J. M. Ferguson is the only one of the family in California, where he has resided since 1875. His early life was spent on his father's farm, where he assisted in the farm labors as soon as he was old enough. In those days educational advantages were limited and the schooling of Mr. Ferguson amounted to only a few terms in a subscription school. In 1863 he made his way through the mountains of Tennessee and joined the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, Company G, in which company was also a brother. Enlisting as a private he was later promoted to orderly sergeant. Most of the time was spent in scouting in the mountains of Tennessee, although he took part in the battle of Nashville. In the fall of 1864 his company was ordered to New Orleans, where he remained until the close of the war, being honorably discharged at Nashville, in 1865.

Returning to Georgia, he spent a short time visiting the scenes of his boyhood days. That same fall he went to Tennessee and from there to Russell county, Ky., where he was employed in a sawmill for one year. Returning to Tennessee he engaged in farming for seven years. At the expiration of this time he disposed of his interests in the south and in 1875 bade goodbye to his home and friends and came to California, locating in Tulare county, at what is now the town of Poplar, so called from a row of poplar trees. At that time the country was sparsely settled, and where are now fine farms and orchards was nothing but uncultivated plains. Mr. Ferguson homesteaded one-quarter of section 2, which he at once began to cultivate and improve. He was one of the first to engage in grain raising in this section of the county, having at one time one thousand acres under cultivation. When he settled there, no postoffice was established but he and Arthur B. Carpenter got up the petition and after a short time succeeded in having the Poplar postoffice established. At first Mr. Carpenter was the postmaster, but later Mr. Ferguson was appointed and served for one year, when owing to a change in his business affairs, he resigned.

In addition to his farming and grain growing interests, Mr. Ferguson engaged in a general mercantile business at Poplar, which he conducted for ten years. During this time he was one of the most active men in that section of the state. He assisted in the building of the Poplar Irrigation Ditch, which was the first ditch to be constructed on the south side of the Tule river. He helped to run the first water and was for years the president of the company. During the past few years Mr. Ferguson has disposed of much of his land, although he still owns three hundred acres on sections 2 and 35, three hundred and twenty acres on section 7, which is a grain farm, and one hundred and sixty acres in the foothills.

In 1904 he rented his farm and removed to Portersville, where he is now enjoying the result of his many years of hard labor. In 1903 he purchased an interest in the grocery business now known as Futrell & Ferguson in Portersville. This was formerly conducted by Futrell & Howatt. Later he purchased the latter's interest and the business is now conducted by his son and son-in-law.

While living in Tennessee Mr. Ferguson was united in marriage with Parthena C. Cundiff, a native of that state. To this union have been born eight children, as follows: Cordelia, now the wife of Fletcher Martin, who is living on the old place; Cora, who married William Walker of San Francisco; Dora, wife of George Futrell, of Portersville; Mary, who married Arthur Hayes, of Poplar; Tennie, at home; James, who was accidentally drowned in the Fremont Baths at Oakland, in March, 1902; Thomas, at home, and Fletcher, who is at home attending the high school.

Fraternally Mr. Ferguson is a Mason and a valued member of the Grand Army of the Republic, although he does not attend the meetings of the latter organization. In politics he is a firm believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party, and while he has never had the time nor the inclination to take a very active part in political matters, he is always deeply interested in local affairs, and has at all times been found ready and willing to perform his duties as a citizen. He has been especially interested in educational matters, and was a director of his district for many years.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In that section of the county where they made their home for so many years they have hosts of friends.

SAMUEL E. DALE. Since locating in Tulare county in 1875 Samuel E. Dale has acquired a position of prominence among the representative citizens of this section of the San Joaquin valley. Of southern ancestry, he was born near Carrollton, Carroll county, Ga., August 18, 1841, one of a family of ten children, of whom nine attained maturity. His father, John M. Dale, was born in Abbeville district, South Carolina, and in young manhood engaged in the Indian wars of the country. He removed to Carroll county, Ga., and engaged as a planter and stock-raiser until 1868, when he came to California and located near Modesto, Stanislaus county, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, in maidenhood Polly Bailey, was a native of Gwinnett county, Ga., and a daughter of Robert Bailey, of South Carolina, and a farmer of Georgia. She died in Georgia, at the age of thirty-nine years. The children born of this union were as follows: John H., who died in the Red River country in Texas; William C., of Poplar; Willis, who died at the age of seventeen years; Valentine B., a resident of Stanislaus county, Cal.; Robert F., who died in Tate county, Miss.; Samuel E., the subject of this review; Elizabeth, who married Jesse Patterson, of Texas, where her death occurred; Sarah, the wife of David Hulsey; Z. Taylor, who died in San Joaquin county; and Edward Hill, of Poplar.

Samuel E. Dale was reared in Georgia and obtained his education in the public schools in the vicinity of his home. In the spring of 1861 he volunteered in the Seventh Georgia Regiment, and during the four years of active service was located principally in Virginia, taking part in the battle of Gettysburg, as well as in those battles which followed in Maryland and Virginia, during the siege of Petersburg and Richmond. He was with General Lee in Richmond until the surrender. During the service he was wounded twice, the first time at the battle of Bull Run in 1861, receiving a flesh wound in the left thigh, and later was wounded in the side. Upon the close of the war he engaged in raising cotton in Georgia until 1868, when he left the state, going by boat from New York City to Panama, thence by steamer to San Francisco. Arriving in the state of California, he located on the Stanislaus river in Stanislaus county, where he followed farming until 1875. In that year he came to Tulare county, where he purchased two hundred and forty acres of railroad land, which now forms his home ranch. This land was wild and without any improvements or cultivation, and he at once began the work which to-day places his farm in the front rank of those of this section. Later he purchased two other places, one of one hundred and sixty acres and the other of eighty acres, making a total of four hundred and eighty acres. For many years he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, but for the past eight years has devoted his attention principally to the latter occupation. He also conducted a dairy business for some years, when he sold out. He has disposed of a portion of his property, now owning in the home place but three hundred and twenty acres, two and a half miles southwest of Poplar, which he rents.

Mr. Dale is a Democrat in his political convictions and an ex-member of the county central committee. He has served acceptably on the grand and petit juries, and has in all ways taken an active interest in public affairs. He is a member of the Sterling Price Post, United Confederate Volunteers, at Fresno.

SAMUEL JAMES VINCENT. The position which Mr. Vincent occupies in the social, financial and business life of Tulare county has been won by the display of unusual ability, stanch and unswerving integrity in all his dealings, and a personality which has given him a leadership in the community. A native of Ontario, he was born near Kingston July 4, 1870, the son of Hugh Gilmore Vincent, an old settler of that place and a farmer, who came to California in 1876. He engaged in the sheep business here, and is still living, hale and hearty, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife, formerly Mary J.

Carmichael, is also living. They were the parents of nine children, eight of whom are living and are located in California. The children are as follows: Mary, deceased, was the wife of W. J. Grue; Margaret, the wife of J. B. Monroe, of Woodville; John, a stockman of Woodville; Belle, the wife of M. Santry, of Woodville; Samuel James, the subject of this review; Martha, the wife of Patrick Griffin, of Woodville; Annie, of Woodville; Tina, the wife of John Billingslea, of Woodville; and H. Gilmore, a stockman of Woodville.

The sixth in order of birth, Samuel James Vincent, accompanied his parents to California when only six years old, receiving his education in the public schools. At the age of nineteen years he engaged in the stock business, being principally interested in the raising of sheep. This occupation he has since followed with marked success. In 1894 he became the owner of a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres about seven miles west of Portersville, upon which he located two years later and proceeded to improve and cultivate the property. He now owns three hundred and twenty acres on sections 26 and 27, township 22, range 27, about half of which is in alfalfa, the entire land being under the Stockton Ditch Company, of which he is secretary. In addition to this property he also owns three other tracts of land, six hundred and forty acres and three hundred and twenty acres, eight miles southwest of Sausalito, and one hundred and sixty acres northwest of that place.

In Woodville, June 19, 1898, Mr. Vincent was united in marriage with Jane E. Oughton, a native of Ireland, and they are the parents of the following children: Violet, Roy and Ray. Mr. Vincent is school trustee for the Woodville district and has also served as clerk of the board. Politically he is a staunch Republican and an ex-member of the county central committee, and fraternally was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Woodville.

CHARLES J. CARLE. A native of the Golden State, Mr. Carle was born at Phillips Flat, June 9, 1858, a son of Andrew Jackson Carle, a native of Ohio. His father, Joshua Carle, was also a native of the Buckeye state, later he removed to Wapella, Ill., where he died in 1894 at the age of eighty years.

Andrew J. Carle crossed the plains to California about 1850 and for a time lived at Phillips Flat, Mariposa county. Later he organized a water system for the purpose of supplying water to the mines. After this venture he took up his residence in San Francisco, where he engaged in a general merchandise business. While living there he became interested with others in a company that was formed for the purpose of exploring the island of Cocos, off the coast of Central America. By the decision of the members of the company he was made captain of the expedition. All finally being ready the start was made and after an absence of eight months the party returned to San Francisco. The hardships of the voyage undermined Mr. Carle's health and soon after his return he died.

Mr. Carle was united in marriage with Catherine Rebecca Hampson, a native of Ohio. She became the mother of five children, four of whom are still living. The second of this family was Charles J. Carle. His early boyhood was spent in San Francisco, where he lived until going to Sonoma county. At the age of eleven he went east with his guardian, W. R. Carle, and made his home with an uncle, J. T. Carle, at Clinton, Ill., where he attended the public school. After two years there C. J. Carle removed to, New-castle, Pa., where the time was spent on a farm and in attendance of the public school in the vicinity. Three years later he returned to Illinois and lived at Wapella for five years. During a portion of this time he was a student in the Butler University, but in his junior year he returned to California. Prior to this, however, he had taught school for one year in Illinois.

Upon arrival in California in 1879, he secured a position as clerk in San Francisco. Later he lived in different parts of the state, finally returning to San Francisco, where he was engaged in the produce business for two years. He then bought a farm in the Santa Cruz mountains near Los Gatos. This he improved and for five years was there engaged in the fruit business. The property is still in his possession. At the expiration of the five years he formed a partnership under the firm name of Topham, Carle & Co. and located in Milpitas, Santa Clara county. After continuing there for eight years as manager of a general merchandise business he came to Lindsay, where he had previously purchased twenty acres, five acres of which had been set out with Washington navel oranges. Since making his home here, he has set out the balance of his land and otherwise improved it.

In addition to his orange business, he is one of the progressive members of the El Mirador Land Company. This company has purchased four thousand acres of the Lewis Creek ranch. The land has been divided into small tracts and named the El Mirador Colony. Mr. Carle is the resident director and manager of the company, and through his personal oversight the venture has proved a success. The tract is located in the foothills three miles east of Lindsay.

While living in Milpitas, Mr. Carle was united in marriage with Grata M. Ashley, who was born in Placer county, this state, and a daughter of

Courtesy Talbot

John T. Ashley, a California pioneer. Mrs. Carle is the mother of two children, William Ashley and Jackson Tyler. By a former marriage Mr. Carle has one child, Helen E.

In Portersville, Mr. Carle was made a Mason and is now a member of the lodge and chapter. He also holds membership in the Sigma Chi fraternity. Politically he supports the Republican party, but has never cared for any of the emoluments of public office. His life thus far has been a success, and while succeeding in a financial way, he has never neglected his duties as a citizen. He and his wife have a wide circle of friends.

COURTNEY TALBOT. The many talents of Courtney Talbot have won for him the admiration and esteem of all who have come to know him throughout his long residence in Tulare county. The family is an ancient one on American soil, the first emigrating ancestor presumably having located in Virginia, where the name flourished for generations. Nicholas Talbot was born in Virginia November 10, 1776. In young manhood he immigrated to Kentucky to take part in the formation and upbuilding of that state, in Bourbon county, May 19, 1799, being united in marriage with Aria Kennedy. She was born May 11, 1781, the daughter of John Kennedy, who was taken prisoner by the British at Guilford Courthouse, N. C., March 15, 1781. He died soon afterward from the effects of the inhuman treatment received aboard the British prison ship. A letter that he wrote before entering the army is carefully preserved among the relics of the family, the spirit of fervent patriotism and the prayer for the success of the colonies speaking eloquently of the manhood which sustained our country in its incipency. That for which he gave his life was afterward defended by four of his grandsons, who fought gallantly in the Civil war. Nicholas Talbot died May 1, 1828, while his wife survived him until January, 1862. The parents of Nicholas Talbot were Samuel (born in Virginia, March 17, 1756,) and Constantine (Ragan) Talbot, the daughter of Nicholas Ragan, also of Virginia. Coleman Talbot, the son of Nicholas and Aria Talbot, was born in Bourbon county, Ky., July 13, 1809, and made his home in his native state until attaining his majority. In 1830 he went to Adams county, Ill., and enlisted in Capt. David Crow's company, serving in the Black Hawk war of 1832. He remained in that location for about twenty years, in 1850 following the example of his ancestors and seeking a newer field. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California, upon his arrival engaging in mining first at Hangtown (Placerville) and later at Coloma and Diamond Springs. April 15, 1851, he located in Sonoma county and engaged in farming until January, 1852. He then took passage on the steamer California bound for Panama, thence on the El Dorado to New York City, and from there to Kentucky, visiting for the last time the scenes of his childhood and the home of his mother, who was then living. On the 20th of April of the same year he once more crossed the plains to California, in company with J. M. Bowles, T. H. Tate, M. Britton and others, arriving in Sonoma county in October. In July of the following year he settled near Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, where he now resides, sustaining the reputation of the family for longevity as well as rare powers of strength and endurance. He was married to Drusilla Bowles, a daughter of Jesse Bowles, a native of Kentucky, who married a Miss Parker of Kentucky. Coleman and Drusilla (Bowles) Talbot became the parents of five sons and four daughters, of whom Courtney Talbot was the fourth in order of birth, being a native of Adams county, Ill., where he was born April 11, 1837.

In the common schools of Illinois and the Sonoma Academy Courtney Talbot received his education. Following the example of the great majority of the citizens of the state at that time he became a miner at Oroville, Butte county, and along the Feather river when only eighteen years old. He subsequently engaged in the more stable pursuit of farming, although from 1860 to 1863 he was located in Nevada in prospecting and mining. In the last named year he returned to his home in Sonoma county and there set out a vineyard, which he conducted for a time. In the year 1871 he conducted a hotel known as the American hotel in Petaluma, after one year going to Merced, in the San Joaquin valley, where he engaged in farming near Los Banos. His chief interest for some years was the cultivation of wheat. While a resident of that locality he attained a prominent position, discharging the duties of justice of the peace for two years. Coming to Tulare county in 1874, he located near Hanford, where he farmed and also assisted in the building of the Settlers' ditch. During the famous Mussel Slough fight he was an active participant in behalf of the settlers. In 1883 he located in the cottonwoods near Visalia, Tulare county, and engaged in the raising of wheat for several years, when, in 1887, he located in Tulare for the purpose of giving to his children the better educational advantages of that place. He engaged in horticulture in the Russell and Oakdale colonies but lost heavily. In 1890 he located on the Tule river and established and built up the Sunnyside Grove, located fourteen miles east of Portersville. This property consists of twenty acres of fine, bearing Washington navel oranges, which fruit he ships himself, the first carload from the district this year being from his ranch, and sent to the San Francisco markets. He is making a success of his work, giving to its prosecution his talents, energy and industry, and the interest which comes from congenial employment. He enjoys the outdoor work although he is a man of letters, and devotes much time to the reading of good books, and also does considerable writing, especially in the realm of poetry. One of his best-known poems is "An Ode to Tule River," which is given in full at the close of this sketch.

In Santa Cruz, in 1867, Mr. Talbot was united in marriage with Amelia Holser, a native of Hancock county, Ill., and a daughter of Conrad Holser, who came to California in an early day and engaged in the butcher business and later the hotel business in Petaluma, conducting the Magnolia hotel, until his death. They became the parents of the following children: Jessie Millman (deceased), Alice, Willie Coleman and Pearl E. at home. The son is an intelligent and promising young man of his community, a position of trust already granted him being his appointment as horticultural commissioner of the Portersville district. Politically Mr. Talbot was first a Republican, afterward a Democrat and now reserves the right to cast his ballot for the candidate whom he considers best qualified for public office. In 1884 he was elected supervisor from the fourth district, and served acceptably for a term of two years.

AN ODE TO TULE RIVER.

(BY C. TALBOT.)

Hail mystic connection of cloud and of snow
With the sun-bathed valley of the land below;
Down from the summit of old Moses' brow,
Silently climbing, but who can say how?
But soon in thy pranks, thy infant tricks
Are seen in thy splashing and whirling sticks.
Go on in thy fun, you cute little brooks,
Playing hide-and-go-seek in all the dark nooks,
Now join hands and close up your ranks,
Not single or double, but in solid phalanx,
For down through the rocks thy way must be hewn,
With evidence of power thy path may be strewn,
Silently working and wearing away,
All the hours of the livelong day.

Hail! dashing river in the pride of thy youth
Like impetuous young manhood in the pursuit of truth, Ever onward, singing, dashing along,
Swelling the chorus of the mountain's wild song.
Down through forests of darkest green,
Mid fern-covered banks thou flowest between,
Where the buck, the doe and the cute little fawn,
Delighteth to linger on thy cool, shady lawns.
Still onward through mountains of wild chaparral,
Where the bear, and the lions and the panthers do dwell;
Where the eagle from his cleft swoops down with a scream,
Spreading terror to all that drink from the stream;
Now out o'er the cliffs with a wild, reckless leap,

Filling the air with a white, silvery sheet,
While the sunbeams form a bow in the sky,
Which forever shall linger, while the waters pass by.
Now resting awhile in the caverns below,
With foam for a mantle, as white as snow.
From under this mantle, thy waters run clearer,
Spanning the banks with a beautiful mirror,
While the mountains and peaks seem below as above.
As perfectly united as two hearts in love.
Perhaps it is here in the ages gone by,
Thou hast heard the sound of the lover's sigh.
For a dusky maiden would repair to the brink
Where she would see her form as she leaned o'er to drink.

Stop not, oh river, 'mid these scenes old and hoary,
There waits thy coming a far brighter story.
Well mayst thou know it, I will tell it thee now—
Thou shalt follow in the furrow of the husbandman's plow;
Thy way shall be changed, thou shalt be led from thy course,
Thou shalt be bridled and led like a man does his horse;

Around through the glades of fair Pleasant Valley,
Where spring first unfolds the poppy and lily,
Around through the hills, where periods of dearth,
Have held constant sway since God made the earth,
Still sparkling and rippling thy waters glide along,
As pure and as limpid as a maiden's love song.
Till yonder, oh river, at the base of the hill,
Thou shalt arrive at the town of old Portersville,
The pride of the valley of the great San Joaquin,
And thou art the jewel of this bright lovely queen.
Now send for Pomona, old Ceres and Flora, Bid them arrange these grand Courts and I'll tell them
a story.

Let them marshal their forces and prepare for a rally,
For we'll have here a wedding ere thou enter the valley.

Since the valleys and mountains do here clasp hands,
We'll join here in wedlock the waters and lands;
Thou, oh river, thou hast been wooed and been won
Like many a fair daughter by some mother's son.
Bid sanchero come to this grand celebration,
And open his ditches in every direction,
And the mountains and valleys together shall sing.
The result of this union great wonders will bring:
Pomona will reign here mid her apples of gold
And Flora will come and her beauties unfold.
The churches and schoolhouses, with many a spire,
Shall rejoice at the coming and all rise higher;
And songs of praise shall ascend to the Giver,
And thank the good Lord for our own Tule River.

JAMES C. FLY is a gentleman whom it is a real pleasure to meet. Hale and hearty he is considered one of the most popular residents of Tulare county, where he has lived for so many years. Now that he has reached old age he is able to enjoy all the comforts and many of the luxuries of a well earned competency.

A native of Tennessee, Mr. Fly was born March 15, 1837, near the city of Nashville, a son of John and Betsey (Turner) Fly. John Fly was also a native of Tennessee, where he lived until 1840, when he removed to Barry county, Mo., where he engaged in farming for several years. Later in life he took up his residence near

Ft. Scott, Kan., where he continued to follow farming and stock-raising until 1890, when he followed his son to California, locating in Tulare county. Here he finally died at the age of sixty years. His marriage resulted in the birth of nine children, seven of whom are still living.

James C. Fly accompanied his parents on their removal from Tennessee to Missouri, spending his boyhood on the farm. In those days the farmer youth had little opportunity of attending school, a few terms in the district school being the limit of educational advantages. Going to Kansas with his father, he remained there one year, when he returned to Barry county, Mo., and engaged in farming and stock-raising on the Missouri river.

Hearing such flattering reports of California, Mr. Fly determined to come west and in 1865 he started on the long journey. Ox-teams and wagons were the only transportation facilities that Mr. Fly could command, but in those days the young men thought little of such a trip, and with a cheerfulness now hard to imagine, he and his outfit started for the Golden West. On reaching Prescott, Ariz., he remained there for one year, engaging in placer mining until the water gave out, when he again started for California. This time no stops were made, and after many weeks of tiresome traveling Mr. Fly reached Tulare county, and here he has since made his home.

Soon after his arrival Mr. Fly purchased eighty acres of land two miles from Farmersville. This he at once began to improve, securing water from the People's ditch for irrigation purposes, with which he was able to produce splendid crops of grain and alfalfa. During all these years this land has remained in his possession, and each year he has raised from one to three crops, never having a failure. In addition to this, his first purchase, he homesteaded another eighty acres on section 2, which he has improved and placed under a high state of cultivation. Aside from general farming Mr. Fly has devoted considerable attention to stock-raising, owning one hundred and sixty acres in the foothills, near Dry Creek, which is used for grazing purposes.

While still living in Barry county, Mo., Mr. Fly was united in marriage with Mary Palmer, who was born in Arkansas. To Mr. and Mrs. Fly have been born the following children: Melinda, who married Henry Adkisson and died in 1884; Ellen, the wife of Elliott Patten; John, who is a stockman living near Fresno; Martha, now Mrs. William Hester; Rosa, now Mrs. R. H. Owens; Ettie, now Mrs. C. Noel, and Vinton, the youngest, who lives near the old home and assists his father in the work of the farm.

Politically Mr. Fly is a Democrat on national issues, but in local matters he believes in voting for the man best qualified for the office. Aside from serving as school trustee he has never taken an active part in public matters, deeming it best to devote his time to his own business. For years he has been one of the leading members of the Exeter Methodist Church, and has always done his part in the upbuilding of Christianity. He has lived here many years and is well known throughout the county. He is one of the upbuilders of California, and while he has never, in any degree, been a public man, he has done his part as a citizen.

J. SMITH DUNGAN is probably one of the best posted men on oranges in the San Joaquin valley. He is a persistent student and spends all his leisure time reading books and papers relating to the industry. As superintendent of the Bonnie Brae ranch, he has an ample opportunity to demonstrate his ability.

A son of Thomas N. Dungan (whose sketch will be found on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of Dr. J. F. Dungan, of Exeter), he was born in Washington county, Va., near Glade Spring, March 28, 1872, and is the second of six living children. His early life was spent on the home farm in Virginia where he worked and attended the public schools. Remaining at home until reaching the age of twenty-one, he then struck out for himself and in 1895 came to Exeter. He soon became interested in the citrus fruit industry and for a time was in the employ of the Ohio Lemon Company, doing the nursery work for that company until February, 1901, when he resigned his position to become associated with George T. Frost, who at that time was with the Merryman Fruit, Land and Lumber Company, having charge of the Bonnie Brae orange grove. Mr. Dungan was placed in charge of the orchard and continued in this position until Mr. Frost severed his connection with the Bonnie Brae. Mr. Dungan then took charge of the orange grove for the owners, the Merryman Fruit, Land and Lumber Company.

This is an important position and one that carries a great deal of responsibility with it, but the company place implicit confidence in Mr. Dungan, and that this confidence is not abused is shown by the condition of the trees. In addition to the Bonnie Brae tract, Mr. Dungan also has charge of the Santa Regina tract of one hundred and seventy-five acres. Of this seventy acres are devoted to olives, forty-three to pears and five acres are in grapes. The balance is used for general farming purposes. To carry on this business requires the services of a large force of men, all of whom are under his direct supervision. Mr. Dungan owns a residence in Exeter and is also the owner of three acres of oranges, located in the town of Exeter, block 1.

Mr. Dungan has taken an active interest in fraternal matters, being a member and past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and also holds membership in the Uniformed Rank, K. P., of Exeter.

Politically a Democrat, he has never had a desire to hold public office, preferring to devote his entire time to his business interests. Public-spirited, he is an active member of the Exeter board of trade and can be counted on to do his part in the work of progress.

JOHN ETZENHOUSER. Holding a substantial position among the representative business men of Visalia is John Etzenhouser, a prominent contractor and builder, a successful agriculturist, and the president and manager of the Pioneer Brick Company, which he assisted in incorporating, and in which he is a large shareholder. He is a native of California, his birth having occurred November 20, 1864, in San Joaquin county, on Dry creek, where his father, the late Henry Etzenhouser, Jr., settled in 1854. His paternal great-grandfather, Jacob Etzenhouser, was a lifelong resident of Germany. His grandfather, Henry Etzenhouser, Sr., emigrated with his family to the United States in 1841, locating first in Pennsylvania, and then in Illinois. In 1852 he came across the plains to California, and followed mining for a while. After the death of his wife, which occurred in the northern part of the state, he returned east, settling in Jackson county, Mo., where he was accidentally killed by a railway train.

A native of Germany, Henry Etzenhouser, Jr., was born near Cassel, Kur-Hessen, January 13, 1824, and was brought up in his native country. On July 13, 1841, he came to America, and settled near Philadelphia, with his parents, with whom he afterward removed to Illinois, taking with him his bride, whom he had married in Pennsylvania. Coming with an ox-team train to the Pacific coast in 1852, he was engaged in mining pursuits for several months. In 1853 he had the misfortune to lose his right arm by the premature discharge of a fuse, and soon after, in 1854, he settled near Dry Creek, in the San Joaquin valley, where he followed general farming until 1871. Removing in that year to Jackson county, Mo., he purchased land near Independence and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his retirement. He subsequently lived there until his death, in November, 1902. Near Philadelphia, Pa., he married Hannah Margaret F. S. Clay, who was born November 9, 1826, in Saxe-Weimar, Germany, and came with her parents to Pennsylvania, where they spent the remainder of their lives. She bore her husband nine children, namely: Henry died at the age of two years; Mrs. Rosanna L. A. C. Morss, of San Jose, Cal.; Elias, a collector, residing in Kansas City, Mo.; Rev. Rudolph, a traveling evangelist; Daniel died at the age of sixteen months; Alfred, living on the old home farm in Missouri; John, the subject of this sketch; Alma, a farmer in Jackson county, Mo.; and Celestia, wife of Elmer Weldon, died in San Jose, Cal., in 1902.

Being taken by his parents to Missouri when in the seventh year of his age, John Etzenhouser was there brought up on a farm, and educated in the district school. Beginning life for himself at the age of fourteen years, he went to Colorado, where he worked in a sawmill for a short time. Returning then to Missouri, he worked for two years at brick-making, waiting for an opportunity to learn the bricklayer's trade. In 1882 Mr. Etzenhouser again went to Colorado, and as an employe of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company helped to build the roundhouse and shops at Grand Junction, and while so employed began the trade of a brick mason. Continuing with the company, he worked as a mason on the roundhouse and shops at Pleasant Valley, Utah, and after their completion, on November 4, 1882, came to San Francisco, Cal. The ensuing two years he was employed in dairy farming in San Luis Obispo county. Subsequently marrying, Mr. Etzenhouser followed farming in San Benito county for eighteen months, and then settled in Kern county, where he continued in his independent occupation for two years, his farm being located near Bakersfield. While there, he completed the brick mason's trade, under the instruction of John English, and then followed it for a time in Fresno. He subsequently worked as a brick mason in various places, including Visalia, Fresno, San Jose, and Portland, Ore. Locating in Tulare county in 1894, Mr. Etzenhouser bought one hundred and twenty acres of land near Traver, and there carried on farming in addition to working at his trade until 1902. His land is nearly all under irrigation, and he has it well improved. He has a good orchard of three acres, a vineyard of fourteen acres, while the remainder is devoted to raising alfalfa for dairy purposes, his dairy containing thirty cows.

Desiring to give his attention exclusively to contracting, building and brick-making, Mr. Etzenhouser rented his ranch in 1902, and moved to Visalia, where he bought his present residence property. He has erected many of the important public and private buildings throughout the county, both in city and country, and has accumulated considerable wealth. The Pioneer

Brick Company, of which he was one of the incorporators, and is the president and manager, has a large factory, which is well supplied with modern machinery, run by oil, and makes a superior quality of both common and pressed brick, which is in good demand in the local markets.

In Hollister, Cal., Mr. Etzenhouser married Anna Morss, who was born in San Joaquin county, a daughter of Dudley and Mary (Kane) Morss. Her father, a native of Illinois, came to California with his father, Jacob Morss, in 1860, settling first in San Joaquin county as a farmer, and now being a resident of Santa Clara county. Three children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Etzenhouser, namely: Arthur Earl, now a sophomore in the Visalia High School; Benjamin died when but eight days old; and Edith Augusta. Fraternally Mr. Etzenhouser is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and politically he is a Socialist.

L. ROY PAYNE, a worthy representative of the men of energy and thrift who have had much to do with the development of the packing industry of the San Joaquin valley, was born February 2, 1875, in Clyde, Allegan county, Mich., a son of J. H. and Celia A. (Askins) Payne. The former, a native of England, accompanied his father to the United States and settled on a farm in Michigan. Later he engaged in the insurance business, and died in that state at the age of sixty-eight years. Mrs. Payne is a native of Allegan, and a daughter of a pioneer farmer of Michigan, who came from Pennsylvania at an early day; she makes her home in Fresno. Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Payne four are living, viz.: Bertram D., a lumber manufacturer of Fresno county; Frank T., also engaged in the lumber business; Esther C., the wife of Milton Loyrea, of Spokane, Wash.; and L. Roy.

L. R. Payne spent his boyhood days in Allegan county, attending the public school and the high school in Vicksburg, Mich., and graduating in 1892. In 1893 he came to California and settled in Fresno with his mother. Entering the employ of the Fresno Home Packing Company, by steady application and observation he gradually worked his way from the lower rung of the ladder to a position of prominence. In 1896 he became general superintendent of the packing house and in 1898 purchased an interest in the business and was elected secretary of the company and a director. In 1902 he was elected vice-president and made general outside manager, having charge of all the packing interests.

The Fresno Home Packing Company owned the first seeded raisin packing plant in the valley. They built up a lucrative business, and later had several branch houses. In 1902 the consolidation of five independent packing houses was made, the plant being known as Pacific Coast Seeded Raisin Company, the largest shippers in the state. They erected the largest buildings in the state, used for that purpose, and fitted them with special machinery to handle all kinds of California fruits and raisins. All labor-saving devices are used, and nowhere in the world is to be found as modern a plant for the handling of and preparing for market the raisin output of the United States.

Since the organization of the new company Mr. Payne has devoted his entire time and attention to the advancement of the business, to maintaining a standard grade of goods, to the installation of the latest machinery and keeping on friendly relations with their employes.

In Oakland, December 19, 1901, Mr. Payne was united in marriage with Della M. Hodges, a native of Fresno and a daughter of I. A. Hodges, who is now a resident of Oakland. They have one daughter, Marian Frances. Mr. Payne is a member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce. At one time he served on the executive committee, was a member of the building committee during the erection of their new building, and is now chairman of the committee on exhibits. He was also a member of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition committee. Fraternally he is a Mason, being initiated into the order in Fresno Lodge No. 247, and is a member of Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M., Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T., and of Fresno Lodge of Perfection. Politically he is a pronounced Republican, though he has never allowed his name to be mentioned for office. Socially he is a charter member of the Sequoia Club of Fresno. In all matters that have had for their object the advancement of the social, moral, educational and commercial affairs of Fresno county and California, Mr. Payne has been a liberal contributor. By his strict integrity and perseverance he has worked his own way in the world and in business circles he has attained a firm position among the substantial men of Fresno.

E. T. RAGLE. Every year the grim reaper is thinning the ranks of the pioneers. The men who left comfortable homes in the east to brave the dangers and the privations of the far western wilderness, are rapidly being called to their final reward. But throughout this grand state there are yet many of these noble characters who, although well advanced in years, are still hale and hearty. Among this number mention must be made of Mr. Ragle. In the early '50s, when the only means of transportation across the barren deserts and trackless prairies was the "prairie schooner," this man came to California. To be sure he was but one of thousands, but to him and his associates, the state of California owes a debt that will never be repaid. In this busy world of the present, too little credit is given the men who blazed the way for future generations.

Mr. Ragle was born in Hawkins county, Tenn., May 18, 1833, a son of George and Annie Margaret (Miller) Ragle. The father followed farming in Tennessee and there his death occurred. His wife, a native of Virginia, bore him ten children, but only two of this large family are now living.

E. T. Ragle was reared on his father's farm in Tennessee, receiving his education in the old-time subscription schools. Upon leaving the parental roof, he went to Dubois county, Indiana, where he remained two winters and one summer. At this time the stories of this western coast were being told in every household, and with the determination to seek his fortune in the Golden West, Mr. Ragle went to St. Joseph, Mo., from which point the pioneer was starting for California. At Weston, Mo., he joined a train with which he remained until reaching Salt Lake. There he and three comrades secured pack horses and came on in advance of the train, finally reaching Trinity county in safety. The winter after his arrival he followed mining, but not liking that occupation, he went to Santa Rosa in the spring of 1855, soon after buying a farm on the Santa Rosa creek. There he engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1865 when he sold out and came to Tulare county and followed farming on Outside creek, until 1872. In the last-named year he purchased his present place on the Kaweah. When this land came into his possession it was wild and unimproved, but under the direction and supervision of the owner, it was placed under cultivation and improvements were made, until today it is one of the most valuable properties in the county. Mr. Ragle has devoted his time to the raising of grain and stock and has handled over four thousand sacks of grain per year. From time to time land was purchased until the aggregate reached six hundred and forty acres, but since then two hundred acres have been sold.

In Sonoma county, Mr. Ragle met and married Eliza Ann Moffett, who was born in eastern Tennessee and crossed the plains to California in 1857. Of this union twelve children have been born as follows: Frances L., now Mrs. Renick; George Wesley; Martha Louise, who is now Mrs. Toler of Orsi; Charlotte Jane, now Mrs. Thomas Morrison; William Hamilton, who resides at home; John Henry, living near Tulare; Annie Eliza, deceased; Elizabeth A., living near Visalia; Virginia Caroline; Mary Josephine, at home; Warren Emanuel, also at home; and Nancy Alice, who resides in this vicinity.

Mr. Ragle is a staunch Democrat, believing firmly in the principles of this party. While he has never cared for the emoluments of public office he has nevertheless taken an active interest in local matters, especially along educational lines, serving for several years as trustee of the Antelope school district. A member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church he has for years been one of its most substantial supporters and has at all times been ready to give of his time and means to further the interests of this denomination.

It will be seen by the foregoing sketch that this honored pioneer has made his own way in the world, and while he has met with success it is not the result of outside assistance but rather the outcome of his own industry and perseverance. In his battle for success he owes much of the result to the faithfulness of his most estimable wife, who has at all times been a true helpmeet.

MORGAN JAMES WELLS. In passing through Tulare county in the luxurious palaces of today, the traveler sees on either side waving fields of grain and alfalfa, fine orchards and magnificent vineyards, and cannot but be impressed with the thrift, enterprise and progressive spirit of its citizens. The trials, privations and hardships of the original settlers, however, are not apparent, and the courage and endurance necessary to change the primitive face of the country to its present bright picture of civilization can not be realized by the younger generations. Among the prominent pioneers of this section of California is Morgan James Wells, who settled on his present homestead, near Visalia, almost fifty years ago, and has since been an important factor in developing the resources of town and country. A native of Tennessee, he was born June 15, 1833, in Dixon county, which was also the birthplace of his father, the late Henry Gilbert Wells.

In the fall of 1833, Henry Gilbert Wells removed with his family to Arkansas, locating in Pope county. Buying wild and unbroken land, he improved a ranch, and engaged in general farming and stock-raising for several years. Coming across the plains to California with ox-teams in 1856, he spent his declining years with his son, Morgan James, dying at the age of eighty-one years. He married Nancy Wilson, who was born in Tennessee, and died at the home of her son, Morgan J., in California, when sixty years of age. Her father, Adam Wilson, was born in Ireland, and after his emigration to the United States was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Tennessee.

The sixth child and only survivor of a family of seven children, Morgan James Wells has had a varied experience in life. His parents removing to Arkansas when he was but a few months old, he was brought up in true pioneer style, with none of the advantages given to the boys of today. He was educated in a subscription school, which was kept in a rude log house, with a shake roof and slab benches, and was taught to write with a quill pen made by the teacher. Being seized with a severe attack of the gold fever in the spring of 1852, he formed a company and started with ox-teams for the Pacific coast. Following the Cherokee route, he went up the Arkansas valley, through Denver, which was then a very small hamlet, along the Platte to Salt Lake, thence by way of Humboldt and Carson City to Tuolumne county, arriving in Sonora, being six months en route. After mining there for a year, Mr. Wells went to old Millerton, where he resided for three years, being engaged in mining and teaming. Locating in Tulare county in 1856, he continued as a freighter for a few months, hauling lumber from the mountains with ox-teams.

In 1857, Mr. Wells, with his bride, settled on his present home ranch, about five miles northwest of Visalia, on Elbow creek. Entering one hundred and sixty acres of wild land, he first built a shake house, which in course of time was replaced by a substantial frame residence. By dint of energetic perseverance he improved a good ranch, and until the close of the Civil war was engaged in general farming and teaming, making a specialty of raising wheat, cattle and hogs. He pays considerable attention to fruit culture, having now a productive family orchard, and about thirty acres of prunes, which grow well in this locality. A man of excellent business tact and ability, Mr. Wells has made wise investments, and in addition to his home farm, which now contains two hundred and forty acres, he owns Bone Canyon ranch, which is situated fourteen miles northeast of his home farm, and contains eleven hundred acres of land, devoted principally to grain and stock-raising. His land is under good irrigation from the Wutchumna canal, in which he is financially interested.

In 1857, in Tulare county, Mr. Wells married Catherine Fudge, a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of John C. Fudge, a farmer, who crossed the plains with his family in 1856, coming to California as a pioneer. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wells six children were born, namely: Mary, who married L. H. Douglass, died at the age of twenty-three years in Visalia, leaving one child, David Roy Douglass, now attending the San Francisco College of Pharmacy; Sallie, of Visalia; Susan E., wife of David Douglass, died in Visalia, at the age of thirty-two years; Maggie died when eighteen years old; John died when twenty years old; and William Reid, well-known farmer and stockman, operating the Bone Canyon ranch. William Reid Wells married Linda Pleas, a native of San Joaquin county, and they have one child, Donald Morgan Wells. In his political views Mr. Wells is a staunch Democrat, and an ex-member of the county committee. In 1879 he was elected sheriff, and took the oath of office in March, 1880, and served most acceptably for two years and ten months, his term being extended owing to the change of Constitution; at its expiration he was not a candidate for re-election. As sheriff, Mr. Wells was associated with several celebrated cases, among others being that of Ben Harris, a colored man, who killed his wife and her child. Harris fled to the brush, and on being found by Mr. Wells and his deputies defied them, and was shot by one of the deputy sheriffs. Fraternally Mr. Wells belongs to Visalia Lodge No. 148, F. & A. M., to which his son, William R., also belongs; and to Visalia Chapter, R. A. M.; and is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mrs. Wells has proved herself a true helpmate to her husband throughout his career, and, like him, is held in high respect by all. She is a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

RAPHAEL BARCROFT. Progressive and enterprising, R. Barcroft, one of the leading hardware merchants of Merced, is prominently identified with the mercantile prosperity of this section of the San Joaquin valley. The descendant of a pioneer family of prominence, he is a worthy representative of the native-born sons of California, and one of its most esteemed citizens. He was born September 13, 1856, in Hornitos, Mariposa county, a son of R. W. Barcroft. Further parental and ancestral history may be found elsewhere in this volume, in connection with the sketch of his brother, Frederick Barcroft.

Educated in the public schools, R. Barcroft learned the blacksmith trade when young, working first as an apprentice, and later as a journeyman. Locating in the city of Merced in 1878, Mr. Barcroft followed his trade for seven years, acquiring a good reputation for his mechanical skill, and accumulating some property. Embarking in the mercantile trade in 1885, he bought out the hardware business of his brother Frederick, and for two years was at the head of the firm of Barcroft & Branson, being located in a small frame building. In 1887 Mr. Barcroft bought out his partner's interest in the firm, and has since carried on the business alone. In this he has met with success, his trade having rapidly increased. Being forced by the demands of his customers to have more room, he built, in 1894, on Main street, his present brick store, 25x100 feet. In the fall of 1903 he built a store adjoining the original structure, making that 25x100 feet, and raised the entire building one story, also putting an addition 40x50 feet on the old store, making the building in its entirety 50x140 feet. The second floor is used for lodge rooms and offices, but the remainder he occupies in his own business, and in addition has a plumbing shop, 24x50 feet, and a warehouse in which he stores his surplus goods. Mr. Barcroft has the most complete stock of goods in his line to be found in the county, including heavy and light shelf ware, stoves, furnaces and house furnishing goods. He also handles agricultural machinery and implements of all kinds, and deals in carriages and wagons.

Mr. Barcroft married, in Tuolumne county, Cal., Margaret Tinney, a native of that county, and they are the parents of two children, namely: William R., a student in the electrical department of the Wilmerding Mechanical College; and Frank R., in the store with his father. In national politics Mr. Barcroft is a staunch Republican, and in local affairs he is quite active, for twelve years having served as a member of the city board of trustees, during which time a first-class sewer system has been installed, and other improvements made. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias; of the Woodmen of the World; of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he is a past officer; of the Independent Order of Foresters; and of the Young Men's Institute.

JOHN A. VAN CLEVE. Exeter has in the above-named gentleman, a young man who, while he has been in California but a few years, has already won for himself an assured position in the orange industry. Mr. Van Cleve comes from Wisconsin, which state has furnished California, and particularly Exeter, with several of its best citizens.

John A. Van Cleve attended the public school in his native town, later entering the University of Michigan, preparing for his university work at St. John's Military Academy. In 1897 he was graduated from the university, after which he entered the Ypsilanti Business College, where he remained until 1899. The following three years were spent in various parts of the state, and in 1901 he came to California, locating at Exeter. In the spring of 1902 he took the contract for looking after the Badger Hill Orange ranch, being in the employ of the Merryman Fruit, Land and Lumber Company. Here he has remained up to the present time, now having charge of two hundred and sixty-one acres.

While Mr. Van Cleve has been busily at work for others he has saved his money and now owns one hundred and sixty acres four miles north-east of Exeter, and intends to devote it to the growing of canteloupes. Thus it will be seen that he has made a splendid start in life, and is one of the young men that in the future will become one of our best citizens.

A true-blue Republican he takes an active interest in the welfare of his party, but has neither the inclination nor the time to seek office. He is well posted, not only on current events, but has read extensively and is thoroughly conversant with his chosen vocation. Since locating in Exeter he has won a large circle of friends who unite in wishing him continued success.

JASPER HARRELL. A potent factor in the upbuilding of the best interests of Visalia, Jasper Harrell is numbered among the most worthy of the pioneers of the state. Born in Atlanta, Ga., August 16, 1830, he was a son of Edward Harrell, who was born in 1800 and died in California June 7, 1889. Jasper Harrell started in life with few educational advantages, and all that came to him in after years to make of him a successful, well-read, well-informed man was the result of his own unaided efforts. In young manhood he drifted west, in 1850 taking passage from New Orleans on a steamer bound for San Francisco. Upon his arrival there he went at once to the mines in Tuolumne county, where he remained two years. Although he was more or less successful, the life of a miner held but little attraction for him, and he accordingly located near Visalia, where he engaged in the stock business. Since 1850, and until within a few years of his death, he purchased large tracts of land. These tracts have since been devoted to stock-raising purposes, now consisting of about ten thousand acres of land situated seven miles north of Visalia, where Mr. Harrell made his home for many years. He met with complete success in his work, acquiring liberal means. His spirit of enterprise was largely manifested, in that he gave liberally of all he had to the furthering of important enterprises, public or private, putting up various residences in Visalia, as well as a magnificent three-story bank building on the corner of Court and Main streets, erected in 1889 at a cost of $35,000. In the same year a private bank, under the name of Harrell & Son, was started and conducted successfully until 1893, when the Producers' bank was incorporated which assumed the business of Harrell & Son, Mr. Harrell being one of the largest stockholders. The principal reason for the change in banks being that A. J. Harrell wished to give his individual attention to the Sparks-Harrell Corporation, which is still in existence and in a flourishing condition. In addition to his varied interests in Visalia he was a large landowner in the city of Los Angeles, among other possessions belonging to the estate being the Nadeau Hotel and a fine residence at the corner of Pearl and Orange streets. He was the owner of the Sparks-Harrell Company, a land and cattle corporation owning one hundred and seventy thousand acres of land in Nevada, and herding thirty thousand head of cattle on that range. The many activities of Mr. Harrell were cut short by death May 13, 1901, when nearly seventy-one years of age. He left a vacancy in the business world which could be filled by very few.

In the fall of 1857 Mr. Harrell was united in marriage with Martha E. Bacon, a native of St. Louis, Mo., and the daughter of Fielding and Sarah (Bell) Bacon, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Pennsylvania. Born of this union were two children, of whom Andrew J. is a banker in this city, and Victoria is the wife of Walter J. Trask, an attorney. In his political convictions Mr. Harrell always gave his support to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. A broad, liberal and enterprising man he is justly remembered as a citizen of worth and ability, and one whose best efforts for personal success lay parallel with those for his adopted state. He was readily accorded an honored place in the memory of the people who profited by his public-spirited life, which won for him the distinction of being one of the foremost citizens of his day in Tulare county.

THOMAS PRICE was born at Plainsberg, December 16, 1864, and with the exception of one or two short intervals his entire life has been spent within the borders of his native county. He was reared on a farm and the greater part of his life has been spent in general farming and stock-raising. Since 1902 he has been associated in the real estate business with H. H. Miner, of Le Grand, his present place of residence. This enterprising firm has been instrumental in bringing many homeseekers to this section of the state.

Thomas Price, Sr., was one of the prominent and influential pioneer settlers of Merced county, one who was closely identified with the early history of the county. He was born on a farm

October 4, 1825, in Arkansas, a son of James and Pamela (Browning) Price. In 1846, at the age of twenty-one, he was united in marriage with Alice Slinkard, and from then until the spring of 1852 the young people made their home in Arkansas.

Accompanied by his wife and one daughter, Mr. Price crossed the plains to California in 1853, the journey lasting from April 17 to October 22, the date of his arrival in Marysville, where they remained but a short time, afterward residing for a few months in Sonora, Tuolumne county. In August, 1854, he located in Merced county, which at that time was a part of Mariposa county, and here he made his home the balance of his life. Unlike the majority of those who settled in California at that early date he did not seek his fortune in the mines, but with keen foresight he was quick to realize the advantages of free grazing, and as soon as possible turned his attention to stock-raising.

Going into Texas in the spring of 1855, he bought a drove of cattle, brought them to California, and by giving his personal attention to the business succeeded beyond his expectations. He continued to follow the stock business until 1871, when the great land excitement broke upon the community. Following in its train was the law prohibiting stock from running at large, and as a natural result the stock business declined. Selling his stock Mr. Price turned his attention to general farming, a venture which was crowned with success. In 1873 he again went to Texas and purchased large tracts of land on the frontier. His home farm near Plainsberg contained twelve hundred and thirty acres and in addition he owned a two thousand acre ranch in Mariposa county. Politically a Democrat, he was active in political affairs. He died in 1887, at the age of sixty-two years. Seven children were born to him and his wife as follows: Mary J., wife of W. C. Wilson, a butcher of Le Grand; Sadie R., wife of J. F. McSwain, of Merced; George, a resident of Fresno county; James D., who resides in Mariposa county; Jefferson D., of Le Grand, where he is filling the office of justice of the peace; Thomas, and Nettie L.

In his youth Thomas Price had exceptional educational advantages; after completing the grammar school course he took a high school course at Merced, subsequently taking a thorough commercial course at Heald's Business college in San Francisco. His school days over, farming claimed his attention in his home county until 1885. He then went to Nebraska and engaged in stock-raising for a couple of years, afterward returning to Merced county, which has since been his home. In addition to the real estate business Mr. Price owns an interest in twenty-two hundred acres of stock land in Mariposa county. By his marriage in 1891 he was united with Miss Stella Aiken, a daughter of the late W. B. Aiken, of Merced, one of the first supervisors of the county. A native of Louisiana, he crossed the plains to California at an early day. Mr. and Mrs. Price have one son, Justin G., who was born in 1895. Like his father, a Democrat in political views, Mr. Price has rendered efficient service as supervisor of Merced county for the past four years, representing the second district. Fraternally he affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America, Native Sons of the Golden West, and the Fraternal Aid Association.

PUTNAM BROTHERS. Enterprising and substantial citizens, the Putnam brothers occupy a place high in the esteem and confidence of their fellowmen, and are widely known throughout Tulare county for the ability and energy which have marked their career. They are sons of Joseph Putnam, a pioneer of '49, who left his father's farm in the Green mountains of Vermont, where he was born, going first to the state of Massachusetts, thence to California. He engaged in mining in Calaveras and Amador counties, which occupation he continued until he went into the mercantile business at Volcano. Later he located on the Mokelumne river, in San Joaquin county, and set out an orchard of sixty acres, the balance of his four hundred acre farm being devoted to the raising of grain. He remained in that location until his death, which occurred in 1893, at the age of sixty-two years. He had taken a lively interest in the growth and up-building of his adopted state, with the exception of a short time spent in the east, to which he made two subsequent trips, remaining in California the balance of his life. He was a member of the California Pioneers of Stockton. His wife, formerly Mary Ann Fletcher, was a native of Massachusetts, in which state she was married to Mr. Putnam. In 1859 she came to California by the Panama route, and died in the old homestead in 1899. Of the nine children born of this union, six are living, namely: Mary Ellen, the wife of Lucian Athern, of Clements, Cal.; Joseph Fletcher; Lucy, the wife of W. E. Whipple, of Clements; William; E. A., at Clements, and Jennie, the wife of Abner Jones, of Clements.

Joseph Fletcher Putnam was born in Cambridge, Mass., in 1854, and with his mother came to California when five years old. He received his education in the district school in the vicinity of the home farm in San Joaquin county. He followed farming on the home place after attaining maturity, finally, however, locating on a farm thirty miles east of Visalia, Tulare county, on Three Rivers, where he homesteaded and engaged in the stock business. He resided there thirteen years, when he sold out, and, returning to the old home engaged in farming there for a few years. He then went to Santa Clara county, and engaged in horticulture until 1903, when he located on the farm now owned by himself and brother, William. This consists of four hundred and twelve acres seven miles west of Visalia, where they are engaged in general farming and stock raising. They have a fine place, and very productive land, all under irrigation from the Persian Ditch, of which company Mr. Putnam is superintendent. Sixty acres of this property is devoted to alfalfa. Mr. Putnam has a family of three children: Ira, at home with his father; Lena, the wife of H. J. Stokes, of Visalia, and Blanche, at home. In his political preference Mr. Putnam is a staunch Republican, giving his voice and vote to the support of every movement calculated to advance the principles he endorses. He is an enterprising and liberal citizen and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

William Putnam is a native Californian, his birth having occurred at Clements, Cal., in 1862. He grew to manhood amid the scenes of his birth, receiving his education in the district school in the vicinity of his home. He first engaged in general farming and fruit growing on the old home place at Clements, and later followed the stock business on the Calaveras river in Calaveras county. In 1903 he joined his brother in their present farming venture, in which they are meeting with gratifying success. In Calaveras county he married Maud Messenger, a native of that county, and the daughter of Captain H. A. Messenger, a pioneer prominent in the early history of the state. They are the parents of three children, viz: Ralph, Frances and William, Jr.

THOMAS W. PEDIGO. As a merchant and rancher of Tulare county, Mr. Pedigo is well known and esteemed for his sterling traits of character which distinguish him in his business. A native of Lawrence county, Ind., he was born July 30, 1865, the son of John Douglas Pedigo. The latter was a native of Kentucky, who, when a boy, went to Indiana with his father. In young manhood he engaged in farming in Lawrence county, where his death occurred in 1876, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, formerly Jennie Garten, was a native of Indiana, where she also died. They were the parents of nine children, four sons and five daughters, of whom Thomas W. was the youngest.

The education of Thomas W. Pedigo was received in the common schools of his native state, where he grew to manhood. In 1881 he secured employment with the Louisville, New Albany &

Chicago Railway as brakeman, two years later becoming conductor on the Louisville & Northern Railway. In the fall of 1884 he came to California and located in Sonoma county, following the carpenter's trade in and about Santa Rosa until 1886, when he located in Tulare county. He first located in the Lake county, where he was employed in boring wells for a time, in the spring of that year coming to Springville, where for five years he engaged in teaming into the mountains. During this time he helped to take out the Chicago World's Fair tree on Bear creek, a branch of the North Tule river, and helped to set it up in San Francisco for exhibit. Being located in San Francisco, he then engaged as an electric lineman until April, 1892, when he returned to Springville and followed teaming until 1900, when he established a modest mercantile enterprise in Springville. In the four years of its existence it has grown to a size commensurate with the custom to which it caters, and has proven a profitable venture for its owner. In addition to this business Mr. Pedigo also owns eight hundred acres of land in a cattle ranch adjoining the town of Springville.

Mr. Pedigo has been twice married, his first wife being Bertha Rae, with whom he was united in 1892. She was a native of California and died here in June, 1898. They had two children, Maud and Minta, both at home. In the fall of 1898 Mr. Pedigo married Grace Wells, a native of Kansas, who came to California with her parents when a child. In 1897 Miss Wells received the appointment to the postmastership of the office in Springville (Daunt), and with the exception of nine months has held it continuously. Fraternally Mr. Pedigo is identified with the Woodmen of the World, having passed all the chairs, and belongs to Mt. Whitney Camp No. 605, of Springville. He is also a member of the Women of Woodcraft. Politically he is a Republican, although for two years he was active in the Populist party. With others he gave his influence to this party in order to purify the county of a political ring that was a curse and a burden to Tulare county; as soon as this was accomplished he again affiliated with his old party.

CALVIN A. CASE, M. D. Professional ability is an inherited talent of the Case family, as is evidenced by the fact that four brothers of the name entered the practice of medicine and surgery and attained more than ordinary success. One of the brothers, Dr. Case, of Pleasanton, although comparatively a newcomer in Alameda county, has already established a reputation for skill in diagnosis and accuracy in the treatment of disease. Prior to his removal to this locality he was identified with the medical profession of the San Joaquin valley, where he built up a growing and profitable practice, but the heat of summer there caused him to seek another location.

In Geauga county, Ohio, on a farm lying near Chagrin Falls, Cuyahoga county, Calvin A. Case was born November 18, 1848, his parents being Albert and Mehitabel (Sprague) Case, natives respectively of Connecticut and Vermont. The paternal grandfather, Asa Case, was born in Connecticut, of one of the pioneer families of that state, and traced his lineage to England. During the war of 1812 he served with courage and fidelity. A wound received in battle troubled him for many years and finally resulted in his death, at seventy years of age. During the active period of his life he made his home in Ohio, where he improved a farm from the virgin soil. Little is known concerning the maternal grandfather, except that he was born in Wales, immigrated to the United States at an early age, settled in Vermont, and thence removed to Ohio, where he died at the age of ninety-six years. His daughter, Mrs. Case, was thirty-six at the time of her death, which occurred in Michigan.

When a small child Albert Case accompanied his parents to Ohio, where he was reared and received such advantages as the district schools of that day afforded. Until 1856 he engaged in farming in the same locality in Ohio, but during that year he removed to the vicinity of Lansing, Mich., and acquired a valuable farm near Okeemos, Ingham county, where he continued to reside until his death at seventy-six years. At the time the family removed to Michigan, Calvin A. Case was a boy of eight years, and two years later he was orphaned by his mother's death. He was then taken into the home of an uncle near Detroit, but two years later returned to his father's home, and remained there until he started out to earn his own way in the world. At sixteen years of age he secured employment in a drug store in Saginaw, Mich., where he remained about four years, meantime gaining a knowledge of the compounding of drugs that has been of inestimable value to him in his professional career. When twenty years of age he began to read medicine with two older brothers who were physicians in Saginaw county. In 1868 he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Michigan, where he took the full course of lectures. After his graduation in 1870 he became a student in the Detroit Medical College, where he carried on his studies for a year. At the expiration of that time he began to practice the medical profession, remaining one year in Chesaning, Saginaw county, and eight years in Shepherd, Isabella county, Mich. From the latter town he removed to St. Louis and engaged in practice. The year 1885 found him in California, but after a sojourn of two years he returned to Michigan. In 1890 he again came to the Pacific coast, where he has since made his home. For a considerable period he conducted a large practice at Oakdale, Stanislaus county, and from there removed to Pleasanton in July of 1903. Though his residence in his new location has been comparatively brief, he has already established an enviable reputation for professional skill. While living in Michigan he was active in county medical society work, but has not allied himself with similar organizations in California.

By his marriage to Adaline Bigelow, a native of Michigan, Dr. Case has three children, namely: Garfield Sprague, who is a student in the Oakland Polyclinic; Horace Arthur, now a student in the University of California; and Winnifred, who resides with her parents in Pleasanton. In fraternal relations Dr. Case is connected with the Blue Lodge of Masons and the Knights of Pythias. Politically he has been an active worker in the Democratic party, and before leaving the east held a number of local offices within the gift of his party, also acted as a delegate to county and state conventions.

JESSE H. NEWMAN, who is pleasantly located eleven miles northeast of Visalia, was born in Booneville, Mo., in 1857, a son of Judge Jesse G. Newman, whose biographical record appears on another page of this volume. He was reared in Missouri and engaged as a farmer. When twenty-four years old he came as far west as Nevada, where he spent a year, and then returned to Missouri. He remained in his native state until 1884, when he once more came west, this time locating in California, and in Tulare county engaging in the raising of grain and the dairy business. In partnership with his brother, Harry H. Newman, he operates the old Curtis ranch of one thousand acres as well as six hundred and forty acres adjoining, all being devoted to the raising of grain, horticulture and the dairy business. He also owns eighty acres in two different farms near Dinuba, which is devoted to alfalfa and vineyard. Mr. Newman is a very enterprising and progressive farmer, his methods are modern and up-to-date, and he gives to his work that application without which no amount of talent can bring success. For his personal qualities he is held in the highest regard by his fellow citizens.

The marriage of Mr. Newman united him with Miss Elmira Grove, a native of Illinois, and they have four children, all of whom are at home: Edgar, Jesse J. R., Marion and Max. In his political affiliations Mr. Newman is a stanch Democrat, and in the interests of his party has served as school trustee of the Stone Corral district. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and Ancient Order of United Workmen, and both himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

ERIE ALANSON MAY. For nearly thirty years Mr. May has lived in the state of California and during this time has been in the front ranks of those in favor of progress and reform. Never has a movement been started, calculated to be of material benefit to his county or state, that has not received his warm personal support. It is doubtful if any man in this section of the county has devoted more time to the needs of the community, or been more responsible for the good accomplished, than he.

A native of New York state, E. A. May was born in Wales, Erie county, February 11, 1847. His father, Robert May, was a native of England, as was his grandfather, also named Robert, who was a successful farmer. Robert May, Jr., learned the trade of a tailor which he followed for some years prior to his emigrating to the United States. On arriving in this country, he first located in Buffalo, N. Y., where he engaged in business as a merchant tailor until 1854, when he removed to Henry county, Ill. There he continued in the same line of business until 1870, the year of his arrival in this state. Going to Modesto he there established himself in business, remaining for several years. He then retired and took up his residence in San Jose, where he died in 1900 at the age of ninety-two years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Ann Rowe, was also a native of England. She died in 1855 at the age of fifty-five years. Her marriage resulted in the birth of eight children, all of whom are still living, six having located in California. Five of the sons participated in the Civil war.

Erie A. May was the youngest in the family. His early life was spent in New York, where he was educated in the public schools. Early in the spring of 1865 he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry and served until being mustered out of the service at the close of the war. Immediately thereafter he joined his father, who was then residing in Henry county, Ill. A year later he located near St. Charles, Minn., and engaged in farming, then removed north of Minneapolis and followed lumbering. Three years later he sold out his various interests and migrated to Canton, Lincoln county, S. Dak. Soon after his arrival he homesteaded and pre-empted three hundred and twenty acres of land, and during the time he was proving up on his entry, he secured a position as teacher in one of the nearby district schools, but as soon as his title was secured he began the cultivation and improvement of his land, devoting the whole to the growing of grain. In 1875 Mr. May was appointed sergeant-at-arms at Yankton, the state capitol, and directly after the close of the legislative session he was selected to return east as a representative of the farmers, to solicit aid for those who had been impoverished by the grasshopper scourge, this terrible pest having destroyed the crops of the country.

Not being entirely satisfied with the prospects in Dakota, Mr. May sold out in 1877 and came to California, spending the first year of his residence here in Modesto. The following year he located in the vicinity of Poplar, Tulare county, where he has since made his home. From time to time he has added to his first purchase of land, until he now owns two hundred and forty acres of fine land. The entire tract is well improved, and in the carrying on of his stock and farming interests he has equipped the place with all the modern appliances needed in the way of labor saving machinery, etc.

While he has been very busy looking after his own interests, he has, nevertheless, found the time to take an active part in political matters. Being a firm advocate of the People's party, he has worked energetically to further the interests of the party's cause. In 1891, in company with Mr. Gilstrap, he organized the Tulare Valley Citizen. The publication office was located in Tulare and this was one of the first People's party papers to be started in the state. For some time he continued to conduct the paper and did much to influence the vote of the people in Tulare county by his able discussions of the important questions of the day. Prior to organizing the paper he was sent as a delegate to the first State Convention of his party, which was held in Los Angeles. He also served as chairman of the county central committee and for one year served as deputy county assessor under Mr. Jeffords. In the fall of 1894 his party nominated him for the office of county treasurer, and at the following election he was successful, defeating two other candidates. In January, 1895, he took the oath of office, serving in a most satisfactory manner until January, 1899.

Mr. May has associated himself with the leading men of this portion of the county and that the ventures in which he has interested himself have proved successful reflects credit upon his judgment. For one year he acted as manager of the Poplar Co-Operative store, and for several years was secretary of the Poplar Irrigation Ditch Company.

While living in Yankton, S. Dak., Mr. May married Martha C. Jones, who was born in Ohio, a sister of Hon. A. Sheridan Jones, formerly State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Dakota. By this union have been born two children: Howard, now living in Springville, and Iva May, at home. He was formerly associated with the Grand Army of the Republic at Visalia. Both he and his wife are highly esteemed for their many excellent traits of character and have scores of friends throughout the county.

PAUL NEUMANN. Of the many callings at which a man may succeed the world recognizes agriculture as of extreme importance and to-day the honest farmer or rancher can hold his own with the best wherever he may go. Following this line of endeavor with marked success is Paul Neumann, a resident of Merced county, living near Le Grand, a man who has the utmost respect and esteem of his neighbors and acquaintances and one who deserves all the success which he enjoys. In his life work he but follows in the footsteps of his father, Charles Neumann, a native of Germany, who came to New York when quite young. There he took for his wife Miss Abbie Herwig, also of German nativity; the parents still reside in New York state, where, though seventy-two years of age, the father still follows farm pursuits. Besides Paul there is a son, John P., of San Mateo county, and a daughter, Mrs. J. L. Gillette, also residing in California.

Upon his father's farm in central New York, Paul Neumann was born October 25, 1857, and upon this same farm he was reared and lived until twenty-two years of age, when he left his home for the west. Traveling first to Kansas, after remaining there a short time he started in October of that same year for California, locating in Merced county, which has been his home ever since. He first hired out as a laborer on a ranch, following this until he was able to rent two hundred acres of land near his present place. He afterward rented one thousand acres of rich land and finally accumulated enough to purchase his eight hundred and eighty-acre ranch one mile from Le Grand, where he now lives. Besides this ranch Mr. Neumann rents twenty-six hundred and forty acres, which he devotes to grain and stock. The thriving condition of his whole place speaks well for his business ability and worth.

In California Mr. Neumann was united in marriage with Miss Martha A. Mallory, a native of Sonoma county and a daughter of the late J. F. Mallory, a pioneer of that section. This union has been blessed with the following six children: Charles F., Edith A., Mabel M., Lester P., Howard L. and Marvin E., all of whom are still at home. Politically an adherent of Republican principles, Mr. Neumann has served his party as supervisor of his district for one term, from 1892 to 1896, and has also served as school trustee of his district for several years. He was one of the organizers of the California Grain Growers' Association, and fraternally affiliates with the Odd Fellows and the Fraternal Aid. The success which has come to Mr. Neumann has been richly deserved, as his position to-day is the result of enterprise and perseverance.

WILLIAM CONRAD RAGLE. In the death of Mr. Ragle Tulare county lost one of its most respected citizens and California an honored pioneer. It is true that much has been said and written of the pioneers, but they are deserving, and with all that has been done in their honor we still owe them a debt of gratitude that will never be repaid. They left homes and loved ones in the east and with a courage worthy the cause braved the dangers and hardships of a trip across the plains, through mountain passes where the only road was a blazed trail to make the way clearer for those who were to follow. They were the advance guard of civilization. To this number must be added the name of Mr. Ragle and no man who came to California in those trying days is more worthy a place in history than he. Not that he became a man of public affairs, nor did he ever pose before the admiring throngs as a prominent man, but he did perform his duties as a citizen, and wherever known his name is revered.

A native of Tennessee, Mr. Ragle was born in Hawkins county, October 15, 1830, and was a son of George and Margaret (Miller) Ragle. The father emigrated from Germany and settled in Tennessee, where he lived the balance of his life. When a young man our subject left his native state and removed to Missouri, locating in Dade county, where he lived until 1852, the year of his departure for California. Upon arrival here he took up his residence in Green valley, Sonoma county, and while living there he was united in marriage with Miss Lucinda A. Moffett, who was born in Tennessee, near Fayetteville. Her father, James Moffett, was a farmer in Tennessee, where he died. His wife bore the maiden name of Nancy Mayfield and in later years married the Rev. Jonathan Blair, a more extended account of whom is given in the sketch of James H. Blair.

After the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Ragle they continued to live in Sonoma county until 1866 when they came to Tulare county, where the family has since resided and where Mr. Ragle lived until his death. For one year he lived near Exeter, where he was engaged in the sheep business, continuing there until 1869, when he removed to Dry Creek. In December, 1871, he came to what is known as the Ragle neighborhood, now called Antelope Heights. When the land first came into the possession of Mr. Ragle it was wild and unimproved, but he soon inaugurated a series of improvements that resulted in making his ranch one of the best in Tulare county. At the time of his death, April 21, 1895, he owned five hundred and twenty acres but since then Mrs. Ragle has disposed of two hundred and forty acres and on the balance she and her son are carrying on a successful stock and grain business. Mrs. Ragle is the mother of eight children, as follows: Albert, a farmer near here; Nancy, now Mrs. O. C. Goodin, of Orsi; Margaret, living in Los Angeles county, the wife of George Skaggs; Mary Alice, living at home; George, who is engaged in farming on the old home place; Catherine, who married Joseph Lynn and lives in this vicinity; Arthur, at home, and Rose, now Mrs. William Moore, of Visalia.

In politics, Mr. Ragle was a Democrat, and fraternally belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously, he was an elder and an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Like many of the pioneers, he never had a desire for prominence, but in local matters he could always be depended upon to perform the duties devolving upon him. He took a special interest in educational affairs and for several terms served as school trustee of his district. At his death he not only left a competency but an honored name.

GEORGE C. MURPHY occupies a prominent place among the representative citizens of Portersville, Tulare county, although he has been a resident of this place but a comparatively brief period. He is a native of Ontario, his birth having occurred in Brockville, January 28, 1866. His father, John Murphy, a farmer by occupation, was a native of the same location, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Jane Gotkin, was also born and reared there. Of the eight children born of their union six are now living, the only one in California being George C. Murphy, of this review.

Mr. Murphy was reared on the paternal farm in Canada until he was seventeen years old, when he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the carpenter's trade. Two years later he came to the United States and located at Grand Forks, N. Dak., where he completed his trade under the instruction of his uncle, John Earl. In 1887 he came to Los Angeles, Cal., and worked at his trade for two years. Following this he located in San Jose and engaged as a contractor and builder, meeting with success in his chosen work. From 1894 to 1896 he was located in San Francisco, when he came to Portersville, and has since engaged in contracting and building. He has met with a gratifying success, among the buildings which he has erected being the residences of J. H. Williams, C. N. Henderson, C. H. Boydon, Farmersville block, First National Bank, Barrett block, and the brick block on Main street, which he owns. In addition to his own residence on Third street he has put up two others there. He is also interested in horticulture, having set out a ten-acre orchard of navel oranges at Sunnyside, to which he gives as much attention as is possible.

In San Jose Mr. Murphy was united in marriage with Theresa Hatton, a native of that city, and the daughter of William Hatton, now a resident of Portersville. They are the parents of one child, Dorris. Fraternaly Mr. Murphy was made a Mason in Portersville Lodge, No. 303, of which he is past master, and is high priest of Portersville Chapter, No. 85, R. A. M. He is also a member of Visalia Commandery, No. 26, K. T., and of Islam Temple, N. M. S. Both himself and wife are members of the Eastern Star, of which Mr. Murphy is past patron. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and is now serving as a member of the county central committee, being a member of the executive committee.

ISAAC SHIRK. Six miles west of Visalia is located the farm which belongs to Isaac Shirk, who has been a resident of Tulare county since the spring of 1880. He was born near Waterman, Ind., December 12, 1849, the youngest of four sons and the only one who is located in California. His father, Isaac Shirk, Sr., was also a native of Indiana, and was a farmer near Waterman, where he likewise engaged in flat-boating on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He died of cholera on his twenty-first trip between Wabash and New Orleans. His wife, formerly Sarah Williams, was a native of Illinois, and the daughter of Zachariah Williams, of Pennsylvania, who settled in Edgar county, Ill., and later became the pioneer hotel man in Newport, Ind. Mrs. Shirk died in her home in Indiana.

Isaac Shirk, Jr., was reared on the paternal farm in Indiana, where he attended the district schools and assisted his mother in the home duties. After he attained his majority he became manager of the home place, which he conducted until 1878, when he went to Champaign county, Ill., for a period of two years and engaged as a farmer. He then located in Douglas county, Ill., where he remained until 1888, in which year he came to California. He spent a part of his first year in Napa county, when he came to Tulare county, and has since made this his permanent location. He purchased his present property, which consists of one hundred and twenty acres, at that time being all pasture land. He has made many improvements and now raises grain and alfalfa, and also devotes some time to stock raising. He is located within six miles of Visalia, his land is well improved and cultivated, and his success as an agriculturist has given him a substantial position in the community in which he resides.

In Woodville, Tulare county, Mr. Shirk married Laura DeWitt, a native of Douglas county, Ill., and a daughter of James DeWitt, who also came to California, where he died in this county. They are the parents of five children, namely: William, Sarah, Hope, Anna and James. Mrs. Shirk is a member of the Christian Church, to which Mr. Shirk gives a liberal support. In his political convictions Mr. Shirk is a staunch Republican.

PERRY CRANDALL, M. D. In the latter part of the eighteenth century there came to America many emigrants, driven from their native land by the constant wars which devastated the European countries. Among these were three brothers from Scotland, one of whom was drowned at sea during the passage, the others safely reaching their destination, John Crandall locating in New Jersey, while Charles settled in Rhode Island. Charles Crandall's grandfather was chieftain of the clan of Crandalls of the Highlands, Scotland, while a heavy price had been placed upon the head of his son, Gardner, who was a sailor, by the English government. Charles Crandall remained in the New England states until after his marriage, when he became a pioneer of Ohio, locating in Marion county, where he continued to reside for many years. In his family was a son called Washington Crandall, who was born in Connecticut in 1814, and who removed with his parents to Ohio, where he remained until 1850. In that year he located in DeWitt county, Ill., where his death eventually occurred at the age of seventy-five years. He was a minister of the United Brethren Church, and was faithful to the cause throughout his entire life. He married Anna Jones, a native of Ross county, Ohio, whose people came to that state from Virginia. Her father, Abel Jones, served in the war of 1812. Of this union was born a son, Perry Crandall, in Ross county, Ohio, April 18, 1843.

It was the good fortune of Perry Crandall to receive a good education in the earlier years of his life, attending the public schools in preliminary study, after which he entered Rush Medical College, of Chicago. Later becoming a student in the Eclectic Medical Institute, of Cincinnati, Ohio, he was a graduate of the class of 1877. Entering upon the practice of his profession he remained so engaged for twenty-two years, locating first in Missouri and afterward in Chautauqua county, Kans. In the latter location he made his home until 1891, in which year he came to California and located in Merced county. His home is in the Bradley Addition, two miles from town, and consists of seven acres, all in fruit. In addition to this property he also owns forty acres in the British Colony, which he leases, and eighteen acres which his son farms. The doctor, in 1899, retired from the active practice of his profession, and is enjoying a relaxation among the pleasant surroundings of his California home.

Sharing the pleasant life of Dr. Crandall is his wife, who was formerly Sarah A. Adams, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Schockley Adams. Mr. Adams, a native of Georgia, saw active service in the Mexican war, and was one of the party under General Wool, who was surrounded by the enemy and was without food for several days. They were rescued by the soldiers sent out from Fort Leavenworth for that purpose. After the war Mr. Adams located in Missouri and engaged in farming. Mrs. Crandall is a woman of admirable qualities and has made their home an ideal one. Their union has been blessed with the birth of three children: Christopher C., a rancher of Merced county; Alma, wife of G. A. Fitchett, of Merced county; and Anna, the wife of Robert C. Weaver, also of Merced county. In his political views the doctor is broad-minded enough to see something of good in each of the platforms of the parties, but does not conform wholly to any one of them, reserving the right to cast his vote for the man whom he considers best qualified for office. In fraternal orders he is a Royal Arch Mason, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Personally the doctor is a man of many fine qualities, well read and a lover of history, which makes him a very entertaining companion. He is a broad-minded, whole-hearted man, and as a citizen of worth is appreciated by all who have come to know him.

ARTHUR ABEL ABBEY. The name which heads this review is that of an old New England family that flourished in the state of Connecticut. It was noted for its pioneers—men of strength and endurance, and the ability to give their best efforts in the upbuilding of a new country. Luther Abbey left his home in Connecticut, where he was born, and located in Elyria, Lorain county, Ohio, and engaged in contracting and building until his death, January 5, 1850, at the early age of thirty-nine years. His wife was in maidenhood Lucy Allen, a native of Massachusetts, and the daughter of Reuben Allen, a pioneer farmer of Lorain county. Mrs. Abbey died in Ohio at the age of seventy-six years. They became the parents of four children, of whom two are now living, namely: Roland, who served in the Forty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry and was wounded at Vicksburg, now residing in Michigan; and Arthur Abel, the second in order of birth.

Arthur Abel Abbey was born in Elyria, Ohio, November 3, 1842, and was reared on a farm near that place until the breaking out of the Civil war, receiving his education in the district school in the vicinity of his home. In October, 1862, he responded to the pressing need for men, and enlisted in Company D, Sixth Ohio Cavalry, being mustered in at Cleveland, Ohio, for one year. He served until January, 1864, in the Army of the Potomac, taking part in the battles of Gettysburg and Fredericksburg, as well as seeing dangerous service in the path of the Confederate army. After an honorable discharge he returned to civic life and once more entered into the life of an Ohio farmer. In 1866 he located in Ausable, Mich., and engaged for two years in the lumber mills of that region, after which he went to Oshkosh, Wis., and followed the same occupation until 1874. In February of the last named year he came to California, to which state he had previously made a trip in 1868, accompanied by his younger brother, Andrew, who continued to make his home here until his death in 1882, in Stockton. Mr. Abbey located at Portersville and engaged in the sheep business, which he continued for two years, when, in 1876, he established a livery stable and conducted it for about six years. He then purchased the grist mill and in partnership with C. A. McLean established the Portersville Flour Milling Company, operated by water power. They eventually changed to the roller process, but sold out in 1886, after a very successful career. Mr. Abbey then engaged in speculating and dealing in real estate for one year, when with Thomas Kelley, he bought eighty acres of orange land, being among the first to set out orange groves for commercial purposes. Later they sold a half of this property, each retaining twenty acres, which Mr. Abbey still owns, while he makes his home in Portersville.

In Portersville, in 1882, Mr. Abbey married Emma Gilmer, a native of Tulare county, and the daughter of Rufus Gilmer, of Visalia, whose biographical record appears elsewhere in this work. Born of this union are five children, namely: Ernest, who was accidentally drowned at the age of nine years; Ainer, who died at the age of four years; Rosalind; Lawrence; and Hester. Mr. Abbey is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Grand Army of the Republic, both of Portersville. Politically he is a true-blue Republican and has often been called upon to serve his party in positions of trust and responsibility. In 1901, upon the organization of the present corporation of Portersville, he was made councilman from the third ward, and in 1903 was re-elected for four years as a representative of the same ward.

WILLIAM DEAKIN. The late William Deakin is remembered by a large circle of friends to whom he had endeared himself by his kindly manners and strict integrity. He was born at Primrose valley, near Rotherham, England, in 1828, a son of Benjamin and Mary Deakin, the former a soldier in the British army.

William Deakin was reared in the place of his birth, educated in the schools of England, and as he reached manhood learned the trade of a fendermaker (fenders for fireplaces). In 1849 he immigrated to the United States and in St. Louis followed his trade. Hearing much of the Pacific coast and the fortunes made in the mines, he decided to cast in his lot with the emigrants. He accordingly outfitted with wagons and ox teams and started on the overland journey. Reaching Salt Lake he remained there about one year, then continued his journey to California. He took up farming near San Bernardino, where he remained three years, later coming to Fresno county. He hoped to find a satisfactory location on Big Dry creek, but being disappointed in this he settled on Kings river and engaged in the stock business and general farming. His health failing, after a residence there of six years, he removed into the foothills and located at the head of Clarks valley, purchasing land from time to time as success came his way, accumulating about two thousand acres of land. He continued in active business until his death, August 14, 1897, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was made a Mason in Visalia Lodge. He served as justice of the peace for many years on the Democratic ticket.

In 1899 Mrs. Deakin sold the Kings river ranch and also disposed of the other ranch at a good advance. The lady who became the wife of William Deakin was in maidenhood Elizabeth Measley. She was born in Rotherham, England, January 9, 1829, a daughter of John and Alice (Huntington) Measley. The former, who was a rope and twine spinner by trade, was born near Chesterfield, and there his death occurred. His wife, who was a native of the same locality, came to California and passed her last days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Deakin, on Upper Kings river.

Mrs. William Deakin was reared in Rotherham, educated in the public schools and became acquainted with Mr. Deakin there. They embarked on the same vessel for the United States in 1849 and were married on the high seas in May of that year. They came to New Orleans, thence to St. Louis. To them was born one child, Eliza, the widow of Peter William Fink, of Kings river. Mrs. Fink has five daughters and one son living, viz.: Alice N., Mrs. Felix Hill, who has four children living; Juliann Marsh, who has five children living; Rose May Geason, who has one child; Augusta E. Street, who also has five living children; Mary Mitchell, who has one son; and Peter Elliott Fink, at home on the ranch with his mother.

Mrs. Deakin is a Presbyterian in religious belief. Since the death of her husband she has looked after her property interests and disposed of both ranches. She spends her summers in San Francisco and the winter months in Fresno, at her home which she purchased at No. 528 O street. Like her husband, Mrs. Deakin has ever extended a helping hand to those less fortunate than herself and of all enterprises that she deems worthy is a liberal supporter. The position held by Mr. and Mrs. Deakin has been attained by their own efforts, good management and an appreciation of the rights of others. In the annals of the state where their success has been made, a monument is erected in the history of the San Joaquin valley that has claimed them as citizens for over fifty years.

HANS P. PETERSEN. Worthy of note among the industrious and respected men of the San Joaquin valley is Hans P. Petersen, a keen, wide-awake representative of the agricultural interests of this section. A man of energy and high aspirations, he is in every respect a self-made man and the architect of his own fortune, his prosperity being due solely to his own efforts. As a general farmer and chicken raiser, he has fine success, and his large crops of hay and grain bring him in handsome profits each year. The son of a machinist, he was born December 24, 1861, in Denmark, where his parents, Carl and Carry (Christian) Petersen, were born, lived and died. Their family consisted of seven children, five sons and two daughters, four of whom are living, Hans P. being the third child in order of birth.

Having obtained a substantial education in the common and private schools of his native district, Hans P. Petersen learned the cabinet maker's trade, which he there followed for a while as a journeyman. Immigrating to the United States in search of more favorable opportunities for bettering his financial prospects, he located at Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1882, and there followed his trade for two years. Coming to California in 1884, he worked on a ranch in Modesto for two years. In 1886, looking about for a place in which to settle permanently, Mr. Petersen was so impressed with the richness and fertility of the soil of the west side of the San Joaquin valley that he secured a position as a farm laborer on a ranch at Hills Ferry, and while thus employed bought one hundred and sixty acres of the land now included within his present home farm. Three years later, in 1889, he gave up working for wages and removed to his own ranch, which lies nine miles southwest of Newman, and has since been farming on his own account. By the exercise of his native industry and good judgment, he has met with most satisfactory success in his labors. He has bought another quarter section of land, having now a valuable ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, on which he raises large crops of wheat and barley. He is also interested in the poultry business, having large chicken yards, houses and incubators, and during the past year raised thirty-three hundred white Leghorn chickens, in this branch of industry, which is a side one, finding profitable returns for the money invested.

In Modesto, Cal., Mr. Petersen married Anna Matsen, a native of Denmark, and they have three children, Carrie, Augusta and Emily. Fraternaly Mr. Petersen belongs to Newman Lodge, A. O. U. W., and politically he is a strong supporter of the principles of the Democratic party. He takes great interest in local affairs, and though not an office seeker has served for a number of terms as school trustee in the Occidental district.

F. A. TRACY. That absorbing interest which surrounds the men whose strength and nobility have encompassed the civilization of the western slope, of whose trials the conservative easterner knows little, and whose faith in the verity and success of his mission has at times approached the sublime in human nature, assures to the history of this once droning land an abiding place in literature. In no other part of the world has pioneer life offered greater contrasts, sung more alluring songs, or fashioned for man's conquering greater or more discouraging obstacles. To the youth born into the prosperity of the present, the calm, sane and practical life of the struggler for western supremacy represents an inspiring lesson in self-control, self-sacrifice and manliness. Such a one is F. A. Tracy, than whom none in the vicinity of Bakersfield more nearly approaches the typical pioneer.

A native of Wilkesbarre, Luzerne county, Pa.,

Mr. Tracy was born October 21, 1829. August 6, 1850, he arrived at Placerville, Cal., where he engaged in mining with fair success until 1852. During that year he became interested in farming and stock-raising in the San Joaquin valley, Tulare county, in partnership with Hon. Wellington Canfield, thus inaugurating a business association which, from the standpoint of length of years, disinterested loyalty and harmony of understanding, probably has no counterpart on the Pacific coast. Fifty-two years have been recorded on the dial of time since these pioneers joined their interests, yet in all that time no harsh word has been spoken, no sign of selfishness been manifest, nor aught of discord appeared to weaken faith or cast the shadow of disillusionment. From the ranch at Four Creeks the partners changed their base of operations to Fresno county in 1859, and in 1863 came to Kern county to pasture their large herds on the open prairie. In 1872 they began to purchase lands as the market warranted, and at one time owned several thousand acres in what is known as the Canfield precinct, a part being on the Kern river. For years they conducted a large dairy, and are still engaged in ranching, although of late the burden of the responsibility has fallen on others, owing to the somewhat impaired health of both Mr. Tracy and Mr. Canfield.

As proof of his faith in the future of Bakersfield Mr. Tracy has invested heavily in real estate, and has aided in establishing many of the chief enterprises of the town, including the Bank of Bakersfield, in which he is still a director. He is generosity personified, is a liberal contributor to the worthy causes which mark the humanitarianism of the community, and has helped many a comrade out of a temporary slough of despondency. To some extent he has encouraged mining in the locality, and owns valuable properties in Kern and surrounding counties. As a staunch Republican he has upheld the best tenets of his party. Like many stockmen in this section he has had his ups and downs, and in the early days suffered the privation and uncertainty incident to pioneer life. Through all he has maintained that kindness and serenity which is one of the chief causes of his influence and power, for he has carried a happy temperament into the dark places of life.

Not only is Mr. Tracy one of the representative pioneers of Kern county, but through his marriage he became identified with one of the most prominent families which has invaded this western country. January 19, 1875, he married Mrs. Baker, widow of Col. Thomas Baker, founder of Bakersfield, and widely known as the most vigorous promoter of its material welfare that Kern county has known. As a testimony of the kind-heartedness and generosity of his helpmeet, it is pleasant to record that in the early days many a sick person brought to their home owed life to her gentle care and nursing, gratuitously bestowed. Mrs. Tracy stands unique among the early settlers of this section, not only because she brought intelligence and discernment into the wilderness, pursued a life of more than average usefulness and retains undiminished her many recollections of the early days, but because she is the only one living of the few who were here at the time of her arrival. Mrs. Tracy is popular and socially prominent, being a member of the Woman's Club, in the deliberations of which she takes a conspicuous part. Recently she read before that organization a paper, which, for graphic descriptions of the early days, fine command of language, and moderation and accuracy of statement, must remain a classic of its kind.

COL. THOMAS BAKER, founder of Bakersfield, was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, November 5, 1810, his birthplace being in the beautiful valley extending from Newark to Dresden, through which the Ohio canal runs. A military bent was given to the youthful ambitions of Colonel Baker by the times in which he was educated and the circumstances in which he was placed. He was appointed a colonel in the Ohio State Militia before he attained his majority; but peace became so well assured that he turned his attention to civil pursuits.

Reared on a farm and familiar with surveying, he studied law with the intention of making land law his specialty. Shortly after his admission to the bar he removed to Illinois, where, however, he remained but a short period. The rapid influx of population into the territory of Iowa induced him to go there, and his ambitions as a lawyer were soon rewarded with success. He was appointed the first United States district attorney of that territory and retained the office until the adoption of the state constitution. He was then elected senator, and on the organization of the legislature was chosen president of the senate, becoming under the new constitution ex officio lieutenant-governor, the first in that office in Iowa. He was subsequently returned several times to the state senate. No man had a larger share in the early legislation of that powerful state; and many of her important laws on her statute books were devised and drafted by him.

Influenced by the gold excitement and his bias for adventure, he finally determined to emigrate to the Pacific coast. In the autumn of 1850, after the usual tedious and dangerous overland journey made by most men of those days, he arrived at Benicia, where he remained a few months, when he removed to Stockton. In 1852 he removed to Tulare county, and was one of the founders of the town of Visalia. In 1855 he was chosen representative of that district to the state assembly. During the next fall he was appointed receiver of the United States Land Office, which position he held during the administration of President Buchanan. In 1861 he was elected state senator from Tulare and Fresno counties, and served in the sessions of 1861-62.

September 20, 1863, he arrived on Kern Island with his family, preparatory to commencing his work of reclamation, remarking at the time, "Here at last I have found a resting-place, and here I expect to lay my bones." To him the country was neither new nor strange. He had visited it and explored it, and carefully noted its capabilities years before. He was a man of keen perception, broad views, and comprehended fully the natural resources and peculiar advantages of a country, and systematically set about the prosecution of his work of reclaiming and developing his lands. He was liberal to a fault, and that was with him an almost entire abnegation of self. Often, when his ingenuity was taxed to supply his own wants, he was found willing to aid those who were in dire need, and the stranger was always a welcome guest at his home. His friends, like those of President Jefferson, delighted with his genial manners and hospitality, seemed never to suspect that his store could be exhausted. The leading trait of his character was his uniform good nature and his philosophical placidity and coolness of temper and disposition. Nothing seemed to disturb his equanimity and self-poise. One of his favorite mottoes was: "Time will justify a man who means to do right." He thought it unworthy a rational being to indulge in vain regrets. What ever ills he suffered he wasted no time in brooding over them, and it was this peculiarity of mind or mental training that often gave him the mastery over adverse circumstances and enabled him to extricate himself.

He knew better how to make a fortune than how to keep it. The result was that though several times in his life he might have retired wealthy, fortunes were lost with seeming indifference. His ambition was not so much to acquire lands as it was to develop them, and in this he succeeded to a greater extent probably than any other man in the state of California. His absorbing desire was to see his lands improved and occupied by settlers as soon as possible; and in furtherance of this object he was invariably more liberal than the national government itself. He was the original owner of the town site of Bakersfield and induced the erection of several of the public buildings there by his liberality, giving away many lots to persons desiring to build. In fact, he was the projector of nearly all the public works and improvements. His great experience, intuitive sagacity, indomitable perseverance and public spirit made him a useful man to his people.

September 12, 1857, Colonel Baker was married to Miss Ellen M. Alverson, daughter of Dr. Laban Alverson, in Visalia. Dr. Alverson, on coming to Kern county from Iowa in 1870, practiced medicine in Tulare and Kern counties, and died here in 1879. By this marriage there were four children, two of whom survive, Thomas A. and Lottie, wife of J. M. Jameson, of Bakersfield. An elder daughter married C. C. Cowgill of Bakersfield, and is deceased, and May married H. A. Jastro. Colonel Baker died November 24, 1872. Mrs. Baker, the widow of the colonel, was married, January 19, 1875, to F. A. Tracy, a prominent pioneer citizen of Kern county.

THOMAS MCKEE DUNGAN. An ambitious and energetic young man who holds a high place in the citizenship of Visalia is Thomas McKee Dungan, whose ability has already brought to him the discharge of various public duties. He is a native of Washington county, Va., where his birth occurred January 4, 1874. His father, Thomas Nelson Dungan, was also a native of that state, where he engaged in farming for many years. In 1894 he came to California and located at Exeter, Tulare county, where he bought a ranch and planted it to oranges. He is now retired at the age of sixty-four years, making his home in Exeter in enjoyment of the fruits of his years of active citizenship. While a resident of Virginia he served as a soldier in the Confederate army. His wife, formerly Josephine McKee, also a native of the Old Dominion, died in California, leaving a family of four sons and two daughters, of whom Thomas McKee Dungan is the fourth in order of birth.

Thomas McKee Dungan received his education in the common schools in his native state, where he made his home until 1894, in which year he came to California with his father. With his brother, J. S. Dungan, he established the Bonnie Brae nurseries near Exeter, which have now a capacity of seventy thousand trees, all of citrus fruit. They have made a financial success of their work, having built up a wide patronage through the county. In addition to these interests, Mr. Dungan is acceptably filling the office of county coroner and public administrator, to which position he was appointed in 1904 to complete an unexpired term. To accept this position he resigned that of deputy assessor. In Exeter, Cal., Mr. Dungan married Sallie Seabright, a native of Virginia, and born of this union are two sons, Seabright and Lee. Fraternally Mr. Dungan is identified with the Woodmen of the World, and politically adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. He has been and is active in political circles and a successful and helpful future is predicted for him.

ROBERT DOHERTY. The most prominent characteristic in Robert Doherty is that of large heartedness, to which he owes practically all of his experiences in life. A study of his successes and failures, of his present prominence as a rancher and dairyman of Kings county, of his remarkable public spirit and adaptability to a crude and pioneer country, reveals in glowing colors this fine and most human of all attributes. Like all men of generous and trustful impulses, his confidence has been misplaced, and his ability to accumulate money, and therefore assume the backing of friends and enterprises has brought disaster around his head. That he is to-day conservatively rated at $100,000 argues the possession of particularly strong and persevering accompaniments, and without exception he has done as much as any man to improve the general conditions of Kings county. Mr. Doherty lives nine miles southeast of Hanford, where he has a ranch of fourteen hundred acres, one hundred of which are under alfalfa, and the balance is devoted to one hundred dairy and four hundred market stock, and eighteen hundred hogs. He also owns a ranch containing a section and a half on Tulare lake, and is one of the most extensive stock and dairy farmers in this section of the state.

Mr. Doherty's remarkably enterprising life began in County Tyrone, Ireland, June 10, 1840, and for many years was associated with his father, George Doherty, a native of the same part of the country, and to whom he owed much in the way of personal encouragement and practical training. When he was twelve years old, in 1852, his family came to the United States and settled in Great Barrington, Mass., where George Doherty bought property and farmed on a small scale, in 1855 removing to Wisconsin, where he bought a one hundred and sixty acre farm near Mineral Point, Iowa county. In the fall of 1858 a move was made to Nemaha county, Kans., where he took up government land, but, unhealthy conditions prevailing, the family became ill, and in the spring of 1860 the farm was abandoned and a start was made across the plains. The equipment consisted of ox teams and wagons, and the long distance was accomplished without any of the dangerous experiences which characterized the earlier wanderings of the emigrants. Renting a farm near Stockton, Mr. Doherty lived there until the fall of 1863, when he moved to Stanislaus county, near Salida, where his son Robert helped to locate him, assisted him in the building of his house and made every effort to render his last years happy and contented. He lived to be eighty-two years old, dying a staunch believer in the tenets of the Roman Catholic Church. Politically he was a Democrat. During later life he was comparatively alone, for his wife, formerly Margaret O'Hare, a native of Ireland, died in Wisconsin after rearing eight of her nine children, seven of whom are now living.

Robert Doherty is the second child in his father's family. He remained at home until 1864, when, on account of the drouth killing off large numbers of stock upon which he had depended for a livelihood, he went to Idaho and engaged in mining and prospecting about four years. Not meeting with success, he returned to California in 1868 and took up land on the west side of the San Joaquin river in Stanislaus county. He also rented large tracts of land, from three to five thousand acres, and engaged in grain raising, and in 1873 removed to his present ranch, which he homesteaded, and the next year sold his Stanislaus county farm. In the fall of 1873 he organized the Lake Side Ditch Company with James Guernsey and C. W. Clark, and became its president in 1874. Under his management the ditch with its branches was constructed for ten or fifteen miles, becoming one of the most necessary and useful improvements in the county up to that time. He remained with the company until its interests were thoroughly established, and resigned only on account of pressure of other business. In those days he owned and operated a threshing machine through the county, and as many were poor and trying to get a start in life, he tendered his services upon supposed credit, and in many instances received no remuneration for his services. For several years he was known as one of the largest grain farmers in Kings county, and in 1877 eight thousand sheep were grazing in his pastures and on the mountains. A drouth killed off about half of the sheep in one season, a misfortune which greatly depleted his finances, but which failed to dampen his determination to succeed.

Mr. Doherty's public spirit and ambition have led him to active interest in many enterprises which he alone might have brought to a successful issue, but which, taken in connection with people of less resource and business sagacity, have brought down on his head many severe losses. To accommodate a friend he helped to build a toll road up the mountain to facilitate the development of certain mines, but although he spent a large sum and devoted two years of his time to the project, he never received a cent in return. On another occasion he took a $50,000 government contract to fill up the slough at Presidio San Francisco, but this also proved a losing venture and would have completely undermined a man of less financial resource. His stronghold has been in stock-raising, of which he has keen and comprehensive knowledge, and of which he has made a remarkable success. Mr. Doherty has never been particularly interested in politics, but whatever interest he has shown has invariably been for some aspiring friend. The maintenance of friendships has been to him a sort of religion, a unity to be strengthened by sacrifice if necessary, and never to be tarnished by any act or word of his own. No more loyal and helpful and disinterested friend ever invaded the San Joaquin valley, and no more generous upholder of education, improvement and high living ever added to the wealth of a liberal mind, an open purse and a cheerful disposition to its continuous upbuilding. Mr Doherty married Missouri E. Davis, a native of South Carolina, and his family consists of his wife and three children, Rose E., George Emmett and Agnes.

JOHN E. THOMPSON. As the proprietor of an up-to-date general store at Thompson's Corner, three and a half miles east of Crow's Landing, in Stanislaus county, Mr. Thompson's position in the community is one of consequence and he is easily recognized as one of the leading citizens of the neighborhood in which he has resided since 1876. Being a fine mechanic, upon first removing to the locality he opened a blacksmith shop and in connection with conducting a general store, he engaged in the manufacture of wagons, buggies, etc., also doing general repair work. But when the railroad was built through this section he closed the shop and devoted his entire time to the mercantile business. In addition to his other interests he has followed farm pursuits to some extent, and has twenty acres adjoining his store in alfalfa.

Born in Clay county, Ky., April 26, 1839, Mr. Thompson is one of five children born to William Warner and Nancy (Turner) Thompson, being the only son and the youngest child in the family. His mother, a native of Alabama, died when he was an infant. His father was born near Richmond, Va., but at an early date located in Clay county, Ky. After the death of his wife, in 1839, he went west as far as Missouri and purchasing land in Randolph county, followed farm pursuits for a number of years. In 1868 he disposed of his farm interests and moved to Renick, Mo., where his last days were spent in retirement, at the time of his death having reached the age of eighty-eight years.

It was in the common schools of Randolph county, Mo., that Mr. Thompson was educated, and after leaving school he became apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade in Milton, Mo., and in time thoroughly mastered this useful occupation. In 1856 he left Missouri and for several years worked in the lead mines of Benton, Wis., where he was quite successful from a financial standpoint, and it was in this state that his marriage took place, in 1860. When the war broke out, being a true son of the south, he naturally espoused the cause of the Confederacy and in 1861 he enlisted in the southern army under General Price, but was transferred in 1863 to the ranks of General Pempelton. At Vicksburg he was taken prisoner, but was afterwards exchanged.

At the close of the war Mr. Thompson returned to Missouri and after sending for his wife, turned his attention to farm pursuits in Randolph county, which continued to be his home until 1874, the date of his removal to California, where he has lived ever since. The first two years of his residence in this state were spent at Stockton, as blacksmith for Madison & Williams, manufacturers of plows, implements, etc. He then purchased a shop at Crow's Landing, also opening a general store, and soon he won recognition as a citizen of worth. Years of intercourse in both a social and a business way have only strengthened the ties between him and his neighbors and his success is richly deserved. By his marriage, in LaFayette county, Wis., Mr. Thompson was united with Miss Mary Oldham, a native of Kentucky. Four daughters and one son blessed their union, but the latter is now deceased. The daughters are Mrs. Julia Winters, Mrs. Amanda Carson, Mrs. Nona Roe and Mrs. May Love. The beloved mother passed away in San Francisco. Politically Mr. Thompson is a Democrat and his influence is far-reaching.

JOHN A. RODUNER. A very youthful pioneer when he came to California, John A. Roduner, in his manhood years, has achieved a success which made the move of his father a fortunate one. The elder man, also called John, was a native of Switzerland, who came to the United States in 1846, from New York, where he first located, removing to Wisconsin and later to Minnesota. He was a carpenter by trade and engaged in this work in his various locations. In 1863 he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, sailing from New York City on the ship Ocean Queen, and landing at San Francisco from the ship Golden Shore. He brought his family with him and located in Stockton, where he followed his trade until 1903. He now makes his home with his son, John A., retired from the active cares of life, at the age of seventy-eight years.

John A. Roduner was born in Minneapolis, Minn., March 10, 1853, and was but ten years old when he accompanied his parents to California, where all his life has since been passed. He received his education in the public schools of Stockton, after which he attended Heald's Business College, of San Francisco. For ten years he followed teaming in Stanislaus, Fresno, Mariposa and Merced counties, first coming to the latter county in the fall of 1869. In 1879 he located upon his present property, which consists of four hundred and forty acres of land, one hundred acres being devoted to the cultivation of barley, while he also raises some alfalfa, and has about eighty-five head of stock. A profitable source of income is an artesian well seven hundred feet deep, supplied with a nine-inch pipe at the top and a seven-inch at the bottom. Twenty-four thousand gallons of water flow from this well every twenty-four hours. In his political convictions Mr. Roduner is a Republican, and fraternally is associated with the Woodmen of the World.

In Merced county Mr. Roduner was united in marriage with Hattie Arthur, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of ten children, all born in Merced county, and all living: John E., George A., Isabella L., Julia, Elmer, Mary, Neil, Roscoe, Walter and Robert.

NIELS HANSEN. Cattle, wheat and barley are the three resources to which Niels Hansen has devoted his energies since coming to California in 1888. As his name and personal characteristics indicate, Mr. Hansen is of Danish ancestry, and was born in the now German dependency of Schleswig-Holstein, northern Germany, November 17, 1870, his parents being Niels and Maggie (Schmidt) Hansen, both natives of Denmark. The elder Hansen was of a migratory turn of mind in his younger years, and came to Mendocino county, Cal., in 1870, leaving his family in Schleswig-Holstein, while he sought to make a fortune in the new world. As a farmer and sawmiller he succeeded fairly well, and returned to Germany in 1877, remaining there until again locating in California in 1881. Continuing his former occupations for five years, he again took up his residence in the country of his birth, and now lives in Schleswig-Holstein.

The second of four sons and two daughters in his parents' family, Niels, Jr., received a fair common school education in Schleswig-Holstein, and eventually left the farm and engaged in riding for a horse trader for three years. He followed his father's example and came to the United States in 1888, locating in Mendocino City, where he engaged in herding cattle until 1889. Removing to Stockton, he learned the plasterer's and brick-layer's trade, and at the same time took a two-year course at the Stockton Business College. The longing to return to the country overcame him in 1892, and with Grayson as his headquarters he again engaged in herding cattle and in ranching in the foothills. About the same time he became a land owner to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres, and soon afterward took up a similar amount of land near the summit of the coast range. These properties were both in Stanislaus county and were devoted to stock ranching, occupations in which their owner achieved a deserved measure of success. The summit ranch was eventually disposed of, and in 1901 Mr. Hansen leased five hundred and eighty acres and purchased one hundred and sixty acres in the neighborhood. Wheat, barley and cattle are his chief resources, and of all he is reasonably sure of a substantial yearly income.

Mr. Hansen is a Democrat in politics, but has never disturbed the tranquility of his life by aspiring to office. He leads a moderate, very industrious existence, never fretting himself with ambitions which nature never intended him to realize, or longing for more than enough to make life comfortable, sane and wholesome. His little family consists of his wife, who was formerly Minnie Brown of Newman, and who is a native daughter of Germany; and a son, Niels, Jr., representing the third generation to bear that name. Mr. Hansen is an honored neighbor and loyal friend, and is ever ready to aid those to whom fortune has been less kind than to himself.

ASHBEL POST OSBURN is remembered in Springville as a citizen of worth and ability, and one whose best efforts were always given to all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community in which he lived. He was born in New York state and while yet a lad removed with his parents to the Mississippi valley. His home was first in Ohio and later in Galena, Ill., where he was reared to young manhood. In 1850 he crossed the plains with ox-teams to California, locating in Grass valley, Nevada county, where he engaged in mining for a time. In 1860 he came to Tulare county and settled near Portersville, making that place his home for twelve years. He then disposed of his interests in that locality and located near Globe, where he engaged in raising orchard fruits and the cultivation of a vineyard. He met with success in this work, in which he continued until 1901, when he sold out and located in Springville and engaged in a mercantile enterprise. His death occurred December 4, 1903, at the age of seventy-eight years. Fraternally he was identified with the Masons.

Mr. Osburn is survived by his wife, formerly Susan Miles, with whom he was united in marriage in October, 1887. She was the fourth child in a family of five sons and four daughters, and was born March 30, 1830, in Madison county, Ind. Her father, William Miles, was born in New York state in 1801 and came to Indiana and engaged in farming in 1825. Ten years later he located in DeKalb county, Ill., and farmed until 1847, when he removed to Milan county, Tex., and followed the same occupation. Following the westward trend of emigration he came to California in 1852, crossing the plains, and after his arrival in the state located near Healdsburg, Sonoma county, where he engaged in general farming. Just prior to his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-seven years, he came to the vicinity of Portersville, Tulare county. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Allen, a native of North Carolina, died in Illinois. Mrs. Osburn received a preliminary education in the common schools of Indiana and Illinois, and afterward added to her knowledge by a thorough course of reading.

PETER PERKINS DAVIS. As a prominent pioneer of Portersville, and a man of sterling worth and integrity, noted for his business tact and judgment, it gives us pleasure to place before the readers of this volume a brief record of the life of the late Peter Perkins Davis. By birth and breeding a Virginian, he was born, August 27, 1840, in Henry county, Va., which was also the birthplace of his father, Thomas B. Davis. A well-to-do agriculturist, Thomas B. Davis owned a plantation near Martinsville, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits during his active career. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Coleman, spent her entire life in Virginia.

Attending school through the days of his boyhood and youth, Peter Perkins Davis obtained a practical education in the common branches of study. At the age of sixteen years he began to be self-supporting, securing employment as clerk in a mercantile house. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army, and served under Gen. Robert E. Lee in Longstreet's Corps, Pickett's Division, Kemper's Brigade, being a member of the Twenty-fourth Virginia Infantry. He participated in many important engagements, and was several times wounded. At the close of the war, Mr. Davis migrated to Missouri, locating in Jonesburg, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for nearly ten years. Coming to California in 1874, he bought land on the Tule river, and embarked in farming, but did not meet with sufficient success in that industry to continue it very long. Locating, therefore, in Portersville in 1880, Mr. Davis resumed his former occupation, opening a general merchandise store. In this undertaking he was exceedingly prosperous, and built up a large and lucrative trade, which he managed until 1894, when, on account of failing health, he sold out. From that time until his death, November 8, 1899, Mr. Davis lived retired from business cares. He acquired a good property, and in 1888 erected the P. P. Davis block, a fine brick building. He was public-spirited and liberal, and very fond of music and children. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and in religion was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. For a number of years he served as justice of the peace, and at the time of his death was notary public.

In Warrenton, Mo., Mr. Davis married Lurena S. Howell, who was born and reared in that town. She is a woman of culture and ability, and as administrator of her husband's estate settled his affairs most satisfactorily to all concerned. She owns a ranch of sixteen acres, lying near Portersville, has an attractive home, and has title to three-fourths of the brick block in town. Her father, John C. Howell, was born in St. Charles county, Mo., and was there engaged in tilling the soil until 1874, when he came to California and settled in Tulare county, where he spent his declining years. The mother died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Davis.

FRANK GIANNINI. The success which has met the efforts of Mr. Giannini since he made his first purchase of land in Tulare county has left him no reason to regret his removal from his native land. Of Italian birth and ancestry, he was born at Porto Ferrajo, on the island of Elba, off the coast of Tuscany, March 3, 1864, and is the second among three sons, all of whom immigrated to the United States. In the family were also four daughters. His parents, Dominico and Magdalena (Bolano) Giannini, were natives of Elba, where the mother died in 1869; the father is still living on the island and is engaged in general farming pursuits, supplemented by the occupation of a vineyardist. At an early age Frank Giannini gained a thorough knowledge of grape culture and from the age of seventeen years he had charge of his father's vineyard. Meanwhile he often read accounts of California's climate and soil, resembling those of his own land, yet presenting to settlers far greater opportunities for the attainment of prosperity than was possible within Italy's borders. As soon as he attained his majority he sold his property and crossed the ocean to the United States, landing at San Francisco with $1,000 to be used in the purchase of a place. Within a month or more he purchased land near Brentwood and embarked in grain farming, but an experience of two years convinced him that he could not make the investment bring fair returns.

The first visit of Mr. Giannini to Tulare county was made in 1887, but he did not purchase land until 1889. Meanwhile he engaged in farming and the raising of fruits and grapes in Madera and Fresno counties, also from 1887 to 1902 carried on a stock farm and acted as manager of an orchard at Reedley, Fresno county. Meanwhile, in 1889, with two others, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of bare land two and three-fourths miles northeast of Tulare, for which $20,000 was paid, an apparently exorbitant price for those times, yet the investment has proved profitable in every respect. The entire quarter section was at once placed under improvement, one hundred and twenty acres being planted in an orchard, and the balance in a vineyard. In 1891, by pulling up an occasional vine and setting out a tree, greater profits from each acre were made possible. During the same year (1891) he purchased the interests of his two partners and has since been the sole owner of the orchards. Nor does this property represent the limit of his investments. By purchase he has acquired four hundred and eighty acres adjoining, which gives him an entire section in one body. As previously stated, one hundred and twenty acres of the land is in orchard and vineyard, and he has also put eighty acres under alfalfa. Near Tipton, Tulare county, he also owns one hundred and sixty acres of land, and in 1902 he increased his holdings by the purchase of six hundred and forty acres three miles east of his orchard. Of this tract he has three hundred and twenty acres in alfalfa, furnishing an abundance of feed for his herd of about four hundred head of cattle and rendering possible the carrying on of a large dairy business. The section is watered by the canals of the Farmers' Ditch Company, in which he owns six shares. Irrigation is secured on his home place by means of a pumping plant with a sixty-foot surface well that never fails, power being provided by a twenty-horse-power engine, throwing from a thousand to eleven hundred gallons per minute. Buildings provided with all the conveniences for the management of the business may be found on the home place. Drying yards furnish ample accommodation for the drying of the fruit and the packing houses afford the necessary equipment for shipping preparations. There is also a new winery, with a large capacity for the manufacture of wine. During the busy season one hundred and fifty hands are employed in the orchard to care for the fruit and prepare it for shipment. With enterprise and sagacity he superintends all of the employes, oversees all shipping arrangements, maintains a close supervision of the entire property, as well as his other holdings. In spite of all these business responsibilities, he finds time to discharge every duty as a citizen to his adopted country and chosen community. As a stockholder he is connected with the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Tulare, Tulare Milling Company, and other local enterprises have the advantage of his financial aid and influence.

The marriage of Mr. Giannini united him with Miss Louise Lombardi, who was born and reared in Sacramento, Cal., her father, John, having been a pioneer of northern California. One child, Aurena, blesses their union. In politics Mr. Giannini votes the Republican ticket. Fraternally he was associated in former years with the Knights of Pythias and is still active in Masonry. Originally a member of the blue lodge of Madera, he later transferred his membership to the Reedley lodge, with which he is now associated, and in addition he is identified with the Royal Arch Chapter at Tulare.

MRS. MARY E. NEWHALL. Prominent among the successful horticulturists of the San Joaquin valley is Mrs. Mary E. Newhall, who since the death of her husband has conducted her large orange interests in a profitable manner. She is a native of Cleveland, Ohio, and a daughter of Mahlon Myers, a native of West Virginia. Her grandfather, Silas Myers, was at one time a planter and owned slaves, but being opposed to the bondage of the negro he removed to Ohio, where he freed his slaves. Settling in Pomeroy, he engaged in general farming and milling for the remainder of his life, although he lived for several years in Carroll county. His son, Mahlon Myers, on reaching manhood, engaged in farming near Pomeroy, but later located near Cleveland, then returned to Pomeroy where he passed his last days. Fraternally he was prominent in Masonic circles, and politically was a Republican, taking an active interest in the welfare of this party. His wife, formerly Rebecca Phillis, was a native of the Buckeye state and spent her entire life within its borders. They became the parents of seven children, of whom three are now living.

Next to the oldest in this family was Mary E. Myers. In girlhood she was adopted by Amos Stoddard, a prominent citizen of Cleveland, and was taken into his home there, where she was reared to young womanhood, receiving the best of training and educational advantages. In 1861 she was united in marriage with Anthony Stoddard, a native of Iowa, and the nephew of her foster father. They made their home in the east for seven years, when, in 1868, they came to California, locating in San Jose. Mr. Stoddard died in San Francisco. Mrs. Stoddard continued to make her home in San Jose, where she married Sylvester Newhall, a prominent nurseryman and orchardist of the Santa Clara valley. In addition to furnishing stock for many of the larger orchards in the valley Mr. Newhall owned and improved a beautiful place on Lincoln avenue, near the Willows.

A native of the Bay state, Mr. Newhall was born in Lynn and in 1850 crossed the plains to California with ox-teams. Arriving in the Santa Clara valley after several months of weary travel, hardships and dangers characteristic of this mode of journeying, Mr. Newhall became one of the first horticulturists of this section. His business ventures proved successful and in addition to his place at Willows he owned several ranches in different parts of the valley. His death occurred in 1897, at the age of seventy-six years. He left behind him the record of his life in a fair name, staunch integrity, the patriotism and worth of a pioneer, and with the passing years his name will continue to be associated with much that was indicative of the upbuilding and prosperity of the Santa Clara valley. Fraternally he was identified with the Masons and politically cast his ballot with the Republican party.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Newhall continued the ranching interests of the estate. In 1896 she became the owner of a fine place four miles southeast of Exeter, which she has set out with the Washington navel orange, having at this time about eighty-six acres devoted to this fruit. It is considered the banner orchard in this section, nearly every year bearing ten days earlier than any other in the section. In 1901 and 1904 her crop from these trees received the highest price at public auction in the eastern markets. It is undoubtedly through the personal attention which Mrs. Newhall has given her orchards that such results have been attained, one noticeable point being the perfect arrangement of ditches, assisted by a fine pumping plant, by which all parts of the orchard can be irrigated. Situated on her beautiful place is a cave and accordingly Mrs. Newhall has named her ranch Rockhurst, which is very appropriate. While much of her time is spent in San Jose, where she lives at the Vendome hotel, Mrs. Newhall is considered one of the Tulare county residents. Public-spirited and enterprising she takes a keen interest in the welfare of the community, and can always be counted upon for her support and thorough understanding in all movements calculated to advance the general good. By her personal characteristics as well as by her business ability she has won the respect and esteem of her employes, who give their best efforts to the furtherance of her plans. Politically she is in sympathy with the Republican party, is a firm believer in woman suffrage, and looks forward confidently to the time when politics will be improved in many ways by this movement. In religion she is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

By her first marriage three children were born: Fred, deceased; Bessie, widow of George Hawley, of Capitola; and Grace, wife of William Ryder, of San Jose. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Newhall three children have also been born: Georgie, the wife of E. W. Dunne; Carl; and Belle, the wife of James McKiernan, all being residents of San Jose.

PAUL SHEPPA. Wide-awake, energetic and far-sighted, Paul Sheppa is a worthy representative of the dairy interests of Tulare, and well deserving of the high rank he has attained among the men who have distinguished themselves as useful and enterprising citizens. In his everyday life he has labored diligently, and his thrift and industry have met with their legitimate reward. Of German ancestry, he was born, January 25, 1857, in Springboro, Crawford county, Pa., a son of William and Martha Augusta (Schettler) Sheppa, both of whom were born and reared in Bremerhaven, Germany. On emigrating from the Fatherland to this country, William Sheppa settled first in Crawford county, Pa., but subsequently continued his chosen occupation of farming in Erie county, Pa., where he still resides, being now over eighty years of age. Enlisting in 1862, he served until the close of the Civil war as a soldier, being for nearly three years a member of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. While in the army he received a sunstroke. He is a staunch Republican in politics, and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife died on the home farm in 1902. Nine children were born of their union, seven of whom survive, Paul, of this review, being the fourth child.

Brought up principally in Erie county, Pa., Paul Sheppa, like the majority of the farmers' sons of his day, acquired a limited education in the district schools. Bidding good-bye to home and friends in the fall of 1876, he crossed the continent to the Pacific coast. Locating in Solano county, Cal., he worked as a farm laborer in the vicinity of Dixon for three years. He subsequently began work for himself on a rented ranch, and afterward bought a farm near Elmira, where he was engaged in grain raising for several seasons, being quite successful. In 1891 he was unfortunate enough to lose $4,000 worth of grain in the field, it being set on fire by sparks from a passing engine on the nearby railway. Selling out immediately afterward, Mr. Sheppa located sixty miles southwest of Tulare, in Kern county, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land. Making improvements of a substantial character, he was there engaged in stock-raising, at intervals, for five years, proving up on the property, which is still in his possession. Subsequently settling in Tulare, Mr. Sheppa bought a complete set of boring tools, and has since been extensively employed in boring wells throughout Tulare county, carrying on a large and remunerative business in this line of industry.

In 1898 Mr. Sheppa embarked in the dairy business, beginning on a modest scale, with but four cows, and has since greatly enlarged his operations, having a herd of thirty-two cows, at the head of which he has a fine Holstein bull. In the Russell colony he has sixty-four acres of land, all under irrigation, and sowed mostly to alfalfa. In addition he rents ninety-six acres in the colony, and on this raises some alfalfa, and has a half interest in four hundred and eighty acres of pasture land. He has a large retail milk route in Tulare.

In Solano county Mr. Sheppa married Emeline Connell, who was born on the Platte river in 1864, while her parents were on their way across the plains to California. Her father, Giles Connell, settled in Marin county as a farmer and dairyman. Mr. and Mrs. Sheppa are the parents of eight children, namely: Walter, assisting his father in the dairy; Bertha, at home; Mrs. Della Clements, of Ventura county, Cal.; Leland Stanford; Lola May and Ola May, twins; Ada; and Paul, Jr. In his political affiliations Mr. Sheppa is a Republican, and takes an active part in local affairs. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Dixon, Cal., and is now a member of Tulare City Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and also belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood. Mrs. Sheppa is a member of the Christian Church.

WILLIAM THOMAS HELLAR. A mile and a quarter northwest of Farmersville, Tulare county, is located the forty-acre ranch of Mr. Hellar, upon which he is engaged in the cultivation of fruit, grain and alfalfa. He is a native of Virginia, having been born in Petersburg, December 14, 1849, but has spent the greater part of his life in California, to which state he came in 1858, brought by his father, Thomas Hellar. The latter was a native of Ohio, but in manhood located first in Virginia and later in Illinois, engaging in both states in the mercantile business. Upon his emigration to California he chose the Panama route, being a passenger on the steamer Arizaba. He made his home in San Leandro, Alameda county, for a short time, then spent a year in San Lorenzo, same county, after which he removed to Haywards, where for thirty years he carried on farming. In 1892 he went to San Francisco and engaged in the hotel business for two years, when he removed to Roseville, Placer county, Cal., where he now makes his home at the age of eighty-two years. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined the organization while a resident of Virginia. Politically he is a Democrat. His wife, formerly Eliza Knock, a native of Sheppey Island, England, died in 1875.

In a family of five sons and four daughters William Thomas Hellar is the oldest. After completing his education, which was received in the common schools of Haywards, Cal., he was apprenticed to learn the painter and paper hanger's trade. Subsequently he worked at his trade in San Francisco and Oakland and then spent three years in Sumner county, Kans. Returning to California, he engaged at his trade in Haywards until 1890, when he came to Tulare county and engaged in farming on his present property. He was also interested in fruit-raising and a prosecution of his trade until 1901, but since which time he has devoted his attention entirely to fruit. Twelve acres of his ranch are planted to fruit, while he also owns twenty acres in Placer county, near Roseville.

In Oakland Mr. Hellar was united in marriage with Sarah McCray, a native of Placer county, Cal., and born of this union are four children, namely: Martin C., a resident of Placer county; Grace Virginia, the wife of A. Thompson, of Farmersville; Mary E., of Hanford, Kings county; and Lloyd, at home. Fraternally he was associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically is a Socialist. In his religious affiliations he is a Spiritualist.

CHARLES MERWIN COE. The Coe family came originally from Wales, where Henry Coe was born and reared to manhood. He was the first emigrant in the family, locating first in New Jersey and later in New York, where he became a farmer. A man of ability, he won a prominent place in local affairs in his community, joining the state militia, in which he served as major. In his family was a son, Julius, who was born in Gloversville, Fulton county, the town then being known as Stump City. In manhood he became a glove manufacturer in that place, a pioneer in that line, continuing in that location until 1867, when, on account of failing health, he came to California. He located near Knight's Landing, and later removed to the Mussel Slough country, where he purchased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres. This property remained his home until his death at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, formerly Catherine Simpson, survives him and makes her home in Hanford, at the age of seventy-eight years. Her father, a native of England, immigrated to this country and became a farmer in New York state. Mr. and Mrs. Coe became the parents of seven children, of whom five are now living.

The oldest in his father's family, Charles Merwin Coe was born in Gloversville, Fulton county, N. Y., March 23, 1847, and was reared on a farm in Jefferson county until attaining the age of fifteen years. He received his education through an attendance at the district and high schools of his vicinity, and although desirous of taking up the study of medicine was constrained by circumstances to learn the trade of glove-making. He became an expert glove manufacturer, and was later traveling salesman for different glove factories in Gloversville, traveling over the middle west, the west and northeast. In 1870 he came to California and located in Vacaville, Solano county, where he made his home for two years, at the end of which time, through the indications that the Southern Pacific Railroad would make settlements in the Mussel Slough district, he came south and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, took a tree claim for one hundred and sixty acres and bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, all adjoining. He immediately set out trees, put up buildings and began an active improvement of his extensive property. With others he took an active part in the organization of the Lakeside Ditch Company, of which he afterward became a director. Two hundred and forty acres of this property are now under irrigation from that ditch and two hundred and forty under the People's ditch, the land being devoted to alfalfa and grain. The railroad company forced him to pay the price of $15 per acre, instead of the folder price of $2.50 per acre. In 1889 he sold this property and located in Tulare county, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres five miles southwest of Visalia, principally bottom land along the Kaweah river. This is under the Farmers' ditch, of which he is a director and was formerly president. Fifty acres are devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa, while the rest is given over to grain and stock, raising Shorthorn cattle and Berkshire and Poland-China hogs. He has a fine farm, well situated and productive, and fair in natural beauty, being thickly studded with giant oaks. He has added various improvements and gives to its cultivation all the energy and ability of which he is capable.

In Gloversville, N. Y., Mr. Coe married Catherine Flogg, a native of Germany, and they have two children, of whom Leonard, who graduated from the United Medical College of San Francisco and practiced in Fresno, Cal., died in Colorado at the age of twenty-seven years; and Charles Smith, who graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of San Francisco, is practicing his profession in Palo Alto, Cal. Mr. Coe is a staunch Republican in his political convictions and gives his best efforts to advance the principles he endorses. He is a communicant in St. Mary's Catholic Church of Visalia.

JOHN HAHESY. Laurel farm, which has been the home of Mr. Hahesy since 1903, comprises one hundred and sixty acres situated three miles west of the city limits of Tulare. With the benefit of previous years of successful experience in different departments of agriculture, Mr. Hahesy is admirably qualified to successfully operate his present property; and, while he has lived here for a comparatively brief period, he has instituted improvements of a valuable nature. One of the most important and expensive of these improvements is the electric pumping plant, comprising a well five hundred or more feet in depth, equipped with a centrifugal pump with a capacity of five hundred gallons per minute. The electric motor is of ten-horse power, but in order to irrigate the entire homestead only five-horse power is necessary, and the motor therefore is not operated at its largest capacity. A reservoir covering one acre of ground completes an irrigation system that is thoroughly modern and practically faultless.

In County Waterford, Ireland, Mr. Hahesy was born January 6, 1852, being one of six children, five of whom are now living. His parents, William and Bridget (Houlahan) Hahesy, were natives of Ireland, and in 1863 brought their children to the United States, settling on a farm near Manchester, Delaware county, Iowa, where the father died in 1866. The mother survived him for many years, passing away in Iowa in the spring of 1904, aged seventy-five years. After the death of his father John Hahesy took charge of the property, afterward remaining at home until he was twenty-one, when he started out in the world to earn his own livelihood. In 1875 he went to the Black Hills, but after prospecting for a time without success he abandoned the mines for the more quiet and less venturesome life of a farmer. In 1879 he came to California and settled in Tulare county, which has since remained his home and headquarters. During 1883 he returned to Iowa with the intention of staying in that state, but homesickness for the fair climate of the west led him in six weeks to start back to Tulare county, and since then he has had no desire to leave this region.

Having no means with which to take up independent farming, for some time after settling in Tulare county Mr. Hahesy worked for others, but as soon as he had accumulated a sufficient amount to justify renting property he began for himself. While renting the Abbott place near Plano and on Deer creek, he often raised as much as two thousand acres of grain per year. At the same time, until 1886, he operated a threshing machine, and was the first to use a combined thresher in Tulare county. As previously stated he purchased his present property in 1903, and has since brought it to a high state of improvement, having one hundred acres under alfalfa, which enables him to conduct an extensive stock business. In addition he continues to make a specialty of raising grain, and for this purpose rents two adjoining tracts, one embracing a section of land, while the other comprises fourteen hundred and forty acres, the larger part well adapted to the cultivation of grain.

In Tulare occurred the marriage of Mr. Hahesy to Miss Louise Beshears, a native of Missouri. Of their union are four children now living, William Martin, Helen May, John Francis and Charles Jefferson. Educational affairs always receive deserved attention from Mr. Hahesy, who at this writing holds the office of school trustee of the Laurel district. In politics he favors Democratic principles, and has served as a member of the county central committee, but aside from that position he has not been intimately associated with local politics. In fraternal societies he has membership with the Woodmen of the World, Knights of Pythias and Ancient Order of United Workmen.

RICHARD KUKER. A fund of energy, ability and resource was the capital with which Richard Kuker came to California and undertook the upbuilding of his personal fortunes, while he at the same time gave his best efforts toward the material development of the community in which he now makes his home. He was born in Hanover, Germany, near Verden, July 26, 1838, one of a family of three children, all of whom are living, Mary being the wife of William Mehrrens, located near Exeter, and Henry being still in Germany.

Richard Kuker was reared in his home in Germany, attending the common schools until he was fourteen years old, at which age he lost his father. From that time until his emigration to America he found employment on farms in the vicinity of his home. Upon his location in the United States he bought a small farm, which he conducted until 1872. Selling out in that year he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, landing in San Francisco, where he bought two horses and moved by wagon to Sand creek, Tulare county. After two years of general farming he located on his present property, purchasing six hundred and forty acres of railroad land on section 17, township 19, range 27, while he pre-empted eighty acres on section 8, township 19, range 27, and homesteaded eighty acres on section 18, township 19, range 27, now owning the eight hundred acres in one body. Of this tract four hundred acres are under plow and devoted to the raising of grain and cattle. He has improved his property and brought it up to a high state of cultivation, giving the most painstaking attention to all the departments of the work. In his herd of cattle he has some fine graded stock in Short-horns and Durhams.

In Germany, in 1866, Mr. Kuker married Catherine Bienhorn, a native of Verden, Hanover, and born of this union are two children, Dora, the wife of William Starns, of Yokohl, and Sophia, the wife of Axel Anderson, located near Lemon Cove. Mr. Kuker is a member of the Lutheran Church, and politically is an active Republican, having served as an election judge of the Yokohl district and in many ways has given his strongest support to the advancement of the principles he endorses.

ANDREW MITCHELL DARWIN. Among the earliest settlers of Fresno county, Cal., Andrew Mitchell Darwin is remembered as a successful stockman and a citizen of worth and integrity. He was born in Jackson county, Tenn., a son of James Darwin, the representative of an old Virginia family of English descent, members of which served valiantly in the Revolutionary war. James Darwin was a farmer in Tennessee, where Andrew M. was reared to young manhood. Deciding to cast in his lot with the pioneers of the more remote west, he crossed the plains to California in 1852, and upon his arrival located at Millerton, Fresno county. For four years following his location in the state he carried on mining, after which he entered land on Kings river and later on Dry creek, where he began the cattle and sheep business. He was one of the first to so engage in business in this section, and one of the first to drive a stake in Fresno county to mark the present site of Fresno. He met with success in his operations, and for thirty years, in partnership with E. C.

Ferguson, was numbered among the most extensive stockmen of the San Joaquin valley. In 1875, on account of ill health, he gave up the stock business and removed to Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, where he made his home until his death, which occurred in 1890, at the age of sixty-nine years. He is interred in the Santa Rosa cemetery, mourned by many friends in both that city and Fresno county, where he was so well known for many years. In Visalia, November 28, 1867, he was united in marriage with Martha J. Patterson, of whom a brief sketch is given in that of Joseph W. Reese, whom she married in 1893. They had one daughter, Addie Cole, who died at the age of two and a half years, after which they adopted a daughter, Georgia, who is now the wife of William H. Bryan, of Fresno.

J. W. BEARUP. Through business interests that are not limited to his home town of Madera, but also extend into other parts of Madera county, Mr. Bearup has established a reputation as one of the leading men of affairs in this section of the state. When he came to his present location in 1896 he embarked in the agricultural implement business and has since built up the largest trade of its kind in the county, carrying in stock a full equipment of modern machinery as well as buggies and wagons of the most approved styles of construction. In addition, he is extensively engaged in the grain business, and has warehouses in Madera, Berendo, Talbot and Borden, Madera county, where he has adequate provision for the storage and shipment of wheat and barley.

A resident of California since 1888, Mr. Bearup was born at Wawaka, Noble county, Ind., April 25, 1865, and was the only child of John W. and Jennie (Golden) Bearup, natives respectively of New York and Ohio. His paternal grandfather, James H. Bearup, was a native of New York, but spent much of his active life in Ohio. The maternal grandfather, William Golden, became a pioneer of Indiana and remained there until his death. During the Civil war John W. Bearup left his farm in Noble county and enlisted in the service of the Union, becoming sergeant of Company G, One Hundredth Indiana Infantry. After an active service of more than two years he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability. Afterward he moved from Indiana to Ohio and settled at Wellington. About 1890 he came to Madera, where he is now living retired. While he was still living in Indiana he was bereaved by his wife's death in 1868. For many years he has been an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

On finishing the studies of the grammar and high schools of Wellington, J. W. Bearup was sent to Ada College at Ada, Ohio, where he remained for a time. Afterward he learned the trade of butter and cheesemaker which he followed in Ohio for five years. After his arrival in California he became an employe of a grain house in Turlock and for two years held the position of foreman. During that period he gained a thorough knowledge of the grain business, which has been of inestimable value to him in his subsequent business operations. Removing to Barendo in 1891, he built a warehouse and engaged in buying grain. In order to command a larger field and engage in business upon a more extensive scale, in 1896 he came to Madera, where he still resides. After coming to this county he married Miss A. M. Crow, who was born in Wisconsin and came to California with her parents, settling in Madera county. Her father, H. D. Crow, was a member of a Wisconsin regiment and served for a considerable portion of the Civil war. Since coming to this county he has been engaged in the mercantile business at Barendo, where he is an influential citizen. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bearup one child was born, Carl G. Bearup.

The Madera Board of Trade is one of the local organizations with which Mr. Bearup co-operates, in that way helping enterprises calculated to benefit the town. Among business men his standing is high and his reputation that of an honorable and efficient man of affairs. Along the line of his business, he holds membership in the San Joaquin Valley Hardware Dealers' Association and takes a warm interest in the organization. The Republican party has had his vote and influence ever since he attained his majority, and since coming to his present place of residence he has served for four years as treasurer of the county central committee. While living in Berendo he was elected justice of the peace for the second district and held the position until his removal to Madera in 1896, when he resigned. By his high principles of honor, unquestioned integrity and persevering industry, he has won the respect and confidence of those with whom he has had business dealings and has gained a place among the leading business men of his county.

HUBERT HEITMAN, D. M. D. It is safe to say that in no professional calling has science shown such marked and rapid advance as in that of dentistry, one of the best-known and most important branches of surgery, as there is scarcely an adult member of the human family but requires its services at some period of life. A comparatively few years ago but rude methods were employed in the care of the teeth, the dentist's principal requirement being a good stock of physical strength. Patient investigation, careful experiment, aided by modern discoveries and inventions, have since elevated dentistry to an honorable position among the leading sciences of the twentieth century. Prominent among the bright and intelligent young men of California who have acquired a good knowledge of this science is Hubert Heitman, a successful dentist of Merced. A son of Dr. F. W. Heitman, Sr., he was born, May 1, 1878, in College City, Colusa county, Cal., of German descent. His great-grandfather, a life-long resident of Germany, was a trumpeter in the German army, and fought against Napoleon, receiving a gold medal for bravery on the field of battle. The doctor's grandfather, Dietrich Heitman, emigrated from Germany to this country, and took up land in Illinois, where he improved a good farm, on which he resided until his death, in December, 1903, at the venerable age of eighty-three years.

Born and reared on the home farm, in Randolph county, Ill., F. W. Heitman, Sr., received exceptional educational advantages, and was graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College and the St. Louis Medical College, with the degree of M. D. About 1875 he came to California, settling first in College City, where he built up a good practice, and served for a while as county coroner. Subsequently removing to Colusa, he continued there as a physician until his death, in 1882, when but twenty-eight years old. He was a man of wide information, active and public-spirited, and a staunch supporter of the Democratic party. He married Emma Houchins, who was born in Boone county, Mo., a daughter of Samuel Houchins, a native of Kentucky. After his graduation from college Mr. Houchins removed with his family to California, becoming a pioneer of Colusa county. He engaged in farming to some extent, but for a number of years was principal of the Colusa schools, and for two or three terms served as county superintendent of schools. At the time of his death he was serving his second term as county auditor. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Emma Heitman is a woman of culture and refinement, and for the past twenty-three years has been engaged in educational work. She has two sons, Hubert, the subject of this sketch; and Dr. F. W. Heitman, who is in partnership with his brother, in Merced. Dr. F. W. Heitman, the youngest son, was born December 12, 1879, in Colusa, Cal. In 1898 he was graduated from the Colusa high school, after which he entered the dental department of Washington University, in St. Louis Mo., from which he was graduated in 1901 with the degree of D. M. D. He had the distinction of ranking the highest in the class winning first honors, and the gold medal. He began the practice of denistry in Colusa, but since 1903 has been in partnership with his brother.

Reared and educated in Colusa, Hubert Heitman completed the course of study in the high school, receiving his diploma in 1897. The following year he entered the dental department of the university of California, where he remained one year, afterwards graduating from the dental department of Washington University in St. Louis in 1901. Beginning the practice of his profession in Colusa county Dr. Heitman remained there until 1903, when, in company with his brother, he settled in Merced, where he is fast building up a good patronage, his skill as a dentist being already recognized and appreciated.

Dr. Heitman married, in Sacramento, Cal., Miss Blanche Peart, who was born in Colusa county, and was graduated from the Sacramento high school. In politics the doctor affiliates with the Democratic party. Fraternally he belongs to Merced Lodge, I. O. O. F.; he demitted from Meridian Lodge No. 100, F. & A. M., College City, and now belongs to La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M., of Merced; is a member of Merced Chapter No. 12, R. A. M., and of Yosemite Parlor, N. S. G. W. He is a member of the State Dental Association and of the Psi Phi Fraternity.

CLIFFORD H. SLAUGHTER. While the management of his farm, situated two and one-half miles northwest of Tulare, engrosses much of Mr. Slaughter's time and attention, he yet finds leisure to devote to the duties of his position as superintendent of the Tulare irrigation district, in which capacity he has served continuously since 1895. He is a member of an eastern family, and was born at Elizabethtown, Essex county, N. Y., January 18, 1854, being the youngest child of Theron and Julia (Lobdell) Slaughter, natives of the same county as himself. The paternal grandfather, Abram Slaughter, was likewise a native of Essex county, where the family became established at a very early day. Some of the name served in the war of 1812, also in the first struggle with England. During early manhood Theron Slaughter was employed as an iron miner, but after settling in Iowa in 1854 he engaged in lumber milling on the Mississippi river and eventually bought and located upon a farm near Davenport, in Scott county. There his death occurred when he lacked only five years of having rounded out a full century. His wife also died in Iowa. Of their eight children all but two attained mature years, and four are now living. One of their sons, Fayette, who is now a resident of Marshalltown, Iowa, served during the Civil war as a member of the Thirteenth Iowa Infantry.

Reared on the home farm in Scott county, Iowa, Clifford H. Slaughter attended the public school and academy at LeClaire, but at the age of sixteen left school in order to earn his own livelihood. At first he was employed in the lumbering business in Wisconsin, and from there went to the Black Hills during the first year of the excitement in the mines of that country. After prospecting and engaging in placer mining for three years, he left that region, driving to Fort Pierre and thence going by boat to Omaha, from which point he returned to the Scott county farm. After some years as a farmer near the old home, in 1884 he moved to Clinton county, Iowa, and engaged in farm pursuits near Clinton. From there he came to California in 1888 and settled in Tulare county, where he at once entered upon grain-raising. In 1893 he bought thirty-two acres near Tulare, which he has in alfalfa and an orchard, and sells hay, fruit and dairy products.

The Tulare irrigation district, of which Mr. Slaughter has been superintendent and a director since 1895, embraces three hundred miles of main and lateral canals in Tulare county, and is divided into four sections. The three headgates are respectively from the head of St. Johns, head of the Kaweah, and out of Deep creek. Every improvement has been made in order to meet the requirements of the farmers securing water from the ditch. It is the ambition of the directors to bring their system to a point of development surpassed by none, thereby enhancing the value of all the property tributary to their canals. In politics Mr. Slaughter votes with the Democratic party and at this writing acts as a member of the county central committee. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. While engaged in farming in Iowa he established domestic ties through his marriage April 22, 1885, to Miss Adele Hardt, a native of Scott county, and the recipient of fair educational advantages in that locality. Born of their union are three children, Blythe, Herman and Paul.

BENNET RISING. Ten miles southeast of Tulare and three miles from the postoffice of Woodville lies the farm home of Mr. Rising, who has made this the scene of his labors ever since coming to Tulare county in 1879. The nucleus of his present possessions he acquired by the purchase of one hundred and sixty acres in section 11, formerly owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and situated on the Tule river. After settling on the place he erected a substantial set of farm buildings and has also made the necessary arrangements for irrigation. At this writing he owns two hundred and eighty acres of land, on which he engaged in raising grain until about 1894, but since then has made a specialty of dairying and raising stock. To secure hay for his stock he has placed twenty acres under alfalfa, several crops of which may be cut in a year.

In a family of eleven children, all but two of whom attained maturity and five are now living, Bennet Rising was the youngest in order of birth and is the only member of the family to settle in California. One of his brothers, Joseph, served with a Pennsylvania regiment in the Civil war. His father, Martin Rising, was born and reared in Bavaria, Germany. Accompanied by his wife and two children, he crossed the ocean to Pennsylvania and settled in Indiana county, where he engaged in farming near the city of Indiana, and died at eighty-six years of age. While the family were living there Bennet Rising was born February 10, 1852. The mother, who bore the maiden name of Margaretta Young, was born in Bavaria and died in Pennsylvania. Both were devoted members of the Roman Catholic Church.

The boyhood years of Bennet Rising passed uneventfully upon the home farm, in the pursuit of such work as falls to the lot of a farmer's boy. In 1877 he came to California and settled in Yolo county, but after two years as a farmer there he came to Tulare county and settled upon a farm which he still owns and occupies. During his residence in Pennsylvania he was married, in Indiana county, to Miss Maggie Stadtmiller, a native of that state, her father, George Stadtmiller, having immigrated here from Germany during early manhood. Three of her brothers became residents of California, and two of them died in this locality. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Rising comprises the following children: George M. and Joseph H., who assist in the management of the home farm; Florence, who is married and lives at Farmersville, Tulare county; Mabelle, Raymond and Guy, who are with their parents. The family are connected with the Roman Catholic Church of Tulare and contribute to its maintenance and various charities. Though not active in politics, Mr. Rising always gives his support to the Democratic party. Among the many movements which meet his approval may be mentioned the free schools, the work of which he consistently supports, and for many years, while serving as trustee of Surprise district, he was able to do much to promote the interests of the home schools.

THOMAS JEFFERSON GIST. A successful farmer and dairyman, and an excellent representative of the substantial and highly esteemed residents of Tulare county, Thomas J. Gist is well deserving of especial mention in this biographical work. A native of Tennessee, he was born, July 11, 1856, in Clementsville, Clay county, which was also the birthplace of his father, the late Jabez C. Gist. Of English descent, he comes of honored colonial stock, his great-great-grandfather, Christopher Gist, having served under Gen. George Washington in both the French and Indian wars, and in the Revolution, being an aide-de-camp in both, and in the former acting as guide through the Indian country, his name being prominently mentioned as such in the various histories of the United States.

The son of a pioneer farmer of Tennessee, Jabez C. Gist grew to manhood on the home plantation, succeeding to the independent occupation in which he was reared. At the age of twenty-two years he was elected justice of the peace, and served most capably until the breaking out of the Civil war. When his native state seceded, he remained loyal to the Union, resigned his office, and, being a strong abolitionist, freed the slaves which had come into his possession by inheritance. Disposing of his property in that section, he removed to Tompkinsville, Ky., where he continued farming for a number of years. He became active while there in public affairs, and in 1875 was elected justice of the peace. Resigning the office the following year, he came to the Pacific coast, and the following six years was employed as an agriculturist in Woodland, Yolo county, Cal. Coming from there to Tulare county in 1881, he located about three and one-half miles northwest of Tulare, buying a ranch containing eighty acres, and there continued farming until his retirement from active pursuits. Moving then to Tulare, he was an honored resident of this city until his death, May 30, 1903, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was elected justice of the peace while in this county, and served with efficiency for fourteen years, being elected on the Republican ticket, which he invariably supported. He was a Mason, and a valued member of the Christian Church, with which he united in 1878. He married Kittie M. Marrs, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Henry B. Marrs, a farmer, and for many years clerk of the Monroe county courts. She died in Tulare, in April, 1899. Of the ten children born of their union, seven survive, namely: Frank M., a horticulturist in Santa Ana; M. H., of Woodland, Cal.; Thomas J.; Levi, of Los Angeles, blacksmith for the Southern Pacific Railway Company; Jabez R., a stationary engineer, employed by the Southern Pacific Railway Company; Mrs. Luella Sullivan, of Tulare; and James B., assistant cashier in the Los Angeles Central Bank.

A small lad when his parents removed to Kentucky, Thomas J. Gist grew to manhood on the home farm, acquiring a practical education in the district school. Coming with the family to California he completed his studies at the Hesperian College, and in 1881 came to Tulare county, where for about a year he worked in a lumber yard. He subsequently worked at farming for awhile, being afterward superintendent of the Little Tulare Ditch & Kaweah Canal. In 1886 Mr. Gist purchased his present ranch, lying four miles northwest of Tulare. It contains one hundred and sixty acres of land, all under irrigation from the canal, and on it he has made improvements of a noteworthy character. He has fifty acres of alfalfa, the remainder being devoted to grain and stock, and is carrying on an extensive and profitable business as a dairyman and stock-raiser, his estate being numbered among the best and most productive in the neighborhood. Mr. Gist is one of the leading agriculturists of this part of the county, and is a stockholder in both the Tulare Rochdale Association, and the Tulare Co-Operative Creamery Association.

November 3, 1886, Mr. Gist married Fannie Zumwalt, who was born near College City, Colusa county. Her father, J. B. Zumwalt, emigrated from Missouri to California in 1849, crossing the plains with ox-teams. At first he worked in the mines, and then located as a farmer in Colusa county. In 1878 he settled in Tulare county, about four miles northwest of Tulare, becoming owner of a farm containing a thousand acres, which he managed successfully a number of years. Subsequently removing to Irvington, he lived there retired until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Lydia A. Dewitt, was born in Kentucky, and is now a resident of Tulare. She bore him eleven children, all of whom are living, Mrs. Gist being the fourth child. Mr. and Mrs. Gist are the parents of four children, Cecil, Brooks, Harold and Maurine. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gist are members of the Christian Church, and for fourteen years Mr. Gist has served as superintendent of its Sunday-school. In his political views he is a true-blue Republican, supporting the principles of his party at all times. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and of the American Yeomen.

LOUIS SELIGMAN. The Seligman family is of German extraction and has been identified with the history of Rhenish Bavaria from a very early period. During the meteoric career of the first Napoleon the regimental commissary of his army was Aaron Seligman, a stock dealer, who delivered meat and provisions to the soldiers on contract. Among the children of this ancestor was S. Seligman, who became a commission merchant in his native Rhenish Bavaria, and who married Helen Frank, a native of the same vicinity, her father, Lipman Frank, having been engaged in business there. Both S. Seligman and his wife passed away, but several of their children survive, the sons being Louis and Emil, of Dinuba, Cal., and Ferdinand, a prosperous lumber dealer at Bingen on the Rhine. The daughters are: Miss Carrie Seligman; Mrs. Hauchen Phillips; Mrs. Sanchen Gutenberg, of Coblenz, Germany; and Mrs. Regina Borg, of Albisheim, Germany. Mrs. Phillips formerly resided in Hanford, Kings county, Cal., where her husband conducted a general merchandise establishment; they now reside in Bingen, Germany, at the home of Ferdinand Seligman.

The second son, Louis Seligman, was born in Albisheim on the Pfrim, eighteen miles from Mainz, in Rhenish Hesse, Germany, July 24, 1851, and as a boy lived with his parents in Albisheim, about twelve miles from Worms. He served an apprenticeship of three years in the lumber trade in Bingen. While he liked his native home he was fond of learning the ways of the world, and in October of 1868 landed in New York City, where he secured employment as a clerk with L. Dreyfuss & Co., at Nos. 292-336 Broadway. Later he held a clerkship with E. Loeb & Co., at No. 9 Charter street, New Orleans. In 1871 he came to California and became clerk with Levis, Sweet & Co., in Kingston, Fresno county, later clerking for Jacob Einstein & Co., in Centerville and Kingston. During the years 1876 and 1877 he managed the clothing department for S. Sweet & Co., at Visalia. In the latter year he embarked in business for himself at Visalia, where he kept the finest goods of that day and town, making a specialty of fine jewelry, fine cigars, musical instruments, sewing machines and fancy goods. February 3, 1897, he brought his stock of goods to Dinuba and with his brother formed the firm of L. & E. Seligman, proprietors of the largest department store in the town. In addition he has stock in the Bank of Dinuba and owns several farms. In politics he has always been independent. When twenty-one years of age he was made a Mason in Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M. Since 1873 he has been associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having been initiated during that year into King's River Lodge at Centerville, and since 1875 he has been a member of Four Creek Lodge No. 94. Public spirited and capable, he has done much to promote the progress of the various communities where he has resided.

EMIL SELIGMAN. A long experience in the dry-goods business, beginning with an apprenticeship under successful merchants in Germany, has qualified Mr. Seligman for the capable discharge of his responsibilities as a member of the firm of L. & E. Seligman, proprietors of the largest department store at Dinuba. A native of Rhenish Bavaria, he was next to the youngest among nine children and was born February 17, 1858. At the age of fourteen he became an apprentice to the dry-goods business at Worms, where he served for three years. The year 1875 found him in California, where he secured a clerkship with the S. Sweet Company at Visalia and later aided in establishing the general mercantile store of Phillips, Sweet & Co., at Hanford, which the great fire there destroyed. Afterward he was employed by Sweet & Co. as manager of a lumber yard at Traver. After three years, in 1887, with Levis, Sweet & Co., he started a general mercantile establishment in a building 40x90 feet.

On the selling out of the business and the dissolution of the partnership, in 1896, Mr. Seligman formed a partnership with his brother Louis and opened a store in Dinuba near his present site. In 1902 they erected a substantial brick double store, 60x80 feet, two floors, with a large warehouse in the rear, 50x80, and here they conduct a department store, making a specialty of general merchandise and hardware. In addition they are interested in farming and own several farms within a radius of ten miles. When the project was first mentioned to start a bank in Dinuba Emil Seligman was enthusiastic in behalf of the plan and in February, 1902, he assisted in the work of organization, at which time he was chosen the first president and a member of the board of directors. While he still remains in the latter capacity he resigned the presidency after a short time, in order to devote himself to the increasing demands of the department store. In politics he favors Republican principles. For eight years he acted as treasurer of the Alta irrigation district. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his connection with the latter order dating from his residence in Traver. It was while living at Traver that he met and was united in marriage with Anna Fry, a native of Switzerland, and of their union they have a family of four sons and four daughters.

THOMAS C. GAINES. As a pioneer Thomas C. Gaines has been identified with the history of California for a half century, and has experienced the hardships, dangers and privations incident to such a life. He first came to California in 1850, returning east about four years later, and in 1856 again came to the "land of sunshine and flowers," which had made so great an impression upon him that he could not be satisfied to make his home in the rigorous climate of Wisconsin. In July, 1873, he located upon his present property eighteen miles northwest of Visalia, paying purchase price twice, the first time buying a squatter's right, and when the railroad claimed it, he bought it from them. He has given energy and thought to the cultivation and improvement of his farm, and has made a success of his work. His life-history is interesting in a volume gathered from the lives of the representative pioneers of the state.

Born in St. Anthony, Canada, in 1830, Thomas C. Gaines was the son of John Gaines, a native of Quebec, who became a farmer in St. Anthony, where he died. His wife, Mary, a native of Canada, is also deceased. Thomas C. Gaines was the youngest of eight children. When about ten years old he went to what was then Dunn county, Wis., where he found employment sufficient to make his living, being dependent upon his own resources. He received but scant education, but in the intervening years has made every effort to acquire that which his youth failed to give him, and has thus become a well-read, well-informed man. He engaged in lumbering principally during his residence in Wisconsin, in 1850 with several comrades crossing the plains on horseback and also by pack animals. After their safe arrival in Hornitos, Mariposa county, Cal., Mr. Gaines found employment in the mines for about eighteen months. Returning east in 1854, he spent some time in Wisconsin, Missouri and Iowa, and in 1856 came via New York and the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco, which city he reached July 4. Going at once to the mines, he was engaged for a time at Placerville and Hornitos, where he prospected, after which he went to Santa Cruz county and engaged in lumbering in the redwood forests. He continued so occupied until 1864, when he once more tried mining in Mariposa county, being located at Mariposa and Princeton, in Colusa county. In July, 1873, he came to Tulare county, and became the owner of his present property. He has since added by purchase to his land, now owning two hundred and forty acres, which he rents to his son, Francis, who owns four hundred and forty acres adjoining. The farm is devoted to general farming and stock-raising.

In Santa Cruz county Mr. Gaines married Mary Vasques, who was born in Alameda county, Cal., but which was then Contra Costa county, to which state her father, Jose Maria Vasques, came after service in the Mexican war. They are the parents of the following children: Lucy, the wife of W. K. Hammond of Fresno; Mary, the wife of Peter Hanson of Stockton; Charlotte, the wife of Fred Emory of Fresno; Amelia, the wife of Scott Gilliam of Fresno; Ellen, the wife of Charley C. Teburg of Oakland; Lena, who married Frank Smith, and Pearl, at home;

A. Frank is farming the old home place and owns four hundred and forty acres adjoining, and leases enough more land to make fifteen hundred acres; Joseph R., the fifth, is also engaged in farming; and Edward, the tenth, is a farmer. The eldest son, Thomas, died at the age of twenty-four years. In his political convictions Mr. Gaines is a staunch Republican and in local affairs is quite prominent, now serving as school trustee of the Townsend district.

DENNIS JAMES LOONEY. An experience of two years as manager of the Tracy Publishing Company, publishers of the Tracy Press, abundantly qualified Mr. Looney to assume the duties connected with the position of proprietor and editor of the paper, which he purchased February 10, 1903. The Press is issued on Saturday of each week and is a six-column quarto, devoted to the interests of the town and surrounding country, independent in politics, favoring the best men irrespective of political affiliations, and maintaining that the welfare of a community depends less upon the success of a party platform than upon the citizenship of men of energy, high principles of honor and progressive spirit.

Near Tracy, Cal., in San Joaquin county, Dennis James Looney was born April 19, 1873, being a son of Daniel J. and Mary (Linnehan) Looney. His father, who was born at Killarney, Ireland, received an excellent education in his native land. After coming to America he settled in New York and was at West Point when the Civil war broke out, whereupon he was appointed to service in the commissary department of the Union army. The only injuries he received in the service were caused by a fall from a horse in the cavalry. At the close of the war he came to California and served as a government guard at San Quentin, Marin county, being stationed there at the time of the attempted assassination of Captain Murphy. At the expiration of his period of service he settled near Bethany and took up a government tract of one hundred and sixty acres, which he improved with a house and other needed buildings. At this writing he continues to make his home on the same farm, but being an invalid is obliged to delegate to others the active management of the land.

In a family comprising three sons and one daughter now living Dennis James Looney is next to the oldest. His advantages for an education were meagre. After attaining the age of fifteen years he could no longer attend school, but was obliged to devote his entire time to work on the farm. However, he was always fond of reading and by self-improvement has acquired an excellent education. In addition to general farm work he operated a hay press and threshing machine in season, having acquired a knowledge of machinery through working in a machine shop at intervals for two years. After serving for a year as constable in 1902 he was elected justice of the peace of Tulare township, San Joaquin county, on the Democratic ticket, carrying every precinct over his opponent and taking the oath of office January 5, 1903, for a term of four years. Since his election he has had his office in the court room at the town hall. In addition to his duties as justice and as editor of the Press he represents the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company of Hartford and to some extent is also engaged in the handling of real estate. In local councils of the Democratic party he wields considerable influence, as is evidenced by his membership on the county and state central committees of the party. In the Native Sons of the Golden West he is connected with Tracy Parlor No. 186, in which he acts as senior past president.

EDWARD ELDEN SCRANTON. The mercantile interests of Tulare are ably represented by the enterprising firm of Anderson & Scranton, which has attained a high standing in business circles. Beginning in a modest way, these gentlemen have established one of the most complete and best-stocked dry goods houses in this part of the county, and are conducting a profitable and a rapidly increasing trade. Edward Elden Scranton, the junior member of this firm, was born December 10, 1866, in West Liberty, Muscatine county, Iowa, a son of Irving W. Scranton.

A native of Ohio, Irving W. Scranton began life for himself as a merchant in West Liberty, Iowa. He subsequently removed to Missouri, locating first in Westboro, where he engaged for a time in mercantile pursuits, from there going to Mound City, and there residing until his death. Enlisting in an Iowa regiment during the Civil war, he took part in several engagements, in one battle being wounded. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannah J. Maguire, was born in Pennsylvania, and is now a resident of St. Joseph, Mo. She bore her husband two daughters and four sons, all of whom are living, Edward Elden being the second child.

Having completed the course of study in the district schools of West Liberty, Iowa, and Westboro, Mo., Edward E. Scranton began to earn his own living when a lad of fourteen or fifteen years, for three years thereafter working in a livery stable in his native town. Entering then a store located just across the street from the stable, he was first employed in a modest position, but securing a clerkship by applying for a vacancy, he remained with his employers from 1886 until 1890, giving much satisfaction to the firm, and becoming familiar with the details of the business. Coming to Tulare in 1890, Mr. Scranton secured a situation with F. M. Shultz, for ten years having charge of the dry goods department of his store. Resigning the position in 1900, he formed a partnership with Frank E. Anderson, a brief sketch of whom may be found elsewhere in this biographical volume, and March 15, 1900, they embarked in business under the present firm name of Anderson & Scranton, and by straightforward dealings and honest methods have built up a lucrative trade, their patronage being extensive and lucrative and constantly growing.

In Westboro, Mo., Mr. Scranton married Roberta Hightower, who was born in Nebraska City, Neb., and they have one child, Grace B. Public-spirited and enterprising, Mr. Scranton takes an intelligent interest in local affairs, and is a member of the board of library trustees; a member and a director of the Tulare Building and Loan Association; and one of the directors of the Odd Fellows' building. He was made an Odd Fellow in Westboro, Mo., and is now past grand of Tulare City Lodge No. 306, I. O. O. F.; and a member of the Fraternal Aid. He also belongs to the Tulare Board of Trade. In his religious beliefs he is a Methodist, and is a valued member of the church of that denomination. Politically he supports the principles of the Republican party by voice and vote.

W. H. GRANT. Numbered among the horticulturists of Tulare county is W. H. Grant, who is located on a ranch of thirty-nine acres, of which thirty-five is given over to the cultivation of oranges, all bearing navels. Mr. Grant is a native of Cherryfield, Me., where he was born February 3, 1869. His father, Timothy L. Grant, was a New England farmer. A descendant of patriotic ancestry he enlisted in a Maine regiment during the Civil war and served until its close. His wife, formerly Mary Willie, a native of Maine, is also living, their home being still in that state. The eldest of five living children, W. H. Grant was reared to young manhood in his native state, receiving a good education through the medium of the public and high schools in the vicinity of his home. In manhood he became connected with the George Emory Company, of Boston, who were engaged in getting out mahogany lumber in Central America. He was sent to that country, where he remained for four years, and was then located in the northern part of Minnesota. Finally resigning his position with this firm, he went to Minneapolis, Minn., where he accepted a like position with another lumber firm. In Eveleth, Minn.,

April 16, 1904, he was united in marriage with Eda F. Conway, the daughter of Thomas A. Conway, whose biographical sketch follows. After his marriage Mr. Grant came to California, locating upon a ranch of thirty-nine acres. This is all under irrigation from the Pioneer Ditch, in which company Mr. Grant is interested. He is also identified with the Zante Citrus Association. Fraternally Mr. Grant was made a Mason in Cherryfield, Me., and both himself and wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Politically he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party.

THOMAS A. CONWAY. For only a brief time was Thomas A. Conway a citizen of the vicinity of Portersville, although he had been a horticulturist of Zante since 1893. He came to this locality in 1901, purchasing twenty acres of navel oranges, and engaged in its cultivation and improvement until his death, which occurred February 17, 1904. He was a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, where his father, Thomas, spent his life as a jeweler. Thomas A. Conway worked in a planing mill in Minnesota, acting as foreman for the firm of Smith & Wyman. Deciding to locate in California, he was engaged as a horticulturist in Zante from 1893 to 1901, owning a fifteen-acre orchard of oranges, which he set out. After his location here he remained until his death, one of the successful orange growers of the vicinity. Fraternally he was a prominent Mason and politically was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. During the Civil war he enlisted for service, and was raised to the office of second lieutenant in the Twenty-first Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry for the period of three years. He was united in marriage with Lane Miller, a native of Naples, Ill., and the daughter of Asher Miller. Her father was a miller by occupation in Naples, where his death occurred. Mrs. Conway died in Minneapolis February 16, 1900. They were the parents of two children, Eda F., the wife of W. H. Grant, and Alice, the wife of Seymour S. Hough, who resides in Eveleth, Minn.

ARCHIBALD YELL HINDS. Since boyhood Archibald Yell Hinds has been a resident of Tulare county, an eye-witness of the development of the country from its most primitive stages to its present prosperous condition, and a participant in many of the movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. When he first located in the county there were only a few houses upon the present site of Visalia, which city was then known as

MRS. R. D. FLETCHER

Four Creeks. Deer and elk were plentiful throughout the country and even bears were sometimes shot. The mail for the settlers was obtained at Fort Miller and their groceries were brought from Stockton, and all the hardships, privations and dangers incident to pioneer life made up the largest part of their existence. In reminiscence Mr. Hinds often goes back to those early days of the state, and gives to the younger generation a history replete with adventure and excitement.

Born in Crawford county, Ark., November 8, 1837, Archibald Yell Hinds is a son of David and Margaret Ann (Maddox) Hinds, both of whom died in that state. Of their family of seven children, three sons and four daughters, two are living, of whom Archibald Yell is the fourth in order of birth. He was reared in Arkansas and trained to the practical duties which were his as the son of a farmer. April 15, 1852, when he was less than fifteen years old, he started to California with his brother Edward, who died in Exeter, in 1894. They were equipped with ox-teams, provisions and all necessary articles and after crossing the Arkansas river, set out through Texas, via El Paso, Tucson and Fort Yuma, to Los Angeles, and although the train consisted of but five wagons, known as the Van Buren Company, they came through safely without an attack from the Indians, although many atrocities were committed both in front and behind them. In the fall of the year Mr. Hinds drove to Gilroy, Santa Clara county, and engaged in farming for one year. In October, 1853, he came to Tulare county, the present city of Visalia being then known as Four Creeks, and having but three settlers, viz: Richard Chattan, Abram Murray and S. C. Brown, names familiar to all who revere and honor the links which bind the prosperous present to the historic past. He located on what is known as Hinds' prairie, two miles east of Visalia, which land his brother had entered, and here the two resided and engaged in general farming and hog raising. In 1866 he removed to the place which has ever since remained his home, located within one and a half miles of Exeter, and a part of which is under the People's ditch. He purchased the property from C. A. Williston, a sheep grower, immediately after which he began improvements and cultivation, breaking the land and sowing it to grain. In addition to his one hundred and fourteen acres on sections 33 and 34, township 18, range 26, he rented land and carried on his operations on seven or eight hundred acres. He was soon numbered among the successful farmers and stock-raisers in this vicinity and has since continued to merit the prominence which became his in the pioneer days of the state.

Mr. Hinds has been twice married, the first ceremony being performed on the Tule river and uniting him with Elizabeth Lewis, a native of Missouri, who died in Visalia. He was afterward married at Outside creek to Sarah Earsley Buckman, a native of Union, Ky. She came of an old Kentucky family, her father, Clement E., being the son of John Buckman, both of whom were natives of that state. Both were farmers by occupation. Clement E. Buckman removed in young manhood to the vicinity of Fort Scott, Kans., where he followed farming for seven years. In 1865 he immigrated to California, crossing the plains with ox-teams. He brought a band of cattle with him, and his daughter Sarah, then only thirteen years old, rode horseback and helped drive them, her brothers and sisters also helping in the work. The winter was spent at Prescott, Ariz., after which they came on to Fort Rock, now Kingman, where the Indians stole their stock and started to drive them away. Mrs. Hinds and her brother, A. J., himself only sixteen years old, started in pursuit, and as the herder had killed two Indians the others were evidently frightened away, for the cattle were recovered and the party returned to Prescott. In the spring of 1866 they came to California and located in Tulare county upon a farm, where the father died at the age of fifty-seven years. His wife, formerly Savilla Shanks, a native of Kentucky, also died in this vicinity. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters, of whom all but one son are now living. Mrs. Hinds was reared to young womanhood in Tulare county, where the balance of her life has been spent. Of the twelve children born to herself and husband, eight attained maturity, namely: Clement Emery, engaged in the butcher business in Visalia; Clara Josephine, the wife of D. J. Toomey, of Visalia; Ollie Savilla, the wife of G. B. Simpson, of Stockton; Joseph Orville, a farmer in the vicinity of Exeter; James Robert, a butcher of Visalia; Lawrence Buckman; Sarah Margaret; and Mary. Mr. Hinds is a Democrat in his political convictions and has served as school trustee for many years. The family are members of the Catholic Church of Visalia.

ANDREW FLETCHER. The name of Andrew Fletcher is associated with the pioneer history of the state of California, he being one of the emigrants of 1850 who laid aside the pick and shovel to assist in the agricultural development of the country. A native of Edinburgh, Scotland, born September 24, 1813, he was brought to the United States by his parents when only five years old. He became a resident of Greene county, Ohio, where he remained until attaining his majority, when he located in Knox county, Ill. Following the westward trend of emigration he crossed the plains in 1850 by means of ox teams, and upon his safe arrival in Placerville, Cal., engaged in mining on the Feather river. He met with varying fortune for four years, when, in 1854, in company with Joseph Spier, he started the new ditch, bringing the water from the middle south fork of the Stanislaus river for mining purposes. The enterprise necessitated the expenditure of $1,000,000, but brought about results of incalculable benefit. In 1859 Mr. Fletcher went to Santa Cruz, where he remained until 1873, when he came to Tulare county. Here, in 1878, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Rachel D. Elkins, and made his home upon the farm where she lived until his death, which occurred July 29, 1892. He was mourned by many friends and the community suffered a loss in his demise such as can only be felt when a public-spirited, honorable and upright citizen, a leader in all matters of reform, a social and kindly nature, passes on to the reward which awaits right living. In his political convictions he was a conscientious Republican and gave his best efforts to advance the principles he endorsed.

Mrs. Fletcher was in maidenhood Rachel D. Neal, born in Lincoln county, N. C., May 26, 1834. Her father, Moses Neal, was born in the same state, February 10, 1806, and was a farmer by occupation. He emigrated to Missouri in 1839, locating in Stoddard county, and a year later went to Cape Girardeau county, where he farmed. In 1874 he came to California with his daughter, and died here at an advanced age. His wife, formerly Susan Smith, was born in Pennsylvania, and died in Missouri. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters. Rachel D. received her education in the common schools of Missouri, where she was reared to young womanhood. There she was united in marriage with Louis Elkins, a native of Tennessee, who died in Missouri. They were the parents of two children, Jane, now Mrs. Eaton, and Lee Lindsey, the efficient night watchman of Portersville. In 1874 Mrs. Elkins came to California with her father, daughter and grandson and located near Mountain View, Tulare county. After her marriage to Mr. Fletcher she resided on the latter's farm of one hundred and twenty acres, but since his death she has rented the land.

FRANK STEPHEN STANLEY. Prominent among the foremost citizens of Crows Landing is Frank Stephen Stanley, one of the leading merchants in this part of Stanislaus county. A man of great energy, resolution and persistency, he has built up his present fine trade solely by his own efforts, and is justly recognized as one of the most prosperous business men of the town. A son of Daniel Stanley, he was born November 2, 1861, in Colorado.

Born, reared and educated in Ohio, Daniel Stanley resided in his native state until 1859. Becoming interested to some extent in mining pursuits, he then removed with his family to Colorado, where he remained five years. Locating in Cass county, Iowa, in 1864, he followed his trade of carpenter and builder in that locality for many years, retaining, however, his interests in his Colorado mining property. In 1900, he came to California, and has since lived retired from business cares, making his home in Newman. His wife, whose maiden name was Lois Parsons, also was born in Ohio, and died in Iowa. Four sons and two daughters blessed their marriage, Frank S., the special subject of this sketch, being the third child in order of birth.

But three years of age when his parents removed to Iowa, Frank S. Stanley grew to man's estate in Cass county, obtaining his early education in the district schools. With the zeal and ambition of youth he came to California in 1882, and for six years thereafter was engaged in quartz mining in Tuolumne county. Removing to Stanislaus county in 1888, he worked for two years as carpenter and builder, keeping busily employed. In 1890 he located at Crows Landing, opening a general merchandise store, where he has built up a large and remunerative trade. Enterprising and progressive, Mr. Stanley carries a complete stock of goods, aiming in every manner to please the tastes and meet the demands of his numerous patrons, and he is meeting with great success as a general merchant.

In Tuolumne county, Mr. Stanley married Maggie Jasper, a native of that county, and into their household three children have been born, namely: Lois, Hubert and Teresa. In politics Mr. Stanley affiliates with the Republican party, and though he is interested in local and national affairs, he has never been an aspirant for official honors.

J. M. MUGRIDGE. A resident of California but a little over four years, Mr. Mugridge has gained for himself an enviable reputation as a horticulturist and his place is one of the best in this section of the county. To build up and improve a ranch in such a short time requires a great amount of hard labor, but in face of the many obstacles he has had to overcome, our subject has made hosts of friends and is considered one of the leading members of his district.

A native of New Hampshire, he was born in Concord, August 27, 1867, a son of John Y.

and Maria E. (Eaton) Mugridge. The father was also a native of Concord, where he was engaged in the practice of law, becoming one of the best known men in the state. For years he took a leading part in political matters and at one time had the distinction of serving as president of the New Hampshire State Senate. His wife was the daughter of Dr. Leonard Eaton, a graduate of Dartmouth College and a leading physician of the state. Mrs. Mugridge became the mother of two children, Annie, now Mrs. F. L. Pattee, of Boston; and J. M.

Reared in the city of his birth, J. M. Mugridge there and elsewhere received an excellent education. At the age of twenty he located in Colorado, pre-empting one hundred and sixty acres of land in the San Luis valley. The following year he sold out and returned east on account of the death of an aunt. With the intention of entering Dartmouth he spent some time in a preparatory school, but changing his plans he came west again in 1890, locating in Wyoming, where he soon became interested in the sheep business. This occupation he continued to follow for eight years, when he disposed of his business and made a trip east. After a short time spent amid the scenes of his boyhood, he again started for the west, finally going to Old Mexico, where he became interested in growing coffee. In 1900, owing to the unhealthful climate, Mr. Mugridge was compelled to return to California. On his arrival he located in Tulare county, purchasing twenty-two acres of land near Naranjo. In order to become familiar with the growing of oranges he spent six months in Tulare county, at the end of that time beginning the improvement of his own ranch, which is now a very attractive place.

A Republican in politics he is deeply interested in the welfare of his party, but has neither the time nor the inclination to take an active part in political matters, preferring rather to devote his entire time to his own business interests.

HECTOR BURNES. The records of the Burness family prove them to have a long and honorable Scotch ancestry. Their most distinguished representative, Robert Burns, whose name is immortal in the world of literature, changed the spelling of the family name to the form by which he is universally known, but other members of the family retained the original spelling. Among the near relatives of the Scotch bard was William M. Burness, a native of Montrose, Scotland, and a manufacturer by occupation. In religion he adhered to the Presbyterian religion, which had been the family faith since the founding of that denomination. Among his children was a son, John Young, born at Lawrence Kirk, Kincardineshire, near the shores of the North sea. Possessing mechanical ability of more than ordinary extent, he utilized his genius in the starting of the first power loom at Brechin, Forfarshire, not many miles from the place where he was born and reared. The plant which he built up became one of the most important concerns of that city and furnished employment to more than eight hundred hands. His successful management of an undertaking of so great magnitude proved the possession on his part of business ability as well as mechanical genius. With the passing of the years and the approach of old age, he found the responsibilities of the plant greater than his physical strength justified, and he therefore relinquished the management of the works, and in 1893 came to San Francisco, where he has since made his home. In his younger years he possessed a voice of rare melody and power, and his ability as a musician brought him into circles where artistic genius was the open sesame and the sole passport. In his marriage he became allied with an old Scotch family, his wife, Mary Forbes, having been born at Mary Kirk, near Lawrence Kirk and Montrose, where her father, John Forbes, made his home, following the occupation of a fisherman on the coast of the North sea.

In the family of John Y. and Mary (Forbes) Burness there were seven sons and three daughters, all of whom are living but one son and one daughter. Of the sons we note the following: William M. and John E. are employed respectively as first engineer and chief engineer of the Palace hotel in San Francisco; Thomas N. is an instructor of music and organist in the Dalziel parish church in Matherwell, Scotland; Hector is the representative of Balfour, Guthrie & Co., in the San Joaquin valley, and resides in Fresno; Alexander is connected with the same company at Bakersfield, this state; David died in boyhood; and Robert D. is professor of music and organist in Calvary Church, San Francisco. Hector Burness was born at Dundee, Scotland, January 18, 1859, and attended the Brechin public schools until twelve years of age, when he was apprenticed as a bookkeeper in the Denburn works (founded by his father at Brechin). After three years there he was apprenticed as a banker in Brechin, where he served a term of three years and then continued for about eighteen months as an employe. On resigning that place, he went to London and for four and one-half years held the position of head bookkeeper in a merchant's office.

Leaving England in August, 1884, Mr. Burness came to the United States in order to accept a position previously offered him as head bookkeeper for a large wholesale dry goods house in Austin, Tex. Arriving there, the firm wished him to wait for a time before taking up the work, but, the position still not being given him, in January, 1885, he came to San Francisco, where his first position was in the auditing department of the Wells-Fargo Company. After three months he resigned to become bookkeeper with Balfour, Guthrie & Co., on the Chowchilla ranch in Merced county. This position he filled for four years. When the company purchased twenty-five hundred acres of wild land in Fresno county, in August, 1880, he was sent to Fresno to take charge of the land and superintend its improvement. Immediately taking up the work, he set out a vineyard and orchard and placed many acres under alfalfa. Some of the land he also laid out in small tracts and sold. However, while some was sold, the company kept increasing their holdings by purchase, until they now have about sixteen thousand acres in the San Joaquin valley, directly under the control of Mr. Burness. Among their properties are the Anita and Las Palmas vineyards of one hundred and sixty acres each, both vineyards of the very best class.

In 1890 Mr. Burness was appointed the company's sole representative in the San Joaquin valley and was placed in charge of their loans, with headquarters in Fresno. Under his direct supervision are the following properties: Pacific and Agricultural Colonization Company's lands, aggregating six thousand acres and including the Anita vineyard of one hundred and sixty acres; Strathmore Land Company, with over four thousand acres of orange land, irrigated by a modern pumping plant; the Balfour, Guthrie Investment Company's holdings of two thousand acres in Stanislaus county, all in alfalfa, and improved with pumping plants, etc.; the Thompson ranch in Napa county, comprising six hundred acres, of which four hundred acres are being reclaimed; and other properties under the control of Balfour, Guthrie & Co. His offices are in the Patterson block, Fresno, while he makes his home on the Anita vineyard, one of the most picturesque vineyards in the entire state, and frequently visited by tourists who have heard of its many attractions.

Besides the numerous responsibilities that come to him as the company's representative in the San Joaquin valley, Mr. Burness finds time to identify himself with other activities, notably the Fresno Realty & Agency Company, which he assisted in organizing and of which he is now a director; also the South Branch Ditch Company, of which he is vice-president and a director; the Kearney Vineyard Syndicate, in which he is a director; and the California Raisin Growers' Association, in which he served as a director during 1901-02 and at the same time held office as its treasurer. After coming to Fresno he married Miss Mary Young, who was born at Almond Bank, near Perth, Scotland. Of their union are three children, Hector Ian, Thomas Binny, and Mary Anita (the two latter being twins). The family attend the Presbyterian Church and Mr. and Mrs. Burness are active workers in that denomination. His political views are in harmony with Republican principles and he casts his ballot for the men and measures of that party. An active member of St. Andrew's Society, at one time he officiated as president of the organization. While in Sanger he was made a Mason and has since transferred his membership to Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. Personally he is a man of rare qualities, combining the honor, thrift and integrity of his Scotch progenitors with the enterprise and keen judgment that are distinctively American traits. Perhaps none of his characteristics impress the stranger more than his excellent judgment, which is evinced in his sagacious control of the lands and loans of his firm and their allied companies. With justice he is ranked among the most influential men in the valley.

OLE SVENSEN. The lives of some men, mayhap of the majority, are spent in quiet and contentment, with few events of consequence to any excepting the immediate participants. Not so, however, with the subject of this sketch, Ole Svensen, whose life record is rich in incident and experience, reading like a tale of romance, which at times becomes almost tragical. He has lived and labored in many different countries of the world, has won and lost fortunes, and now, having for thirty-five years been associated with the agricultural prosperity of Stanislaus county, is living retired from active pursuits on his finely improved ranch, lying two miles west of Modesto. A native of Westre Hedemarken, Norway, he was born April 26, 1827, at precisely seven o'clock and two minutes A. M., a son of Swen Reyerson and Maret Reyerson, both natives of Norway.

At the age of eight years, being dependent upon his own resources, he left home, and while a youth learned the stone-mason's trade, which he followed until twenty years old. Emigrating thence from Norway, Mr. Svensen sailed for America, landing in New York City, and very soon after went to Wisconsin, where he had a brother, Christian Svensen. In the same year, about 1847, in company with ten Americans, he and his brother went to South America to search for gold, and from there made their first trip to California. Returning to South America, Mr. Svensen and his companions went to Lima city, Peru, and from there to the Andes mountains, where, in the ensuing three months, each of the twelve men in the party made $15,000 in mining. In 1849 Mr. Svensen made his second trip to California, locating in Auburn, Placer county, where he engaged in mining pursuits. From 1856 until 1858 he was similarly employed in Shasta county, being very successful. Leaving claims that were then, in 1858, paying him $12 a day, he went to British Columbia on a prospecting tour. Previous to this time, Mr. Svensen had bought property in San Francisco, giving $80,000 for the two and one-half blocks of land lying just back of the present site of the Palace hotel. This he subsequently sold for $280,000, and it is now valued at more than $15,000,000.

Six months after his arrival in British Columbia, Mr. Svensen joined a company of seventy men, with whom he made an extended prospecting trip, traveling through Alaska, and going to Siberia, where they passed over the Amur province to the great desert of Asia. There the party were engaged in mining for two and one-half years, during which time terrible privations and hardships were endured by the few who survived. At times their only food was grass roots and berries; even black bear, the only game in that region, being scarce. Out of the seventy men that left British Columbia, only fourteen returned, the others having perished from exposure, hardships and starvation, and each of these fourteen men brought back with him from $5,000 to $10,000, a sum scarce worth mentioning compared with the sufferings they had endured. Mr. Svensen returned to British Columbia by steamer, from there coming to San Francisco, bringing with him $18,000 in cash, which was $262,000 less than he had in his pockets when he left California.

Locating next in Shasta county, Mr. Svensen made $70,000 mining in a short space of time. With this sum he went to Idaho, where he bought a claim farm, paying Mr. Dodge $8,000 for the claim, and put in a dam the following winter, which soon washed out; subsequently, selling the claim to a Chinese company for $6,000, he returned to San Francisco. Deciding to turn his attention to agriculture, he visited different parts of the state, and in 1870 located in Stanislaus county, buying his present home ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, situated two miles west of Modesto. He later bought three hundred and twenty acres additional, but which he subsequently sold. For many years thereafter he carried on farming on an extensive scale, at times renting three thousand acres of land, and in one year, alone, making $10,000 in raising grain. He continued in active labor until 1898, but since then has rented his ranch, and is now living retired, enjoying the reward of his earlier years of toil. Since he first came to the Pacific coast wonderful changes have taken place, the luxuries of those early days having become the necessities of the present time. For the first apple that he ate in the Santa Clara valley he paid $6, and he has paid as high as $6 for a gallon of milk.

In San Francisco, Mr. Svensen married Rachael Bareg, a native of Norway, and they have one child, Norwena Elizabeth. In his political affiliations Mr. Svensen is independent, voting with the courage of his convictions. He cast his first presidential vote in favor of James Buchanan, and has since supported the candidate which he thinks best fitted for the office.

PERRY LeBLANC. The name which heads this review is one remembered by the early citizens of Fresno, Cal., as that of a man who proved a potent factor in the development and progress of this city and the advancement of its best interests. Mr. LeBlanc was a native of Vermilion Parish, La., where he was born in 1839, the descendant of French ancestry, his grandfather having emigrated from France. He was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools. During the Civil war he served in a Louisiana regiment, and in 1868 left his native state and settled in California, locating first in Stockton, San Joaquin county, where he engaged in general farming on the Mokelumne river, cultivating three hundred and twenty acres. In 1874 he came to Fresno county and established a sheep business on the plains and foothills, where he remained for three or four years, then located in the city of Fresno. He became prominent in public affairs, serving first on the city police, later as United States gauger and was afterward superintendent of streets. On account of impaired health he retired from active cares, remaining a resident of Fresno, in which city his death occurred June 3, 1904. Fraternaly he was associated with the Knights of Pythias, and politically was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

In Vermilion Parish, La., in November, 1866, Mr. LeBlanc married Mrs. Sarah J. (Hough) Fitzgerald, who was born and reared in Jasper county, Miss. Her father, Richmond Hough, was a native of Mississippi, where his father lived and died. Richmond Hough became a farmer in young manhood, removing to Louisiana during the Civil war and in 1868 locating in California. He followed farming and stock-raising near Stockton, San Joaquin county, until his death, which occurred three months after his arrival in the state. His wife, formerly Matilda Everett, was born in Alabama and died in Louisiana. Of the ten children born to Richmond Hough and his wife all attained maturity and three are now living. The oldest daughter in this family, Sarah J., grew to womanhood in Mississippi, where she was first married to John Fitzgerald, a native of Chicago, Ill., and by occupation a conductor on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Fitzgerald died in Mississippi, and in 1866 his widow became the wife of Mr. LeBlanc. Since her husband's death Mrs. LeBlanc has remained a resident of Fresno, where she is held in high esteem by all who have known her throughout the many years spent here. She is the mother of four children, namely: Robert, of Santa Ana, Cal.; Joseph, of Fresno; Thomas, of San Francisco; and Albert, of Fresno. Mrs. LeBlanc owns considerable valuable property in Fresno, where her greatest interests are centered.

WILLIAM J. McNULTY. A prominent place among the representative citizens of Fresno county is given to the memory of William J. McNulty, whose efforts resulted in a material upbuilding of the best interests of this section. He was born in Ashland, Ohio, July 19, 1857, the elder of two sons, his brother, Ned B. McNulty, being a prominent dentist in Duluth, Minn. His father, William McNulty, was a native of Franklin county, Pa., who became a pioneer of Ashland, Ohio, where he followed his trade of builder until his death. He married Margaret Pugh, who was born in Mansfield, Ohio, a daughter of Jonathan Pugh, of Virginia. William J. McNulty was reared in his native city, receiving his education in the public and high schools, after which he entered Union College, in Schenectady, N. Y., from which institution he was graduated in 1880. He immediately entered the railroad service, working on the frontier in the Panhandle country on the Texas Pacific Railway, practically living in the saddle among the dangers and hardships incident to such a life. After two years of reconnaissance, location and construction, he secured a position in the United States Government work through Major Wathen of the United States Survey and was employed on the Mississippi Commission work, measuring the discharge of water of the Mississippi river. Following this he was located in Minneapolis, Minn., engaged in the commission business for a short time, but being strongly solicited to return to his former work he engaged on the Missouri Pacific in Missouri and Kansas until his promotion to the position of engineer of maintenance of way on the Iron Mountain Railroad, with headquarters at St. Louis, Mo. The success of his work had attracted more than passing attention from men in like employment, and when the old railroad contractor, George Burnett, was elected superintendent of streets in St. Louis he immediately sought Mr. McNulty as his first assistant superintendent. He therefore resigned his position with the railroad and gave his attention to city engineering work, finally receiving the appointment of civil engineer of the board of public improvement for the street department of St. Louis; which office he maintained creditably until a radical change of officials. While in this position he had charge of the construction of the new city hall, and afterward Theodore Link, the architect and superintendent of the Union Depot, sought Mr. McNulty and solicited him to take the position of supervising architect, which he did, having entire charge until its completion, this being the finest depot in the United States. He also did much work for the city and county poor-house asylums, his reliability and integrity in making the actual work equal to the specifications winning for him an unusual degree of confidence. Just before the final completion of the Union Depot Mr. McNulty was offered a position as general traveling agent of the Continental Fruit Express, which he accepted and came to California in the fall of 1894, as inspector and manager of the distribution of cars. The winter of 1894-95 he spent in Florida in this work, and in the spring of 1895 he returned to California, and while engaged with that company making his trips between Sacramento and Los Angeles he became aware of the opportunities which the San Joaquin valley presented to the enterprising business man. In connection with his work the advantages of an artificial ice plant at Fresno were suggested to him, and in the fall of 1896 he resigned his position with the Continental Fruit Express Company and locating in Fresno he organized the San Joaquin Ice Company. He then went east and secured the machinery, the plant being built that winter and put in operation in the following spring. This was the first enterprise of the kind in the San Joaquin valley and in the passing years has proved its worth to the city, county and country. Mr. McNulty became its manager, and after the business was established on a firm basis he established the creamery which is now operated in connection with it. Through his efforts this business was brought to a high state of perfection, he himself sending east for pure-blooded stock, Holstein-Friesian, Jerseys, Guernseys, etc., turning these over to the dairymen, who were allowed to pay for them out of the returns. In this way the herds of the county were immeasurably improved. He established skimming stations—fourteen in number—throughout the county, and until his death gave his attention to this business, which owes its success to his energy, business ability and shrewd judgment. He was taken with appendicitis and was operated upon in Fresno, and three weeks later, August 23, 1901, his death occurred in San Francisco, at the early age of forty-four years. In Mr. McNulty the community lost a man of stanch integrity and manhood, and one whose influence could only have been exerted for the moral uplift of the people, while as a citizen he was single-hearted in his efforts to promote the general welfare, increase public prosperity and add prestige to his adopted city as a business center of the San Joaquin valley. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce, which passed resolutions of respect at the time of his death. Fraternally he was a member of Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M., and belonged to the American Society of Civil Engineers. He was reared a Presbyterian in his religious faith, and politically was a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

In Ashland, Ohio, November 27, 1884, Mr. McNulty was united in marriage with May Sprengle, who was born in that city, the third in a family of six children born to her parents. Her father, Louis Jefferson Sprengle, was a native of Frederick, Md., a son of David Sprengle. The latter was a mechanic by occupation, and a native of the same place in Maryland, where his death from cholera occurred in 1832. His wife, formerly Caroline Mary Ann Ruth, was a native of Georgetown, D. C., and a daughter of Capt. Henry Ruth, who served in the war of 1812. One of his sons, Rev. Francis Ruth, was a pioneer Lutheran minister who went to Ohio by horseback and engaged as a missionary for a time. He finally returned to Maryland and induced others to seek a home in the then remote west. Accordingly Mrs. Sprengle, his widowed sister, went with her family across the mountains on horseback and carriage and located in Ashland, where Louis Jefferson Sprengle was reared to manhood. His education was received principally through personal effort and not through an attendance of the public schools, although for a time, while engaged in learning the cabinet maker's trade, he walked fourteen miles to recite to Lyman Andrews, of Ashland. He established the Ashland Times, which is still published, promoted manufactories, fire insurance companies, and was a factor in the upbuilding of the city and county. He was a stanch Republican politically, and during the war he served as provost marshal. In his religious convictions he was a Methodist. He died in Ashland, at the age of sixty-four years. He married Sophia Waters Coffin, a native of Bennington, Vt., and the daughter of Frederick Coffin, of the same place, who brought his family to Ohio over the Erie canal and located near Ashland, where he engaged at his work of contractor and builder until his death, which occurred there at the age of eighty-four years. Religiously he was a Presbyterian. His great-grandfather, James Fay, served in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Sprengle died in the home of her daughter, Mrs. McNulty, September 16, 1904, at the age of seventy-two years. She was a Methodist in her religious convictions, a woman of intelligence and education, and a great assistance to her husband in his literary career. They were the parents of the following children: Ella, the wife of J. E. Stubbs, LL.D., D.D., president of the University of Nevada; Jessie, who became the wife of William Gray Stubbs, and died in Ashland; May C., Mrs. W. J. McNulty; William, a graduate of the McGill Medical College, and a practitioner in Cleveland, Ohio; Martha F., of Fresno; and David Sidney, associated with the Thacker Fruit Company, of Mobile, Ala. Since her husband's death Mrs. McNulty resides at her home at No. 1115 T street, with her two sons, Niel and Hugh. She is a member of the Episcopal Church and the Parlor Lecture Club. Politically she gives her influence for the advancement of the principles of the Republican party.

JOHN CUNNINGHAM. An enterprising, practical and prosperous farmer of Madera county, John Cunningham is proprietor of an excellent ranch, pleasantly located about five miles south of the city of Madera, where he is largely engaged in general farming, exercising great skill and judgment. Of good financial ability, and a man of industry and wise forethought, he has met with satisfactory pecuniary results in his chosen avocation, and occupies a secure position in the consideration and respect of his fellowmen. A son of Andrew Cunningham, he was born May 3, 1843, in Indiana, of Irish ancestry.

A native of Ireland, Andrew Cunningham was brought up on a farm. Immigrating to America when a young man, he located permanently in Dearborn county, Indiana, where he cleared a farm, and was subsequently actively engaged in business as a general merchant, in addition serving as postmaster. He died in his Indiana home in 1849, when his son John was a lad of six years. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Craig, was also born and reared in the Emerald Isle.

Brought up on the parental homestead, and educated in the district schools, John Cunningham remained at home until after the breaking out of the Civil war. Fired with patriotic enthusiasm, he enlisted in 1862 in Company E, Sixteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which was assigned to the Western Division of the Federal army, and took part in various engagements of importance, including the battle at Richmond, Ky., the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Port Gibson, and others. Being discharged from service on account of poor health, Mr. Cunningham returned to Indiana. In the spring of 1868 he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, disembarking from the ship Colo in San Francisco. After mining in the San Joaquin valley for a year, Mr. Cunningham settled as a stock raiser in Fresno county, about twenty-five miles from his present home. Subsequently removing to Madera he kept a meat market in that city, and later engaged in the general merchandise business, being in business about eight years. Purchasing his present ranch of one hundred and fifty acres in 1883, he has since been actively engaged in general farming, including the raising of grain, alfalfa and some stock. In addition to managing the home farm, he also rents other land, carrying on a substantial business as a ranchman.

Mr. Cunningham married, in Indiana, Sarah Whiteford, a native of that state, and of their union six children have been born, namely: Margaret, William E., Russell, deceased; Henry M., Albert C. and Mary A. Politically Mr. Cunningham is a steadfast Democrat, and for many years has rendered efficient service as school trustee.

PHILIP W. WITTEN. Among the industrious and thrifty agriculturists of Stanislaus county is Philip W. Witten, who is most successfully pursuing his free and independent occupation of dairyman and ranchman, his farm being advantageously located a short distance east of Crows Landing. A native of Pike county, Mo., he was born near Bowling Green, January 4, 1861. His father, the late Kinsley D. Witten, was born and brought up in West Virginia. Following the march of civilization westward, he located in Pike county, Mo., as a pioneer in 1840, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He married Annie Elizabeth McCullough, who was born in West Virginia, and died in Missouri. They became the parents of eight children, four boys and four girls, Philip W. being the fifth child in succession of birth.

After completing his early studies in the district schools, Philip W. Witten acquired a practical knowledge of the different branches of agriculture while living beneath the parental roof-tree, and after the death of his father assumed the entire management of the home farm. Subsequently disposing of his interests in Missouri, Mr. Witten came with his family to California, locating in Kings county, near Lemoore, in March, 1895. Removing to Crows Landing in 1897, he bought thirty acres of alfalfa land, and has since been prosperously employed in dairying, keeping about twenty-five cows, and shipping the products of his fine dairy to Oakland.

While a resident of Missouri, Mr. Witten married Maggie Lewis, a native of West Virginia, and they have two children, namely: Howard Porter and Beryl Lewis. Politically Mr. Witten is a sound Democrat, never swerving from party allegiance. Fraternaly he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and religiously he belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

TOBIA LESNINI. Conspicuous among the thriving, progressive and successful agriculturists of the San Joaquin valley is Tobia Lesnini, who owns a fine dairy farm and orchard, and in addition to managing it most profitably also carries on the large ranch belonging to L. J. Crow. Energetic, enterprising and especially capable, he has met with satisfactory results in his agricultural labors, and as a man and a citizen has won to a marked degree the esteem and confidence of his large circle of friends and acquaintances. A native of Switzerland, he was born February 22, 1862, in Locarno, canton of Ticino. His father, the late Pasquel Lesnini, was there engaged in farming during his life, and his mother, whose maiden name was Mary Gorjetta, still resides in that locality. He is the third child in order of birth of a family of four children, of whom two are residents of California, a brother, Marx Lesnini, being in Stockton.

Brought up and educated in his native land, Tobia Lesnini began working when young, and there learned the art of dairying, becoming familiar with all of its branches, from the raising of stock to the manufacture of butter and cheese. Immigrating to this country in 1880, Mr. Lesnini came to Stockton, this state, where he embarked in business as a gardener, working first for wages, but subsequently being in business on his own account for four years. Purchasing land at Warnersville, Stanislaus county, in 1890, he carried on general farming most successfully for seven years. Disposing of that property in 1897, Mr. Lesnini returned to Switzerland, and in his native town engaged in mercantile pursuits, at the same time turning his attention to horticulture, becoming owner of an orchard and a grapery. Preferring California, however, either as a place of residence or business, he came back to the Pacific coast in 1903, locating in San Joaquin county, and buying his present ranch of fifty acres. His land is situated on the Stanislaus river, about seven miles from Oakdale, and is admirably adapted for dairy purposes. He raises hay and grain for his cattle, and in his well-kept orchard of four acres he has choice varieties of prunes and other fruits.

In Stockton, Mr. Lesnini married Louise Ver-

Gabriel Chrisman

zarcen, a native of Switzerland, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Adeline, Mary, Peter, Nellie and Herminia. Mr. Lesnini is a loyal citizen of his adopted country and a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party.

GABRIEL CHRISMAN. Distinguished not only as an early pioneer of California, but as a man of sterling worth and integrity, Gabriel Chrisman is well deserving of special mention in this historical work. Like the majority of the people that settled here half a century ago, he came to the state poor in pocket, but rich in energy, courage and perseverance, and has since contributed his full share in developing its resources. For nearly fifty years he has been a resident of Tulare county, his home being near Visalia, and during the time he has faithfully fulfilled all the obligations of an honest man and good citizen, and as such is held in high respect by his neighbors and acquaintances. A son of Job Chrisman, he was born in Lee county, Va., February 9, 1833. Great-grandfather Chrisman, a German by descent, was one of the first men to settle west of the Blue Ridge, Va., where he was killed by the Indians. Nimrod Chrisman, the grandfather, was a Virginia planter, and served in the Colonial wars.

Born and brought up in old Virginia, Job Chrisman spent his early life in his native state. After his marriage he removed to Ohio, and a year later went to Johnson county, Ark., where he took up land, and was engaged in farming and stock raising until after the breaking out of the Civil war, when he was murdered, being shot by a band of marauders, who had first set his barn on fire. He married Elizabeth France, who was born in Virginia, of German ancestry, a daughter of William France, a farmer. She died in Arkansas. Six children were born of their union: Elizabeth died in Arkansas; Henry Tyler crossed the plains to California in 1853, but in 1856 returned to Arkansas, in 1857 he again came to California, but in 1893 went to Missouri, and there spent his last years; William France died in Arkansas during the Civil war, being killed by Jayhawkers; Gabriel is the special subject of this sketch; Millie Jane died in Arkansas; and Josiah served in the Civil war under General Price, subsequently coming to Visalia, Cal., where his death occurred December 31, 1889.

Accompanying his parents to Arkansas when a mere child, Gabriel Chrisman lived in Johnson county until nine years old, afterward residing in Newton county, where he received but limited educational advantages. He remained at home until becoming of age, assisting his father in the care of the ranch, and afterward worked as a farm laborer for a few years. In 1857, with his brother, Henry Tyler, he came across the plains with an ox-team train, driving a herd of loose cattle. Leaving home on March 25, he followed the old Cherokee trail past the present site of Denver, and thence along the Humboldt and Carson route to Tulare county, arriving in the vicinity of what is now Visalia October 27, 1857, having been seven months and two days in making the trip. Beginning work here by the month, Mr. Chrisman was first employed as a farm hand, and was afterward engaged in milling and lumbering, and in manufacturing rails, of which he made about forty thousand in this county alone. Locating on the Patterson road in 1868, he purchased his present ranch of eighty acres, which was then in its original condition, and at once began its improvement. He broke the land, erected his dwelling house and barns, and assisted in building the Mathews ditch, by which his ranch is irrigated, and has since been prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits, raising grain, alfalfa and stock. His homestead property is advantageously located, being three miles northeast of Visalia, in the midst of a rich farming community.

In Fremont county, Iowa, in 1877, Mr. Chrisman married Polly Chrisman, who was born in Andrew county, Mo., a daughter of Gabriel Chrisman, formerly of Virginia. Two children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Chrisman, neither one of whom is living, Effie O., the eldest child, having died at the age of fourteen years, and Sarah E. living but nine months. In his political affiliations Mr. Chrisman is a sound Democrat, and fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

RUFUS GILMER. A pioneer of the state and one who has experienced the adversities and profits of the early mining days, Rufus Gilmer, of Visalia, Tulare county, stands as a link between the prosperous present which is the outgrowth of the efforts of unselfish and courageous pioneers, and a past replete with danger, hardships and privations. For fifteen years he has made his home in this city, enjoying in retirement the fruits of his early efforts, this home at No. 118 West Willow street being presided over by his daughter.

A native of Pope county, Ill., Rufus Gilmer was born in Golconda October 11, 1824, a son of Campbell Gilmer. The elder man was a native of Adair county, Ky., who came to Illinois in an early day, locating at Golconda, where he made his home until 1835, practicing medicine. In the last named year he removed to Fort Madison, Iowa, and continued the practice of his profession until his death. His wife had died when Rufus Gilmer, the oldest in a family of two sons and two daughters, was quite young. This son is the only one now living. He received a rather limited education in the common schools in the vicinity of his home, remaining in the middle west until 1850. In that year he crossed the plains with horse-teams, and upon his safe arrival in California located in the mines at Georgetown, Eldorado county, but which was then known as the Eldorado country. For nine years he followed the occupation of miner, meeting with a success which justified his long continuance in the work. He was principally interested in placer mining. In 1859 he decided to withdraw from the work of a miner and accordingly came to Tulare county and near Visalia located with a herd of cattle. Following this he engaged for fifteen years in the stock business, upon the passing of the fence law disposing of his cattle, after which he engaged in farming. For two years he also conducted a livery stable in Portersville, Tulare county, at the same time that he was interested in farming. In 1889 he returned to Visalia and has since lived retired from the active cares of life.

In Eldorado county, this state, Mr. Gilmer was united in marriage with Ann Harvey, a native of Kentucky, who died in Visalia in the early '80s. They became the parents of five children, namely: Kate, who married William Wright, an engineer on the Southern Pacific Railroad and whose home is at Portersville; Jane, who married W. Cartnell, of Tulare; Guy, in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway; Emma, who married A. Abby, of Portersville; and Eleanor, who married John Cutler and now makes her home with her father. In his political affiliations Mr. Gilmer is a Democrat.

GEORGE RICHARD ANDREWS. Liberal and enterprising, George Richard Andrews has made his own success parallel with his efforts in behalf of the general public, giving his aid to advance all movements calculated to increase the general prosperity. He was born in Andrews county, Mo., June 27, 1872, a son of Thomas O. Andrews. The latter was born in Michigan and went to Illinois, where he learned the woolen mill business, after which he located in Andrew county, Mo., as a farmer. In 1873 he came to California and followed mining for two years, when he was joined by his family and located in Ashland, Ore. He became superintendent of the Ashland Woolen Mills, which position he maintained for eight years, after which he engaged in the cattle business in Klamath county, Ore. Returning to Ashland, he engaged as a farmer for two years, then founded a harness and carriage repository for a like period. Following this he worked in Salem, in the same state, as superintendent of the finishing room of the Salem Woolen Mills. Two years later he engaged with a Mr. Leach in the Capitol City Nursery, until the death of his partner, when he purchased the entire nursery and conducted it for three years. In 1895 he located in Riverside county, Cal., and at Corona is now engaged in horticulture and has an apiary. Thomas O. Andrews was a soldier in the Civil war, serving in the Second Michigan Cavalry, enlisting at the age of seventeen years. He received wounds in the left arm and leg, and was blinded in the left eye from powder burns. He served until the close of the war, participating in the famous march to the sea with Sherman, and many important engagements. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and politically is a staunch Republican. In the line of his present work he is president of the California Bee Men's Association. His wife, formerly Elizabeth S. Lackner, of St. Thomas, Canada, is also living. They are the parents of three sons and three daughters, of whom George Richard Andrews is the second in order of birth.

Reared in Oregon, George R. Andrews received his education in the public and high schools of Ashland. At the age of fifteen years he entered the employ of the Ashland Woolen Mills, where he remained three years, after which he began the study of telegraphy in the Postal Telegraph office in Ashland, and in time became operator and filled positions at Delta, Cal., Ashland, Ore., and St. Helens, Ore., as combination man, until November 1, 1894, when he was transferred to Fresno, Cal., as manager of the Postal Telegraph office, which position he has since held, with the exception of about eight months, when he was engaged in the real estate business, being solicited to return to his old position of manager with liberal inducements. Mr. Andrews has been active in the building up of Fresno, besides his own residence at No. 260 Effie street, having built five other residences. He also owns a small ranch near Fresno, about three miles out on the Santa Fe railroad, which is occupied by the Fresno Brick and Tile Company.

In Fresno Mr. Andrews was united in marriage with Irene Patterson, a native of Illinois and a daughter of William Patterson, a farmer, living three miles north of Fresno. They are the parents of three children, Elaine E., George Eugene and Chester Rowell. Mrs. Andrews is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Andrews is secretary of the Fresno Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, being himself a breeder of Barred and Buff Plymouth Rocks. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and politically is a staunch Republican, having been nominated in 1902 as county assessor of Fresno county, but was defeated by a very small majority by the fusion candidate. Fraternally he is prominent, having been clerk for the past eight years of Manzanita Camp No. 160, W. O. W., the largest fraternal lodge in the San Joaquin valley and the fourth largest of this organization in California, having eight hundred members. In 1902 he represented his district at the head camp convention at Cripple Creek, Colo. For eight years he was an active member of the National Guards, having enlisted in December, 1904, in Company F, Sixth California Regiment National Guards of California. He rose from the ranks to the office of sergeant, thence to second lieutenant, and January, 1900, he was elected captain of the company, serving until 1902, when he declined a re-election on account of his other duties. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Fresno, and both himself and wife are members of the Women of Woodcraft.

JAMES PORTEOUS. The success which has attended the development of the Fresno Agricultural Works since the establishment of the plant in 1877 is due to the inventive ability, enterprise and sagacious judgment of James Porteous, who, as owner of the plant and inventor of much of its machinery, has every reason to feel a just pride in the growth of the industry which he founded and fostered. Not only is his plant the largest manufacturing enterprise in the San Joaquin valley, but it is the oldest as well. It had its origin in a little wood-working shop established by Mr. Porteous on the present site of the Grand Central hotel, where he conducted business for three years. In 1880 he purchased his present site on Tulare and L streets and erected the first building in the block, where he engaged in the manufacture and repair of buggies and wagons. By degrees his attention was turned to the manufacture of machinery especially needed in his own locality, and from this he drifted into the construction of a general line of machinery, some of which has been sold in South Africa, Australia and other countries.

The prosperity crowning the efforts of Mr. Porteous probably dates from the time when he began to manufacture scrapers for the leveling of ground and building of ditches. The Fresno scraper, as it is known, in the opinion of its inventor has never been equaled for durability, capacity or ease of working. By the adjustment of nuts the dirt may be scattered in layers from one to ten inches deep or left in one heap. A solid bottom is used of 12x½ plow steel, which stiffens the bowl, prevents it from wearing, and prevents buckling in hard places. The scraper travels on the bottom when loaded and on the shoes when empty. During two months of 1902 more than five hundred of these scrapers were sold to railroad contractors on one line alone.

One of the special products of the Fresno Agricultural Works is the four-ton North Porteous raisin mill, which has a capacity of from four to six tons per hour for raisins, while as many as eight tons per hour of dried grapes have been stemmed and cleaned in the same time. The raisins are shoveled from the hopper into the cylinder and delivered from the spouts on both sides of the machine directly into fifty-pound boxes and in four grades, usually designated as one-crown or seedless, two-crown, three-crown and four-crown. The machine being open, the raisins are visible at all times except when under the cylinder. Possessing some similarity to this mill is the End Shake North Porteous raisin mill without elevator, the larger size of which, commonly known as the two-ton mill, has a capacity for raisins of about two tons per hour, and is suitable for small packing houses or large vineyards. The North Porteous hand-power raisin mill, made especially for vineyard men, has been shipped to Chile, in South America, also to Australia, South Africa and Europe.

Numbered among the other products of the agricultural works may be mentioned the following: Fresno raisin stemmer, Fresno raisin grader, cap stemmer, an invention of Mr. Porteous, which was the first machine to successfully stem raisins; Fresno differential press, used for pressing dried fruit into fifty-pound boxes; Fresno layer gang press, which is used for pressing layers; the Dryer truck for moving trays; Fresno floor truck for carrying raisins in the sweat boxes to the scales and cars; transfer car and sulphur truck, which affords the most economical way of handling dried fruit; fruit truck for use on drying grounds and in sulphur houses; four-wheel vineyard truck, for hauling among vines and trees; four-wheel cross-reach truck, arranged so that the hind wheels will follow in the tracks of the front wheels in turning among vines; steel truck that can be fitted with side boards; steel cross-reach truck; winery truck; three-wheel vineyard truck; brush burner and steel truck, for use where it is desired to burn the brush from vineyards; brush binder; brush rake; brush cutter; weed cutter; wheeled weed cutter; hard-pan plow, for the hardest kind of work on roads, gravel beds, etc.; vee for making ditches and levees; Fresno vineyard disc, a two-horse disc harrow, which can be instantly adjusted by lever to tear up a patch of weeds and then reset for ordinary work without stopping the team; Fresno vineyard disc reversed, which may be used as a disc, a spader or a vine cutter; spader, patented by Mr. Porteous, for spading old alfalfa or for vineyards; Fresno disc with vine cutter attached; vine cutter for summer pruning of vines; Fresno two and three-gang vineyard plows; orchard and vineyard bench plow, having wheels inside the plow, thus rendering it possible to get close to vines and trees; Porteous improved tree plow, patented by Mr. Porteous, a two-horse plow with which the ground can be tilled under the spreading branches of fruit trees without injury to the limbs, and especially serviceable for irrigation purposes, as it stirs up the moisture in the ground and does it with perfect safety to the tree; the Porteous header, which renders possible the saving of very short grain; rotary harrow, a device well-nigh indispensable in a vineyard, as it will roll under the spurs and close to the vines without injuring them; and the Fresno cultivator, a patent of Mr. Porteous, and in use in many of the vineyards of Fresno county.

The plant occupied by the works covers one-half block, with large warehouses of brick, machine shop and foundry, and forging furnaces operated by oil, which lessens the cost of operating the plant. In addition to operating this large enterprise Mr. Porteous is interested in orchard and vineyard culture and owns eighty acres of such land one mile from Fresno. In 1902 he built on the corner of Fresno and I streets a brick building, 150x50 feet in dimensions, and three stories in height. With all of his other activities, he has found time to devote to the presidency of the Knob Hill Oil Company at Bakersfield. The Fresno Chamber of Commerce numbers him among its leading members, while fraternally he is a past officer in the lodge of Odd Fellows and a member of the Encampment.

CHARLES B. SHAVER, as president and manager of the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, has been an important factor in the promotion of this work, which has proved of no little importance in the development of this section. He was born in Steuben county, N. Y., in 1855, a son of John L. Shaver, a native of Delaware county, same state, and the descendant of an old and honored family. The elder man was a miller in New York state until 1864, when he located in Michigan, engaging in farming in St. Louis, Gratiot county, until his retirement. He continued to make his home in that location until his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-four years. His wife, formerly Mary Rose, survives him and now makes her home with her son, Charles B., who was next to the youngest in a family of four children. He received the principal part of his education in the common schools of Michigan, to which state he removed when nine years of age. He grew to manhood there and at the age of eighteen years engaged in lumbering in the employ of the firm of Whitney & Stinchfield of Detroit, Mich. After some years he became foreman in the woods, in which position he remained until 1882, when he resigned and accepted a position with A. B. Long & Son of Grand Rapids, Mich. While in their employ he assisted in the building of the logging railway and became interested in their mills and lumber plant until 1889. He then resigned and accepted a position with the White Friant Lumber Company, continuing with them for two years, during which he built fourteen miles of logging railway and put in over one hundred million feet of logs. In 1891 he went to south Missouri and built a mill for Boyden & Wyman Lumber Company at Neelysville, and the following year came to California and located at Fresno. With his wide experience in the lumber business he foresaw the possibilities which existed for the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, just organized, and immediately bought an interest in the concern. He at once assumed charge of the construction, completing the surveys and building the flumes from Stevenson creek, where they built a dam sixty feet high, the flume from that place to Clovis, Fresno county, being forty and one-quarter miles in length. It is formed of plank, and required about nine million feet of lumber to construct, at a cost of $200,000. At the same time the construction of the mills in the mountains was begun and carried to completion, two years being occupied in preparation for this extensive work. They now have two mills operated by steam power, equipped with double bands, dry kilns, railroad locomotive and cars, tug boats and booms, with a capacity of thirty-five million feet per year. They also handle the output of four other mills with a capacity of ten million feet. Their supply of sugar and white pine is practically inexhaustible, as there are twenty thousand acres of this timber around the lake. The planing mills, box factory and dry kilns (operated by steam) are located in Clovis, to which the lumber is brought down by flume, several thousand cords of wood each year being handled. The mills in the mountains are operated from April to December. Their box factory at Clovis is equipped with all modern machinery and is operated the entire year. They employ a force of six hundred men during their busy season, and are an important factor in the industrial development of the country. Their output is shipped to all parts of the world, and the business is extensive and lucrative. Their general office is located in Clovis and their local office in Fresno, both scenes of activity and business enterprise. Mr. Shaver has been president of the company since 1894. He is also a member of the Pine Box and Lumber Company of San Francisco, who have distributing plants on the coast, and of the California Sugar and White Pine Agency of the same city, in both of which he is a director.

In Grand Rapids, Mich., Mr. Shaver was united in marriage with Lena A. Roberts, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have three children, Grace, Ethel and Doris. Fraternaly Mr. Shaver is a Mason, having joined the organization in Edmore, Mich., and now belongs to Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. He was made a Chapter Mason in Stanton and now belongs to Trigo Chapter No. 69 of this place. He is a member of Fresno Lodge No. 29, K. T., having been raised to this degree in Ionia, Mich., and belongs to the Lodge of Perfection of Fresno, and Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco. He is also associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and politically is a Republican. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and socially is identified with the Sequoia Club.

JESSE JANSEN. Since taking up his residence in Reedley Mr. Jansen has been actively identified with all progressive movements, never hesitating to give of his time and means to build up and improve the place. Self-made, his record is one that the young men of today may read with much profit. Coming to this country when a young man, without money or friends, he has worked his way to the front until today he is not only the foremost citizen of Reedley, but is one of the most influential residents of Fresno county. The soul of honor, his word is considered as good as his bond, and while he has accumulated a handsome competency he has never forgotten to perform his duties as a man and citizen. Generous to a fault, there are many people in this section of the state who would have suffered many privations had it not been for his assistance.

A native of Denmark, Mr. Jansen was born in Bodum, Schleswig, August 21, 1855. His father, Henry Jansen, was a native of the same locality. For many years he followed the sea, being master of a vessel, and in the early mining days he visited the port of San Francisco. He died at his home in Denmark in 1887. His wife bore the maiden name of Anna Christina Olsen and was a native of Jylland, Denmark. She is still living, making her home in Schleswig. By her marriage she became the mother of seven children, our subject being the oldest. His early life was spent in the country of his nativity, where he attended the public schools, supplementing the course in the lower grades by attendance at a private school. At the early age of sixteen years, in 1871, he bade good-bye to the fatherland and sailed for America. On arriving in California he located in Placer county, where he secured employment on a farm, being paid $100 for a year's work. After a time he left the farm and went to Lincoln, where he was given work in a meat market, later conducting the market himself. In 1880 he secured a position as foreman of two large ranches in Yuba and Placer counties, where he continued for over six years, having in the meantime leased them. At the end of this time he returned to his home in the old country, and while there was united in marriage with Helen Maria Miller. In 1886, with his wife, he returned to California and again engaged in farming, making a specialty of raising wheat. In 1887 he contracted to dispose of his product to the Pioneer Milling Company, but through the fault of the agent the wheat did not come up to the sample shown and the company refused the whole consignment. Mr. Jansen knew that his wheat was all right and determined to dispose of it. With that idea in mind he went to San Francisco and called on G. W. McNear, who purchased his entire crop and paid more than the contract entered into with the former company. The acquaintance formed with Mr. McNear at that time soon ripened into friendship and Mr. Jansen has since been associated with him, buying millions of bushels of wheat and paying out thousands and thousands of dollars. In addition to his farming and grain-buying interests at that time Mr. Jansen also did considerable insurance writing and dealt in real estate, in 1890 buying sixteen acres adjoining Lincoln, which he still owns.

It was in 1890 that Mr. Jansen located in Reedley and since that time he has been one of the most active business men of the town. Coming here as buying agent for Mr. McNear, he engaged in purchasing the wheat grown in this section of the state, carrying on an extensive grain dealing business. In 1902 he organized and incorporated the Reedley Hall and Store Company, of which he is president. After the disastrous fire of 1902 he purchased the bank corner and erected the Jansen block, which is one of the finest buildings in the town. A year later he organized and capitalized the Reedley state bank, which is now doing a fine business, Mr. Jansen being president of the same. In 1904 he organized the Jesse Jansen Company, for the transaction of a general real estate, brokerage and insurance business. It is his intention to purchase land, divide it into small tracts and sell to those who desire to grow fruit or oranges or beets for the sugar plant.

Mrs. Jansen, who in maidenhood was a Miss Miller, became the mother of seven children, one of whom, Henry, is deceased. The others are: Anna, Helen, Rebecca, Jesse, Jr., Henry and Norman. In fraternal relations Mr. Jansen is a member of Valley Lodge No. 107, I. O. O. F., the Encampment at Marysville and Citrus Rebekahs No. 120. Mr. and Mrs. Jansen are members of the Lutheran Church and they have generously assisted in building up other churches. In politics Mr. Jansen is a staunch Republican, but has been too busy looking after his own interests to take an active part in political matters.

JOHN BUCHANAN MONROE. While Mr. Monroe was born in Missouri in 1853, practically his entire life has been spent in California, whither he was brought by his parents in infancy. Residing here for so many years he has been actively associated with many of the movements the result of which has made California one of the greatest states in the Union. Success has crowned his efforts, but while he has accumulated a comfortable competency, he has never neglected his duties as a citizen and when called upon he has always responded.

He is a son of Wesley Monroe, who was a native of Illinois, but lived in Missouri for several years prior to crossing the plains. This memorable trip was made in 1856 with ox teams, six months being consumed in making the journey. He was accompanied by his wife and two children and on arriving here settlement was first made in Butte county, where, near Dogtown, he engaged in farming and stock-raising. Subsequently the family removed to Sonoma county, near Petaluma, where Mr. Monroe followed farming, his ranch being located in Grass Valley. Meeting with excellent success in his operations he continued there until 1865, when he came to Tulare county and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land, which is now occupied by his son, John B. Here he engaged in general farming and stock-raising until his death, which took place during a visit to Fresno at the age of fifty-two years. He married Elizabeth Coundray, a native of Tennessee, who died in Madera at the age of sixty-three years. By her union with Mr. Monroe there were born ten children, five of whom are still living.

John B. Monroe was the oldest child and at the age of three years was brought to California by his parents. His early life was spent on his father's farm, attending the district schools and assisting in the farm labors until reaching his majority, when he started out in life for himself. Engaging in the stock business, he ranged his cattle in the foothills until 1884, when he purchased his father's farm. Since then he has added to his first purchase until he now owns five hundred and eighty acres, all in one body adjoining Woodville. Of this one hundred and fifty acres are devoted to alfalfa, while the balance is used for grazing and general farming purposes. Water for irrigation purposes is secured from the Pioneer ditch, of which Mr. Monroe is the president. For a number of years he has been the only user and occupant of the Woodville ditch and in addition he has a private ditch on his farm which enables him to irrigate every acre of his land. Ever since starting out in life for himself he has been actively engaged in the stock business and for the last ten years he has been interested in the sheep business, now owning between two and three thousand head.

In Visalia Mr. Monroe was united in marriage with Margaret Vincent, who was born in Ontario, Canada, a daughter of Hugh Vincent (see sketch of S. J. Vincent). As a result of this union the following children have been born: Luella Brooks, Mary Elizabeth, Charles C., John Almond, Hugh Wesley, Samuel Adolph, Norvell Vern and Verna Viola.

In politics Mr. Monroe is a Republican. Aside from his service as clerk of the board of school trustees he has never cared to take an active part in public matters, preferring rather to devote his entire time to his own business interests. The results show that this policy has paid him well, for today he is considered one of the substantial farmers in this section of Tulare county. He can write the word "success" in a bold hand on the pages of his history and this success has been attained by the result of his perseverance and determination to succeed.

JAMES DOYLE. For thirty years Mr. Doyle has been a resident of California, and with the exception of the first two years after his arrival in this state he has been in the employ of the Southern Pacific. Starting in at the bottom he has, by industry and a strict attention to business, been promoted until he now occupies the position of roadmaster, with headquarters in Fresno. His long term of service and his promotion are evidence of the standing he has with his employers. While the nature of his employment has made it necessary for him to live in different places, he has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the town in which he resided and since taking up his residence in Fresno he has been one of the active men in the city, at all times performing his duty as a citizen.

A native of Ireland, Mr. Doyle was born March 19, 1852, a son of Michael and Ellen (Curran) Doyle. The father immigrated to America in 1864, locating in Holyoke, Mass., where the balance of his life was passed. His marriage resulted in the birth of nine children, six of whom are living. Of this family, James Doyle was the fourth child. His education was obtained in the public schools of Holyoke, Mass., but at an early age it was necessary for him to give up his schooling and enter the cotton mills at that place. Securing a position in the dressing department of the Lyman mill, he remained there until 1875, when he resigned and came to California. His first employment here was with a Mr. O'Neil, a contractor in Oakland, with whom he continued for two years. In 1877 he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad in Oakland, securing a position in the track department. Three years later, having been promoted to foreman, he was sent to New Mexico, where he continued for six years. As foreman of the yards, he was then transferred to Los Angeles, where he remained for two and one-half years. At the expiration of this period he was again promoted, being made roadmaster with headquarters at Benson, Ariz., where the company kept him for two years. June 23, 1893, he came to Fresno as roadmaster of the Fresno Division. Four years later he was transferred to the Keene district, but in 1899 he returned to Fresno to relieve G. A. Starkweather, who was sent to Ventura. Mr. Doyle now has charge of seventeen sections, all the lines running out of Fresno, making his position one of great importance, as there are hundreds of miles of road under his supervision, the company looking to him for the condition of road beds.

In Chicopee, Mass., Mr. Doyle was united in marriage with Miss Mary Allen. At her death Mrs. Doyle left one child, Kate, who is attending Trinity College. Fraternally Mr. Doyle is a member of the Knights of Columbus. His rise to the position he now holds has been by the direct result of strict attention to business. In Fresno, as in other places where he has made his home, he has a large circle of friends who are deeply interested in his success.

I. W. GOLDMAN. Although not a native of this country, Mr. Goldman has made his home in California for so many years that he is intimately associated with its progress and devoted to its development. As a boy he attended the public schools in Westheim, Bavaria, Germany, where he was born in 1836, and after leaving school he learned the trade of a shoemaker. On coming to America in 1853 he secured employment in New York City, but in 1855 left there for California. The trans-continental railroad had not yet spanned the country and travel was made by "prairie schooners" or by ship. He chose the latter method of transportation and sailed to Panama, where he took passage on the John L. Stevens to San Francisco, landing at the Golden Gate November 14, 1855. Without delay he was able to secure work at his trade. Carefully saving all that he earned, he utilized the capital thus secured in the establishment of a shoe store about 1857. The first shop was a small affair, with a frontage of twelve feet. Soon the business outgrew his limited quarters and he sought more adequate accommodations, leasing a large store on Kearny street, where he remained in business until 1871. On disposing of that establishment he embarked in the general mercantile business at Pleasanton, Alameda county.

When the railroad was built to Merced in 1872 Mr. Goldman started a general store in that town. About the same time the railroad reached Tulare and he went to that town on one of the first trains. By the aid of a city plat he selected as a site for a store the northeast corner of J and Tulare streets, but the railroad erected a hotel there, and he bought the adjoining lot, subsequently acquiring possession of the corner lot. The frame building in which he opened a general store in the spring of 1873 did duty as a place of business until 1875, when it burned to the ground. Immediately afterward he leased the southeast corner, where a brick building afforded more convenient accommodations than previously enjoyed. A second time disaster overtook him in the loss of all of his stock in the fire of 1885. Forced to seek new quarters, he bought the northeast corner of J and Tulare streets, where he conducted an extensive general merchandise establishment, the largest of the kind in the city. Since the sale of the business in May, 1900, he has devoted himself to the development of property, under the firm name of J. & I. W. Goldman, with office and headquarters at No. 4 Sutter street, San Francisco. In addition to erecting the Goldman Hall in 1887 he has put up other structures, including a substantial brick warehouse, and the Wells-Fargo building.

During all the years of his identification with the mercantile interests of Tulare Mr. Goldman has been a buyer of adjacent lands and now has a tract of more than twenty-eight hundred acres, four and one-half miles north of town, which is now being subdivided into twenty-acre tracts and is known as the Goldman colony tract. A pumping plant has been built on the property sufficiently large to irrigate all of the land. In partnership with his cousin Mr. Goldman owns Paradise orange grove tract of eight hundred and fifty acres, on which an abundance of excellent water is secured by means of pumping plants operated by electricity. The land lies one-half mile from Lindsay, Tulare county, and is being sold for $100 per acre, including water right, purchasers having the privilege of buying any amount from five acres up. It has been found by experiments that citrus fruits can be raised there and much of the property is being laid out in orange groves. Besides the properties named Mr. Goldman owns other valuable lands in Tulare county, also in Kern county and some real estate in Fresno, besides his home place in San Francisco. While the management of his lands takes up his attention to a large extent, he also engages in the stock business. Fraternally he holds membership in Fidelity Lodge, F. & A. M., in San Francisco, and in political matters favors the Republican party, the work of which he has promoted by his vote and influence. After settling in San Francisco he married Carrie Rothschild, who was born in New York City, and by her he has four children, Julian, Hilda, Bertie Violet and Blanche Daisy.

E. M. CAPURRO. The manager of the Madera Electric Light Company and the Madera Water Company was born in Stockton, this state, April 22, 1864, and is a son of Emanuel and Pauline (Sopania) Capurro, natives respectively of Genoa, Italy, and Mazatlan, Mexico. His father, who was captain of a vessel in Italy, came to California during the great mining excitement of 1849, but did not himself become directly interested in seeking for gold. Instead, he took up the freighting business as offering a more certain income and with his pack trains traveled all through the mountains and into the mining camps, building up a large business in the sale of merchandise to miners. Much of his profits he invested in farm lands, the value of which constantly increased, thus yielding him gratifying returns. For years he made his home in Stockton. On his retirement from business he spent some time in Italy, visiting the friends of his youth and such relatives as remained near Genoa. His death occurred in Stockton in 1888 when he was eighty-two years of age.

In a family of two daughters and one son the youngest was E. M. Capurro, who was educated in the grammar and high schools of Stockton. While still a mere boy he gave evidence of mechanical ability. At the age of nineteen he was apprenticed to the machinist's trade in the machine shop of Farrington & Hyatt, with whom he remained for four years. He then went to Modesto to erect a planing mill for Gilbert & Bennett, and after completing the plant he remained for two years as its superintendent. During the following three years he was master mechanic for the Second Street Cable Company in Los Angeles and superintended the building of their cable road. For about a year afterward he acted as chief engineer of the San Diego cable road, and from there went to San Francisco as superintendent of the plant of D. Block & Co., trunk manufacturers. Later he was made chief engineer of the electric street railway in Oakland, and was next with the Oman Engine Manufactory in the construction and setting up of its machines and engines.

Coming to Madera in 1894 as master mechanic of the Krogh Manufacturing Company, Mr. Capurro completed the electric plant and has since been its manager, meanwhile enlarging it from time to time as the increased business demands. The plant is an exceptionally fine one, carefully and substantially constructed and thoroughly equipped. It has a capacity of one thousand incandescent lights and fifty arc lights. In addition, Mr. Capurro is manager of the Water Company, whose works he constructed. The plant comprises four wells, respectively three hundred and eighty, two hundred and ten, one hundred and ten and six hundred feet deep; also two triple action Krogh pumps with a capacity of eighteen thousand gallons per hour for each pump; one Warrington duplex steam pump with a capacity of thirty-six thousand gallons per hour; with one hundred and ten pounds pressure for fire purposes, and two tandem compounds of sixty horse-power each, oil being used for fuel. The plants are located on E and Fifth streets. To aid in his work Mr. Capurro has invented a number of devices, one of these being a system of alarm by electricity which starts the pumps. Besides his other positions he acts as manager of the Sunset Telephone Company, at Madera. He is a member of the National Association of Marine Engineers of San Francisco and maintains a deep interest in everything pertaining to his chosen field of activity. Politically he is a Republican, while in fraternal matters he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Foresters at Madera, and San Diego Parlor, N. S. G. W.

ROBERT J. PADEN. In a history of the San Joaquin valley, with its many prominent citizens and fruit growers, the name of Robert J. Paden is deserving of special mention, not alone as a descendant of distinguished Virginian ancestors, but from the fact that he has gained considerable prominence in his section as a real-estate dealer. As an extensive vine-grower and as secretary and manager of the Sanger Wine Association, Mr. Paden has gained added prominence and is considered a representative citizen in the vicinity of Sanger in Fresno county, which has been his home since 1887.

United by close ties to Van Buren, Ala., it was there that he was born January 15, 1846, a son of John and Nancy (Copland) Paden, the latter also born in Alabama. John Paden was a native of Virginia and his father, also called John, emigrated from Glasgow, Scotland, to that state in an early day, and was prominent in the history of Virginia. The father of Robert J., when a young man, left Virginia and took up his residence in Alabama, where he lived until 1855. He was a farmer by occupation and the closing years of his life were spent in Sharp county, Ark., where he died at the age of sixty-seven years.

The early education of Robert J. Paden was received in the public schools, and he was fourteen years old when his parents moved to Arkansas, which continued to be his home until 1862. During that year he enlisted in the Confederate army as a member of the Eleventh Missouri Cavalry and served throughout the war. In 1869 he went to Texas and there engaged in the stock business in connection with farming until 1887, when he came to California and located upon the present site of Sanger, being the first one to live in the town after it was platted. In addition to carrying on farming he became real-estate agent for the Southern Pacific Railway Company and through his efforts in their behalf many important land deals were made. Mr. Paden retired from the real-estate business in 1901, and since then his entire time has been given to his farming interests and to the successful management of the winery with which he is connected. His fine ranch contains one hundred and twenty acres, of which eighty acres are devoted to the raising of wine grapes and fruit. By his marriage, January 30, 1864, in Arkansas, Mr. Paden was united with E. Alice Richie, formerly of Tennessee, and to them six children have been born, as follows: John T.; M. A., the wife of L. C. Vermillion; Frank; Mattie, the wife of Fred Rogers; Callie D. and Osieolie. Mr. Paden is a member of the Masonic fraternity of Sanger, and of the Independent Order of Foresters.

FRANK S. KNAUER. One of the very first to locate in the town of Reedley, Mr. Knauer has been prominently identified with the upbuilding of this thriving town, and since 1888 his wife has acted as postmistress, her husband having been instrumental in having the office established. During these years there have been many changes in this section, as on settling in Reedley Mr. Knauer's was the first house to be erected.

A native of Kentucky, Mr. Knauer was born in Campbell county, October 15, 1853, a son of Elias and Maria Melcina (Brooks) Knauer. The father was born in Pennsylvania, but in pioneer days removed to Kentucky, locating in Campbell county, where he followed his trade, that of a wheelwright and general mechanic. While living in Kentucky he erected many grist and saw mills, being one of the leading builders of the county.

After some years he went to Ohio, where he worked at his trade until 1858, when he migrated to Nebraska. Locating in Brownville, he followed his vocation until the next year, when he outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to California. Going to Yolo county, he settled at what is now the town of Woodland and in 1874 erected the first grist mill in that place. Later he built a saw mill in Lake county and engaged in the lumbering business for a short time, but in 1876 he returned to Woodland, where he died the same year. His wife was born in Kentucky and is now living, about seventy-five years of age. Her grandmother was a sister of the wife of Daniel Boone, the famous hunter and Indian scout. Mrs. Knauer was twice married and became the mother of six children, two by the first marriage and four by the second.

Frank S. Knauer was the oldest child and was six years old at the time his parents crossed the plains. He enjoyed the advantages of the best schools of the state, and after finishing in the public schools of Yolo county he attended Hesperian College at Woodland, where he made a record as a diligent student. His tuition in the latter institution was paid with money which he earned by working in the harvest field. Subsequently he took a one-year course in the state normal at San Jose, after which for five years he was engaged in teaching in Yolo county. In 1888 he came to Reedley as a teacher in the district school. A year later, however, he was compelled to give up teaching on account of disability, resulting from appendicitis. After regaining his health, in 1890, he took a clerical position with The 76 Land and Water Company, and in addition to representing this company he is also the local representative of the California Fruit and Wine Land Company. He is also a notary public, is interested in the insurance business to some extent, and is assistant postmaster at Reedley.

Mr. Knauer was united in marriage with Flora Bierer, a native of Kansas. Ever since coming to Reedley Mrs. Knauer has acted as postmistress, and the family still have in their possession a sack in which the mail was brought from Fresno. The office is now third class and one of the best paying ones in this part of the state. As a matter of interest the records of the office have been preserved and show that the first year, during the month of August, there was only $1 worth of stamps sold, and for three months the income amounted to but $2.84. During the past year nearly $600 worth of stamps were disposed of and many tons of mail matter were handled.

To Mr. and Mrs. Knauer have been born three children: Carmi M., who is cashier in Leonard's confectionery store in Oakland; Charles M., a bookkeeper and acting postmaster at Caliente, Cal., and Frank LeRoy, who lives at home. Fraternally Mr. Knauer is a member of the Woodmen of the World and Fraternal Aid, and in religion is connected with the Baptist Church. He has never cared to take an active part in political matters, but is a firm believer in the principles advocated by the Prohibition party. Both he and his wife are very popular and have hosts of friends wherever known.

EDGAR GRAHAM HOPE. Of pioneer ancestry, and a resident of California since his boyhood, Edgar Graham Hope has witnessed wonderful transformations in the face of the country, and has ably assisted in the development and promotion of its industrial progress. His finely improved ranch, a part of which he inherited from his parents, lies about ten miles south of the city of Madera, and is one of the most attractive and productive in the vicinity. A skillful, thrifty and enterprising farmer, he holds a position of prominence among the leading agriculturists of this section of the state, and is a worthy representative of all that constitutes an exemplary citizen. A son of the late Aquilla M. Hope, he was born January 29, 1841, in Kentucky, but was reared in Missouri and California.

Born in Baltimore, Md., Aquilla M. Hope learned the trade of millwright, which he subsequently followed in conjunction with farming in Kentucky for fifteen years. Removing with his family to Scotland county, Mo., in 1844, he was there actively engaged in many industries, working as millwright, farmer and stock-raiser, and as tanner. In 1852 he came across the plains with his family, in an ox-team train, and located in Santa Clara county, where he had the distinction of grinding the first sack of flour made in the Santa Clara Mills. Removing to Contra Costa county in 1853, he remained there two years, being employed in milling and stock raising. The following year he spent in Amador county, and then removed to Westpoint, Calaveras county, where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits from 1856 until 1873. Coming then to what was at that time Fresno county with his family, he bought a ranch of one thousand two hundred and fifty acres of land, which is now included within the limits of Madera county, and here followed his free and independent occupation until his death, at the age of seventy-six years. He made a specialty of wheat raising, although for six years he was a sheep raiser and dealer, carrying on an extensive business in that line. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Graham, was born in Virginia, the granddaughter of a Revolutionary soldier. She died at the homestead, in Madera county, at the age of seventy-nine years, and her body was laid beside that of her husband in the family burying-ground, on the home ranch. She bore her husband ten children, and of these two sons are California farmers, namely: S. D., of Merced, who owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in Madera county; and Edgar G., the subject of this sketch.

Bred and receiving his early education in Scotland county, Mo., Edgar Graham Hope came with his parents to California in 1852, and subsequently lived with them in different places until coming to Madera county in 1873. Subsequently learning the trade of blacksmith, he followed it for twelve years, having a blacksmith shop in Madera. Inheriting from his parents one hundred and sixty acres of the old home place, he is now engaged in farming pursuits, and is meeting with great success. He carries on a ranch of one thousand acres, raising large quantities of wheat, for which his land is especially adapted, averaging about seven hundred pounds to the acre.

Mr. Hope married Elizabeth Edwards, and they are the parents of seven children, namely: George, a merchant in Madera; Frank E., a prosperous farmer, his ranch adjoining that of his father; Marion, a barber in Madera; Edith, wife of S. Crowder; Versa, wife of D. Stevenson, of Oakland; Laura, and Thomas. Politically Mr. Hope is a sound Democrat, but has never been an aspirant for official honors.

GEORGE W. MORDECAI. The substantial and prosperous citizens of Madera, Madera county, Cal., have no more worthy representative than George W. Mordecai, an extensive landholder, a large sheep and stock raiser, and one of the most successful and best-known farmers of this part of the state. A son of Augustus Mordecai, he was born April 18, 1844, in Virginia, near Richmond. His grandfather, Jacob Mordecai, was a Virginian by birth and breeding, but for many years was a resident of North Carolina. He comes of Revolutionary stock, both of his great-grandfathers having served as soldiers in the Revolutionary army, and is of English descent, the emigrant ancestor of the Mordecai family having come from London, England, to America in the seventeenth century.

Born in North Carolina, Augustus Mordecai removed in early life to Virginia, the home of his ancestors, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He was a prominent planter, and a man of influence, serving for a number of years as presiding justice of the board of magistrates of Henrico county, Va. He married Rosina Young, who was born in Virginia, which was also the birthplace of her father, William Young, and she is still living, residing on the home plantation, "Rosewood."

Reared on the home farm, George W. Mordecai received a practical education in the private schools of Richmond. In 1862, in Richmond, he enlisted in the Confederate army, in which he served until the close of the war, taking part in many of the engagements of that conflict. Subsequently going to North Carolina he had charge of his uncle's plantation for three years. Coming to California in 1868, Mr. Mordecai took up and purchased the land that is now included in his present ranch, which was then a part of Fresno county, but is now in Madera county. Engaging in general farming, he has improved a valuable ranch, and as a stock and grain raiser has met with eminent success. He has four thousand acres of land in his ranch and devotes the greater part of it to the raising of grain. He likewise raises much stock, including cattle, sheep and horses, and by sturdy industry and judicious management has acquired a competency. Mr. Mordecai has made several trips to the east, visiting his old home and acquaintances. He has a very pleasant and attractive home, lying about four and one-half miles south of Madera.

Mr. Mordecai married, in Kern county, Miss Louise Dixon, a native of Mississippi and daughter of Judge R. L. Dixon. They have four children living, namely: George W., Jr., an attorney in Madera; Louise; Brooke; and Ethelfleda. Politically Mr. Mordecai is a staunch Democrat, and is prominent in public affairs. For two terms he served as a member of the state legislature, and was nominated as state senator, but was defeated.

BENJAMIN Y. COLSON. The varied experiences which have entered the life of Benjamin Y. Colson as a sailor before the mast have in no wise unfitted him for routine duties on land. An intelligent, capable, and energetic man, he has proven his ability as an agriculturist, the steady qualities inherited from his New England ancestry making him a most desirable citizen in any community where he might care to take up his residence. Since his location in Fresno county in the spring of 1886 he has held the position of manager of the Smith ranch, which consists of three hundred and twenty acres of land devoted to general farming, and where he employs three men. The ranch is located six and a half miles from the city of Fresno, in the Malaga district.

Born in New Bedford, Mass., February 27, 1845, Mr. Colson is the son of O. D. Colson. The birth of the latter occurred in Massachusetts, August 1, 1810. In manhood he became a tinner, spending the greater part of his life in his native state, though his latter days were passed in Fresno, Cal. He married Amanda Cushman, who was born June 14, 1826. Until he was seventeen years old Benjamin Y. Colson remained at home with his parents, learning the machinist's trade. Attracted by a sea-faring life he then became a sailor and left his native town in 1864 on a whaling voyage. He made one voyage around the Horn on the barque Sunbeam, under the command of Capt. D. C. Barrett and another voyage around East Cape under Capt. Thomas Fisher. He followed this life for twenty years, from 1864 to 1884, during which time he sailed through many seas, visiting many points.

In 1876 Mr. Colson married Annie E. Ellis, of Massachusetts, and in the summer of 1886 he came to California and entered upon the work which has since claimed his attention. To himself and wife were born two children, Marion and Evelyn. Politically Mr. Colson casts his ballot with the Prohibition party and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias, is a Mason and belongs to the Rathbone Sisters.

JAMES MURPHY. No great amount of wealth has come to Mr. Murphy. Dame Fortune has brought her gifts to him with niggardly hands, and reverses more than once have wrested from him the gold that he sought in the mines; yet he has sufficient to surround his old age with the comforts of existence, and as he passes the twilight of a busy life in his own little home at No. 612 North Bridge street, Visalia, he can look back over the past without regret and forward to the future with a cheery heart and a sunny spirit. "Owe no man anything" is one of his mottoes, and by following this precept he has kept his financial affairs in a satisfactory condition. His friends are legion, and although death has deprived himself and wife of their children, the kindness of their associates prevents them from feeling alone in the world.

In County Galway, Ireland, Mr. Murphy was born in 1810, being a son of Patrick and Katherine (Tharpy) Murphy, who were born in County Galway and remained there many years, and then removed to County Mayo, where they died, the father being engaged as a farmer and cattle-buyer. Out of a family of eleven children only two sons and two daughters attained mature years. James, who was the youngest of the children, received his education in the national schools of Ireland and at thirteen years of age came to the United States. For a considerable period he lived in New Orleans. During 1846 he went to St. Louis and secured employment. From there in 1851 he crossed the plains to California, landing at Hangtown, where he rested from the fatigue of the long journey. In a few days he proceeded to Georgetown, where he prospected successfully in the mines. A change of location in 1856 took him to the mines of Oroville, Butte county, where at first he was prosperous. Ultimately, however, a flood caused the waters of the Feather river to overflow and in a few hours he suffered a loss of $25,000. Though left penniless he did not despair, but changed his plan of work and prospected in Deep Diggings. At the time of the Washoe gold excitement in Nevada in 1859 he started for those mines, but changed his plans and prospected in Inyo county, Cal., remaining there some four years.

While Mr. Murphy considered Visalia his home as early as 1859 he did not settle permanently in that locality until 1865, when he leased a tract of land and engaged in raising cattle. At the time that the fence law was passed he owned some five hundred head of cattle, but being deprived of range for them he was compelled to sell at a heavy sacrifice. Afterward for six years he acted as foreman of a ranch. During early days he followed the stone-mason's trade and laid the first sewerage system in Visalia, besides doing other work of a similar nature. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket. While living in St. Louis he married Ann Burns, who was born in Ireland and with him is a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church. They became the parents of three children, but all died before the family removed from Missouri.

CHARLES RICHTER. The Richter family, represented in Fresno by Charles Richter, an enterprising and esteemed citizen, came originally from Germany, the emigrating ancestor, John M. Richter, locating in Philadelphia, Pa. He engaged in that location as a merchant tailor until the fall of 1837, when he removed to Springfield, Ill. In conjunction with his mercantile business he also conducted a small hotel, where he had the honor of entertaining both Lincoln and Douglas, as well as Judge Treat. Five years later he removed to Dewitt, Dewitt county, where he followed the same business, and during his residence in the latter place performed the duties of postmaster for twenty-five years. His death occurred in that place at an advanced age. His wife, formerly Annie Hagen, was a native of New Jersey, who died in Dewitt. They were the parents of two children, Albert, who died in San Jose, Cal., and Charles.

The birth of Charles Richter occurred in Philadelphia, Pa., February 20, 1833, and at the age of four years he was taken to Illinois, where he was reared to manhood. Abraham Lincoln stopped several times in their home in Dewitt, and the first money Charles Richter ever earned was a Spanish quarter which Mr. Lincoln gave him for wading a creek and cutting a fishing pole with the latter's knife. Also while a resident of Dewitt he heard Peter Cartwright preach in Hurley's grove. He received his education in the subscription schools, which were held in a log cabin, with puncheon seats and desks, mud and stick chimney, quill pens and other primitive conditions incident to the day. As he grew to young manhood he assisted his father in the store and postoffice, and after the death of the latter in 1862 he became postmaster and conducted the store also. In the meantime, in 1854, when a boy of twenty-one, he made a trip across the plains to California, traveling by ox teams from Illinois via St. Joseph, Mo., thence to Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, the only two places on the route where they saw houses and signs of civilization. The journey occupied six months, but the little company arrived in safety, after which Mr. Richter engaged in mining on the Feather river. He continued for three years in that occupation, and met with a reasonable degree of success. In 1857 he returned to Illinois by way of the Isthmus of Panama and took up his home occupations once more. He became prominent in public affairs in Dewitt, being elected township supervisor two terms and also president of the board of trustees of the town for many terms. In 1876 he went to the Black Hills, through the Indian country, where he remained for about four months, then returned to his mercantile business. He eventually resigned the office of postmaster and engaged as a manufacturer of drain tile, carrying on an extensive business until 1885, in which year he was appointed postmaster by Mr. Cleveland. He retained this office for three years, when he resigned and came to California, locating in Fresno, where he bought three hundred and twenty acres of land three miles south of the city and set one hundred and sixty acres of the tract to raise grapes. Later he disposed of a part of it, continuing in the cultivation of the remainder for three years, when he sold the entire property and for a time continued in the purchase and sale of vineyard property. He also purchased property in Fresno, where he made his home. He now owns two small vineyards three miles east of Fresno. During the first gold excitement in Alaska he went on a prospecting tour to Cook Inlet. For the past eight years Mr. Richter has also been engaged in mining interests in Fresno county, having opened a mine seventy-five miles east of Fresno, near the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains, where he built a quartz mill in 1904, which is operated three months of the year by water and the balance by steam power, five miles of ditches having been built to run the water. He also made a road to haul the machinery to the mill, everything being modern and thoroughly up to date. This is known as the Badger Mine, and has proved a success thus far. He is also interested in other mines in the same section.

In Dewitt county, Ill., December 3, 1857, Mr. Richter was united in marriage with Rachel Wilson, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of Amos Wilson. The latter was a native of Maryland, an early settler of Ohio, and eventually a farmer in Dewitt county, Ill. Of the eight children born to Mr. Richter and his wife six attained maturity, namely: John A., of Fresno, a vineyardist and deputy United States internal revenue collector; H. W., in business with his father; Viola, the wife of Nathan Trego, of Dewitt; Annie, deceased, was the wife of Charles Leasure; Alberta, the wife of T. W. Fresh, of Fresno; and Ollie, the wife of James McDonald of Fresno. Fraternally Mr. Richter was made a Mason in Amon Lodge of Dewitt, Ill., and now belongs to Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. In national politics Mr. Richter is a Democrat, but he cast his ballot for Abraham Lincoln, whom he personally knew and honored for the sterling qualities known to all the country.

CHARLES G. BONNER, justly named among the representative citizens of Fresno, is a native son of California, his birth having occurred in San Francisco, February 4, 1869. His father, Charles Bonner, a native of Canada and the descendant of an old and honored New York family, came to California by the Isthmus of Panama in the early '50s and engaged in mining. He also mined in Nevada, and became superintendent of the Gould and Curry mine of Virginia City, being considered one of the best mining experts both in Nevada and California. His death occurred in San Francisco in 1871, and he was buried on Staten Island. His wife, formerly Rosa Gore, was a native of Cambridge, Mass., a sister of Mrs. John Reddington, of San Francisco, and a granddaughter of ex-Governor Gore of Massachusetts. She came to California in an early day and died in San Francisco. Of their three children Charles G. Bonner was the only son and the youngest child. He was reared in San Francisco and received his preliminary scholastic training in the schools of that city, after which, in 1885, he entered the University of California, graduating four years later with the degree of B.S. In the same year he came to Fresno and purchased a vineyard and entered at once upon a horticultural career. He set out what is known as the Bonner vineyard eight miles east of Fresno, where he owns a six hundred and forty acre tract, of which four hundred acres are in vines and trees, while the balance is devoted to alfalfa and stock. This property is in the hands of the Bonner Vineyard Company, which was incorporated in 1892 with Mr. Bonner as president. From this modest beginning Mr. Bonner began buying and shipping, and has since put up a packing house commensurate with the business transacted, putting in necessary equipments in the shape of a raisin seeder and stemmer operated by steam, etc. In 1890 Mr. Bonner also formed a partnership with James Madison, of San Francisco, in the packing and shipping of fruit, this firm being incorporated in 1903 under the style of Madison & Bonner, of which Mr. Bonner is secretary and local manager. They own five acres of the Bonner vineyard at Locan's Spur, and five acres of land for the packing plant and necessary equipments, etc. They ship by carloads direct to eastern markets, their business being the leading one with the exception of the Seeding Trust, and has proven of commercial importance to Fresno.

Mr. Bonner has been twice married, his first marriage occurring in Boston, Mass., and uniting him with Louise Tripp, of Massachusetts, who died in San Francisco. She left one daughter, Beatrice Louise. His second marriage occurred in San Francisco and united him with Marie Walters, who was born in Sierra county, Cal., a daughter of J. C. Walters, a pioneer of the state, who resides in Sierra county. He was one of the founders of the Walters Colony in Fresno county. Mrs. Bonner is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally Mr. Bonner is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and Native Sons of the Golden West. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

NATHAN O. MILLER. About three miles southwest of Le Grand is the grain and stock ranch belonging to N. O. Miller, who is conceded by all to be a man worthy of the highest respect and esteem, and the owner of seven hundred and fifty acres of as fine land as may be found in the county. He is a son of Jacob and Mary (Singleton) Miller, both natives of Indiana; the former came to California in 1850 with ox-teams. Upon reaching his destination, he went at once to Placer county, where he mined two years, with good success. He returned home in 1852, and eight years later returned with his family by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Landing in San Francisco, they located first in Santa Clara county, where Jacob Miller purchased one hundred and eighty acres of land, part of which he set out in an orchard, remaining there until his death, at the age of fifty-five years. Surviving him were his wife and seven children, as follows: Sarah; Stephen J., of Gilroy; Scott, of Eureka; Mrs. Josephine Ross, of Modesto; Alice; Nathan O., and William E.; the mother died in 1901 at the advanced age of seventy-four years.

Nathan O. Miller was born in Santa Clara county, November 13, 1861. His early education was received in the common schools, and supplemented by a course in Heald's Business College, in San Francisco, after which he spent three years as foreman of a sugar plantation in the Hawaiian Islands. Returning once more to Santa Clara county he was engaged as an orchardist for six years, finally trading his property for the ranch he now owns. By his marriage in 1899 he was united with Fanny E. Harrison, also a native of Santa Clara county, daughter of Eli and Mary (Hobson) Harrison. The former was born in Massachusetts in 1831, a son of James Harrison, an Englishman, Mrs. Harrison being a native of Illinois. In 1852 Eli Harrison journeyed from New York by way of the Isthmus to San Francisco, going first to the mines and then to Santa Clara county. He had the distinction of being one of the first orchardists to locate in Santa Clara county, and also of being one of the prominent men who had Elm Rock Park set aside for San Jose. He owned about thirteen hundred acres of land in the San Joaquin valley. He served the Republican party as public administrator. Mr. Miller is a Republican who never swerves from the doctrines of that party. He was a member of Palo Alto Parlor, N. S. G. W.

JOHN C. RORDEN. As president and general manager of the Selma Land Company, which was incorporated under the laws of the state of California August 3, 1900, with principal place of business in Selma, Fresno county, John C. Rorden is thoroughly conversant upon all the advantages of this section, having been a resident of this immediate vicinity since 1888. He owns one hundred and twenty acres of land adjacent to Selma on the east, conducts a dairy of fifty head of cattle, has eighty acres in alfalfa, and one hundred acres of unimproved land near by.

Born May 28, 1864, in Schleswig, Germany, also the birthplace of his parents, Mr. Rorden is the fourth child born in a family of nine, eight of whom were sons. His father, Heinrich F. Rorden, was for many years captain of a sailing vessel, but spent the latter part of his life in retirement in his native land. He married Timme D. Jensen, who still survives him, residing in Germany. Acquiring a common school education in Germany, after leaving school Mr. Rorden emulated the example of his father and went to sea. For three years thereafter he was a sailor on the William English, and during this time he made two trips around Cape Horn to Valparaiso, in addition to visiting the principal ports of England, Holland, France and other parts of Europe. In 1883 he decided to abandon sea life and settle permanently in the United States. Locating in Mendocino county, Cal., he was employed for a brief time in the lumber mills. On account of ill health, he went to the hospital at San Francisco, where he received treatment, and while recuperating engaged as cook in a hotel, subsequently spending one year in the United States laundry of that place. His next place of residence was Vallejo, and during his six months' stay there, he learned the barber's trade and then followed this occupation for some time in San Francisco and in Alameda. Returning to San Francisco in 1885 he worked in the Grand Central barber shop in that city for three years, and September 28, 1888, he found a desirable business opening in Selma, in Fresno county, and, opening a barber shop in the Whitson hotel, he began business in his own behalf. He subsequently removed his shop to Front street and in connection, purchased a saloon which he afterward sold, but continued to conduct the shop until 1902.

In October, 1901, Mr. Rorden decided to engage in the real estate and insurance business, and at that time he purchased an interest in the Selma Land Company, and has been president of this company ever since. During the first year of his connection with this firm, over a quarter of a million dollars' worth of land changed hands through its efforts. The company acts as land agent, buying, selling and renting lands, also lending money at lowest rates of interest, making a specialty of looking after town and country property for non-residents. But the main object of the company is to induce homeseekers to settle there, presenting arguments to show that in the six townships of choice lands directly tributary to Selma, there is room for a population of fifty thousand people.

Aside from his interests already mentioned, Mr. Rorden owns considerable stock in the Selma Creamery, in the Farmers' Bank, of which he is a director, and in the Selma Improvement Company. He is quite active in politics, using both his vote and influence in behalf of the Democratic party. In fraternal circles he is a valued member of the Foresters of America and Woodmen of the World. By his marriage in Selma he was united with Miss Georgia Levis, a Wisconsin lady, and their home is made happy by the presence of three children, Dora, Cleo and Helen.

MRS. ANNIE QUINLAN. Woman's ability to manage important industries is no longer questioned by those who were once skeptical concerning her breadth of mind and the wisdom of her judgment in commercial affairs. As illustrating the possession of these qualities, mention belongs to Mrs. Annie Quinlan, who has built up a valuable business in the raising of orchard and vineyard supplies. Her homestead is attractively situated on East avenue, about four and one-half miles from Fresno. The most prominent feature of the place is the modern residence, which is lighted from a gas plant in the house, and supplied with hot and cold water in every room. Surrounding the home, and forming a picturesque environment, may be seen large orchards and vineyards, which during the season are laden with fruits and raisin grapes.

Mrs. Quinlan was reared near Hillsboro, Montgomery county, Ill., of which her parents, Luke and Margaret (Kealy) Shelly, were early settlers, her father having improved a farm there and engaged in the stock business until his death. The family numbered five sons and five daughters, all of whom attained maturity and five are now living. Two sons are in Australia, one in St. Louis, and one (Luke) in Fresno. Mrs. Quinlan was next to the youngest in the family and received such advantages as the district schools afforded. When a young girl she was married in Hillsboro to Michael Quinlan, who was an employe of the Wabash Railroad, but after coming to California in 1877 was for seven years a foreman on the Southern Pacific road. On resigning in 1884 he bought forty acres on what is now East avenue near Fresno and here built a small frame house. The land was set out in vineyard and orchard, Mrs. Quinlan having personal supervision of all the work. After three years an additional purchase was made, comprising one hundred and forty-five acres at Malaga Station, formerly owned by Colonel Forsythe. Thirty-five acres of the tract had been put under alfalfa, ten acres were in figs and pears, and one hundred acres in raisins, forming one of the oldest vineyards in Fresno county and one of the most celebrated as well. Few vineyards had yielded as abundantly. In one year seventy-five tons of raisins were shipped, while at other times the harvests had been almost as large. Mrs. Quinlan is also the owner of forty acres on Cedar avenue, which is under cultivation to seedless Sultana raisins, olives, walnuts and small fruits. The orchards are cared for under contract and Indians are engaged to pick the fruit. In addition she has a number of head of cattle and hogs on her place and has proved as efficient in the care of stock as in the management of her land.

In the family of Mrs. Quinlan there are eight children, namely: Mamie, Gregory, Sylvan, Cecelia, Margaret, Martin, Thomas and Luke. All have been educated in St. Augustine's Academy. On the organization of St. John's Church Mrs. Quinlan became one of its charter members and has since been a faithful attendant of its services. In national politics she adheres to Democratic principles. Woman's suffrage finds an earnest champion in Mrs. Quinlan, who believes firmly that women who are obliged to pay taxes upon their property should not be subjected to taxation without representation. She keeps in touch with horticulture in all of its branches and holds membership in the Raisin Growers' Association.

N. ROSENTHAL. The mercantile interests of Madera have an able representative in Mr. Rosenthal, resident member of the firm of Rosenthal & Kutner. Although a native of Germany, born February 8, 1853, he is a patriotic American, and especially loyal to the state of California, where he has made his home since 1876, and where he has gained a host of warm personal friends. The foundation of his present knowledge of the dry goods business was gained through an apprenticeship of three years to the trade, and at the expiration of his time he worked in different parts of his native land. During the year 1876 he arrived in California and coming to Fresno, entered the employ of Kutner, Goldstein & Co., with whom he remained about twelve months. At the expiration of that period he went into business for himself in the same town, opening a cigar and tobacco store. In 1879 he established himself in business in Phoenix, Ariz., where he conducted a general mercantile store. However, while engaged in business there, he still considered California his home state, and in 1886 disposed of his Arizona interests, since which time he has resided in Madera.

Shortly after the fire of 1886 Mr. Rosenthal built a small frame store room and in it he inaugurated a mercantile business. At first his stock of goods was small, but as his sales increased he enlarged the stock to meet the demands of the trade. On the corner of Yosemite and D streets he erected a two-story structure, 30x80 feet in dimensions, which was one of the first brick stores in the city. This has since been enlarged, so that it gives an area of 30x100 feet for the accommodation of the stock of general merchandise. However, after a time even the increased space proved insufficient, and he then bought out the dry goods store of Sweet & Co., a few doors below the old stand, and moved his merchandise to the new quarters, where he carries a full line of dry goods and clothing. In the older building he has a full equipment of groceries, hardware and furniture. Since 1885 the business has been conducted under the firm title of Rosenthal & Kutner, his partner being J. Kutner, who has charge of the San Francisco office and resides in that city.

On the organization of the Commercial Bank of Madera Mr. Rosenthal became one of its charter stockholders and has since served upon its board of directors. Included in his other interests is the ownership of thirty-eight acres in the heart of Madera, consisting of three hundred lots, and all the buildings formerly owned by the old Madera Flume and Trading Company, among these buildings being a sash and door factory, 170x300 feet, operated by Watkins & Thurman. Since the organization of the board of fire commissioners of Madera he has held the office of clerk and been very active in its workings. He is a member of the Madera Chamber of Commerce and an enthusiastic supporter of all enterprises for the benefit of the city. In politics he votes with the Republican party. While in Phoenix he was made a Mason and is now connected with Madera Lodge No. 280, F. & A. M., Fresno Chapter No. 69, R. A. M., and the Order of the Eastern Star. His marriage united him with Hattie Price, who was born and reared in San Francisco and is the daughter of a pioneer family of that city. Their only child, Thekla Rosenthal, is a graduate of Miss Hamlin's Seminary in San Francisco.

JOSEPH Y. NELSON. A successful and highly respected citizen of Fresno county is Joseph Y. Nelson, who, sixteen years ago, became the owner of his present ranch, which consists of forty acres of as good land as the section affords. The family which is represented by Mr. Nelson in California has long been connected with the agricultural interests of Essex county, Mass., where father and grandfather, both named Daniel, were born, lived and died. The father married Mary Hoyt, also a native of that section.

Born June 22, 1849, in Essex county, Mass., Joseph Y. Nelson was reared to manhood upon the paternal farm, his inheritance of the thrifty qualities of the New Englander being added to by years of practical training. In 1876 he came to California, locating in Yolo county, where he carried on farming for two years. He then went north to Oregon and followed the same pursuits in eastern Oregon from 1879 to 1882. The following year he once more located in California, then becoming a resident of Fresno county. A few years later he purchased his present property of forty acres and with the passing years has brought it to a high state of cultivation, twenty-five acres being given over to the cultivation of wine and raisin grapes, while the remainder is devoted to orchard and general farming pursuits. He has made a success of his work and is known throughout as a man of ideas, practical methods and an enterprising spirit.

The marriage of Mr. Nelson occurred in Yolo county in 1877 and united him with Alice Creason, of Missouri. They are the parents of two children, Frank and Aimee. In his political convictions Mr. Nelson adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

MARION M. VINCENT. One of the enterprising and progressive business men of Merced is M. M. Vincent, who is carrying on a substantial business as a blacksmith and carriage manufacturer. A man of energy and capability, he has won acknowledged success in his industrial efforts, and stands high among the esteemed and respected residents of the city. He was born September 27, 1861, on Flores, the most western of the Azores, on which his parents, John and Mary Isabelle Vincent, spent their entire lives, being employed in agricultural pursuits. He is the second child in succession of birth of a family of six children, of whom five are living, all being residents of California.

Coming to Tuolumne county, Cal., in 1871, when but ten years old, M. M. Vincent completed his early education in the public schools, and subsequently worked as a farm laborer in that county until 1888. Locating then in Selma, he served an apprenticeship of three years at the trades of carriage-maker and blacksmith, and then started in business on his own account, remaining there until 1897. In that year, Mr. Vincent removed to Merced, and has since been actively identified with its industrial prosperity. Buying out the Jack Richards plant, he has greatly enlarged it, having now a separate blacksmith shop and carriage manufactory, and has built up an extensive and remunerative business. In his shops he has machinery of the most modern approved patterns, including saws and planes of various makes and styles, and in his smithy has installed a George Barcus horse-shoer for holding fractious horses. He has also a gasoline engine of eight horse-power, and a Henderson patent cold-tire setter. Among his manufactures of importance are wagons, carriages, plows, harrows, etc. Mr. Vincent also deals largely in agricultural implements, representing Porteous, of Fresno, and Thompson & Diggs, of Sacramento, and many eastern manufacturers. In the sale of gasoline engines and pumping plants, he represents the Samson Iron Works, of Stockton.

In Selma, this state, Mr. Vincent married Emma M. Wasgatt, who was born and brought up in Maine. In fraternal organizations Mr. Vincent is active and prominent, being officially identified with a number of secret societies, namely: the Woodmen of the World, of which he is past consul; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand; of the Encampment; and of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past officer. He is a Prohibitionist in politics, and belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he is a deacon.

ISAAC NEWTON PARLIER. In the above-named gentleman we find the founder of Parlier and one of the most substantial citizens of the county. A native of Illinois, he was born in Washington county, October 22, 1842, a son of Isaac and Catherine (Hall) Parlier, both of whom are now deceased. The father was born in Georgia, but on reaching man's estate he moved to Illinois, locating in Washington county, where he engaged in general farming. Later he went to Belleville, the same state, where for several years, or until his death, he was interested in the flour milling business. His wife, a native of Alabama, came to California and died here at the home of her son. By her marriage with Mr. Parlier she became the mother of six children, only two of whom are now living, Isaac N. and Allen, the latter residing in Los Angeles.

Isaac N. Parlier was but a youth when his father died, so he was unable to secure much of an education, as he was compelled to assist in the work of the farm. In the fall of 1873 he came to California, locating in Stanislaus county, where he rented land and engaged in farming. Three years later, in the fall of 1876, he disposed of his interests there and settled in what is now Parlier, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres and also purchasing railroad lands and four hundred acres of desert. On a portion of this land Parlier now stands, he having laid out and named the town. The year after coming here Mr. Parlier was foreman of the Center-ville and Kingsburg Irrigation ditch, assisting in the construction of the main ditch, and for many years was president of the company, but of late years he has practically devoted his entire time to general farming and stock-raising. Eighty acres of his farm are devoted to a vineyard, one of the finest in the county. Aside from his other interests, in company with Mr. Hayhurst, he operated a general store in Parlier for several years with success. On coming to California he was a stranger without money or influence, but by industry and frugality he has accumulated a handsome competency. He practically built up the town of Parlier and has been at the head of nearly every enterprise calculated to be of material benefit to the community.

In Illinois Mr. Parlier was united in marriage with Mary Laird, who has become the mother of nine children, as follows: Eliza Catherine, now Mrs. David Fett; Charles Allen; Carrie Ann, now Mrs. John Thomas; George W.; Nora, now Mrs. Osterhout; William W., of Reedley; J. Bert; Mary Ada, and Lula Grace.

Fraternally Mr. Parlier is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being associated with the lodge at Modesto, and also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Fresno. In politics a Democrat, he is deeply interested in the welfare of his party, but has never cared to take an active part in public affairs, preferring rather to devote his time and attention to his own and to the interests of the town where he has made his home for so many years. The only public office he has ever held is that of postmaster, being the present incumbent.

ROBERT D. HANNAH. Numbered among the respected residents of Merced is Robert D. Hannah, who, as proprietor of an up-to-date livery stable, is carrying on a thriving business. Possessing an unlimited stock of energy and perseverance, he has labored with untiring diligence since beginning life's battle on his own account, and by industry and good management has met with marked success in his undertakings. A son of J. M. Hannah, he was born, November 28, 1853, in Randolph county, Mo. His grandfather, Robert Hannah, was born and reared in Tennessee, but in early life followed the march of civilization westward, becoming a pioneer settler of Randolph county, Mo. He was a man of great honesty and affability, well liked and popular in the community, and was familiarly known to both old and young as "Uncle Bobby."

A native of Tennessee, J. M. Hannah lived there until a boy of thirteen years, and then went with his parents to Missouri, where he assisted his father in the pioneer labor incident to clearing a farm. On beginning life for himself, he was employed in tilling the soil in Randolph county, but subsequently engaged in general farming in Macon county, Mo. In 1870 he migrated with his family to California, and the following spring located in Merced county, buying one hundred and sixty acres of land on Dry creek. Afterward removed to a farm on Merced river, he was there employed in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1886. He married Sarah J. Peeler, the daughter of John Peeler, a Missouri farmer, and she is now a resident of Merced. Of the thirteen children born of their union, eight grew to years of maturity, and six are living.

The third child in order of birth of the parental household, R. D. Hannah was educated in the district schools of his native state, and while young became familiarly versed in the various branches of agriculture, his father proving an apt instructor. Locating in Merced county in the spring of 1871, he followed farming on the home ranch for several years. Taking up his residence in Merced in 1889, Mr. Hannah purchased an eight-horse team and four wagons, and for eight years was employed in teaming and freighting between that city and Mariposa. Starting in the livery business in July, 1897, Mr. Hannah was located on Main street for five years, and was quite successful in his operations. Removing to the corner of Alameda and Eighteenth streets in 1902, he took possession of the fine new stable which he had erected, and has here continued the business with excellent results. The stable is 80 x 80 feet, containing fifty-six stalls, and is well furnished and equipped. Mr. Hannah has accumulated a good property, and built an attractive residence in the city.

In Merced, Cal., Mr. Hannah married Fannie D. Daniel, a native of Macon county, Mo., and they have four children, namely: Luther Daniel, Elbert Lee, Zella Lou and Homer Reuben. Politically Mr. Hannah is an adherent of the Democratic party, and fraternally he belongs to Snelling Lodge No. 121, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand. Mrs. Hannah is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

CURTIS T. FORREST. Numbered among the successful young ranchers of Merced county is Curtis T. Forrest, who is located three miles southeast of Le Grand and engaged in the cultivation and improvement of two thousand acres of land. This property he has accumulated since coming to this location in 1903. Since that time devoting his attention to the raising of wheat, barley, cattle and hogs, his financial success is the result of painstaking and methodical effort and the ability to execute as well as plan. Born in Oakland, Cal., December 4, 1879, he is a son of Curtis T. and Flora J. (Stocker) Forrest, both pioneers of California.

His father, Curtis T. Forrest, had four children, all of whom were born in Oakland: Curtis T.; Flora, wife of Charles Anderson of San Francisco; Bessie S., and Newell. The father died in 1891, aged about sixty years. His widow survives him, and married J. W. Stevens of San Francisco. They now make their home in Oakland.

Curtis T. Forrest was reared in his home in Oakland, and after receiving a preliminary education in the public schools of that city entered Stanford University, where he completed a course calculated to prove of material benefit in whatever line he should attempt for his life-work. He came to Merced county to look after his own and the property interests of the family, and has since been engaged in farming.

RIENHOLD H. G. KAEHLER. Many of the thrifty and enterprising residents of Merced county are of foreign birth and breeding, who have brought from their homes across the sea those habits of industry and energetic perseverance that have won them success in their undertakings. Prominent among this number is Rienhold H. G. Kaehler, a well-known and prosperous business man of the city of Merced. A son of George Kaehler, he was born, June 9, 1862, in Kiel, Prussia, which was likewise his father's birthplace.

A machinist by trade, George Kaehler was for many years master mechanic of a manufacturing establishment in the Fatherland. As a soldier in the Danish army, he was in active service during the Revolution of 1848. Immigrating to this country, he settled in California, and is now a resident of Merced. He married Josepha Ferdinand, a native of Silesia, Prussia, and they have three children living, namely: George, a wholesale dealer of liquors, in Fresno; Rienhold H. G., the subject of this review; and Max, of Los Banos.

Endowed with excellent mental ability, Rienhold H. G. Kaehler obtained a good education in his native city, and at the age of fourteen years began learning the trade of manufacturing and distilling liquors, at which he served an apprenticeship of four years. Shipping then as purser on the Chinese cruiser Nankin, he sailed through the Chinese waters, and along the coast of Japan, visiting ports of both countries. Coming to San Francisco in 1884, Mr. Kaehler was employed as a clerk in that city for awhile, and then went to Seattle, Wash., as manager for the firm of Walter Brothers & Co. Returning to San Francisco, he remained there two years. Locating in Merced in March, 1888, he established a wholesale liquor business, representing the Rainier beer in Merced county for the Seattle Brewing Company, and being agent for the James D. Pepper whiskey. Mr. Kaehler has acquired a large property in this locality. He has built several business houses, but has disposed of all excepting a brick store building, 25x95 feet. He likewise erected a number of residences as an investment for his money, and of these he has sold all excepting the one in which he now lives. Purchasing land in this vicinity, he improved it, setting out an orchard of twenty acres, and this, likewise, he sold at an advantage.

Mr. Kaehler married, in San Francisco, Blanche Wallinfels, a native of that city, and they have two children, namely: Rienhold and Norman. Fraternally Mr. Kaehler is a member of the Druids and of the Foresters. Politically he is a Democrat.

CHARLES E. JOHNSTON, M. D. Since his location in Visalia, February, 1899, Dr. C. E. Johnston has risen to a place of prominence among the physicians of the city and won the commendation of all who have had occasion for his services. He is a physician of the physio-medical school, having graduated from an institution of this character in Indianapolis, Ind., in 1896, with the degree of doctor of medicine, after which he was variously located until his settlement in Visalia.

The family of which Dr. Johnston is a member belongs to the old southern family of Johnstons, represented in the Confederate army by Gen. Joseph Johnston. Mathias Johnston was a native of Scotland who, upon his immigration to America, settled in Maryland, later removing to Delaware, thence to Ohio, where he engaged as a farmer until his death at the age of one hundred and one years. He was a patriot and served in the Revolutionary war. In his family was a son, Joseph C. Johnston, who became a farmer in Ohio, later removing to Missouri, where he followed the same occupation. Inheriting from his patriotic father a staunch love for the Union he remained loyal in a state of much disaffection. He was a strong Union man and a member of the Missouri State Militia. He made his home in Missouri until his death, which occurred at the age of eighty-two years and seven months. He married Paulina McCauly, a native of Tennessee and daughter of John McCauly, also a native of that state and a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He died in Tennessee at an advanced age. Mr. Johnston died in Missouri, leaving a family of five sons, of whom four live in California: James L., a retired physician of Los Angeles; Samuel W., a bridge contractor of Los Angeles; Clark F., a merchant of Stockton; and C. E., the subject of this review, who was born February 8, 1869, in Russellville, Mo.

The youngest in his father's family, C. E. Johnston was reared on the paternal farm, attending the public schools while he received practical training which has left its impress upon his character. He remained at home until attaining the age of nineteen years, entering, in 1889, Hooper Institute, in Clarksburg, Moniteau county, Mo., where he took a literary course. Deciding to enter the professional ranks he then became a student in the Physio-Medical College, at Indianapolis, Ind., from which institution he was graduated in 1896. He began the practice of his profession with Dr. T. J. Martin, in Lewisport, Ky., remaining in this connection for one year, when he located in the city of his birth for a like period. In 1898 he came to California and in Los Angeles engaged in medical practice with his brother for a short time, following this with a removal in February, 1899, to Visalia, where he has since resided. He has made a success of his work since locating here, having built up an extensive general practice, while he gives much of his time and attention to chronic diseases, making a specialty of this line.

In Indianapolis Dr. Johnston married May Crompton, a native of that city, and born of this union is one daughter, Madge. Fraternally Dr. Johnston belongs to the Knights of Pythias Uniformed Rank, and the Foresters, Fraternal Aid, Fraternal Brotherhood, Order of Lions and Order of Pendo. He is a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically is an active Republican.

OLE JOHN OLSEN. Many hundreds of miles from his native Norway, where he was born November 12, 1865, Ole John Olsen has found unsuspected opportunities, and has well applied the useful and practical abilities with which his countrymen are generally endowed. His farm of one hundred acres three and a half miles north of Newman has not been won without much of struggle and deprivation, but his occupancy of the same since 1900 has proved him to be a conscientious and progressive farmer, saving always more than he spends, and looking forward to increasing his landed possessions. Half of his farm is under alfalfa and wild grass, and he is maintaining a dairy of thirty-five cows, and engaging in alfalfa raising and general farming.

Mr. Olsen's father, named Ole, followed the occupation in which his son is engaged, but never wandered from his shut-in and limited horizon. His ancestors had been born in Norway, and to him its mountains and fjords were objects of endless delight. He gave his son a practical common school education, and trained him in all that had to do with the successful operation of a farm in the lowlands. The young man was twenty-four years old when he stepped from the gang-plank of his steamer in New York, and thereafter he worked as a laborer in the metropolis until 1890, in which year he came to

San Francisco, securing employment on a ranch along the Merced river. Six months later he went to Yolo county and there spent the summer, locating in the fall of 1892 near Crows Landing, where he worked on ranches until 1900. He then purchased his present place of one hundred acres, where, as heretofore stated, he lives alone, with the exception of the help required to run his dairy. Mr. Olsen is a Democrat in politics, and is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a steady, thorough going rancher, thrifty as regards expenditures, and an example of unflinching industry. In his neighborhood he is esteemed for his honesty and fair business dealings, and for his strict attention to his farm, his dairy and the general responsibilities which surround him in his adopted state. He is fortunate in having many of his countrymen as neighbors, and in having learned so quickly and well the language of his foster country.

ALVA E. SNOW. A man of sterling qualities, and a lawyer of ability and skill, Alva E. Snow is a citizen of prominence and influence, who for four years rendered excellent service as district attorney of Fresno county. He comes of distinguished stock, being a Mayflower descendant, and the representative of one of the most ancient and honored families of New England. His immigrant ancestor on the paternal side was Nicholas Snow, who came from England to America, and married, at Plymouth, Mass., prior to June 1, 1627, Constance Hopkins, who came over with her father, Stephen Hopkins, on the Mayflower in 1620. Nicholas Snow died in Eastham, Mass., November 25, 1676. His descendants were for many generations active in the management of the public affairs of Plymouth county, Mass., which was the birthplace of Mr. Snow, and of his father, the late Harvey Snow. Capt. Prince Snow, Mr. Snow's grandfather, was born, and lived and died in Plymouth county. He was a seafaring man, and was also engaged to some extent in agricultural pursuits.

Succeeding to the occupation in which he was reared, Harvey Snow was a New England farmer, and was likewise employed in mercantile pursuits in Mattapoisett, Plymouth county, Mass., where he reared his family. He died at the age of sixty-five years. He was held in high respect as a man and a citizen, and served as selectman, and as school trustee. He was liberal in his religious beliefs, and a member of the Universalist Church. In politics he was a Republican. His wife, whose maiden name was Mar-ron, was born near Sheffield, England, and now resides in Fresno, with her son Alva, the eldest and only surviving child of her family of three girls and one boy.

Born October 13, 1861, Alva E. Snow was brought up in Plymouth county, Mass., obtaining his early education in the grammar and high schools of Mattapoisett, and at the Taber Academy, in Marion, Mass. After his graduation from Tufts College in 1887, with the degree of A. B., he entered the Harvard Law School, and in 1889 was admitted to the Massachusetts bar. Coming immediately to California, Mr. Snow settled in San Francisco, where for about eighteen months he was with the firm of Herman & Soto, attorneys-at-law. Locating in Fresno January 1, 1891, he practiced his profession two years, and then served two years as deputy district attorney under Firman Church. The Republican nominee for district attorney in the fall of 1894, Mr. Snow was elected for a term of four years, having the distinction of being the first Republican district attorney of Fresno county. Taking the oath of office in January, 1895, he served until January, 1899, at the same time being in partnership with G. C. Freman as head of the law firm of Snow & Freman. As deputy district attorney Mr. Snow succeeded in convicting the train robbers, Chris Evans and his partner Sontag, securing life imprisonment, and also conducted the prosecution of Sanders, the noted forger. He was successful as district attorney, having conducted several cases of importance, and established an enviable reputation as an able prosecutor. He is now busily engaged in a general practice of the law, having an extensive and lucrative patronage.

In Fresno Mr. Snow married Dora P. Colson, who was born and bred in Plymouth county, Mass., where her father, Owen D. Colson, was a well-known merchant. In 1903 Mr. and Mrs. Snow revisited their old New England home, and afterward made a trip to England and the continent, traveling throughout Europe. Fraternally Mr. Snow was made a Mason in Marion, Mass., and is now a member of Fresno Lodge No. 274, F. & A. M.; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in which he is a past officer. He likewise belongs to the County Bar Association. Politically he is a straightforward Republican. Mrs. Snow is a member of the Congregational Church.

HARRY W. R. THORNTON. One of the successful, interesting and well-posted business men of the Los Banos district, and whose pioneer experiences embrace practically all of the phases which made of the early days of California a picturesque and unusual addition to the world's history, is Harry W. R. Thornton, a pioneer of 1852, and known as a successful miner, stage-route driver and manager, hotel proprietor and general rancher. Mr. Thornton was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 6, 1839.

S. F. Dickenson.

In 1845 he accompanied his family to Burlington, Iowa, and in 1848 removed to Knox county, Ill. His trip across the plains with horse-teams in 1852 was a welcome diversion in a life hitherto devoid of any particular promise, and once in California, a creditable ambition led him to visit practically all the large mining centers, which, however, failed to net him expected gains. His experiences in these communities all through the northwest were oftentimes startling and always impressive.

Mr. Thornton's interest in mining ceased in 1869, and the following year he went to the South Sea Islands, returning to California and Gilroy in the fall of 1870. In 1876 he undertook the management of the old Hotel Los Banos, at Los Banos. When the new brick Hotel Los Banos was completed by Miller & Lux, he leased the same and conducted it with signal success from 1891 until June, 1903. Selling out and retiring from the hotel business, he devotes his energies to the improvement of his three thousand acres of land in the vicinity of Los Banos, part of which is under irrigation. He also owns property in Volta, and has bought and sold lands in different parts of the county. His land is devoted chiefly to raising alfalfa and stock, and his improvements are modern. Mr. Thornton possesses to a marked degree the characteristics which insure popularity, confidence and influence, and his successful financial undertakings bespeak a broad knowledge of the rules and amenities of business life. He is a Republican in politics, and though never active from the standpoint of office-seeking, takes a keen interest in the political ambitions of his friends, in good government, and the best possible educational advantages. He married in San Jose, in 1876, Jane Potter.

SAMUEL FRANCIS DICKENSON. The pioneer experiences of the past years of California have formed a large part of the life of Samuel Francis Dickenson, an esteemed resident of Fresno county, being located on a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Conejo. He was born in Jackson county, Mo., March 13, 1837, a son of Gallant D. Dickenson, who was born in Tennessee and reared in Virginia. In young manhood he returned to Tennessee, where he was married in 1828, and in 1832 located in Jackson county, Mo., and engaged in farming and stock-raising. Deciding to become a pioneer in the more remote west, he came to California in 1846, crossing the plains by means of ox-teams. They left Missouri in April and arrived in California in September. Mr. Dickenson located in Monterey, where he engaged in the lumber business, the following year making the first brick ever made in California, which was used in the construction of the Dickenson home, which is still standing in Monterey. In June, 1848, Mr. Dickenson went to the Dry Diggings, now Coloma, Cal., and mined until October of the same year, when he engaged in mining at Mokelumne Hill. The following year he located in Stockton, San Joaquin county, where he purchased property and engaged in real estate operations, the renting of property and loaning of money, having brought away with him from Mokelumne Hill five hundred pounds of gold. In 1851 he removed to Tuolumne river, at Dickenson ferry, which was named for him, and there followed farming until his death in 1869, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife, formerly Isabelle McCreary, a native of Tennessee, died in San Jose in 1877. They were the parents of four sons and two daughters, of whom Samuel Francis Dickenson was the fifth in order of birth.

A rather limited education was received by Samuel F. Dickenson through an attendance of the common schools in the vicinity of his home, after which he engaged in the raising of stock, locating in 1856 in the vicinity of Snelling, Merced county. He engaged in loaning money and speculating until 1868, when, on account of the dry weather, he removed to the mountains with some stock he owned, the greater portion of which he lost. On his return to the San Joaquin valley he found employment on various ranches for nine months, after which he engaged in the cattle business with a partner, J. T. Stockard. Two years later he sold out with a profit of $40,000. With the proceeds he bought the Bearfield farm of four hundred acres on the Merced river, but the death of his partner induced him to dispose of his interests to the widow. He then loaned his money for a time, and about 1871 purchased nineteen hundred and twenty acres on Mariposa creek, twenty miles east of the city of Merced, where he engaged in sheep raising and farming until 1883. He disposed of this property, but continued to follow the sheep business while he made his home in Merced. In 1885 he located in Fresno county, purchasing his present property, which consists of one hundred and sixty acres, where he carries on principally the interests of an extensive dairy. He is interested in the Co-operative Creamery and takes a keen interest in all that tends toward the development of the country.

In Sacramento, March 24, 1870, Mr. Dickenson was united in marriage with Laura Burton, who was born in Missouri October 20, 1848. Her father, Major Charles Burton (who won his title during the Indian wars), was a native of Virginia and removed to Kentucky and thence to Missouri, in the vicinity of Paris engaging in farming and stock-raising. In 1854 he crossed the plains with ox-teams, and in the same year returned to Missouri. Five years later he drove cattle to California and upon his safe arrival located in Sacramento county, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Lucy Nelson, was a native of Virginia and a direct descendant of Thomas Nelson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. She also died in Sacramento county. Mr. and Mrs. Dickenson have one son, Clarence F., who was born March 12, 1871. He was educated in the medical department of the University of California, from which he was graduated in 1894, with the degree of M. D. He has since become a surgeon of prominence, in 1900 accepting the position of assistant surgeon and being sent to the Philippine Islands. He is now at home on a leave of absence. He also went to the Kadiak Islands, Alaska, for the Alaska Commercial Company as surgeon, on the C. G. White schooner, was wrecked off Wood island, Alaska, in a freezing gale, in April, 1895, and the members of the crew were frozen nine days before they were rescued. Without the necessary instruments for the work, Dr. Dickenson was compelled to use such as could be manufactured for him by a blacksmith, amputating limbs, etc. Out of the eleven he lost but one man, the papers recounting vividly the heroism as well as the skill of the brave surgeon. Mr. Dickenson is associated fraternally with the Masons, being a member of Merced Lodge, F. & A. M., of Merced, and Merced Chapter No. 12, R. A. M., of the same place. Politically he is a Democrat.

JOHN H. FIELD. Among the leading horticulturists of Madera county John H. Field is given a prominent position. He was born in Columbia, Mo., February 14, 1856, a son of John H. Field, Sr., a native of Richmond, Ky., who left the familiar scenes of his young manhood and located in Missouri, where he became prominent as a farmer and stockman and as a merchant in the town of Columbia. He died near Mexico at the age of fifty-seven years. He was connected with the Hardin family on the maternal side, an old family of Virginia. John H. Field, Sr., married Frances Provines, a native of Kentucky and a sister of Judge R. R. Provines, a pioneer of San Francisco.

Educated in the common schools of Columbia, Mo., John H. Field later took a course in the state university and was graduated in 1877. Having received special training as a surveyor and civil engineer he followed that line of work for fifteen years, five years in the government service on the Mississippi River Commission, and ten years in the employ of various railroads. During the time he surveyed on all the principal roads between the two mountain ranges, being located in Colorado after 1879.

About 1895 Mr. Field decided to locate in California and upon going to Fresno county, he entered the employ of E. A. Elliott of Fresno, and in the interest of the latter served as superintendent of different ranches throughout that section. In 1904 he purchased forty acres on the Green section, one and one-half miles south of Madera, which he is preparing to put into fruit and alfalfa and making other improvements for a home place. By his marriage, Mr. Field was united with Ida Lee Price, a daughter of R. Price, and of this union two children, Marie and Price, have been born. In his political opinions, Mr. Field allies himself with the Democratic party.

CHARLES PAGE. An active and enterprising citizen of Bakersfield, Charles Page is the owner of a well improved ranch in Kern county, and was for many years successfully identified with the agricultural interests of this section of the state. Moving to this city when his children were young, that they might have good educational advantages, he has since resided here, and is now night watchman in the Bakersfield Iron Works. The descendant of an old New England family, he was born August 11, 1843, in Oldtown, near Bangor, Me., which was the birthplace of both his parents.

Like many boys brought up near the coast. Charles Page had a great desire to go to sea, and at the age of fourteen years ran away from home in order to accomplish his desire. Shipping as cabin-boy on a vessel bound for the Pacific coast, he sailed around Cape Horn to San Francisco, where he arrived in 1857. Soon after landing he found an old friend of his father's, and this friend made him driver of a wagon carrying supplies to the Fremont mines, in Mariposa county, a position that he held two years. During the excitement that followed the finding of gold along the Fraser river, he and his friend went there prospecting, and remained there a number of years, being engaged in mining during the summer, and in lumbering during the winter seasons. Returning to California in 1867, Mr. Page rented with his father-in-law a ranch in Monterey county, about four miles from Salinas, but was not successful in its management. Going then to Peachtree valley, in the same county, he took up land, and for seven years was there engaged in raising cattle and horses. The ensuing seven years he was employed in lumbering in Santa Cruz county. Locating in Kern county in 1880, Mr. Page took up a claim of one hundred and sixty acres in the artesian belt, about thirty-two miles from Bakersfield, and in the three years that he lived on his ranch he did much work in ditching, boring wells, etc., adding improvements of value to the place. Subsequently removing with his family to Bakersfield in order to better educate his children, he has since resided there, and has worked much of the time at carpentering.

In 1867, Mr. Page married Elizabeth Ann McMullen, a native of Tazewell county, Ill., and they are the parents of four children, namely: John C., Edna Davis, Ida and Marion L. Politically Mr. Page is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

THOMAS RANSOM BREWER. Although a resident of California since 1877, it was not until the spring of 1885 that Mr. Brewer took up his residence permanently in Selma, Fresno county, and at that time he opened a drug store which is first-class and up-to-date in every way, and to this business he has devoted himself assiduously ever since. In addition to always keeping on hand a line of fresh and pure drugs, he also handles numerous fancy articles, stationery, notions, etc., found in every first-class drug store. It may be said of Mr. Brewer that he is a pharmacist of unusual ability, and before going into business on his own behalf he received special training in this line of work. His three years' apprenticeship to W. S. McCartney of Selma, and H. H. Brown of Stockton, Cal., was followed by a thorough course in the California College of Pharmacy in the latter place, and he subsequently became a registered pharmacist, being thoroughly competent to fill all prescriptions entrusted to him.

He was born April 28, 1867, in Salem, Dent county, Mo., and his father, James H. Brewer, a native of the same state, conducted a drug store in the above-named city for a number of years. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Fifth Missouri Cavalry, was later transferred to the Forty-eighth Infantry, and participated in the great internecine conflict, being mustered out of service in 1866. He fought a number of notorious characters engaged in guerrilla warfare, among them the James boys and Quantrell. He died in Salem about 1872. By his marriage he was united with Virginia Matthews, a Missouri lady, and three children blessed their union. Of these, the eldest was a son and the two younger were daughters. In 1877, a few years after the death of her husband, Mrs. Brewer and her family came to California. Purchasing eighty acres of railroad land, adjoining the present site of Selma on the northeast, she engaged in farm pursuits, subsequently planting a vineyard. It was in this vicinity that she reared her children and has lived ever since, being at the present time a resident of Fresno.

In his youth Thomas R. Brewer had exceptional educational advantages. His common school education, gleaned from the common schools of Fresno county, was followed by a complete course in the Stockton Business College, from which he graduated, entering at once upon his career in the drug business. He was united in marriage with Miss Myrtle H. Cullom, formerly of Arkansas, and they have one child, whom they call Aileen. In fraternal circles, Mr. Brewer affiliates with a number of orders, among them Fresno Lodge No. 439, B. P. O. E.; Selma Lodge No. 55, K. of P.; and Woodmen of the World, of Selma. A strict adherent of the Democratic party, he has filled various positions of trust and is quite active in politics. For eight years he was a member of the city council of Selma, and during this time he served four years as chairman of that honorable body. In 1891 he was chosen tax collector for this irrigation district, and rendered excellent service. It will readily be seen from the foregoing account that Mr. Brewer occupies a place of prominence among the successful business men of Selma, and is regarded as one of the rising young men of this section.

JOHN J. KROG. An esteemed business man of Fresno, John J. Krog is associated with the firm of Krog, Lauritzen Company as vice-president and is an important factor in its upbuilding and development. He is a native of Jutland, Denmark, where he was born December 25, 1861, a son of J. C. Krog. The elder man was also a native of that locality, where his death occurred at the age of fifty-eight years. He engaged in the manufacture of brick as a means of livelihood. His wife, formerly Johanna Lund, was a native of the same place, where she also died, at the age of sixty-seven years. They were members of the Lutheran Church, and highly respected citizens of their native community. Of their seven sons five are now living, the eldest being John J. Krog, of this review.

Reared in Denmark, John J. Krog received his education in the common schools of that country, which he attended until he was fourteen years old. He was then apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith in Alminde, where he remained for four years, then worked as a journeyman throughout Denmark. In 1883 he came to America, and June 28 located in Fresno, which had then but thirty-five hundred inhabitants. He engaged at his trade as a journeyman for several years when he established a shop of his own on Inyo street between H and I streets, conducting the same successfully for two years. He then purchased an interest with James Jacobsen on I street and moved his business to that location for two years, when he purchased the entire business and continued alone until May, 1903. In that year he bought an interest with Ahrensberg and Lauritzen and assisted in the incorporation of the H. Ahrensberg Company, which continued for a brief time, when Mr. Ahrensberg retired from the firm. It was then reincorporated under the title of Krog, Lauritzen Company, with Mr. Krog as vice-president, and Mr. Lauritzen as president. They have one of the largest manufacturing of carriages, wagons, agricultural implements, etc., in the San Joaquin valley, their place of business being at the corner of H and Fresno streets, where they own a lot 75x150 feet in dimensions. Mr. Krog has also built a residence in the city, which is located at No. 219 Magnolia avenue, and also owns a twenty-acre ranch near Reedley.

In Fresno, Cal., Mr. Krog was united in marriage with Annie Anderson, a native of Copenhagen, Denmark, and they are the parents of five boys: Jens, Jesse, Alfred, Howard and Walter. Fraternally Mr. Krog is associated with the Royal Arcaum, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Dania Society of California, of which he is past grand president. He is a Lutheran in religion and politically casts his ballot for the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

ANDREW KINKADE. In the vicinity of Visalia, Tulare county, is located the ranch of one hundred and sixty acres which was originally entered by Andrew Kinkade, one of the early pioneers of this section. He was born in Missouri September 20, 1824, and in his native state grew to manhood and married in 1848. Attracted to the west by the manifold opportunities held out to the pioneer, he crossed the plains in 1852 and upon his safe arrival in California located in Sacramento and remained about two years, and then in Pacheco valley, near Martinez, Contra Costa county, where he engaged as a laborer. He remained in that locality until the fall of 1856; then removed to Tulare county and took up a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres located four miles southwest of Visalia. Upon this property he engaged in the raising of cattle, hogs and other stock until his death, which occurred March 28, 1863. He was a successful ranchman and a worthy and esteemed citizen, leaving to his family the inheritance of a good name and a competence won through a right use of opportunities.

Mr. Kinkade is survived by his wife, formerly Ellen Allnut, who was born in Montgomery county, Md., near Washington, D. C. Her father, George Allnut, was also a native of Maryland, where he engaged in farming until his removal to Missouri as a pioneer of that state. He located in Boone county, where his death occurred. Two sons were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Kinkade: James Harvey, the eldest, is now located on the home property with his mother, and George died in infancy, while crossing the plains. Since her husband's death Mrs. Kinkade has entered eighty acres adjoining the original property, and also three hundred and twenty acres in the vicinity of Goshen, Tulare county. The entire property is given over to a successful stock business and general farming.

E. H. HOAR. In the mental attributes of the district attorney of Merced county may be noted the influences of heredity. Members of the Hoar family have always displayed intellectual gifts of a superior order and have possessed a culture frequently observed among descendants of the colonial residents of New England. To a striking degree his father, Rev. Samuel Everett Hoar, exemplified these traits and mental attainments, and, had his physical strength equaled his intellectual acumen, his would have been a life of rare usefulness and success. However, notwithstanding the handicap of ill-health, he accomplished much in the brief period that destiny spared him to family and friends. Born near Boston, he was a cousin of the late United States Senator Hoar, who is recognized as one of the most distinguished and conservative statesmen in our nation. As a boy his acuteness of perception, fine mind and religious temperament led him to prepare himself for the ministry, and after having graduated in belles-lettres at Dartmouth College he was ordained as a Presbyterian minister. A constitution none too robust became impaired through overwork in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and he came to the Pacific coast in the hope that the genial climate might prove beneficial, but after preaching for a short time he was obliged to seek another occupation. He then opened a successful mercantile business in San Francisco, which he carried on for some time, meanwhile suffering loss by fire, but rebuilding and continuing in business. Some years later he sold out, and after a few years spent in farming in Kern county, went to Arizona for his health, but the change failed to benefit him and he died in Tucson when the subject of this sketch was nine years old.

After coming to California Rev. Samuel Everett Hoar married Martha Jane Price, who was born in Fort Smith, Ark., and accompanied her parents across the plains with ox-teams during the '50s, settling among the pioneers of Placer county. After the death of Mr. Hoar she was again married, becoming the wife of Edward Jackman, a leading and successful attorney of Merced. Mr. Jackman was born and reared in England and received exceptional advantages as a law student in London, but was led to seek his fortune in the mines of California in 1849, coming from England via Cape Horn to San Francisco and working in mines in this state and the south of Oregon. Success, however, failed to reward his persistent efforts, and he then returned to the law, gaining admission to the bar of California and engaging in practice at San Rafael. From there he removed to Merced and conducted a large general practice until his death about 1894. Since then his widow has made her home in San Francisco.

The eldest of three children, E. H. Hoar was born in San Francisco, December 3, 1871, and at the age of eleven years accompanied his mother to Merced, where he was a student in the grammar and high schools. Later he took a commercial course in Heald's Business College at San Francisco. In 1894 he received an appointment as official reporter of the superior court of Merced county and continued to fill this responsible position until 1902, when he resigned to accept the nomination for district attorney. During the years of his service as reporter he had devoted all of his leisure hours to the study of law and had been admitted to practice before the supreme court in 1896. Having gained a wide acquaintance and many warm friends during the period of his service as reporter, he proved an admirable candidate for the office of district attorney, to which he was nominated in 1902 by the Democratic party. His election with a majority of six hundred and fifty is a striking proof of his popularity among the people, and the efficient manner in which he discharges every duty as district attorney justifies his selection for the post.

The marriage of Mr. Hoar united him with Jane Elizabeth Berriman, who was born at Grass Valley, Nevada county, this state, and is a graduate of the schools of that county. Her father, Nicholas Berriman, a native of England, came to California at the time of the discovery of gold and was one of the early miners in Nevada county. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Hoar consists of three sons, Fred Emerson, Lawrence Bradley and George Evrett. Fraternally Mr. Hoar is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, and is a member of Yosemite Parlor No. 24, N. S. G. W., of which he is past president. Through his service on the board of trustees, he has been active in the work of the Merced Methodist Episcopal Church. It is often said that every man has his hobby, and if Mr. Hoar cannot be classed among the exceptions to this rule, he would probably acknowledge having a special fondness for the study of psychology. When at leisure from professional and official work he enjoys spending a few hours in the study of this science, to the intelligent mastery of which he is admirably qualified by reason of his keenness of perception and breadth of intellect.

GEORGE D. WOOD. Among the sturdy pioneers of the San Joaquin valley, Mr. Wood has performed his part in its development. A native of Ohio he was born fourteen miles north-east of Portsmouth January 21, 1820. His father, Abner, was a native of the Empire state, being a son of another Abner, who was born in England and who came to the United States at a very early day, locating in Ohio, where he became a prominent agriculturist. The father was reared in Ohio, where he lived until 1840, when he removed to Illinois, locating in Clark county, where he engaged in farming until his death six years later. His wife bore the maiden name of Nancy Calvert and by her marriage she became the mother of nine children.

George D. Wood was reared on his father's farm. When not otherwise employed he attended school a few months during the winter season, but in those pioneer days the youth was educated at home instead of in a schoolhouse, his learning being obtained principally in the field. In the fall of 1855 he migrated to southwest Missouri, where he lived one year, when he outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to this state. His first location here was in Sutter county, west of Marysville, where he resided until July, 1860, when he came to Fresno county, thus becoming one of the very first settlers in this county, there being at the time less than four hundred voters here, and many of these were horse-thieves and cut-throats or Mexican bandits. After living for a time near Kingston Mr. Wood purchased eighty acres and here he resided until his death, February 13, 1905, devoting his time and energies to the tilling of the soil and raising of cattle. At one time he was extensively interested in the cattle and sheep business, but owing to failing health he was obliged to give up active business several years ago, and thereafter lived a retired life.

February 17, 1848, in Illinois, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Wood and Lucy Childers, who was born in Indiana. To this union were born eight children, namely: Nancy E., deceased; Mills C., who resides near the home place; Mrs. Sarah Jane Lewis; Henry L., deceased; Mary A., now Mrs. C. J. McCullah; Job Albert, who lives in Lemoore; Lucy Emma, now Mrs. George L. Lewis, of Selma; and Harriett Minnie, deceased. Minnie Violet Wood, a daughter of Mills C. Wood, makes her home with her grandparents, to whom she is as dear as one of their own children.

Prior to the formation of the Republican party, Mr. Wood was a Whig, but after it was merged into the Republican party he was a staunch supporter of the principles advocated by this grand old organization. He was a man of considerable prominence, and at one time filled several local offices, including that of road master. He was also a school trustee for twenty-five years, always doing all in his power to promote higher education and to improve the facilities for teaching the young. When a boy his father's house was used as a meeting place for the followers of the United Brethren Church, and he himself became an active member of that denomination. Mr. Wood made a success in life and but for the loss of his eyesight he would have accumulated a large fortune. However, he had enough to make his declining days comfortable and leave his family free from care. The family are highly respected and have a large circle of friends.

ISAAC HENRY WASH. Among those who have come to Fresno within the last decade is Isaac Henry Wash, the owner of a fine sixty-acre farm eight and a half miles southeast of Fresno, where he is profitably engaged in the raisin business, having twenty-six acres of bearing vines. A worthy descendant of a distinguished family of Virginia, the lineage of Mr. Wash is traced back to John Wash, the great-grandfather, who fought in the Revolutionary war under Washington. He was a native of Virginia, as was also his son, John Wash, Jr., who died in that state about 1847. From there the family moved into Kentucky, and it was within the borders of the latter state that both parents of Mr. Wash were born. His father, John Martin Alexander Wash, was born in 1820, and his wife, whose maiden name was Annie Adams, was born November 8, 1822. Some time after marriage this esteemed couple went west and settled in Lewis county, Mo., where the father died July 24, 1844. During his life he followed the occupations of farmer and miller, and was so engaged up to the time of his death. He left but two children, Isaac Henry and Lucy, and the latter is now deceased. In 1855 the mother contracted a second matrimonial alliance, this time with Enoch Hansborough, who died in 1863. His widow now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Annie Mathiesen, of Billings, Okla.

Born October 20, 1841, six miles from Lagrange, Lewis county, Mo. Mr. Wash spent his boyhood in the vicinity of his birthplace. His education was limited. At sixteen he left home to make his own way in the world, and the following year found him in Texas. While there he followed the cattle business for three years in Collin county, and in 1861 went to Montague, following similar work. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, Fourteenth Texas Cavalry, as a private, and served until December 31, 1862. Participating in the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., during which he fell, he was left on the field for dead. At this time he was serving under division commander General McCown. Being picked up by Federals, he was taken to their hospital and afterward returned to Texas. He subsequently returned to Marion county, Mo., and followed farm pursuits there for a couple of years. November 7, 1865, he was united in marriage with Mary S. Taylor, who was born in Missouri in 1844. The year following their marriage, the young couple moved to Knox county, and this continued to be their home until 1890. Disposing of his farm in December of that year, Mr. Wash came to California, locating for a time near Fresno, but in the spring of 1891 he purchased the farm which is still his home and which to-day ranks among the best improved in his vicinity. He has made many improvements on this place. Of his children, one is deceased and the others are all residents of Fresno county. They are as follows: Samuel J.; Annie H., wife of R. L. Rutherford; George, deceased; John J.; Henry M.; Mary L. and Nadine Belle; the latter two, together with Samuel J., are still at home. The family worship at the Malaga Baptist Church. Mr. Wash united with the Baptist Church in 1857. His political preference is given to the Democratic party and he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having been made a Mason in Knox county, Mo.

Lauritz Lauritzen. The manufacturing interests of Fresno are given added prestige by the business known as the Krog, Lauritzen Company, an incorporation engaged in the manufacture of carriages, wagons, agricultural implements, etc., as well as carrying on general blacksmithing. The president of this concern is Lauritz Lauritzen, who was born near Apenrade, Schleswig, Germany, October 6, 1867, the youngest in a family of two daughters and one son, and the only one in America. His father, Laue Lauritzen, was a sailor who, in 1849, left his ship at San Francisco and with three brothers engaged in mining for eight or nine years. He met with success and finally returned home with sufficient means to purchase a ship, when he engaged in a coasting trade until his death at the age of fifty-two years. His wife, formerly Mata Crag, was born in Schleswig, Germany, the descendant of an old family of that section, where her death also occurred.

Lauritz Lauritzen was reared in the old seaport town of Gjenner, receiving his education in the common schools. At the age of fifteen years he was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade after the completion of which he continued at his trade in different parts of Germany. In November, 1880, he came to America, locating in Racine, Wis., until July of the following year, when he came to California and in Fresno entered the employ of H. Ahrensberg. At a later date he worked for G. Brainard for four years, in the location of his present business, purchasing then an interest with H. Ahrensberg on K street. He eventually bought the lot on the corner of Fresno and H streets, where he began the manufacture of carriages and followed a general blacksmithing business. In 1903 the business was incorporated under the title of H. Ahrensberg & Co. Shortly afterward Mr. Ahrensberg retired from the firm, when it was incorporated as the Krog, Lauritzen Company, with Mr. Lauritzen as president. Their business has continued profitably since and is one of the important industries of the city of Fresno. Mr. Lauritzen has also built a residence at No. 180 Valeria street.

In Fresno Mr. Lauritzen was united in marriage with Anna Christine Jorgensen, a native of Shelland, Denmark, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Louisa, Laura and William. Fraternally Mr. Lauritzen is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging also to the Encampment, and the Dania Society of California, of which he is ex-president. He is a Republican politically and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, taking an active interest in all public movements which have for their end the enhancing of the general welfare.

GEORGE S. CLEMENT. The property of Mr. Clement, an esteemed citizen of Tulare county, is located four miles southwest of Springville and consists of six hundred and sixty-four acres of land given over to the raising of horses and cattle. He has two acres of oranges and considerable hay and pasture land, and by his conservative yet progressive methods is numbered among the representative farmers of this section. Born near Grand Rapids, Mich., October 23, 1856, he was a son of Jacob Clement. The latter was a native of New York state, who came to Michigan in an early day and worked in the timber lands and farmed for a livelihood. In 1866 he removed to Iowa and in 1868 to Lincoln, Neb., where he took up land. His death occurred in that location. His wife, formerly Emily Jane Gault, was born in Michigan, and died in that state. They were the parents of two children, a son and daughter, of whom George S. was the elder of the two. He received his education in the common schools of his native state, and in Iowa and Nebraska, remaining in the latter state until 1881. In the last named year he came as far west as Boise City, Idaho, where he worked on a ranch for one year, returning in 1883 and finding employment on a farm in Michigan. He remained in that section for four years, when, in 1887, he came to California and located on the Tule river just above Daunt, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres, to which he added by purchase until he owned one thousand acres. This he sold in 1901 and purchased his present property of six hundred and sixty-four acres, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising.

In Leighton, Mich., September 15, 1887, Mr. Clement was united in marriage with Effie May Cronk, a native of that state. In his political convictions he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

MARTIN P. KNUDSEN. One of the recently-established dairy enterprises near Los Banos is that of Martin P. Knudsen, owner of twenty acres of land a mile from town, and since April, 1904, conducting a dairy of seventeen cows. Mr. Knudsen had a great deal of practical business experience before embarking upon his present venture, all of which he is bound to use to increase his dairying project. He has his own separator, as well as other conveniences known to the modern and up-to-date dairyman, and finds his work profitable and congenial.

Born in Sobv, Aroe, Denmark, May 18, 1864, Mr. Knudsen is the fifth child in order of birth in a family of eleven children, six of whom are living. Three of the four who are in America reside in San Francisco. He comes of seafaring stock, and both his father, Peter Knudsen, and his grandfather, were in the coasting trade for many years, owning their own vessels, and continued so employed until old age incapacitated them for that vocation. Peter Knudsen lived to be fifty-two years old, and his wife, formerly Anna Maria Petersen, continues to live on the old home place in Denmark. The family are faithful in their attendance and contributions to the Lutheran Church.

Martin P. Knudsen was educated in the public schools of Soby, and early found it to his advantage to start upon an independent life; accordingly, with the example of his forefathers before him, he chose the sea, and followed it for a couple of years. Finding he did not have the same liking for this occupation as his father had, he quit the sea and located on a farm for one year, but in the spring of 1882 he immigrated to the United States, soon afterward arriving in Merced county, Cal., where without money and with no recommendation save good health and energy, he secured a position with Miller & Lux, in whose employ he remained four years. He also engaged in farming, and was the first man to set a plow in what is now Plow Camp, in 1885, a part of which he now owns. In 1886 he went to Hills Ferry, where he was employed on a farm for three years, and while there married, in 1889, Christine Rasmussen, of Denmark. Soon afterward he conducted a boarding-house and saloon at the Ferry, moving four months later to Newman, where he bought a house and lot and engaged in his occupations of boarding-house and liquor business. In November, 1899, he located in Los Banos and erected a large house, which he opened up under auspicious circumstances, but which four days later burned to the ground. He then engaged in the liquor business until 1904, in which year he sold out and bought his present place of twenty acres a mile south of Los Banos. He has built a comfortable and commodious residence, and has modern improvements on his ranch.

Mr. Knudsen takes a keen interest in Democratic politics, and is interested in the cause of education and good government. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Newman, and the Ancient Order of Druids, of Los Banos. He proposes to give his children, Peter and Christine Maria, the best advantages within his power. He is genial and generous when called upon to further charitable or other undertakings.

JOHN MILTON IRWIN. In no branch of agriculture is a more thorough knowledge and greater business capacity needed than in that pertaining to the breeding, raising and buying and selling of cattle; and in this industry no one has met with more deserved success than John Milton Irwin, a well-known and prosperous stockman of Tulare county, residing four miles east of Visalia, on the Morgan estate. A man of venerable years, he has had a wide and varied experience in life, and by his excellent character and straightforward business course has fully established himself in the esteem and confidence of all with whom he has had dealings. A native of Alabama, he was born in Madison county, January 12, 1828, a son of the late John and Elizabeth (Logan) Irwin, both natives of Tennessee.

Removing from his native state to Alabama, John Irwin was a shoemaker in Madison county for many years. In 1838 he migrated to Missouri, becoming a pioneer of Franklin county, where he began to clear a farm, and also worked at his trade until his death, which occurred within a few months after his arrival.

The fourth child in a family consisting of four sons and three daughters, John M. Irwin received his education in the district school, and subsequently engaged in tilling the soil for a few years. Thinking to get rich much more easily and quicker in a country rich with gold, he came across the plains to California with ox-teams early in the '50s, and for a while worked with pick and shovel in the Mud Springs mines. His labors not proving as remunerative as he had anticipated, Mr. Irwin worked for three years in a sawmill, after which, in 1859, he located in Tulare county, near Visalia, where he worked as a farm laborer for a number of seasons. In 1867 he embarked in the stock business, having for his partner Mr. Woods, who died in 1896. Until 1878 Mr. Irwin and his partner dealt principally in hogs, but since that time he has bought and sold cattle only. He is not a householder, but since 1892 has resided at the Morgan home. Politically he is a sound Democrat, never swerving from party allegiance.

GEORGE MARCHBANK. As the efficient superintendent of the Mid Vale Land and Fruit Company, composed largely of Pennsylvania capitalists, who own one of the largest and most productive fruit ranches in Madera county, Cal., Mr. Marchbank is filling a position of prominence and has proved to be exceptionally well fitted for the place. He has twenty men under his supervision and in the management of this ranch he has shown excellent judgment and executive ability of a high order. The three hundred and twenty acres comprising his ranch are devoted almost wholly to fruit culture. Here one finds extensive orchards of peaches, apricots, figs, almonds and a few orange groves, besides large vineyards of raisin grapes and thirty acres of alfalfa. In the fall of 1897 Mr. Marchbank became superintendent of this ranch and the excellence of the various products of the place is attributed largely to his efforts, as he personally directs all laborers, and employs only the best methods of raising and caring for the fruits.

A descendant of Scotch parents, and himself a native of Scotland, born December 23, 1857, Mr. Marchbank was reared on the farm which belonged to his parents, George and Jessie (Campbell) Marchbank, both of whom spent their entire lives in Scotland; educated in his native land, at the age of twenty Mr. Marchbank came to America and for three years served as deputy United States surveyor in the territory of Utah.

James W. Ryce

He was afterward located for fourteen months in Minnesota and a short time in Oregon, engaged in similar work, and in 1884 he took up his residence in California. In 1886 he went into Fresno county and for a time was in the employ of the George W. Mead Company, and was subsequently raisin inspector for the Co-Operative Packing Company of Madera county. Receiving the offer to superintend the Mid Vale Land and Fruit Company, in Madera county, he at once assumed the duties of his present position. Aside from casting his vote in favor of Republican candidates Mr. Marchbank takes little interest in politics. Fraternaly he affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He has two children, Marion A. and Margaret C.

JAMES W. RYCE. The name Ryce is well known in Fresno county, where for many years, the family have resided, and James W. Ryce is considered one of the substantial farmers in the county. Born in Scotland December 30, 1855, he is a son of Andrew C. Ryce, also a native of that country. Coming to the United States in 1866 he located in San Francisco, where he secured employment as a bookkeeper. During the time he lived in the city he was also interested in many mining speculations, being secretary of several companies. On account of ill health he was compelled to seek a change of climate and in 1880 came to Fresno county, where he purchased a section of land five and one-half miles southwest of Selma. Soon after locating here he erected what at that time was the finest residence in this section of the state, naming it The Palace. Engaging in farming and stock-raising on a large scale, he continued to make this county his home until his death at the age of seventy-one years. He also purchased a section east of Selma and a half section near Reedley, but these he later sold. The orchard of eighty acres which Mr. Ryce set out on his land was the first to be planted in this locality, but the venture did not prove a success on account of insufficient water. A year or so afterward he replanted forty acres and his orchard now ranks among the best in Fresno county. In 1885 he disposed of his land in Alameda county and invested the proceeds in property in the valley. With others he was interested in the building of a hotel in Kingsburg, a structure which was destroyed by fire a few years later. In 1890 he went to Scotland on a visit, and on his return to California found that his affairs had been badly managed, so much so that out of the once handsome property that he owned he retained only forty acres. He died in San Francisco at the home of a daughter, Mrs. T. P. H. White-law. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Wilson, was also a native of Scotland, and was born in 1831. She is still living, making her home with a daughter, Mrs. Robert Kennedy, in Fresno. By her union with Mr. Ryce she became the mother of nine children, six of whom grew to maturity.

James W. Ryce was the fourth child, and the only son who grew to maturity. He accompanied his parents on their emigration to the United States, and for several years was associated with his brother-in-law, Mr. Kennedy, in the sheep business, but in 1878 he engaged in farming with his father. In 1890 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land of his father and became interested in the growing of grapes and also raised considerable stock. He now has a dairy of forty cows. His ranch, which is one of the best equipped in the county, is supplied with all modern appliances, including a steam plant which is used for cutting wood, pumping water and other purposes. In addition to his farming interests he is a director in the Farmers' Bank of Selma, and is president of the Selma Co-operative Packing Company.

Near Visalia Mr. Ryce was united in marriage with Jessie B. Rice, a native of the state, and to them have been born six children, Andrew C., Jessie B., Elizabeth, Flora, James W., Jr., and Margaret, all of whom are living at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ryce are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, he being an elder of the same. In politics he is a Republican, but he has no desire to take part in public affairs. He has made a success of his labors and is one of the popular men in the county.

WILLIAM H. MILLS. A well-known pioneer family of Tulare county is that of the Mills', now represented by the widow of the pioneer and three sons, one at home with his mother and two located on ranches in the neighborhood of their childhood's home. William H. Mills, deceased, is remembered as a man of enterprise and ability and one of the successful farmers of this section. He was born in Atlanta, Ga., March 15, 1821. As a young man he removed to Missouri, where he made his home until 1849, when he crossed the plains with mule-teams. Arriving in California, he engaged in mining in Hangtown until 1851, when he returned to Missouri and was married. With his wife he left Missouri April 18, 1852, and arrived in California in August. He was one of the strong and forceful pioneer citizens, his greatest efforts having been given to the stable pursuit of farming throughout the greater part of his life in the west, although until the fall of 1856 he followed the precarious fortunes of a miner in Eldorado county and at Cedarville. Locating in Tulare county he engaged in general farming and stock-raising among the pioneer conditions which existed then, and took up land upon which he made his home for many years. In November, 1880, he located on the property now owned by his wife, consisting of one hundred acres two miles west of Farmersville. This he cultivated and improved for sixteen years, winning a competence for himself and family. His death occurred on this ranch June 25, 1896, at the age of seventy-four years, six months and ten days. Politically he adhered to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The marriage of Mr. Mills united him with Louisa Jane Lawless, who was born in Saline county, Mo., March 13, 1833. Her father, Bird Lawless, was a native of Kentucky, who removed to Howard county, Mo., and later to Saline county, where he engaged as a farmer and stockman. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California and mined for a year, in 1851 returning to Missouri, and in the following year bringing his family back to California. He located in Sacramento, where he bought an extensive ranch, later disposing of this and in the fall of 1856 locating near Visalia, Tulare county, where he took up land. He engaged in farming and stock-raising until his removal to Farmersville, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Lizzie Scott, a native of Kentucky, also died in California. Mrs. Mills received her education in the common schools of her native state, where, in Saline county, she was married February 5, 1852. Born of this union are three children, namely: Merritt T., William A., and Charles H., the two first named being located on ranches in this vicinity, while the last is with his mother.

DR. JOHN C. COOPER. During the year 1876 Dr. Cooper came to California and in 1879 established his home in Fresno, where, in January of the following year he opened an office and has since engaged in the practice of dentistry. For a time he occupied rooms on H street, but now has his office in the Cooper building, a brick block, 50 x 100 feet two stories in height, erected by Baker & Johnson, at No. 2030 Mariposa street. In addition to this property he owns the exposition building, 26½ x 150 feet, two stories, constructed of brick, and located on J street between Fresno and Tulare; also the Molor brick block, 75 x 75, which in 1901 he erected on Fresno, between J and K streets. Other buildings which he erected have since been sold.

Dr. Cooper was born in Rutherfordton, N. C., February 23, 1857, a son of J. O. and Sarah (Hardin) Cooper, also natives of North Carolina. Of their eleven children all but two attained mature years and seven are now living, John C. being fourth in order of birth. In 1876 he took up the study of dentistry, and, in 1878 opened an office at Winters, Yolo county, but the following year came to Fresno, of which he is now, in point of years of practice, the oldest dentist. He is a charter member of the Mid-winter Fair Dental Congress, and in politics is a staunch Democrat. The public school system has always had a staunch friend in him, and at this writing he is a member of the board of education of Fresno. After coming to Fresno he married Miss Mary Hopkins, who was born in San Jose, Cal., and by whom he has two daughters, Edna and Susie. Mrs. Cooper is a daughter of Rev. I. L. Hopkins, member of an old Connecticut family and for many years a minister of the Methodist Episcopal denomination in California. About 1879 he settled in Fresno county, where for years he labored in the interests of the church, but finally removed to San Jose, where his death occurred.

THOMAS EDWARD BACON. As a pioneer among the primitive conditions, hardships and dangers of the early days, Mr. Bacon recalls the events which have marked the progress and development of Fresno county. He was born in St. Louis county, Mo., September 9, 1838, the fourth in a family of children born to his parents. His father, William Bacon, is mentioned at length in the biographical sketch of James A. Bacon, of Orosi, which appears in another part of this volume. Thomas Edward Bacon was reared in his birthplace until attaining the age of eleven years, when he started to Texas with his father. Instead of completing the journey a stop was made in Arkansas, where, in Crawford county, the elder man engaged in farming. For ten years Thomas E. remained upon the paternal farm, receiving his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. On September 2, 1858, he married Lucinda Strawn, a native of Crawford county, Ark., and the following year they came as far west as Tucson, Ariz., with ox-teams, spending the winter in that place. In 1860 the journey was completed to Visalia, Tulare county, shortly after the arrival locating on the St. John's river, seven miles northeast of that city. In 1861 Mr. Bacon went to Mariposa county and engaged in the wood business for four years, in January, 1865, locating in the Kings river bottom about two and a half miles below old Scottsburg. He engaged in the raising of hogs and cattle and met with success in the venture. In 1868 he bought a section of land nine miles northeast of the present site of Centerville, which he improved and utilized in stock-raising. He remained in that location for sixteen years, when he sold out and moved to Academy, on Dry Creek, where he bought a residence and twenty acres of land, this move being for the purpose of educating his children in what was then the best school in Fresno county. He still follows the cattle business on the Upper Kings river, where he owns a stock ranch. In 1902 he located in Fresno, purchasing his present residence at No. 251 Clark street. In addition to his ranch on Upper Kings river he owns in partnership with his son-in-law, J. G. Simpson, a large herd of cattle on Dry creek.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bacon were born the following children: Amanda R., the wife of Dr. B. W. Doyle, of Fresno; Amelia, the wife of Wesley B. Hazelton, of Sanger; John A., in the stock business in the vicinity of Fresno; Frank, in the stock business at Academy; Laura B., the wife of J. G. Simpson, of Academy; and Ida M., a teacher in the Fresno schools. Mr. Bacon served as school trustee for several terms in the Fancher Creek and Academy districts, and takes a strong interest in the development and progress of educational matters in the community. He is a Democrat politically and served as deputy assessor in the same localities for thirteen years and as a member of the county central committee. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he is ruling elder, and fraternally is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

MATTHEW CORRIGAN. A well-known rancher of Stanislaus county, Matthew Corrigan was born in Ireland February 6, 1838, a son of Patrick and Rose (Riley) Corrigan. The elder man was a mason and farmer by occupation and died at the age of seventy-eight years. Matthew Corrigan remained at home until 1857 when he went to Australia and there secured employment on a farm, where he remained for thirteen years. In 1870 he came to California and made his home in San Francisco for two years, during a part of that period working on the big Second street cut. In 1872 he came to Stanislaus county, during the ensuing eight years working for wages on the Booth ranch. In the meantime, in 1874, he entered eighty acres of land which formed the beginning of his home ranch, later purchasing one hundred and sixty acres, the property being located six miles southeast of Oakdale. In addition to his own land he rents one hundred and sixty acres which is devoted entirely to the cultivation of grain, while he raises only enough stock to supply his home. He has met with a noteworthy success during his residence in California, and at the same time that he has risen financially he has won the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

In Australia Mr. Corrigan married Mary Haslett, a native also of Ireland, and of this union were born six children, namely: Agnes, the wife of P. H. Gleason; Rose; Mamie; Matthew; Emma, the wife of James L. Goodyear; and Albert. Mamie and Emma are graduates of the high school of Oakdale, as Mr. and Mrs. Corrigan believe thoroughly in a proper equipment for whatever line of work is to be taken up. Mrs. Agnes Gleason graduated at the Stockton Business College and for two years taught her home district, giving general satisfaction as a teacher. In the interests of the community Mr. Corrigan has served for twenty years as school trustee. Politically he is a Democrat and fraternally is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

A. L. NELSON. As senior member of the firm of Nelson Brothers, of Fresno, A. L. Nelson stands high among the business men of this city. He is a native of Port Leyden, N. Y., where he was born July 30, 1868, a son of John Nelson. The latter took his family to Saint Ansgar, Iowa, in 1869, and there engaged as a farmer for a time, thence removing to Clitherall, Ottertail county, Minn. He there improved a farm on the prairie lands where he made his home for ten years. In 1887 he came to California and located at Fowler, Fresno county, where he died at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, formerly Hannah Steck, also died in that location. They were the parents of six sons and two daughters, all of whom are living, fifth in order of birth being A. L. Nelson, of this review.

A. L. Nelson was reared to young manhood in Iowa and Minnesota, receiving his education in the district schools in the vicinity of his home. He remained on the paternal farm until 1886, when he went to Manti, Utah, and made his home on a farm while he attended school for a time. His parents having located at Fowler, Fresno county, Cal., he came to the state in 1889. He began at the foot of the ladder so far as resources were concerned, finding employment on various ranches and vineyards, until he had accumulated sufficient means to enable him to engage in horticulture independently. He was employed for a time in a packing house until, with his brother Andrew, he engaged in a vineyard which they purchased together at Fowler. In 1898 they located in Fresno and bought out Dow & Ross, who were conducting a cigar store and billiard hall on Mariposa street, and under the firm name of Nelson Brothers have continued in the business since. On June 29, 1903, they located at No. 1039 J street, their present place of business, conducting one of the finest and largest billiard halls and bowling alleys in the San Joaquin valley, the billiard hall being equipped with ten Brunswick tables made in Chicago, Ill., for their special use, and the six alleys all fitted up complete in every detail, the whole forming the most attractive place of amusement in Fresno. They also carry on an extensive cigar business. For one year (1902) Mr. Nelson was associated with J. E. Mitchell, in the growing, packing and shipping of dried fruits and raisins, the firm being known as Nelson & Mitchell. The partnership was dissolved and since that time Mr. Nelson has given his entire time and attention to his present business.

Mr. Nelson lives at No. 807 N street, where he has built a handsome residence, presided over by his wife, formerly Sadie Simpson, a native of Missouri, whom he married in Fresno county. She is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Nelson is associated fraternally with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chief chancellor and ex-representative; the Improved Order of Red Men; Woodmen of the World, and Fraternal Brotherhood. He is a Republican in national politics but locally reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and is active in all movements pertaining to the general welfare of the city or county.

ZEPHANIAH DANIEL BEALL. Two miles east of Lemoore, Kings county, is the valuable ranch of Z. D. Beall, one of the most highly respected of the horticulturists who are achieving success in this locality. In a neighborhood where manly traits and a progressive spirit are appreciated for what they are worth, and where the standard of work and life is high, this horticulturist is thoroughly at home and personally popular, exerting an influence for moral and material excellence. Mr. Beall has twenty acres under vines and fourteen under trees, representing assorted fruits, and his improvements are in accord with his practical and painstaking methods.

Born in Ripley county, Ind., March 18, 1852, he was reared to country life on his father's farm, and remained under the family roof until twenty-two years of age. As the years passed he more and more realized the limitations by which he was surrounded in an already over-tilled country, and his ambitious spirit naturally turned to the west, where so much awaited the touch of energy and resource. Arriving in California in the fall of 1875, he added to his somewhat depleted finances by working on a farm in the vicinity of Visalia for a couple of years, afterward renting land and working for farmers in the country around Lemoore for about five years. He was frugal and industrious, and in 1882 was in a position to become a land owner on his own responsibility, and purchased his present ranch, at that time a barren plain. He soon ascertained that his land was adapted to fruit culture, and he gradually set out trees and vines, and prepared for his present large fruit industry. He has a pleasant and comfortable home, at the head of which is his wife, formerly Jennie Beaver, whom he married in 1901. Mr. Beall is a Democrat in politics, but has never been willing to accept local office. For years he has found recreation in fraternal lodges, and is a member of the Foresters and the Woodmen of the World. He is a genial and considerate neighbor, carries with him an impression of earnestness and sincerity, and has the faculty of making and retaining friends.

P. J. S. MONTGOMERY. Among the foremost citizens of Tulare county is P. J. S. Montgomery, manager of the extensive property of Paige & Monteagle, and himself a large landholder, and an agriculturist of prominence and influence. Thrown upon his own resources when but a boy, he successfully made his own way, steadily climbing the ladder of attainments, and in the following brief record of his active career may be found a forcible illustration of what can be accomplished by industry, determination and enterprise. A son of R. F. Montgomery, he was born, November 18, 1857, at Social Circle, Walton county, Ga. His paternal grandfather, David F. Montgomery, who came from Scotch-Irish ancestors, was a planter in Newton county, Ga., residing there until his death, at the age of eighty-five years. He was a man of exceptional integrity and worth, and a member of the Baptist Church.

A life-long resident of Georgia, R. F. Montgomery early learned the trade of builder, and also studied architecture. He served during the Civil war as captain of Company A, Nineteenth Georgia Regiment, and was five times wounded in battle. He subsequently continued as an architect and builder for many years prior to his death, which occurred August 2, 1902, at the age of seventy-two years. He married Mary A. Middlebrooks, a daughter of Isaac Middlebrooks, a planter. She died in Georgia at the age of sixty-five years. Of the children born of their union three grew to years of maturity and two are living.

The second child of the parental household,

S. L. Heisinger.

P. J. S. Montgomery was brought up during the exciting times of the Civil war in Social Circle, and necessarily had but limited educational advantages. At the age of eight years he entered a mercantile and banking institution as errand boy, and gradually worked his way upward to positions of importance and trust. At the age of fourteen years he had charge of the books, and six years later was made special partner in the business, being given a guarantee and a certain per centage of the gains. His health failing, Mr. Montgomery sold out his interests in the institution in 1884 and went to New Mexico to recuperate in the saddle. Engaging in the cattle business on his own account, he purchased a large range on the Vermejo river, and through his out-door life and his long horseback rides he recovered his former physical vigor in a few years. In Colorado he became acquainted with Mr. Morton of the firm of Paige & Morton, and he persuaded Mr. Montgomery to come to California for a visit of two months. Therefore, in 1890, having disposed of his New Mexico property he came to Tulare. Mr. Morton, the superintendent of the lands belonging to the firm of which he was partner, sold out to Mr. Paige in 1891, and Mr. Paige induced Mr. Montgomery to accept the position of manager and superintendent of the estate. He has since continued in this capacity, and has control of three large ranches. The home ranch, called Vineyard, contains seven hundred and fifty acres of vines, and is well equipped with packing houses and everything necessary for caring for the large quantities of grapes harvested each season. Adjoining this ranch is a vast orchard of seven hundred and fifty acres, devoted principally to the culture of prunes, peaches and pears, while near by is the Mitchell ranch of eight thousand acres, a large stock farm, on which is raised grain, alfalfa and stock. The vineyards and orchards belonging to Paige & Montegale are the largest in the San Joaquin valley, and give employment to about eight hundred people during the busy season, while on the Mitchell farm about twenty hands are employed. One thousand acres of this ranch are already sowed to alfalfa, and Mr. Montgomery intends to sow three thousand more, devoting one-half of it to this valuable product. The home ranch lies within one and one-half miles of the city limits of Tulare, and is finely improved, and has all of the latest and most modern machinery and appliances, including a telephone and electric light system.

Mr. Montgomery likewise owns much valuable real estate in this part of the state. In the foot hills, about twenty-three miles east of Delano, he has a stock farm of twenty-five hundred and sixty acres; at Semitropic, Kern county, he has a ranch of six hundred and forty acres, which he is converting into a dairy farm; on the Tule river he owns a small farm; and in Tulare county he has a well-stocked sheep range. He also has one-tenth interest in the El Mirador Orange Land Company at Lindsay, of which he is a director and vice-president. This company owns an orange tract in Lindsay having four thousand acres of land, which is being laid out and sold. Mr. Montgomery is also interested in the Tulare Lumber Company, of which he is president; is a member and president of the Mountain View Oil Company, operating in Devil's Den country; and is second vice-president of the Tulare Board of Trade, and one of its executive committee. In 1898 he was appointed by Governor Gage a director of the Twenty-fourth Agricultural District of California, and four years later was re-appointed for another term.

July 3, 1884, in Trinidad, Colo., Mr. Montgomery married Ruth Norma Lacy, who was born in Cleveland, Texas, and was educated in Colorado, being graduated from the Trinidad Convent, and later at Wolf Hall, Denver. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery are the parents of three children, namely: Carl Lacy and Orland Franklin, attending the Tulare High School, members of the class of 1905; and Rex Kenneth. Politically Mr. Montgomery is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Woodmen of the World. His family are members of the Christian Church.

SAMUEL L. HEISINGER. Coming to the state but a few years ago without money or influence, Mr. Heisinger started at the very bottom of the ladder as an employe in orchards and vineyards, but at that time he had something better than money or friends—determination to make a success. With this idea firmly fixed in his mind he observed keenly all that was transpiring about him, rapidly learning the ins and outs of the fruit business. As a result he is now the owner of one of the finest vineyards in the San Joaquin valley and is looked upon as one of the most influential young men of the county. A son of William and Magdalena (Lierman) Heisinger, he was born in Lafayette county, Mo., December 14, 1870. His father, who was a native of St. Louis, engaged in farming in Missouri for many years, but finally removed to Kansas, where he died April 13, 1883. His wife, who was a native of Germany, is still living, making her home at Elmonte, Cal. She became the mother of nine children.

Samuel L. Heisinger was the second child in a large family. His education was received in the district school near the home farm. On reaching man's estate he engaged in farming in Kansas, where he lived until 1888, when he removed to Nebraska. There he continued farming until 1892, the year of his arrival in California. Coming at once to the San Joaquin valley, he secured employment in the orchards and vineyards. After a year spent in the vicinity of Hanford he located near Selma, and was variously employed until 1898, when he purchased forty acres of land, which he still owns. From the first his venture met with success and in 1900 he bought the Loretta Vineyard of one hundred and sixty acres, five miles east of Selma, one of the best properties in the valley, and here he makes his home. In addition to this property, in partnership with O. W. Stearns, he owns considerable land near Mendota. They also have options on other lands, it being their intention to develop the property by artificial irrigation, it now being barren land.

Mr. Heisinger has taken an active interest in local enterprises and is now serving as one of the directors in the Co-operative Packing Company, of Selma, is president of the Masonic Temple Association of the same place, and a director of the Rochdale Company, of Selma. By his marriage with Lena F. Martin, who was born in Missouri, two children have been born, Lawrence L. and Lena, both of whom are at home. In fraternal relations Mr. Heisinger is a member of the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a Republican, but cares little for public life, preferring to devote his time to his own business interests. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and for the past eight years Mr. Heisinger has been superintendent of the Sunday School.

WILLIAM H. HARTLEY. Industrious engaged in the prosecution of a calling upon which the support and wealth of our nation so largely depends, William H. Hartley, of Merced, is meeting with eminent success, and is contributing his full share toward the agricultural advancement of Merced county. A typical representative of the courageous and energetic pioneers of California, who braved the dangers and hardships of life on the extreme frontier of civilization, he has been an important factor in developing the wonderful resources of this state, and in the grand transformations that have taken place within its limits, he has been an active and influential participant. A son of Henry Hartley, he was born in Lancastershire, England, March 26, 1834, coming from an ancient and honored English family.

Born and reared in Yorkshire, England, Henry Hartley spent his early life in his native land, being first employed in mercantile pursuits, and afterward being connected with the management of the Government railways. Immigrating with his family to America in 1842, he located in Lowell, Mass., where for nine years he was assistant foreman in a cotton mill. In 1851, accompanied by his two sons, John and William H., he started for California. Sailing from New York to Chagres, Panama, he crossed the isthmus on foot, and subsequently spent three months in Panama. Boarding the steamer Golden Gate, he arrived in San Francisco in April, 1852, and went directly to the mining fields in the northern part of Eldorado county. The climate, however, did not agree with him, and after an illness of three months, he returned to Lowell, Mass., where he resumed his former employment in the cotton factories, having eight or nine men under his supervision, and continued there until his death. His son John remained in California, and died, in 1870, in Sacramento.

Coming with his father and brother to California in 1852, William H. Hartley followed mining for two years, and then located in Stockton, where he and seven others owned an interest and engaged in freighting and forwarding goods to the mines for delivery for the Chinese Commission Company. This company built up a very large and profitable business, employing many men and teams, continuing until the extension of the railway, in 1870, to Modesto. Mr. Hartley then located in Merced county, where he kept a number of teams that he let out to farmers, receiving a good income from his venture. He also rented land, and embarked in grain raising. Being successful, he soon began investing in lands in this section of the state, and is now a large property owner, and one of the extensive and prosperous agriculturists of the county. He has a valuable ranch of two thousand three hundred acres near Merced; a ranch of six hundred and forty acres in Livingston; and at Turner, on Bear creek, he owns a farm of eight hundred acres. He superintends the most of his land himself, raising principally wheat and barley, the staple grains of the county. In the early days, when he first began farming, he used to harvest large crops, which he sold for good prices. He has valuable residential property in the city, and a pleasant and attractive home.

Mr. Hartley was interested in the construction of the Crocker-Huffman Canal, but has sold out his shares in the enterprise. He possesses great financial ability, and was one of the organizers of the Merced National Bank, which was re-organized as the Commercial and Savings Bank, and later changed to the Commercial Bank, of which he is vice-president, and a director. Until the Granger warehouse was sold, he was president of the company which owned it. He is also a stockholder in the Fountain City Milling Company, and is serving as its president.

In 1869, in Lowell, Mass., Mr. Hartley married Frances L. Otis, a native of that city. Mr. Hartley is a Republican in national politics, and takes a genuine interest in local affairs. For one term he served as county supervisor. He attends the Presbyterian Church, toward the support of which he contributes liberally.

WILLIAM McDONALD. Of an active and enterprising disposition, endowed by nature with a resolute will and an unlimited stock of energy, William McDonald began life for himself when a mere lad, and has met with deserved success in his undertakings, his failures and reverses being so slight and obscure that no mention of them is necessary. Well-known in the business circles of Merced county, he has the distinction of being the longest-established blacksmith in the city of Merced, and one of its most thriving and esteemed residents. Coming of Scotch ancestry, he was born, March 12, 1853, in Galt, Ontario, a son of Sweden McDonald.

Born and bred in Scotland, Sweden McDonald immigrated to Canada, locating in Galt, Ontario, where he was in the government employ as a railroad contractor until his death, in manhood's prime. He married Ellen Bell, who was born in Kelso, Scotland, and died in Michigan. Seven children were born of their marriage, three of whom are living, William, the subject of this sketch, being the sixth child in order of birth, and the only one residing in California.

Forced by adverse circumstances to begin the battle of life for himself when but nine years of age, William McDonald left home and worked at anything a boy could do for three years. Going to Harrison, Ontario, in 1865, he served an apprenticeship of three years at the blacksmith trade, and then went to Buffalo, where, for a few months, he was employed in the Erie Railroad shops. Locating in Grand Rapids, Mich., in December, 1868, he remained there until the spring of 1869, when he came to California in search of employment. For a year he worked in San Francisco and Oakland, and then followed his trade in Merced during the summer of 1870, and in Saint Helena, Napa county, the ensuing winter. In the spring of 1871, Mr. McDonald returned to Merced, where the city lots were just being placed for sale. Buying a lot on Main street, he erected a frame building, and established the pioneer blacksmith shop and carriage manufactory in the place. Meeting with success from the start, he has greatly increased his business operations, now owning and occupying two buildings fronting on Main street. In addition to his smithy and carriage works, Mr. McDonald has a turning, painting and machine shop, and is carrying on an extensive business.

He handles agricultural implements, representing the McCormick Harvester Company, the Moline Plow Company, Fisher Brothers' wagons, and deals in Racine carriages and buggies. He also manufactures plows, harrows and cultivators, employing in his shop and factory from nine to thirteen men. Mr. McDonald has exercised keen intelligence in accumulating and investing his money, is a shareholder in the Commercial Bank of Merced, and is largely interested in valuable property in Stockton, and in Mariposa and Mendocino counties. In Merced he owns a fine residential property.

Mr. McDonald married first, in Mariposa county, Phoebe Branson, a native of this state. She died in early womanhood, leaving four children, namely: John, employed with his father; Mrs. Nancy Price, of San Francisco; William, of San Francisco, and Tracy, wife of James Garibaldi, of Merced. Mr. McDonald married for his second wife, in Merced, Agnes Dunn, who was born near Hastings, Minn., and of the two children born of this marriage but one is living, namely: Morris Ellsworth. Politically Mr. McDonald is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

GEORGE A. HATFIELD. The position of agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company in Fresno is efficiently filled by George A. Hatfield, one of this city's most enterprising and liberal citizens. He was born in Meadow Creek, Whitley county, Ky., September 4, 1865, the second of three children born to his parents. His father, G. B. Hatfield, was also born in Whitley county, Ky., where his grandfather, a Virginian descendant of English ancestry, removed in an early day. G. B. Hatfield was reared on a farm and in manhood engaged as a successful merchant, first in Kentucky and afterward in Attica, Kans. He also farmed in the latter location and during the Oklahoma race he located in Woods county and engaged as a farmer and stockman. He is now a merchant at Elkton, where he is residing at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Brown, of Whitley county, Ky., was the daughter of Henry P. Brown, who migrated from Virginia to Kentucky, where he attained an advanced age, and died in Kansas in 1887.

George A. Hatfield was reared in his native state until attaining the age of seventeen years, attending the common schools and also having one term at Oberlin College. On account of his health he came as far west as Wellington, Kans., in 1884 and entered the employ of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, beginning as assistant agent, later as relief agent at different points on that division, his headquarters being at Attica, the terminal of the railway during the building of the Amarillo and Medicine Lodge lines. He remained there for three years, when in 1887 he was transferred to Barstow first as cashier, then agent, where he remained until 1892. He was then promoted to the position of traveling auditor of the Santa Fe, with Southern California headquarters in Los Angeles. Following this he traveled throughout California for seven years, after which he engaged as freight agent in Los Angeles for eighteen months. In 1902 he was transferred to Fresno in the capacity of local freight and passenger agent, which position he is now holding.

In San Bernardino, Cal., Mr. Hatfield was united in marriage with Susie H. Davidson, the ceremony being performed August 20, 1897. She was born in Clinton, Mass., a daughter of A. S. Davidson, who settled in San Bernardino, where he is now living retired from the active cares of life. They have one child, Homer. Fraternally Mr. Hatfield is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and belongs to the Chamber of Commerce of Fresno. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

ALFRED GILMAN CLOUGH. The county assessor of Merced county has the distinction of being the son and grandson of pioneers of 1849 and is himself not only a native of California, but also of the county where he now makes his home. His father, A. W., was born in Hopkinton, N. H., being a son of Gilman Clough, of New England ancestry. At the time gold was discovered in California he was a young man, ambitious to get a start in the world and eager for adventure. At once he decided to join the throng of gold-seekers on the coast. Taking passage on a vessel he sailed around Cape Horn and landed in San Francisco, September 20, 1849. From there he proceeded at once to Mariposa county and took up the work of mining, which engaged his attention for several years. On abandoning that occupation he began to work at the blacksmith trade, which he followed at Hornitos, Mariposa county, and at Phillips Ferry on the Merced river. In 1874 he went to Merced and conducted the Mariposa hotel until his retirement from business cares. His death occurred in 1891 when he was sixty-two years of age.

After coming to California A. W. Clough married Thirza Phillips, who was born at Mineral Point, Wis., and died at Merced, Cal., in 1902. Her father, John Phillips, was a native of England and in 1849 crossed the plains to California, where he met with indifferent success as a miner. Soon afterward he started Phillips Ferry in Mariposa county. Returning east overland in 1851, the next year he brought his family to California and settled at the Ferry, but later went to Hornitos, Mariposa county, where he engaged in stock-raising and farming until his death in 1864. In the family of A. W. and Thirza Clough there are four sons, namely: A. G., of Merced; E. F., who is a manufacturer of acetylene gas machines at San Jose; C. W., a real estate dealer in Watsonville; and S. B., who is connected in business with his brother at San Jose.

The earliest recollections of Alfred Gilman Clough are associated with the locality where he has always made his home. He was born January 3, 1857, and passed the years of youth at Hornitos, where he attended the public schools. At twenty years of age he came to Merced and for two years worked in a livery barn. In 1879 he bought a furniture business on Main street, where he engaged in the sale of house-furnishing goods and also conducted an undertaking establishment. Reliable as a business man, and honorable in every transaction he won the confidence of associates. From the time of attaining his majority he has voted with the Republican party and maintained a warm interest in its success. On that ticket in 1892 he was elected county coroner and public administrator, and two years later was re-elected to the office, which he filled from January, 1893, to January, 1899. Meanwhile he had been called to another office, his election as county assessor taking place in 1898, when he was elected by a majority of one hundred and thirty-two. At the expiration of a term in that office, in 1902 he was elected by a majority of one hundred and ten over his opponent. In order that he might devote his entire attention to his official duties in 1901 he disposed of his furniture and undertaking establishment, and since then has given his time wholly to work connected with the assessorship.

The first marriage of Mr. Clough took place in Merced in 1879, his wife being Mary E. Tinney, who was born in New York state and died at Merced in January, 1892. Two children were born of their union, namely: Alfereta, the wife of L. E. Gosner, of Salinas; and Winslow T. The present wife of Mr. Clough is a native of Merced county and bore the maiden name of Mary A. Blunt. By this union there are two daughters, Lucile and Ruth. It has always been characteristic of Mr. Clough that he has maintained an interest in educational affairs and is a staunch friend of the public-school system. For seven years he served as a trustee of the city schools and during the period of his service the west side school was erected, a work in which he aided materially. On the organization of Parlor No. 24,

W. R. Shannon

N. S. G. W., he became a charter member, but has not retained his membership in the body. Fraternaly he holds membership in the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which latter lodge he is past master workman.

JUDGE WILLIAM R. SHANNON. Although he is now living a retired life, Judge Shannon has been very active. A '49er, he spent several years in the gold mines of this state and took a prominent part in the affairs of those early days. Prior to coming to California he was a soldier in the Mexican war and also saw active service in the Rebellion, thereby being a veteran of two wars, a record that few men can equal. Born in Kentucky January 15, 1825, the judge is a son of George Shannon, who was a member of the Lewis and Clark expedition. At that time he was but a boy of sixteen years and ran away from home to join the party. The expedition started in 1802 and during the winter of 1804-5 camped at the mouth of the Columbia river. Mr. Shannon was the youngest member of the party, but it is said he performed the duties and labors of a man, never shirking any task that was assigned him. At the Little Missouri river he was wounded in the left leg by a bullet and later the leg was amputated at the military post of Bellefontaine, Mo. On the return of the expedition to the east, Mr. Shannon again took up his studies in Lexington, where he attended the common schools. Later he was graduated from the Philadelphia law school and practiced in Lexington until 1828, when he moved to St. Louis. During this time he served on the circuit bench. Eventually he settled in St. Charles, Mo., where he lived until his death in 1836. His father, George Shannon, was born in Philadelphia and was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, being raised to the rank of captain. He lost his life in Belmont county, Ohio, freezing to death while hunting.

George Shannon, Jr., married Ruth Price and to them were born seven children. Mrs. Shannon died in St. Charles. Judge W. R. Shannon was the youngest child. After finishing his common school education he attended the Belmont Institute, at St. Clairsville, Ohio, and during 1840-41 he attended school at Edwardsville, Ill. Prior to the breaking out of the Mexican war, he was appointed private secretary to his uncle, Wilson Shannon, who was the United States minister to Mexico, and while in his uncle's office he began reading law. Leaving that country before war was declared, Judge Shannon enlisted in Company I, Willock's Battalion of mounted volunteers, from Marion county, Mo., and remained in the service for the succeeding sixteen months. He was then discharged and returned to Ohio, where he remained until February 14, 1849, when he started for California, coming via Cape Horn. For four years he followed mining, but upon hearing flattering reports of the advantages offered young men in Texas, he migrated to that state and settled near Dallas, where he engaged in the practice of his profession and also carried on quite an extensive cattle business, spending many months looking after his interests on the frontier. The judge took an active part in public affairs and in 1855 was sent to the Texas legislature, being returned repeatedly and serving continuously until 1887, excepting the time spent in the Civil war. When the war broke out he enlisted in the Confederate army, serving as captain, but was later promoted to the position of lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth Texas Infantry. Twice during the war he was severely injured, first at the battle of Mission ridge, where his left leg was broken by a bullet, and during the campaign in and around Atlanta his right foot was crushed. These severe injuries made it physically impossible for him to longer continue in the service, so he secured his honorable discharge and returned to Texas, taking up the practice of law at Weatherford, where he made his home until 1887, when he disposed of his interests there and again came to California. For a time thereafter he lived in Ventura, but on account of ill health he was obliged to change climates and a year later located in Fowler, where he is now living, honored and respected by a large circle of friends. In addition to his office as justice of the peace he owns a tract of land adjoining the town on which, in a quiet way, he carries on general farming.

While living in Texas Judge Shannon was united in marriage with Nannie J. Sweatt, a native of Wilson county, Tenn., and to them were born six children, Wilson, who lives in Texas; one who died in infancy; Willie, deceased; Ruth, Mrs. E. G. Hoag, of Fowler; Sallie, deceased; and Nannie E., Mrs. G. E. Giffen, of Tulare county. All his life a staunch Democrat, Judge Shannon has been an active worker. Fraternaly he is a Mason, having attained to the Royal Arch degree.

NIS JOHNSON. Associated with the grocery firm of Graff & Co., Nis Johnson has done much toward the building up of a fine trade throughout the city of Fresno and vicinity. He was born in Germany, April 9, 1863, a son of N. Johnson, a farmer in the same vicinity, where his death occurred in 1904. His wife, formerly Ellen Hansen, was also a native of the same locality, where she died early in life. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters, all of whom are living. Nis Johnson is the youngest in this family, and was reared to young manhood on the paternal farm, receiving his education in the public schools. When eighteen years of age he decided to locate in America and accordingly came to San Francisco, arriving in August, 1881. For two years following he was engaged in farm work in San Mateo county, after which he worked in the vicinity of San Francisco until 1887. With the proceeds of his years' work he came to Fresno and in 1889 established a grocery store on the corner of Invo and H streets, under the firm name of H. Graff & Co. Later they removed to the Wiener block, on Tulare street, where they added a hardware stock and proceeded to build up a trade in this line. Outgrowing the second location in 1901, they removed to the Patterson block, which was just then completed, and where they have since been located. They now conduct the most extensive grocery store in Fresno and at the same time carry one of the finest stocks of hardware in the San Joaquin valley, catering to an extensive trade in both departments. Their building is 64x150 feet in dimensions, occupying two floors, while they have also two warehouses on the Southern Pacific Railroad, one of brick, 50x125 feet, and the other of frame, 40x72 feet. They have nine wagons for delivery, and carry on both a wholesale and retail business. The business was incorporated as H. Graff & Co., of which Mr. Johnson is a director and vice-president, and manager of the hardware and implement department. In addition to this Mr. Johnson has other interests in the city, being the owner of residence property, also his home at the corner of San Joaquin and Fortcamp avenues.

In Fresno Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Catherine Kruhl, a native of Germany, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Ellen, Mamie, George, Mvrtle and Nis Albert. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Danish Brotherhood of America, of which he is past president. He is a Lutheran in religion. Active in the development of the city of Fresno, he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and gives his best interests toward the growth and prosperity of this section.

CARROLL C. CASTLE, D. D. S. The many valuable discoveries and improvements made in dentistry during the past few years have elevated it to a distinct and separate science, and in the great advancement that has been made America has taken the lead. Quick to take advantage of all new methods used in the practice of his profession, C. C. Castle, of Merced, has acquired an enviable reputation as a skillful and up-to-date dentist, and since locating in this city has built up a large and lucrative practice. A native of Illinois, he was born, January 14, 1872, in Knox county, near Galesburg, a son of Rufus A. Castle. He is of German descent, the name in the Fatherland having been spelled Cassell, as was the division of Germany, Hesse-Cassell, in which the family originated. The doctor comes of honored colonial ancestry, one of his forefathers having fought in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Reuben Castle, was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va., and when a young man migrated to the western frontier, traveling on horseback through the hunting-grounds of the Indians, who had held the country for centuries, and were not pleased with the advances of the pale-faced strangers. Locating in Knox county, Ill., in 1832, he took up wild land, and improved a home-stead, on which he subsequently spent his life.

Born and bred on the home farm, in the Prairie state, Rufus A. Castle laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the public schools, and afterward continued his studies at Knox College, in Galesburg, until the breaking out of the Civil war. Enlisting then in the Eighty-third Volunteer Infantry, he served under General Grant until the close of the conflict. Returning to Knox county, he established himself as a farmer near Galesburg, and was there prosperously employed in agricultural pursuits for a quarter of a century. Removing to California in 1890, he located first in San Jose, from there going to Healdsburg, where his death occurred, in August, 1900. He was public-spirited and patriotic, and a faithful member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Alice Va Boylan, who was born in Ohio, left an orphan at an early age, and now resides in San Francisco. Of the three children born of their marriage, two are living, namely: C. C., of this review; and Reuben R., who was graduated from the dental department of the San Francisco College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1904, receiving the degree of D. D. S.

After leaving the district school, C. C. Castle entered the Galesburg high school, where he received his diploma in 1891. Subsequently becoming interested in life insurance, he represented the Prudential Life Insurance Company in Galesburg for fifteen months, and then went to Peoria, where he continued with the company as assistant superintendent until 1893. In the fall of 1897, having decided to enter upon a professional career, he entered the dental department of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., and was there graduated with the degree of D. D. S. in 1899. Dr. Castle immediately located in Tonica, LaSalle county, Ill., where he practiced his profession a short time. In January, 1900, he located in Merced, and has since won a most satisfactory patronage. His office is furnished with all the modern machinery, implements and devices used by dental experts and authorities.

Dr. Castle married, in Merced county, Rose D. Hooper, a daughter of Clayton Hooper, a pioneer of this county, and they occupy a modern residence, which he erected on Twenty-second street in 1902. The doctor is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in his political affiliations is a Democrat. He belongs to the Merced Lodge, I. O. O. F., and to the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM H. COOK. The earliest recollections of Mr. Cook are associated with the San Joaquin valley. Many wonderful changes have been wrought since the days of his childhood. Often he has seen wild horses and antelopes in large droves roaming unmolested through the wild grass which grew in undisturbed luxuriance on every hand. As a boy more than once he was present at round-ups on the present site of Merced. The only transportation facilities were such as could be secured on the stage running between Stockton and Mariposa, the route lying via Snelling, which was then the county-seat. In 1872 the county-seat was moved to Merced, which has since then attained a distinctive place among the cities of the valley.

A native of California, Mr. Cook was born in Stockton, August 17, 1858, being a son of Josiah C. and Maria (Sheridan) Cook, natives respectively of Virginia and England. As early as 1852, while still a single man, the father crossed the plains to California and engaged in farming and stock-raising in San Joaquin county. From there in 1863 he came to Merced county and settled ten miles east of Merced, where for many years he made a specialty of raising cattle and sheep. Meanwhile he also bought and developed a mine in Mariposa county, known as the Green Valley mine, and this property he still owns, in addition to a quartz mine at Hornitos. The year after he crossed the plains Miss Sheridan made the same trip, starting from Missouri and proceeding with a band of immigrants to the coast. Of their marriage five sons were born, namely: William H., of Merced; John Franklin, who died in Humboldt county, this state; James and Benjamin, who are living in Merced county; and Archibald, a resident of Stockton.

Fortified with such advantages as the common schools offered, William H. Cook began to earn his livelihood at seventeen years of age, his first employment being in the harvest field. In 1878 he settled on two hundred and forty acres lying on Bear creek, ten miles east of Merced, and there he raised grain and stock. Meantime he had gained prominence as a local Democratic leader, with sympathies in favor of the free coinage of silver. Without being a candidate for any office, in 1894 he received the nomination for county auditor at the Populist convention to which he had been a delegate. There were two other candidates for the position, but he won by a large plurality. In January, 1895, he assumed the duties of the office. At the expiration of his first term he was again nominated by the Populists and indorsed by the Democrats, winning again by a fair majority. When his second term had expired, in 1902, he was renominated on the Democratic ticket and elected by a majority of two hundred and eighty-seven, to serve until January of 1907. In point of years of service, he is the oldest incumbent of a county office, and his service has not only been long but eminently satisfactory. Devoting his entire time to the work of auditing, he has proved himself a painstaking, efficient and trustworthy representative of the people, and has carefully conserved the interests of the taxpayers wherever possible, especially through his labors in fighting illegal claims.

The union of Mr. Cook and Rosa Demick (daughter of Nelson Demick and a native of Ohio) was solemnized at Turlock, in 1878, and terminated with her death ten years later in Merced county. Two children comprise their family. The son, W. H., Jr., is a plumber in Merced, while the daughter, Mrs. Nettie Mav Hollister, lives in Fresno. On the organization of the Woodmen of the World at Merced Mr. Cook became one of the charter members of the lodge and is still identified therewith. After coming to Merced he identified himself with the lodge and encampment of Odd Fellows, but is no longer active in the latter. As past president of Parlor No. 24, he was officially connected with the Native Sons of the Golden West.

ROBERT H. SRONCE is named among the representative citizens of Fresno, Cal. He was born in Newton, N. C., August 9, 1877, a son of William A. Sronce, of the same vicinity, and the descendant of an old Virginia family who had early removed to North Carolina. William A. Sronce was a carriage manufacturer in Newton, where he now resides, retired from the active cares of life. His wife, formerly Jane Cobb, a native of North Carolina, died early in life. Of a large family of children three attained maturity and are living, Robert H. Sronce being next to the oldest.

Until he was eleven years old Robert H. Sronce remained in Newton, N. C., when he came to Riverdale, Fresno County, Cal., in company with an aunt, Mrs. Robert E. Sronce, her husband becoming a large farmer and stock-raiser in that location. He made his home with his aunt until attaining maturity, attending the public and high schools of Fresno, graduating from the latter in 1894. He then entered the Fresno Business College, from which he was graduated in 1895, after which he entered the employ of the Philadelphia Shoe Store. He remained for a time in that connection, when he became a salesman in the employ of W. Parker Lyon, with whom he continued until 1900. In the last-named year he engaged in business for himself, forming a partnership known as Sronce & Dick. They handle wall paper, paints and picture frames, doing a wholesale and retail business at their store at No. 1157 I street, having a building 25x75 feet in dimensions, and occupying three floors. They also engage in contract painting and decorating, having twenty-two employes.

In Fresno Mr. Sronce was united in marriage with Anna Fitzgerald, a native of Woodland, Yolo county, Cal., and the daughter of a pioneer of the state. Fraternally Mr. Sronce is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Foresters of America, Fraternal Brotherhood and Woodmen of the World. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and is active in all movements pertaining to the upbuilding of the city and county. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles of the Democratic party.

WALTER RUSSELL ROBB. Nestling under the snow-capped Sierra Nevada mountains, in Tulare county, is located the picturesque villa of Orosi, already famous for its products of tree and vine. In this vicinity is the well-developed fruit ranch of Walter Russell Robb, who is engaged as a horticulturist and viticulturist. He was born in Amherst, Nova Scotia, October 20, 1860, a son of Alexander Robb, founder of the Robb Engineering Company, Limited, of Amherst, Nova Scotia, which is now one of the leading steam engine works in Canada. Mr. Robb was one of the chief promoters of the Amherst Boot and Shoe Company, another of the leading Canadian manufactories. He was pre-eminently a successful as well as a self-made man, and in addition to his personal interests took an active part in every movement pertaining to the general welfare. He was prominent in political and educational matters and a prominent actor in the confederation of provinces of the Dominion of Canada in 1867, taking an active interest in the Free School bill. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church and an earnest worker in all of its branches. His wife, formerly Emeline Logan, was born in Amherst point, Nova Scotia, a daughter of David Dickey Logan, the representative of an old New England family which came originally from Scotland. Mrs. Robb survives her husband, still making her home in Amherst. She is the mother of four sons and one daughter, of whom David is president and Aubrey is superintendent of the Robb Engineering Company, Limited; Frederick (who was accidentally drowned in Nova Scotia) was for many years financial manager of the Robb Engineering Company; Walter R. is the subject of this review; and Margaret A. is the widow of the Rev. D. McGregor, for many years pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Amherst, Nova Scotia.

In his native city Walter Russell Robb was reared to manhood, receiving his education in the public and high schools of Amherst and the Amherst Academy, finishing his education in Delhouse College, in Halifax. For several years following the close of his school work he was connected with the firm of A. Robb & Sons and managed the stove and hardware branch of that business. On account of ill health Mr. Robb retired from active business life and assisted his father in operating a large farm near Amherst, in which they met with gratifying success. In 1891 Mr. Robb located in California, his first year in the west being spent in Southern California and in traveling. In 1892 he came to Orosi, Tulare county, and purchased his present ranch of twenty acres, to the improvement and cultivation of which he has since given most of his attention, and being for a time engaged in the nursery business. His ranch is entirely given over to the cultivation of fruits, raising principally peaches, prunes, figs, plums and oranges, his plums being shipped green to the eastern markets. He now owns a residence in Fresno, where he intends to spend the winters on account of better educational advantages for his children, who are attending high school.

In Halifax, Nova Scotia, Mr. Robb was united in marriage with Lizzie Powell, a native of Montreal, and the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Robb) Powell, formerly of Montreal. They became the parents of four children, of whom Marguerite and Alexander are living. William died in Nova Scotia at the age of two and a half years, while Ivy died in California in infancy. Mr. Robb is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

J. EARL POGUE. A native son of the Golden West, Mr. Pogue was born in Tulare county, Cal., October 17, 1867, a son of James W. C. Pogue, a sketch of whom will be found on another page of this volume. J. E. Pogue remained at home and attended the public schools, receiving a fair education, his elementary training being supplemented by attendance at the Visalia Normal. After completing his schooling he assisted his father in the work of the ranch until reaching his twenty-first year. A year later, in 1880, he opened the first store at Lemon Cove, which he has since conducted, meeting with marked success in his mercantile ventures. When the store was first opened it was under the firm name of J. W. C. Pogue & Son; later a brother, Thomas A., became interested in it and the firm was known as J. W. C. Pogue & Sons until July 1, 1894, when J. W. C. Pogue was bought out and the firm is now Pogue Brothers. The small structure that was first used has been replaced by a modern store building, two stories high and built of block and brick, the brick being burned in Lemon Cove, where a fine quality of clay can be found.

The first floor of the building is devoted to store purposes and also contains the rotunda and dining room of the Lemon Cove hotel, which is conducted by J. E. Pogue. The second floor is used for general hotel purposes and is one of the best in this section of the county. In addition to his mercantile and hotel business, Mr. Pogue is also quite extensively engaged in horticulture, owning twenty acres of land, which is set out with oranges. He has also been interested in general farming, he and others of the family farming over four thousand acres at one time, but since his mercantile business has increased to such proportions it has been impossible for him to devote much time to outside matters.

Since 1889 Mr. Pogue has served as postmaster of Lemon Cove, the name being changed in the same year from Lime Kiln. Being deeply interested in fraternal societies, he holds membership in the Woodmen of the World and is also affiliated with the Native Sons of the Golden West, being associated with Visalia Parlor. While Mr. Pogue is a young man, he has made for himself a splendid record. In this section of the county where he is best known he is honored and respected. His business ventures have proved successful and although his time has been utilized in building up his mercantile interests, he has ever been found ready to do his part as a citizen. Young and full of life, he favors progress, and may be depended upon to put his shoulder to the wheel whenever necessary.

GUSTAVE HERMINGHAUS. In the death of the above-named gentleman, Fresno county lost one of its most prominent citizens and the family a most kind and indulgent father and husband. The United States is indebted to Germany for many of her sturdy pioneers and to this class of citizens Gustave Herminghaus belonged. His life was a success, and the results of his labors will live for many years.

A native of Germany, Mr. Herminghaus was born on the Rhine, March 5, 1820. His father brought the family to America and settled near St. Louis, Mo., where he cleared a farm and resided until his death. On this farm Gustave Herminghaus was reared. When the work of the farm allowed he improved the opportunity and attended the district school, but in those days the youth's education was limited to a few terms in the winter. In 1850, in company with others, Mr. Herminghaus crossed the plains, the party bringing cattle through to California. On arriving here he settled on the McCosma river, where he engaged in mining until his removal to San Jose. From there he continued to Pennoche, where he hunted game for the New Idra quicksilver mines at New Idra. Later he engaged in the sheep business at Pennoche. About 1867 he located near White's Bridge, where he purchased and also entered land and improved a fine place, becoming one of the largest sheep owners in that section of the valley, at one time owning ten thousand head. In 1895 he sold his sheep and rented the land to H. Miller, of Miller & Lux. It is now rented to Isaac Bird of Merced county, manager of Chowchilla ranch. Two years later, in 1897, Mr. Herminghaus came to Fresno, where he continued to reside up to the time of his death, November 18, 1904, at the age of eighty-four years.

In San Jose, in 1884, Mr. Herminghaus was united in marriage with Miss Amelia Spangler, who was born in Crescent City, Del Norte county, this state, a daughter of William Spangler, who was born in Philadelphia, Pa., a son also of William, who was a manufacturer in the Quaker City. The father of Mrs. Herminghaus came to California in 1849, via the Panama route. For several years he followed mining in this state and then removed to Portland, Ore., where he engaged in the livery business. Later he removed to Idaho and still later to Walla Walla, Wash., where he was a United States mail contractor. Finally he settled in the Willamette valley, Ore., and engaged in the stock business near Eugene. Subsequently he located on the Pitt river, where he continued in the stock business until his removal to Gilroy, Santa Clara county, where he followed general farming. In 1870 he went to Pennoche and engaged in teaming to the New Idra mines. Later he again went to Oregon, but in a short time returned to Santa Clara county, engaging in teaming at San Jose. His next location was in Fresno, where he lived but a short time subsequent to his locating in Stockton, where he is still living at an advanced age. He married Mary Hardin, a native of Arkansas, who came to California in the '50s and died at Pennoche. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are still living, Mrs. Herminghaus being the second child. By her marriage Mrs. Herminghaus has two children, Bertha Genevieve and Victoria Pearl.

Mr. Herminghaus' life is a splendid example of what may be accomplished through perseverance and industry. His ranch at White's Bridge, on the San Joaquin river, contains about sixteen thousand acres, all in one body, fenced and improved. In addition to this property he erected thirteen residences in Fresno and built a brick business house which is three stories high and modern throughout. This property was accumulated in a few years. In youth and young manhood he knew what poverty was, but that same poverty was the stepping stone to his success, and hard work, energy and perseverance brought him a deserved reward for his many years of toil. This review of the life of Mr. Herminghaus carries with it encouragement and an example for the young men who start in life with no capital save manliness, courage, persistency of purpose and a willingness to work.

CHARLES A. SCHWEIZER. A successful and popular business man, Charles A. Schweizer is located in Fresno, conducting the most extensive and best equipped harness establishment in Fresno county. He was born in St. Paul, Minn., December 29, 1861, a son of Bernard Schweizer. The elder man was a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, where he learned the trade of wagon maker. He immigrated to America and journeyed to Chicago, where he remained for a few months, locating about 1854 in St. Paul, Minn., which was then only a landing place for the boats of the Mississippi river. There he bought a lot and built a residence, for a livelihood engaging first in a saw milling enterprise, later building and conducting a wagon shop, and finally following the butcher business, the last named occupation demanding his time and attention until his retirement from the active cares of life. His death occurred in St. Paul in 1899, at the age of seventy years. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, having assisted materially in the erection of the first Catholic Church in St. Paul. Politically he was a Democrat. His wife, formerly Bernardina Staudacher, also a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, died in St. Paul in 1903. Of the seven children born of this union six are living, Charles A. being the third in order of birth.

Charles A. Schweizer was reared in St. Paul and received his education in the public and high schools of that city. From boyhood he assisted his father in his business and when sixteen years old was apprenticed to learn the trade of a harness maker and saddler, working with Charles Friend, who conducted the oldest established and most extensive business of its kind in that city, the firm still occupying a leading place in such work. He served a three years' apprenticeship with Mr. Friend, and remained six months after its termination, when he went to Keokuk, Iowa, and later to Des Moines, of the same state. Gradually working his way westward, he was employed for a time in Omaha, Neb., then in Cheyenne, Wyo. In the latter place he was located from 1881 to 1887, engaged at his trade. He then came to California, and for six months following his arrival was located in San Francisco employed at his trade. Coming to Fresno in August, 1887, he established a shop of his own at No. 956 I street in partnership with Charles A. Kramer, the firm being known as Kramer & Co. For sixteen months they continued in partnership, when Mr. Schweizer bought Mr. Kramer's interest and since that time has continued alone. In the great fire of 1893 Mr. Schweizer's shop was burned to the ground, the loss but half protected by insurance. The fire occurred Saturday night and Monday morning he had rented the store which he now occupies at No. 2020 Mariposa street, restocked immediately, and by the following Saturday opened for business once more. His business is the oldest of its kind in Fresno and has developed to lucrative proportions, manufacturing nearly all of the harness which he sells, harness supplies and saddlery goods. He has bought residence property in this city, owning a home at No. 817 M street.

In Cheyenne, Wyo., Mr. Schweizer was united in marriage with Mary Ternes, a native of Luxembourg, Germany, who came to Wisconsin with her parents when only three years old. Fraternally Mr. Schweizer is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is active in all movements pertaining to the general welfare of the community.

WILLIAM GASS COLLINS. A resident of California since 1874, William G. Collins has been actively engaged in the sheep business since 1876. He was born in Rhea county, Tenn., March 20, 1848, the son of James Pierce and Susan (Darwin) Collins. The former was born in Virginia, a son of Henry Collins, an early settler of East Tennessee and a farmer in Rhea county. During the Civil war he was a strong Union man. Mrs. Collins was a daughter of James Darwin, a native of Virginia, who was also an early settler of East Tennessee and whose ancestors served in the Continental army. Both Mr. and Mrs. Collins died in Tennessee.

The third in order of birth in a family of seven children, five of whom are living, W. G. Collins spent his boyhood and youth on the paternal farm, attended the pioneer subscription schools and engaged in farm work until 1874, when he decided to come to California, believing that this state held out better inducements for young men. He located in Fresno county upon his arrival in the state and in 1876 engaged in the sheep business with his brother, Alfred S., and since that time they successfully handled thousands of sheep. They began by buying one thousand sheep, ranging them on the plains and in the foothills. As opportunity offered they increased their herds, having as high as eight thousand at one time. For a time these brothers were engaged in merchandising at Dry Creek post-office, with another brother, J. D. Collins, the present sheriff of Fresno county. A. S. and W. G. Collins raised considerable grain on eight hundred acres of land near Collis, which they later sowed partly to alfalfa and set out an orchard. They entered land and also homesteaded a tract near Academy, which was their home for several years. In 1902 they sold out and quit the grain business, and W. G. Collins erected a comfortable residence in Fresno at No. 1625 I street, where he resides. The brothers still maintain their sheep industry on Big Dry creek, near Academy.

William G. Collins was united in marriage with Lillie Rogers, who was also a native of East Tennessee, and they have two children, Sidney and Emma. Mrs. Collins is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. Collins is a Republican and on national issues has always worked for the party. Public-spirited, enterprising and self-made, he has worked hard to be able to give the comforts of the home his family now enjoy and establish in the county of his adoption an enviable reputation for strict integrity and honor.

B. A. GARDNER. Throughout his long and well directed life B. A. Gardner has exerted an influence for good, has represented the strong and capable men in American country life, and has given his practical good judgment to the development of western conditions from early pioneer days up to the present time. His mind is a storehouse of valuable information concerning the rise of the west from its crude conditions under Spanish dominion, and he has passed through the various stages of its awakening with observant eyes and intelligent brain. Mr. Gardner located on his present stock ranch of twenty acres in 1898, having an unrivaled location adjoining Los Banos, north of the park. His ground is all in alfalfa, and he is conducting a dairy of Durham cattle.

Mr. Gardner comes of an old eastern family, established in Rhode Island prior to the birth of his paternal grandfather, Levi Gardner, who married in his native state, and became a pioneer of Chenango county, N. Y. Job Gardner, the father of B. A., was born in Chenango county, and married Esther Chapman, a native of the same county. The oldest son of this union, L. B., is a retired jeweler of Santa Rosa; D. P., the second child, is a resident of Klamath county, Ore.; and the youngest son, T. M., is a carpenter of Santa Rosa. The youngest of these children is now sixty-five years old. The father was a man of much enterprise, evidenced in both his early and later life. He was a trustee of the first free school in New York state, a position encumbered with much responsibility and disension, owing to the trend of popular opinion. He conducted a large dairy and general farm, but was ambitious of brighter prospects, and determined to profit by the experience of his brother-in-law, J. S. Chapman, who had already established himself on the coast. Therefore, in the spring of 1853, he set out with a spring wagon and horse-team for Illinois, and in April, 1854, became one of a party which crossed the plains with two wagons and four yoke of oxen to each wagon. Coming by way of Salt Lake City, he arrived in Eldorado county, Cal., September 3, having been five months on the way. In October, 1855, he went to Santa Clara county, and in December, 1858, to Santa Cruz, purchasing a farm in the Pajaro valley, upon which he lived until his death, January 15, 1857, at the age of fifty-three years. His wife survived him for almost half a century, her death occurring April 30, 1902, at the age of ninety-one years and one month.

B. A. Gardner was one of the first pupils in the first free school of New York state. There he laid the foundation for his subsequent liberal researches. He was seventeen years old when the family started across the plains, and he drove a bull-team, and after reaching this state engaged in mining in Eldorado county. In 1855 he went with the family to Santa Cruz, assisted in the cultivation of his father's three-hundred-acre farm, and experienced the disappointment of having to relinquish their claim, owing to its being a portion of the Castro grant. In 1875 he located in Sonoma county, and in 1877 came to the west side of Merced county, where he bought a farm, which he operated for three years, and then turned it into an orchard and vineyard. Disposing of the same he located on and improved a place near Fresno, where he remained four years, when, on account of his wife's health he bought a farm in Monterey county and proceeded to raise grain for twelve or fourteen years. In 1898 he came to his present place, which is a finely improved and profitable property.

In Watsonville, December 4, 1870, Mr. Gardner married Mary Driskell, who was born in Keokuk, Iowa, a daughter of James Driskell, a pioneer of California, and prominently identified with agricultural interests in the state. Mrs. Gardner was reared in Oregon from her seventh year, coming to California at the age of fifteen. She is the mother of four children, namely: Manie, the wife of J. C. Myers, of Los Banos; Anna, the wife of William Wisenor, of the vicinity of Los Banos; Clarence and Loran Arthur. Mr. Gardner is a staunch Republican, but has never taken any part in the local deliberations of his party. He has served as a member of the school board for several years. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Church, and he was formerly superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. Gardner is highly esteemed in his neighborhood, and wherever he has lived has made many friends and enjoyed the prominence due a man of his earnest, generous, and painstaking nature.

ROBERT F. JACK, a successful agriculturist in the vicinity of Parlier, Fresno county, was born in Hamilton county, Tenn., February 22, 1854. His father, Robert Jack, was a native of the same state, where he engaged as a coal miner until his death. His wife, formerly Jane Martin, was born and died in Tennessee. They had a family of one son and two daughters, Robert F. Jack being the youngest. He received his education in the common schools, upon the completion of which he came to California with a brother-in-law, J. M. Heiskell, arriving in 1869, when he located in San Joaquin county. For a time he worked at farming and in 1872 bought land near Oakdale, Stanislaus county, which he cultivated for eleven years. In 1883 he came to Fresno county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Parlier, two miles east of that place and four miles west of Reedley. He raised wheat until the organization of the ditch companies, which gave him sufficient water, when he devoted the greater part of his land to horticultural interests. He has planted forty acres to vines, twenty acres to alfalfa and two acres to trees, the balance of the one hundred and twenty acres which he now owns being devoted to the cultivation of hay and grain. He also owns stock in the Growers' Winery at Parlier.

In 1888, at Oakdale, Cal., Mr. Jack was united in marriage with Susan P. Heiskell, a native of Eldorado county, Cal., and they have one son, Tyler H., who is attending the high school of Reedley. Politically Mr. Jack is a Democrat and is active in the counsels of his party. He has been a delegate to the county and state conventions, and a member of the county central committee.

JOHN HENRY JANSON. The president and manager of Chesnutwood's Business College of Fresno, Cal., John Henry Janson, has been largely instrumental in bringing the commercial course to a high grade of excellence. He is well and widely known and esteemed for his business qualities as well as for the integrity and honor of his manhood. Born in Nevada City, Cal., August 15, 1872, he is a son of John Janson, who came around Cape Horn to California in the spring of 1850, going thence to Nevada City, where he engaged in mining. He met with success in his venture, but eventually engaged in farming near that city until his retirement, when he located in Santa Cruz, where his death occurred in 1899, at the age of seventy-seven years. Fraternally he affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, formerly Charlotte C. Johnson, came to California in an early day, and she now makes her home in Paso Robles.

John Henry Janson was the only child born to his parents. He was reared in Nevada City until attaining the age of eighteen years, attending the public schools and preparing for the profession of a teacher in Nevada county. On account of the impaired health of his father he was compelled to take charge of the farm until 1892, in which year he entered Chesnutwood's Business College, in Santa Cruz. In June, 1893, he was graduated from this institution, after which he was employed as an expert accountant. In 1896 he was asked to take a position in the college from which he had graduated, filling the chair of penmanship and bookkeeping with rare efficiency. He also became financially interested in the institution, being one of the incorporators in 1898, and was then elected to the office of president, which he has since filled. Under his presidency the college assumed a prominent place among business institutions of the Pacific coast, being now considered one of the finest in California. Up to 1901 Professor Janson was identified with the Pacific Coast Business College, of San Jose, in which he was secretary and a director until he sold out in the last-named year. In June, 1904, Chesnutwood's Business College was established in Fresno, the school opening in September of that year with an enrollment of eighty pupils. In five months' time the number increased to two hundred students, who are accommodated in the Hedges building. They teach a thorough commercial course and stenography, and hope to establish a normal course upon the occupation of their new building. Thousands of young people have gone from these colleges into splendid positions of trust and responsibility.

Frank Victor

In Santa Cruz, Cal., Mr. Janson was united in marriage with Mabel Ora Smith, a native of Vermont, a graduate of the Santa Cruz high school and Chesnutwood's Business College. They have one son, Herbert Browning. In August, 1904, Mr. Janson removed to Fresno from Santa Cruz, where he had made his home for several years. For the seven years prior to his removal he acted as president of the Young Men's Christian Association, which position he resigned at that time. He is still a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Cruz, as well as of that of Fresno. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias, of the Uniformed Rank, and Knights of the Maccabees, being first past commander of Santa Cruz. Politically he is a Democrat.

FRANK VIETOR. Fresno county is the home of many German-Americans who have been important factors in the work of developing this part of the state. Active and industrious, they have labored earnestly for the advancement of the county, realizing that as the country developed they were reaping their reward. Born in Germany March 30, 1838, Mr. Viotor is a son of John Viotor, also a native of the same country. He came to the United States in 1848, locating in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he followed his trade of weaver. In 1860 he removed to Connersville, Ind., where he engaged in the merchandise business until his death. Prior to his emigration he married Gertrude Altman, who survived her husband several years, but finally died in Cincinnati. Her marriage resulted in the birth of four children, two daughters and two sons. Frank being the second child. He was ten years old when his parents came to this country. His education was received in the Catholic schools of Cincinnati, and later he engaged as a huckster, disposing of his produce to the grocery stores and to the general public, having a stall in the public market. In 1861 he sold out and came to California, at first locating in Red Bluff, where he engaged in a general teaming and hauling business. While following this vocation he had many thrilling experiences. He was the first man to haul government goods to Klamath Lake, Oregon. While on this trip he was guided by Captain Jack, an Indian, who later was the leader of the terrible massacre at the Lava Beds. Tiring of this life, which was very trying, he went to San Jose in 1869 and there followed the same line of business for several years. At one time he hauled flour from the mills at Los Gatos and also hauled lumber from the Big Basin. In 1872 he went to what was known as the Kimball tract, Contra Costa county, where he had charge of farming interests. Later he removed to Staten Island, in the Mokelumne river, where he acted as superintendent for Hagan & Tevis, continuing until the fall of 1881, when he came to Fresno county and in partnership with George M. Edmunds his present ranch was purchased. The tract at the time comprised three hundred and twenty acres, but the new owners cut it up into small tracts and sold all but one hundred and fifty acres which were divided between the two partners, Mr. Viotor taking eighty acres, while Mr. Evans came into possession of the balance. Since then he has followed farming and also engaged in the raisin business to quite a large extent. He has also taken a prominent part in outside enterprises, being one of the organizers of the Fowler Fruit & Raisin Packing Company, incorporated, he being the vice-president and general manager for five years and under his personal direction the business was made a success. With others he is interested in one thousand two hundred acres of land on the west side of the San Joaquin valley, and also owns a third interest in eighty acres on the McCall road.

While living in San Jose, Mr. Viotor was united in marriage with Miss Barbara Kuhn, who is a native of Germany, and to them have been born two children: Edward, in the butcher business in Fresno; and Katie, now the wife of Otto Loescher, who lives near Fowler. A staunch Republican, Mr. Viotor has been active in the affairs of his party, being for several years a member of the county central committee. The family are members of the Catholic Church and wherever known have hosts of friends who join in wishing them many years of happiness and continued prosperity.

LEWIS C. KEELEY. A resident of California since 1880, Mr. Keeley has become one of the leading grain farmers of Tulare county, his success in life being the result of his own well-directed efforts. While he has succeeded in accumulating a competency, no man in the county is more liberal and he never fails to respond when called upon to support a movement, either financially or otherwise. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born in Chester county, December 22, 1856, a son of Henry and Martha Elizabeth (Peck) Keeley. The father was also born in the Keystone state, where he followed farming and surveying. For many years he was in the employ of the Pennsylvania Central Railroad as a civil engineer, his duties in this capacity taking him to all parts of the state. He is still living, making his home in Youngstown, Westmoreland county, Pa. His wife, who bore him six children, died in 1900.

Lewis C. Keeley remained at home and attended the district schools of Westmoreland county, whither his parents removed soon after his birth. At the age of twenty-one he started out to make his own way in the world, spending the first six months in Iowa, and subsequently locating in Tulare county, Cal., where he has since made his home. On first coming to the county he purchased land and engaged in the raising of grain, which business he has since followed with success. For several years he has been associated with his brother, John H., and together they have carried on one of the largest grain businesses in the county, at times having five thousand five hundred acres under grain. From time to time Mr. Keeley has added to his first purchase of land until he and his brother now own two thousand acres in and around the town of Lindsay. In addition to their grain interests the brothers have a stock ranch near Woodville, where they raise horses and cattle. Their ranch is well equipped with modern appliances for carrying on a large business, and besides having two combined harvesters, they also own many other labor-saving implements. The home place, which is located three miles southwest of Lindsay, is among the finest places in this part of the county.

Fraternally Mr. Keeley is a member of the Odd Fellows, but the lodge at Woodville of which he was a member has given up its charter and he has not associated himself with any other lodge. In political belief he is a Democrat and takes a deep interest in the welfare of that organization. Aside from holding the position of school trustee he has never held public office, but while a member of the board he made a hard fight for a much larger schoolhouse than was planned. As a result the district now has one of the largest and finest school buildings in the county, which gives ample room for the large attendance.

JOHN H. KEELEY was born in Pennsylvania in 1858. In 1879 he located in Tulare county, Cal., where for many years he has been associated in business with his brother. By his marriage with Charlotte, daughter of Julius Orton, five children have been born, namely: Lizzie, John, William, Ralph and Julius.

Mr. Keeley has never cared to take a prominent part in political matters, but is deeply interested in educational affairs and is now serving as trustee of the Lindsay school district. He and his most estimable wife are highly respected for their many sterling traits of character and both have a large circle of warm personal friends.

JAMES SHARPE TANNAHILL. Born in Huntingdon county, Quebec, Canada, November 17, 1848, J. S. Tannahill is a son of John and Marian (Caldwell) Tannahill, the former born near Glasgow, Scotland. At an early day he immigrated to Canada, settling in Huntingdon county, where he cleared a farm of one hundred and fifty acres. In 1850 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, but after one year returned to his home in Canada, where he had left his family, and where he died a few days afterward, from a fever that he had contracted while in the west. His wife, who was also born in Scotland, became the mother of two sons and five daughters. She died at the old home in 1881.

James S. Tannahill was reared on his father's farm in Canada, making it his home until reaching his twenty-first year, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a miller. Two years later, in 1871, he migrated westward and finally reached California. Soon after arriving here he located in Redwood City, San Mateo county, where he secured employment as a carpenter after conducting a mill for one month, being compelled to make the change on account of ill health. Continuing to make his residence in Redwood City until 1891, he then removed to Fresno county and engaged in ranching. During the years he lived in San Mateo county he owned and operated a planing mill and followed contracting and building most of the time. Many of the finest residences in that place and at Menlo Park were constructed by him.

The first three and one-half years of his residence in Fresno county Mr. Tannahill devoted his attention to farming and growing grapes, but at the expiration of that time moved into the city of Fresno and has since been following general contracting and building, now being one of the leading builders in the San Joaquin valley. Among the more prominent residences that he has erected may be mentioned the Kearney mansion, the home of James Brown and others. He has also erected for himself a nice home at No. 442 Blackstone avenue.

While living in San Mateo county Mr. Tannahill was united in marriage with Isabelle Stewart and to them have been born seven children, namely: Marion, Archibald, Leslie, Norman, Jennie, Wallace and Gertrude. Politically Mr. Tannahill is a staunch Republican and while he does not care to take an active part in public affairs, he is deeply interested in the questions of the day, and while living in Redwood City was for three years a member of the city council. In fraternal relations he holds membership with the Improved Order of Red Men and the Order of St. Andrew. Starting at the bottom of the ladder, he has gradually forged his way to the front and by the exercise of his own efforts has accumulated a comfortable competency and has attained a position of influence in the state.

GEORGE F. STANIFORD. A prominent place among the business men of Fresno is accorded George F. Staniford, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, and one of the enterprising and substantial citizens of this city. He is a native of Rockport, Mass., where his birth occurred March 2, 1855. His ancestors were of English descent who located in the colonies and were active as patriots during the Revolutionary war. His father, Daniel Staniford, was born in Ipswich, Mass., in which state he engaged in farming for many years, finally removing to Brooklyn, N. Y., where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Caroline Fawcett, was born in New York City, the child of English parents. Her father, William Fawcett, was a master mechanic in England and came to America to superintend the launching of the first steamboat, the Clermont, for Robert Fulton. He followed his trade in New York City, where his death occurred. Mrs. Staniford died in Brooklyn, leaving a large family of children, four of whom were born of her first marriage to Frederick Weber, a banker of New York City, and five children by her union with Mr. Staniford. Of the four children, only two are living, both being residents of San Leandro. Of the second marriage all the children are living, the only one in California being George F., of Fresno.

George F. Staniford made his home in Massachusetts until he was fifteen years old, removing at that time to Brooklyn. He received his education in the public schools of Rockport and Salena, and after locating in Brooklyn he attended a commercial college. Entering business life, he filled the position of bookkeeper for the Montauk Insurance Company for six and a half years. In 1878 he came to California and locating at Riverside improved an orange grove and vineyard, a ten-acre tract, which he sold two years later. He then located in San Francisco and entered the insurance business as bookkeeper, retaining the position for six years, then engaging as traveling special agent for the City of London, Scottish Union and National, and the Home Mutual Fire and Marine Insurance Companies. During this period he located his home in Fresno, bringing his family here in 1890, in which year he established an insurance business in this city, a local agency for many of the old line companies. In 1898 he sold his business and in July of the same year became associated with the Raisin Growers' Association, having assisted materially in its organization. He became chief clerk and held the position until September, 1903, subsequently holding other positions with the association until December, 1904, when he accepted the secretaryship of the Chamber of Commerce, which has five hundred and twenty members, being the largest business men's association in the San Joaquin valley. In 1904 the Chamber built the Chamber of Commerce building, which is given over to conventions, etc., as well as containing a complete exhibit of California products. They had a magnificent exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904, where the county took the grand prize and several gold and silver medals.

Mr. Staniford has built a beautiful home at the corner of Belmont and Van Ness avenues, which is presided over by his wife, formerly Virginia Lee Jamison, whom he married in Fresno. She is a native of Stanislaus county, and the daughter of Harvey Jamison, a pioneer of that county, and a highly respected citizen, who ably filled the office of county assessor of Stanislaus county for many years, and who is remembered for his many good qualities of head and heart. Mr. and Mrs. Staniford have two children, Kenneth Jamison and Warren Paul. Mrs. Staniford is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternal-ly Mr. Staniford affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, Fraternal Brotherhood, and the New England Society of Fresno, which he served as president. Politically he is a staunch Republican and has served as a member of the county central committee.

THOMAS STILWELL, an esteemed resident of Exeter, was born in Illinois, March 26, 1866, a son of Hiram Stilwell. The latter was a native of Indiana and a farmer by occupation. When but a mere boy he left his native state with his parents, and removed to Illinois. In 1866 he went to Denver, Colo., during the gold excitement, but returned to Illinois the same year, where he remained until the fall of 1868. He then moved to Missouri, where he remained until 1880, when he went to Kansas. In 1882 he crossed the plains to Oregon and then came to California in 1885, and settled near Farmersville, and later at Camp Badger, where he was engaged in stock-raising until his death, which occurred May 10, 1896. His wife, formerly Ann Howard, a native of Indiana, survives him, now making her home near Exeter. They were the parents of five children, four sons and one daughter, all of whom attained maturity. Thomas Stilwell being the second in order of birth. He was reared in Illinois, Bates county, Mo., and Neosho county, Kans. In 1882 he came to California and began farming and stock-raising, which double occupation he has since followed. He now has a residence on the Portersville road upon his ranch of four hundred acres, all devoted to the raising of graded cattle, Short-horns, etc., while he rents four hundred and eighty acres which is planted to grain. He married Emma Pickett, and they have one daughter, Agnes Lowell. Mrs. Stilwell is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, of Visalia. Fraternally Mr. Stilwell is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

Mrs. Stilwell is a daughter of Dr. Daniel LaF. Pickett, who was born in North Carolina, January 28, 1828, of Quaker parents. He attended a medical college in North Carolina, from which he graduated with the degree of M.D., after which he practiced in his native state for some time. He then went to Missouri and spent the winter of 1849-50 and thence, in 1850, crossed the plains by means of ox teams. He made his home in various places on the coast, spending some time in Oregon and Nevada. Eventually he came to California and bought a farm near Farmersville, Tulare county, where he practiced medicine in connection with his horticultural interests for many years. About thirty years ago he gave up the practice of his profession. In 1884 he homesteaded a ranch on the Portersville road, where he made his home until his death, January 2, 1905. Fraternally he was a prominent Mason, and politically cast his ballot with the Republican party. He served at different times as clerk of the school board, filling that office at the time of his death, and had also acted as justice of the peace. His wife, formerly Catherine Josephine O'Brien, was a native of Ireland, and died in San Diego. They had no children, but reared as their own, Emma Pickett, now the wife of Thomas Stilwell, who gave to them the care and affection of a daughter.

JEFFERSON D. STATHAM. The son of a pioneer, Jefferson D. Statham was born in Fresno county, August 21, 1862, and reared among the primitive scenes and conditions incident to the early days of the state. His father, Albert H. Statham, was born in 1832 in Virginia, from which state he emigrated in boyhood to Arkansas, whence he participated in the Mexican war as drummer boy. Deciding to locate in the remote west where opportunities were more abundant, he crossed the plains in 1852, taking the southern route through Texas (in which state he met his wife) and upon his safe arrival in California located on Arkansas Flat, on Kings river. He engaged in the stock business and also teamed to Stockton, San Joaquin county, in 1868 entering land and moving on the plains. He located his home a half-mile from Centerville, where he bought three hundred and twenty acres and followed the raising of sheep. He eventually bought land in the vicinity of Sanger, Fresno county, and also at Lone Tree, owning about twelve hundred acres, when, in 1876, he located in Fresno and later sold his land. He first engaged in the livery business in this city, and followed that with a meat market, finally engaging in a real estate enterprise. In 1886 he removed to Los Angeles, where he purchased property and made that city his home until his death in 1900. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and one of the founders of the church in Fresno. His wife, formerly Serepta Akers, was a native of Arkansas, who died in 1870. They became the parents of the following children: George, located in Montana; James, engaged in the real estate business in Fresno; Jefferson, of this review; Albert, of Los Angeles; Marvin, who died in Fresno; and Rosa, the wife of C. G. Hinds, of Alameda.

Until he was fourteen years old Jefferson D. Statham was reared in Centerville, where he attended the district school, and after his location in Fresno in 1876 he completed his education in the public schools. At the age of sixteen years he began work for himself, farming and teaming in various localities in the San Joaquin valley. Two years after his marriage, which occurred February 14, 1883, Mr. Statham went to Pendleton, Ore., where he engaged extensively in the stock business, dealing in both cattle and horses. He remained in that location for four years, when he returned to California and settled in Madera county. He followed the butcher business and the raising of stock in Raymond until 1896, when he located in Fresno county, purchasing a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres located one mile northeast of Conejo. This ranch is under irrigation from the Emigrant and Fowler Switch ditches, and is devoted to alfalfa, where he is also engaged in stock raising—cattle, horses and mules,—being largely interested in bringing cattle from Arizona. In addition to his own property he also rents land. In 1898 he bought a small ranch at the corner of Church and East avenues, where he made his home until 1902, when he moved into Fresno. He owned the southwest corner of Mariposa and M streets, and in 1904 put up the Mariposa Hotel, a commodious and comfortable hostelry which covers nearly four lots. His personal interests are entirely given over to the raising of stock.

Mrs. Statham was in maidenhood Ida Helm, a native of Princeton, Mariposa county, and the daughter of Allen Helm, who was a native of Missouri. His father located in that state and later crossed the plains to California in 1852. He followed farming in Merced county and also in Mariposa county, his death occurring on one of his ranches in the latter county in the fall of 1876. Brought to the state in 1852 Allen Helm became a farmer in manhood near Merced, now owning a farm and stock ranch in the lower foothills in Mariposa county. His wife, formerly Melvina Smith, a native of Arkansas, was a daughter of William Smith, who crossed the plains to California and settled near Centerville, where his death occurred. Mrs. Helm died in Fresno county February 28, 1873, leaving two children of the three born to herself and husband, Mrs. Statham being the eldest. Mrs. Statham is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Statham is a Democrat.

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH MINGHETTI

JOSEPH MINGHETTI. A native of Switzerland, Mr. Minghetti was born in that country May 24, 1836, a son of Joseph and Lucy (Marzorini) Minghetti. The father was a shoe-maker by trade and also followed farming to some extent. His union with Miss Marzorini was blessed by the birth of six children. Both the parents are deceased.

Joseph Minghetti was the oldest child and is now the only one living. His education was obtained in the common schools of his native country, where he later engaged in farming until 1856, when he went to Australia. After remaining there five years he went to New Zealand, where for the same length of time he worked in the gold mines. In 1866 he returned to his native country and three years later immigrated to the United States. For a time he lived in Iowa and Nebraska, working on the railroad for three years. At the expiration of this time he made another trip to his old home, but the following year, 1875, returned to this country and located in Fresno county, near Kingsburg. There he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land and engaged in the raising of cattle and general farming. In 1885 he sold that place and located on the ranch that has since been his home, which consists of five hundred acres, two miles south of Conejo. It is one of the best farms in the valley and here he conducts a very successful stock and dairy business, having about one hundred milch cows.

Mr. Minghetti was united in marriage with Catherine Kelley, a native of Ireland. Both are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Minghetti is a Republican in politics. He has never cared for political honors, preferring to devote his whole time to the building up of his business, a policy which has proven successful, as today he is one of the leading agriculturists of Fresno county and an influential citizen. Starting in life without a dollar, he has labored hard to accumulate a competency and that he has accomplished his aims reflects much credit upon his industry and ability. Both he and his estimable wife are popular with a large circle of friends and are welcome visitors in the homes of the leading people of the county.

CHARLES W. MUSICK is the secretary of the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, one of the most extensive industrial interests of this section. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Yolo county, May 8, 1863. His father, James J. Musick, was born in Missouri and reared to young manhood on a farm. In 1849 he became a victim to the gold fever and crossed the plains to California, where he engaged in mining on Feather and Yuba rivers. Later he sought the less uncertain fortunes of a farmer, locating in Yolo county and later in Napa county. In 1881 he came to Fresno county and began the manufacture of lumber, locating and purchasing timber lands on Pine Ridge, which he continued to purchase until he owned about two thousand five hundred acres. He built a mill on this tract on what is known as Musick Meadows, under the firm name of J. J. Musick & Sons. Their mills were operated by steam and with a capacity of twenty-five thousand feet per day. He conducted the business successfully until his death, which occurred in 1891. He was a man of strong convictions, a Methodist in religion and a Republican in politics. His wife, formerly Mary W. Gardner, was a native of Arkansas, who came to California in the early '50s. She survives her husband and makes her home in Pasadena, Los Angeles county, Cal. They became the parents of six children, of whom three sons and two daughters are living. One son, H. L., a resident of Pasadena, is also interested in the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company.

Next to the oldest of the living children of his parents, Charles W. Musick was reared on his father's farm in Yolo and Napa counties, receiving his education in the public schools. He located with his parents in Fresno in 1881, after which he took a commercial course in the Stockton Business College, from which institution he was graduated in 1888. In that year he assumed active management of the J. J. Musick & Sons lumber concern. Upon the death of his father in 1891 the firm became known as Musick Brothers. The business was successfully conducted until 1893, when the mill was burned down. They did not rebuild, as they had already become interested in the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, and had assisted in the organization of the old Pine Ridge Flume and Irrigation Company, which was later absorbed by the former company. In 1894 he began giving his attention to the business in Fresno and in 1898 he succeeded his brother (who resigned in that year), to the office of secretary and director, which he has since held. (For more complete details concerning the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, refer to the sketch of Charles B. Shaver, which appears elsewhere in this volume.)

In Amador county, Cal., Mr. Musick was united in marriage with Eva M. Marchand, a native of Oakland. Fraternally he is identified with the Native Sons of the Golden West, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is active in all movements pertaining to the development of the city, county or state.

CAMILLA RANCH. Orange growing in California is perhaps the most profitable of all the outdoor pursuits that have made the Golden State so attractive to the homeseeker; certainly it is the most alluring. There is a nameless something about an orange grove that appeals to the man from the east, satisfying to the full the longing that fills his heart when his mind's eye draws its picture of California. The orange grove is not the alpha and omega of California attractions by any means; nevertheless it is the first thing the man from east of the Rockies hopes to see.

"But how can I get an orange grove unless I go to California," is the plaint of one man. Another says, "I want an orange grove, but I cannot leave here now, and I want it ready to support me when I get there. What am I to do?" The Camilla Ranch Company answers both these questions. In fact the Camilla Ranch Company came into existence for the exact purpose of meeting these and other "long-felt wants" of the orange industry. And it was in response to the scores of letters in this vein from eastern friends that the Camilla Ranch Company evolved its unique proposition.

Briefly, the Camilla people have put forth a proposition something like an interchangeable mileage book. It is good for land or it is good for dividends. If you cannot look after your land now, draw dividends on your investment. When you are ready for your land, hand in your stock, get your deed and the land is yours. Simple, isn't it? And you can do this when you want to, in a month, a year, two years or five years. When you want to, not when somebody else wants you to. No restrictions. It is all at your option. When you get your deed the land is absolutely yours—no strings tied to it.

The Camilla Ranch Company is the absolute owner of one hundred and ninety-five acres of the choicest and most fertile orange land in Tulare county, the banner orange growing district of the state. The property is fully equipped in every way, with its own wells and pumping plant, houses, barns, live stock and implements, and is today a paying property. Its earnings for 1905 will approximate $25,000, which would pay the handsome dividend of sixteen and two-thirds per cent. on $150,000. The property is situated at Lindsay, in the heart of the Tulare orange district. There is no finer nor more productive orange property in all of California.

Nine years ago one hundred and twenty acres of this property were planted to navel and Valencia oranges and the condition of this fine grove today is sufficient evidence of the care and good management it has had. It is well known as one of the best and most productive groves of that region of splendid orange properties.

The property has three fine wells from which water for irrigation is pumped by electric power. By means of large underground pipes the water is conducted to the various parts of the ranch as required. The efficiency of the Camilla irrigation system is well known to everyone in the Lindsay district. This irrigation system will at once be incorporated and stock issued, free of charge, to the purchasers of Camilla orange land, in the ratio of one share to every acre. The owner of a Camilla orange grove is thus assured of all the water required for his trees, at a minimum expense.

The Lindsay district's greatest advantage in the growing of oranges lies in the early ripening of all citrus fruits, due to the higher elevation and extreme dryness of the climate. The rich, sedimentary soil, which requires no fertilization, also plays its part in bringing the Lindsay orange to the perfection which distinguishes it. The navel orange in the Lindsay district is ready for the market early in November, six weeks ahead of the southern fruit.

The Lindsay oranges, navels and Valencias, will average a net profit to the grower of not less than $1 per box in the packing house, and often far more. In order to be conservative, we estimate the yield for Camilla ranch at only two and one-half boxes to the tree for navel and four boxes for Valencia oranges, and for the other forty-seven acres at one box per tree. We estimate the net price in the packing house at only $1 per box, though such a low price, with one exception, has not been known in the history of Lindsay.

Thus we have for Camilla Ranch 8,800 navels, 22,000 boxes, $22,000; 4,400 Valencias, 17,600 boxes, $17,600; and for the other forty-seven acres planted later, 5,500 trees, 5,500 boxes, $5,500. Total gross profits, $45,100. From this deduct cost of working ranch as above, $6,800; net returns, $38,300.

The yield of fruit, and consequently the profits, will continue to increase for the next ten years or more.

COLUMBUS WATSON ELLIOTT. Very early in the history of the United States Andrew Elliott came to this country from Scotland and settled in Maine, where he built and operated a grist and saw mill at New Portland, remaining in the same town as long as he lived. He was a man of sturdy principles, irreproachable character and a devoted member of the Baptist Church. After his death the mill was managed by his son, Robert, who was born in New Portland and continued there until his death. Afterward the old mill descended to the hands of his son James, who like himself had been born and reared in New Portland, and this third owner of the mill not only superintended its management, but also followed the millwright's trade and built mills in different parts of Maine. After retiring from business affairs he turned the mill over to the charge of his son-in-law, D. Butler, and it still remains in the family. In religious belief James Elliott was a Universalist. At the time of his death he was seventy-four years of age. By his marriage to Rebecca Kasley, who was born in Maine and died there at the age of seventy, he had three children, of whom Columbus Watson was second in order of birth, and he and a sister are the only survivors. He was born at the old home place in New Portland, Me., June 17, 1841, and received a common-school education in the town, after which he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade.

On leaving home in 1867 Mr. Elliott went to Minnesota, where he engaged in the building business at Lakeland, Washington county. From there he came to California in 1873 and endeavored to secure work in San Diego, but the building business was dull, so he sought other employment. Going thirty-two miles east of that city he began to farm a raw tract of land, but at the end of a year he had nothing but debts to show for all his hard work, so he decided it would be wise to seek another location. Packing his blankets, he proceeded to the Julian mines, where he worked for two years. With the money thus secured he returned to his ranch and remained there three years, paying off all of his indebtedness by 1879. During that year he came to Tulare county and settled at Cross Creek, where he followed the carpenter's trade. In 1880 he bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land at $5 an acre and two years later settled on the tract, at once beginning the improvement of the wild land. Not a tree was in sight and no buildings had been erected, but it was not many years before the place had taken on a homelike appearance under his capable oversight and constant care. For three years he gave his attention entirely to raising wheat, but since then he has raised other kinds of grain and has also made a specialty of the stock business. A small part of the land has been sold, but he still owns one hundred and forty acres, situated six miles southwest of Dinuba and four and one-half miles north of Traver.

The marriage of Mr. Elliott was solemnized at the Snedeker home near Smith Mountain, Fresno county, and united him with Laura Snedeker, who was born in New Orleans, La., of German descent, came to California in 1873, and died in Tulare county on the home farm, February 22, 1904, leaving to mourn her loss Mr. Elliott and their four children, Amy, Etta, Claudia and Ira. Among the people of his community Mr. Elliott is highly esteemed for his qualities of mind and heart that have contributed to his success and have made him a progressive and public-spirited citizen. Though not active in politics, he has been a pronounced Republican ever since attaining his majority, and in 1894 he was his party's candidate for county supervisor, but, not desiring the office, he refused to enter into the work of the campaign, yet, notwithstanding his indifference, he lost only by two votes against two opponents, a fact which proves his popularity among associates and acquaintances.

A. H. GREELEY. A native son of California, Mr. Greeley was born in Dutch Flat, Placer county, October 7, 1865, a son of J. F. Greeley, whose sketch appears on another page of this work. A. H. Greeley was reared in Truckee until reaching his fifteenth year, attending the public schools of that place. In 1881 he came to Fresno and secured a position as clerk in a store, in this way working his way through the public schools. In 1885 he entered the State Agricultural College at Manhattan, Kans., where he remained for four years. On returning to California he resumed clerking, but soon after, in company with Herbert Bishop, started a grocery store in Fresno under the firm name of Bishop & Greeley. Later he sold out and entered the employ of F. J. Burleigh as a bookkeeper, continuing at this for eight years. At the expiration of this time, in 1901, Mr. Greeley established himself in the grain business. Since then he has gradually enlarged his business until now he is one of the leading wholesale commission dealers in Fresno, dealing in dried fruit, raisins, grain, live stock, nuts, beans, onions, potatoes, etc. At Clovis he has erected a large and well-equipped packing house, while his office and salesrooms are located at No. 1925 Tulare street, Fresno.

In Oakland, Mr. Greeley was united in marriage with Miss Ella Brownell, who was born at "The Oakes," near Stockton, a daughter of Russell G. Brownell, who is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and one of the pioneer settlers of California. To Mr. and Mrs. Greeley have been born three children: Albertha, Edna and Margaret.

Fraternally, Mr. Greeley is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. In politics he follows in the footsteps of his father, being an ardent supporter of the men and measures of the Republican party. He has been prominent in the affairs of the county, at one time was a candidate for the office of county tax collector, but was defeated by but two hundred and seventy votes. This was considered a remarkable record, as the county is strongly Democratic.

Mr. Greeley has made his own way in the world since reaching young manhood. He worked his way through school, but has never regretted the time and money spent in securing an education. Today he is looked upon as one of the leading young men of the county, but while he has been very busy looking after his own affairs he has never neglected his duties as a citizen.

LEWIS N. LAIRD. A native of Illinois, Mr. Laird was born in Jefferson county, near the town of Mount Vernon, October 25, 1849. His father, Joseph Laird, migrated from his native state, Kentucky, to Illinois in 1816. Locating in Jefferson county he engaged in farming and also taught school several terms. After several years he removed to Kansas, but soon returned to Jefferson county, where he continued farming and where his death occurred at the age of fifty-one years in 1860. He married Emma Allen, a native of Kentucky, who died in Illinois in 1880. Eight children were born of this union, Lewis N. being the youngest boy and the fourth child. As soon as old enough he assisted his father in the work of the farm, his education being limited to attendance at the district school during the winter months. In those days the youth's training was more in the line of hard work than in study, but Mr. Laird, in latter years has read extensively and is now a well-posted man. After the death of his father he engaged in farming near Ashley, Ill., where he remained until 1882, the year of his arrival in California. Locating on his present place he purchased eighty acres of land which adjoins the town of Parlier. The entire tract is highly improved, twenty acres being devoted to a vineyard, fifteen acres to trees, and the balance to alfalfa and general farming.

While still a resident of Illinois he was united in marriage with Miss Pocahontas Glazbrook, who was born in Tennessee April 21, 1858. To Mr. and Mrs. Laird have been born seven children, namely: Nora, now Mrs. J. R. Baird; Andrew; Annie, who is attending the State Normal school at San Jose; Mary, a student in the high school in Reedley; Orlie, Bessie and Edgar, all at home.

Mr. Laird and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he being one of the trustees. In politics he has always been a Republican, but has never cared to take an active part in public affairs. Starting out in life without money, Mr. Laird has been successful, and now that he has reached old age he and his wife are enjoying the results of his hard labor. Both are very popular and have hosts of friends.

LOUIS WEGNER. Merced has no more earnest or practical advocate of progress than is found in its popular and successful builder and contractor, Louis Wegner. This typical German-American, who, since 1902, has been a helpful and influential member of the board of trustees of Merced, is a native of Preetz, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, where he was born October 29, 1859, next to the youngest in a family of seven children, four of whom are living. Of these, two sons and one daughter are in America, William being a carpenter in the employ of his brother Louis. For generations Schleswig-Holstein has been the home of this family, and on one of its fertile farms the paternal grandfather was born and passed his entire life, the same region being the birthplace also of John Wegner, the father of Louis, who left the farm and engaged in the carpenter and builder trade at Kiel. He was an energetic and resourceful man, worked up a large trade, and was well known for his thrift and ingenuity as a workman. In early life he married Margaret Tiedemann, who was born in Hanover, and after whose death at an advanced age, he retired from active duties, his last years being spent with his son in Merced, Cal., where his death occurred at the age of seventy-six years.

Louis Wegner lived in Preetz until 1860, and then removed to Kiel, where he attended the public schools and graduated from the high-school. At the age of sixteen he apprenticed to his father as a carpenter, and further qualified for his life work by taking a course at the architectural school at Eckerförde, from which he was duly graduated at the expiration of three years of steady application. The following year, in 1879, he entered the army, becoming a soldier in Company 3, Thirty-first German Infantry, later being transferred to One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry, in the latter serving as drum major, and attaining the rank of sergeant. Receiving his honorable discharge after three years of military service, in 1882, he came to New York in September, and thence to California, where he joined his brother in carpenter work in Merced.

Possessing the grit and determination of his race, and realizing the opportunities by which he was surrounded, Mr. Wegner soon made his influence felt, not only as a builder, but as a promoter of general improvements. From carpenter work he advanced to contracting and building, an occupation which he has followed uninterruptedly in Merced and vicinity since 1884. Many of the best residences and public buildings in the town and county are due to his combined effort as architect and builder. He drew the plans for the Wolfson house, erected the Gillett, James King, George Koehler, and other residences, the Kochler home being one of the finest in Merced county. Dixon's drug store was both designed and built by him as was also his own commodious and modern residence at No. 619 Twenty-third street.

Before leaving Kiel Mr. Wegner was united in marriage with Benedicta Nicholzen, a native also of Schleswig-Holstein, and who died in Merced. His second marriage was celebrated May 11, 1896, his wife being Hedwig Wallenfels, a native of San Francisco, and daughter of Frederick Wallenfels, who was born in Frankfort, Germany. Mr. Wallenfels lived four years in New York after immigrating to America, and in 1873 came to San Francisco, where he engaged in the insurance business for the balance of his life. His wife was formerly Francisca Greenthaler, who at present lives in Mill Valley, and who is the mother of two children, the youngest of whom, Blanche, is the wife of Rheinhold Koehler of Merced. For years Mr. Wegner has taken an active interest in Democratic politics, although he entertains exceedingly liberal views regarding local political undertakings. He was a member of the county central committee, and in 1902 was elected a member of the board of trustees of Merced, and chairman of the street committee. During his term of service marked improvements have been noted, including better kept sidewalks and the laying of cement walks. He insists upon cleanliness in the streets and alleys, and of innovations of a substantial and lasting nature. Mr. Wegner is a firm believer in the benefits of municipal ownership, and is working hard to secure city possession of the waterworks and electric lighting plant. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Merced, of which he is past grand, the encampment of which he has been chief patriarch for three terms; the Woodmen of the World; and the Druids, of which he is a past officer. In religion, as on other subjects interesting the human race, he is broad and tolerant. Mr. Wegner is deservedly popular with his business, social and political associates, and is regarded as a man of high ideals. He is genial and approachable, generous in his contributions to causes meriting his assistance, and considerate and thoughtful of the men who are in his employ.

ANTONE CHARLES PALLADINE. A native of sunny Italy, Mr. Palladine was born in that far away country July 25, 1854, a son of Caesar and Maria Louisa (Falvella) Palladine. The father was born in France and was a colonel in the French army. After resigning his commission he removed to Italy, where he married and where he resided until his death, at the age of seventy-eight years. He became a very wealthy, influential man, and made his home near the city of Rome. His wife was born in Italy, and there her death occurred. She became the mother of nine children.

A. C. Palladine was educated in his native country by the Jesuit fathers and was graduated as a civil engineer. Coming to the United States in 1885 he first located in San Jose, Cal., where he was engaged in wine manufacturing for ten years, conducting the Pacific Wine Company. Later he was employed by C. Carpy & Co., until 1893, when he joined an Italian colony and located in Madera, where he acted as manager of the winery and vineyards, the latter comprising one thousand five hundred acres. In 1902 he came to Kingsburg, where he has since made his home. For a time after locating here he acted as manager of the winery of the Italian-Swiss Colony.

While living in San Jose Mr. Palladine was united in marriage with Kate Eagan, a native of county Clare, Ireland, and a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Casey) Eagan. Mrs. Palladine came to California with an aunt. To this union have been born four children, Chester, Ben, Katie and Walter, all living at home.

Mr. Palladine is quite prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masons, having joined the order in Rome, where he also attained to the Scottish Rite degree. He is also a member of San Jose Lodge No. 242, I. O. O. F., the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Foresters. In politics he is independent, voting for the candidate who, in his opinion, is best qualified for the office. Since coming to Fresno county he has met with splendid success, taking advantage of opportunities as they presented themselves. Both he and his estimable wife are highly respected and have a large circle of friends.

WILBUR F. CHANDLER. For fifteen years a resident of Fresno county, Wilbur F. Chandler has become known as one of the successful men of this section, and one whose efforts have been given toward the upbuilding and promotion of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. He was born in De Witt county, Ill., in 1855, and is descended on the paternal side from one of three brothers who left Wales at an early date for a home in America, settling in Massachusetts. He is a son of Hiram and Rachel (Manlove) Chandler, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of Ohio. In 1852 his father removed to De Witt county, Ill., where he followed farming until his death. His wife also died in that locality. In the common schools of that county Wilbur F. Chandler received his mental training, and at the same time was instructed in the practical duties which fell to his lot as the son of a farmer. He remained at home until 1889, when he came to California as he was a firm believer in the advantages of the west over the east, especially to the young men of ambitious temperament.

Locating at once in Fresno county, Mr. Chandler purchased one half section of land three miles north of Selma, and his interests have since been centered in this locality. Planting two hundred and fifty acres of this tract in vines, he subsequently sold all but about one hundred and fifty acres, and of this only a small portion is reserved for orchards for family use, the remainder being one extensive vineyard of the Muscat or raisin grape. That this venture proved a success is demonstrated by the following figures: In the year 1902 the first crop consisted of one hundred and eighty tons and when sold averaged $71 per ton; the second crop yielded sixty-four tons and averaged $65 per ton. After deducting the cost of raising, this leaves a good profit, fully justifying all expenditures. In 1898 Mr. Chandler purchased a half interest in the Home Oil Company, which at the time of its incorporation had a capital stock of $100,000, worth $100 per share. After being connected with the company for several years he disposed of his holdings and turned his attention to the Kern Oil Company, of which he is president. This company operates along the Kern river, where it owns four hundred and eighty acres of land. The company was incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000, each share worth $1, but the value has now increased to $5. In addition to his connection with the above company Mr. Chandler is a director of the Associated Oil Company of San Francisco, which conducts operations in Kern and other counties and was formed by the consolidation of a number of minor companies. This company was incorporated in January, 1902, with a capital stock of $40,000,000, shares valued at $1 each, and at the present time $18,000,000 worth of stock has been issued, showing the demand for shares to be unusually large. The output of oil is four hundred and ninety thousand barrels per month, or over one hundred car loads per day. Mr. Chandler also owns a two-thirds interest in the Pittsburg Oil Company, which has one thousand acres in Kern county, and aside from his interest in these oil fields he is identified with the Farmers' National Bank of Selma, of which he is a director.

Mr. Chandler was united in marriage in Illinois with Edna M. Goble, a native of that state. Several children, all sons, blessed this union, and five are living. They are named as follows: Howard H.; Chester W., who died at the age of ten years; Clayton I.; Ray L.; Roscoe; and Charles. One, the fourth child, died in infancy. Politically a Republican and one of the most active men in his party in this locality, Mr. Chandler was their choice for assemblyman in 1900, serving one term, at the end of which time, in 1904, his re-election followed. He is particularly active in educational work, having served twenty-three years as a trustee, a greater part of this time as clerk of the board.

W. D. COATES, as manager of the Sperry Flour Company, is demonstrating his ability as a business man, his keen and far-sighted judgment resulting in a success for the company and a personal success, which places him among the representative men of this section. He was born at Peru, La Salle county, Ill., November 1, 1848, a son of John Coates, of Norristown, Montgomery county, Pa. The elder man, before the Black Hawk war, located in La Salle county, Ill., and engaged as a grain merchant, having a large warehouse located on the Illinois River. It was a receiving point for wheat up to the time of the railroads, and he carried on an extensive business for many years. His death occurred in that location in 1863. He was prominent in all local affairs, taking part in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. He served in the Black Hawk war, which occurred after his location in Illinois. His wife was a descendant of the Russell and Bull families of New England. Their only son was W. D. Coates, who, at the age of twelve years, enlisted in the navy and served under Commodore W. D. Porter on the gunboat Essex, being located for five months, in 1862, in the Mississippi River. He received his education in the high school at Peru, and on attaining manhood went south and assumed the managership of an ice company, with headquarters at Memphis, Tenn. He came to California in 1875 and located in San Francisco, where he remained for fourteen years. He then came to Fresno and was identified with the Fresno Milling Company as bookkeeper, this company afterward being absorbed by the Sperry Flour Company. Mr. Coates became manager of the latter, and has since conducted its affairs with profit. The mill at Fresno is new and modern in every way, being the first mill in California operated by electricity; it has a capacity of five hundred barrels per day, employs a large force and adds greatly to the industrial life of the community.

In Memphis, Tenn., Mr. Coates was united in marriage with Kate Dixon, a native of Jackson, Miss., and they are the parents of four children, namely: Frank, a traveling salesman, located in Portland, Ore.; Lee, associated with the Roeding Fig Company, of Fresno; William D., Jr., attending the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia; and John, at home. The family are members of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Coates is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and socially is identified with the Sequoia Club.

DAVID COWAN SAMPLE. The success achieved by David Cowan Sample has been the result entirely of his own efforts, for he came to California with nothing but courage, energy and ability as a foundation for the competence he hoped to win. Beginning at the bottom of the ladder he has not only acquired wealth in the shape of real estate, grain lands, stock, etc., but is honored and esteemed as one of the first citizens of Fresno county—liberal, public-spirited and enterprising, and one who is always eager to give his best efforts toward the upbuilding and progress of his adopted state. Born in Lexington, Miss., February 12, 1849, he is a son of Isaac Sample, a native of South Carolina, and the descendant of an old Scotch family. The latter removed to Lexington, Miss., where he engaged in farming until his death when his son was a child. His wife, formerly Mary H. Dulany, of North Carolina, was a daughter of Daniel Dulany, of the same state, who served in the war of 1812 as a colonel. He was a large landowner in Mississippi, where his death occurred. Mrs. Sample also died in Mississippi, leaving a family of three sons and one daughter, of whom David Cowan was the youngest.

His father's plantation, the "Cypress," was about nine miles from Lexington, and there David Cowan Sample was reared to young manhood. He received his education in the private schools of Lexington. At the age of fifteen years he left school and home and joined the Confederate army as a scout under General Forest, furnishing his own horse, and serving until the close of the war. The home plantation was devastated, the slaves and stock gone, and farming implements destroyed, so Mr. Sample found employment as a clerk. After one year he once more entered a private school in Lexington, where he remained for a like period, when he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, in company with Major and Mrs. Thomas P. Nelson. He went to Dry creek, where he worked for wages for two years, when he went into the sheep business for himself. He met with success and began at once the purchase of lands, now owning eighteen sections of land, on the plains and foothills, farming land on Dry creek, and stock ranches on Sails and Holland creeks. He farms about three thousand acres of grain land, and in the Holland creek country has some small lemon and orange groves, the land being peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of oranges. The land is of such quality that tomato vines grow all the year round. He is also largely interested in stock raising, dealing in Shorthorns, Durhams, and full-blooded and high-grade stock. His range is all under fence and is modern and improved in every way, his home being located on Dry creek, nineteen miles northeast of Fresno. In the meantime he became interested in property in Fresno and is still identified with many business enterprises of this city. He is president of the Carl & Sample Carriage Company, the most extensive and modern enterprise of its kind in the San Joaquin valley. In January, 1904, he was one of the organizers of the Fresno Meat Company, of which he is acting as president, and manager. The packing house, which was built two miles west of Fresno, was consumed by fire in January, 1905, but they are now rebuilding the plant, which is the most extensive business in the valley. The offices of the company are located in the Barton Opera House, at the corner of Fresno and J streets, where they carry on a large wholesale and retail business. He was also an organizer of the Tahipathy Power Company, of which he is acting as president. This is established in Blue Canon, on the middle fork of Kings river, where the company expect to erect a modern power plant to distribute power throughout the San Joaquin valley. There is a fall of thirty-three hundred and sixty feet in a twenty-three-foot stream at lowest water. This is the most extensive water proposition in the country and bids fair to be a revolutionary force in the San Joaquin valley. He was also one of the originators and organizers of the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company, and put the first money into the proposition. They at once began surveys, but on the eve of construction the panic of 1880 induced them to dispose of their plans. The project was afterward completed and is a great credit to the county.

In Millerton, Cal., Mr. Sample was united in marriage with Sallie Cole, who was born in Solano county, Cal., the daughter of William T. Cole. He was a native of Missouri who crossed the plains in 1849 and became a pioneer of the San Joaquin valley, now making his home on Dry creek. Mr. and Mrs. Sample became the parents of eleven children, namely: William C.; Maude, the wife of John Shipp, of Fresno county; Thomas N., who graduated from Cooper Medical College in 1901, is practicing medicine in Fresno and is now county physician; Mary, the wife of J. A. Blassingame, of Fresno county; Annie; Estelle; David C., Jr.; Sallie; Fillmore; Ruth; and Harry, all but the first four named being residents of their parents' home. Mrs. Sample is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Sample affiliates with Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and has served as a member of the county central committee. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is active in all movements which have for their end the advancement of the community.

GEORGE M. KOHLER occupies a prominent place among the enterprising business men of Fresno. The sterling qualities of his citizenship and the character of his ability are an inheritance from Danish ancestors, his birth having occurred in Denmark in 1844. He made that country his home until he was eighteen years old, when he came to America and located in California. He became a farmer near Borden, Madera county, where he remained for some time, then removed to Fresno and engaged in the butcher business. He was the pioneer in this work and met with gratifying success. Eventually he went into the hotel business and opened the Kohler House on I street, which he conducted for five years. Disposing of these interests he lived retired for several years, when he engaged in a restaurant on the same street, establishing what is now known as the City Bakery and Restaurant, and with the profits of a few years he and his wife built the Kohler apartment house. This was an innovation in Fresno and for a time was known as Kohler's white elephant, but it very shortly proved a success, as did also the flat building which they put up—the first of the kind in the city of Fresno. At the time of the laundry strike in 1901 Mrs. Kohler, with keen business judgment and discernment, saw an opportunity which she at once took advantage of, by fitting up the Kohler Laundry, which has grown to its present proportions under her splendid management. It is modern in all its appointments, operated with steam and equipped with the most modern machinery. It has its own pumping plant and soap works, and is now the largest enterprise of its kind in the San Joaquin valley, giving employment to fifty hands. The entire corner of K and Merced streets has been built up by Mr. Kohler and his wife—nearly six lots, covering an area of 150x250 feet. They have been most important factors in the upbuilding and progress of Fresno, and both rank among the representative business citizens.

Mrs. Kohler was formerly Lottie A. Pickford, a native of Taunton, Mass. Her father, Oliver Pickford, of Manchester, England, located in Massachusetts and in Taunton operated a stationary engine. Later he removed to Trempealeau county, Wis., where he followed the same occupation combined with farming. During the Civil war he volunteered in a Wisconsin regiment but was rejected. In 1875 he came to California and located in San Luis Obispo county, where he followed his work of engineer, and eight years later (in 1883), located in Fresno and following the same occupation until his retirement, being now seventy-six years old. His wife, formerly Mary Ann Hooley, also a native of Manchester, England, is the granddaughter of John Aslem, the inventor of calico printing. (Aslem street, in Nashville, Tenn., is named for the family.) Mrs. Pickford is still living at the age of seventy-seven years. They became the parents of three daughters and five sons, of whom Mrs. Kohler was the eldest. She spent her childhood days in Wisconsin, attending the public schools of that place, and in 1875 came with her parents to California and passed several years in San Luis Obispo county. In 1883 she came to Fresno and the same year became the wife of George M. Kohler. She has proven a worthy helpmeet and has given to their combined success the ability, energy and enterprise which are hers by inheritance and training.

Both Mr. Kohler and his wife are prominent in the fraternal circles of the city. Mr. Kohler being a member of the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, United Artisans, Danish Brotherhood and Knights of the Maccabees. Mrs. Kohler is a member of the Ladies of the Maccabees, Women of Woodcraft, United Artisans and Fraternal Brotherhood. Both belong to the Episcopal Church, and politically are true-blue Republicans. Mr. Kohler is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is active in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. The comforts and benefits of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kohler have been given to three orphan girls, who have been reared to womanhood as members of the household, and who are now married and well settled in life.

WILLIAM M. AMER. On the organization of Madera county and at the first election held therein, May, 1893, Mr. Amer was elected on the independent ticket to the office of county treasurer, receiving a plurality of seventy-eight votes over three opponents. On the 28th of the same month he took the oath of office and entered upon its duties. At the regular election in 1894 he was elected by a majority of two hundred and fifty-three. Four years later, on the expiration of his first regular term, he was re-elected by a majority of three hundred and seventy-four. A further evidence of his popularity as an official is shown by the fact that in 1902, at the close of his second regular term and his election for a third term, he received a still larger vote, having a majority of about five hundred. At the last two conventions of the Democratic party in Madera county he was nominated without opposition. When his present term expires, in January, 1907, he will have served for a period of almost fourteen years. When he first became county treasurer the office was located in a business block, but later was removed to the old Russ house, and in January, 1902, was transferred to the new court-house.

The Amer family is of English extraction. Richard Amer, son of William Amer, was born in Herefordshire, England, and grew to manhood upon his father's farm. Seeking a home amid the newer scenes and greater opportunities of the United States, he crossed the ocean and settled in the then frontier regions of Pottawattamie county, Iowa. In those days Omaha had not been founded and Council Bluffs, now the county-seat of Pottawattamie county, was an insignificant hamlet. With his wife, who was Fannie Sellwood, a native of England, in 1852 he started across the plains, and while on the plains, in the then territory of Colorado, their son, William M., was born, August 25 of that year. The family remained in Colorado for a time, and in 1858 removed to Utah, where the mother died. In 1860 the other members of the family came to California and settled in Stockton, where the father engaged in freighting until his death in 1873. Of his five children three are living: John, a farmer near Oakdale; William M., of this review; and Sarah, wife of S. B. Robinson, near Ferndale, Humboldt county, this state.

From the age of almost eight years William M. Amer was reared in Stockton. As a boy he was obliged to earn his own livelihood. He had neither prestige nor influence to aid him in getting a start. Eagerly accepting any work that offered living wages, he endured many hardships and faced many discouragements in his early days. Little by little he worked his way toward independence. For a time he engaged in farming near Roberts Ferry in Stanislaus county. In 1886 he came to what was then Fresno (now Madera) county and after working on the Adobe ranch for two years he was chosen manager for the company that owned the property. The Adobe estate comprised more than twenty-two thousand acres and its management entailed many responsibilities. After two years as superintendent, Mr. Amer removed to Fresno Flats and engaged in raising stock for a year. From there he removed to Madera and resumed farming. During 1890, while engaged in field work, he lost his left hand in a harvestér, but continued farming for three years more, notwithstanding his loss.

In Modesto, Stanislaus county, in 1876, Mr. Amer married Catherine Garner, who was born in Illinois and in 1859 accompanied her parents to California. To their union six children have been born, namely: George, who is a farmer in Madera county; Burt, who acts as deputy county treasurer; Myrtle, Elmer, Millic and Katie. The fraternal organizations to which Mr. Amer belongs are as follows: Fraternal Brotherhood; Woodmen of the World, in which he has held official positions; Lodge and Encampment of Odd Fellows, also the Grand Lodge of the same body, and he is past grand of the Madera Lodge.

WALTER SCOTT SMITH. Untiring in his efforts, Walter Scott Smith has proved himself an efficient city official, under whose superintendency there has been a great advancement and improvement in the streets of Fresno. He is a native of Benton county, Mo., where his birth occurred January 23, 1870. He is the descendant of an old Virginia family, his grandfather, a native of that state, being a physician and surgeon in the army. He practiced medicine in Tennessee and in Benton county, Mo. In his family of children was a son, G. C. Smith, who was born in Tennessee and accompanied his parents to Benton county, Mo., in which state he followed farming for a means of livelihood, later locating in Hickory county, where he now makes his home. His wife, formerly Mary Frances Davis, is a native of Benton county, Mo. Her father, Stephen Hamilton Davis, was an extensive farmer in Missouri, from which state he emigrated to California in the '60s. He located in Mariposa county as a miner, but later returned to Missouri, his death occurring in Benton county. Mr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of five sons and two daughters, one son, E. R., being a contractor and builder, and at the present time is engaged in the construction of the new pumping station for the Standard Oil Company between Bakersfield and Point Richmond. Another son, Stephen H., is a foreman in the employ of E. R. Smith. Walter Scott Smith is the fourth son and the fourth child, and was reared in Benton county until attaining the age of seventeen years, attending the district school. He also attended the schools of Kansas City for a time, and in 1891 came to California and located in Fresno, and entered the employ of his brother, E. R. Smith, working at the carpenter's trade for about two years, when he entered the police department, where he remained for several years. On November 6, 1902, he was appointed superintendent of streets of Fresno, since which time he has held the office, and under his management a marked improvement has taken place, new cement sidewalks being laid all over the city, also asphalt pavement, etc. Mr. Smith is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is active in all movements pertaining to the advancement and upbuilding of the city. Fraternally, he is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Fresno, and Modern Woodmen of America. Politically, he is a Democrat.

CAPT. WILLIAM WALLACE MACHEN.

A man of strong personality, William Wallace Machen holds a prominent place among the representative citizens of Fresno, where he has made his home for nearly twenty years. He is a native of Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, where he was born February 17, 1836, the second in a family of seven children, of whom six are living, he being the only one on the Pacific coast. His father, W. W. Machen, was a manufacturer of cotton and linen goods in Barnsley, as was also his grandfather. The former brought his family to America in 1845 and located in Milwaukee, Wis., where a landing was effected by small boats at what was known as Walker's Point, no pier having yet been made. He was one of the first settlers of Black Earth, Wis., which was peopled by a colony from England. He remained in that location for about a year, when he removed to Janesville, Wis., at that time a crossroads, where he bought and sold lands. Removing to Dunkirk, Dane county, Wis., he farmed for twenty years, and upon his retirement from active duties located in Dallas county, Iowa, where his death occurred at the age of eighty-four years. His wife, formerly Ann Hoag, was also a native of England, and died in Iowa at the age of sixty-six years. Two sons fought in the Civil war, Charles F. serving in the Thirty-second Wisconsin Regiment, and being accidentally killed at Waupun, Wis. William Wallace Machen was also in the army, answering the first call in April, 1861. As the quota was full he enlisted in Company D, Seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in August 10 of that year. His regiment was sent to Washington, where they camped a quarter of a mile east of the Capitol building, thence they were sent to Chain Bridge and to Arlington Heights, on Robert E. Lee's plantation. In the beginning of 1862 they participated in the second battle of Bull Run, at Antietam, South Mountain, the Wilderness, and at Gettysburg, where his brigade opened the battle. His regiment continued in active duty to Appomattox and the surrender of Lee's army. Mr. Machen was wounded three times, first at the battle of Gaines Mill, the first day of the battle of the Wilderness and at Cold Harbor, all flesh wounds received in the neck, hip and foot. He participated in the Grand Review at Washington as aide to Gen. Henry A. Morrow. From the ranks Mr. Machen was promoted to the position of captain of his company, which was mustered out of service July 14, 1865, of the original one hundred and sixty-eight who enlisted only fourteen remaining.

Upon the close of the war Capt. William W. Machen returned to Dane county to take up again the peaceful pursuits interrupted by civil strife. He had made his home in Wisconsin from the age of nine years, receiving his education in the primitive schools of the time (where the desks were puncheon slabs laid on pins put in the walls, puncheon seats, etc.), and in young manhood followed the training given by his father as a farmer. He engaged in agricultural pursuits near Dunkirk until 1868, when he removed to Dallas county, Iowa, where he bought new land, improving a farm of three hundred and twenty acres. He became prominent in public affairs in the county, filling the offices of county commissioner and county recorder, the latter for a term of four years. Deciding to locate in the more remote west, he came to California in 1886 and began farming thirty-five hundred acres of land, which now adjoins the city limits of Fresno. He continued in that occupation for thirteen years, conducting as many as six ten-horse teams with combined harvesters, averaging ten acres to the team. His departure from agricultural pursuits was through his nomination in 1892 on the Republican ticket as county recorder. He was defeated by eight votes in favor of the Fusion candidate. Two years later he was re-nominated and elected over the Fusion candidate by a majority of three hundred and fifty-six votes. In January, 1895, he took the oath of office and continued to discharge the duties efficiently until 1899. Since that time he has engaged in the oil business, in 1898 organizing the Commercial Oil Company with himself as president. They located oil lands in Coalingo, where they put down two wells that were failures. They then leased a piece of railroad land where they put down eight wells, all of which are producers, they being the first to get a flowing well in section 31. They have since operated in this field and have made a gratifying success of the enterprise. In 1904 Mr. Machen resigned from the office of president, as he did not care to spend so large a portion of his time away from his home, and sold his holdings to the Associated Oil Company. He also organized a company in Bakersfield, in 1899, known as the Comet Oil Company, with himself as president, and they operated on sections 4 and 28, putting down eight wells, all of which are producers. This company has since also become a part of the Associated Oil Company. Mr. Machen owns a one-third interest in sixty acres adjoining the lands leased by the Commercial Oil Company and in Fresno owns a handsome residence at No. 103 Glenn street.

In Dane county, Wis., October 2, 1865, Mr. Machen was united in marriage with Sarah L. Bishop, a native of Cayuga county, N. Y., and they are the parents of seven children, namely: Edward L., of Fresno; Clara, the wife of DeWitt Blaisdell, of San Francisco; Arthur L., of Sacramento, Cal.; George E., of Fresno; Elva; Carl and Myrtle, the last three named being at home with their parents. Mrs. Machen is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally Mr. Machen is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and belongs to Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M., having been made a member of this latter organization in Stoughton, Wis. He belongs to Atlanta Post No. 145, G. A. R., of which he is post commander. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and is ex-member of the county and state central committees.

STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS HOGAN. From January, 1902, until January 1, 1905, when he resigned, Mr. Hogan acted as superintendent of the Cain Fruit & Nursery Co., managing a ranch of two hundred and forty acres, much of which he put under alfalfa, while one hundred and twenty-five acres are in prunes, peaches, apricots, etc. During the busy season he employed as many as ninety hands. He also raised large numbers of cattle and hogs.

Born in Adams county, Ill., July 27, 1856, Mr. Hogan is a son of George W. Hogan, the latter born near Covington, Ky., a son of George Hogan, a farmer who died in that state. George W. Hogan settled in Adams county, Ill., and followed the occupations of farmer and miller, operating both saw and flour mills, which were run by water power. He removed to Knox county, Mo., where he spent ten years, then went to Chariton county, near Old Brunswick, and finally to Kansas City, where his death occurred. For eight months he served in the state militia of Missouri. His wife, formerly Sarah Ann Owen, was a native of Washington, D. C., and a daughter of Edward Owen, who came from Scotland, the country of his birth, and located in the capital city. He engaged in the hotel business, but finally removing to Illinois, followed farming in that state and Missouri until his retirement from active life. His death occurred while he was an inmate of the home of G. W. Hogan. Mrs. Hogan died in Linn county, Mo., leaving a family of five sons and four daughters, of whom one son is deceased.

The youngest child in the family of his parents, Stephen A. Douglas Hogan was reared in Missouri, having removed with the family in January, 1859, from their home in Illinois. He attended the common school in the vicinity of his home and at the same time received the practical training which fell to his lot as the son of a farmer. In manhood he began farming for himself in Chariton county, from which location he removed in 1882 to Benton county, Ark., there following farming and the cultivation of nursery stock, setting out the nursery himself and following this business until 1888. He came still farther west in that year and located in Tulare county, Cal., where for four years he engaged in the cultivation of grain on a large scale. Not meeting with the success anticipated he accepted the position of superintendent of the Comstock ranch for S. Sweet Company, which position he held for six years and seven months, when he resigned to take charge of a tract of one hundred and sixty acres south of Visalia for the Bank of Visalia. This he subdivided, made roads, built bridges and put in numerous improvements, holding it until the greater part was sold, doing all this in four months. He then took charge of the Evansdale Fruit Company orchard for a period of six months, and following that work accepted the responsible position of superintendent of the Cain Fruit & Nursery Co. Upon resigning this position Mr. Hogan removed to Visalia.

In Chariton county, Mo., Mr. Hogan was united in marriage with Angie Dunkel, a native of McDonough county, Ill. She is a daughter of Henry Dunkel, a native of Pennsylvania, who removed to Illinois and afterward to Missouri, where he followed farming for a livelihood. His wife was formerly Susie Hosler, of Pennsylvania. Six children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hogan, namely: Susie (the wife of C. S. Warren, of Modoc, Cal.), Roscoe, Minnie, Travis, Uda and Esther Pearl. Mr. Hogan is a Democrat in his national politics. Locally he is interested in the election and support of the candidates best qualified for public office. For one term he held the office of school director. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, while his wife belongs to the Royal Neighbors.

JOHN A. NEU. A resident of Fresno since 1893, John A. Neu has become one of the leading business men of the city and has also been prominently identified with its upbuilding, having served for two years as president of the Chamber of Commerce, in which position he was able to carry out developing work which resulted in much good to the city and county.

A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Neu was born in Madison, June 30, 1863, a son of M. and Christine (Kieff) Neu. The father was for a time engaged in mercantile business in Madison, but later sold out and located on a farm. Some years thereafter he returned to Madison, where he died. His wife bore him seven children, four of whom are still living. Of this family John A. was the second in order of birth. His boyhood was spent in Madison and on the farm, but at the age of twelve he started out to make an independent livelihood, and since then he has never received help from anyone. Securing a position as an office boy in the Singer Sewing Machine Company's store at Madison, he worked there for several years, being promoted first to the position of salesman, later being made a collector and still later was appointed special agent. In the meantime he had left Madison and gone to Milwaukee, and for several years he traveled out of that city, making towns in Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa, as a representative for a large wholesale confectionery establishment. At the end of four and one-half years he re-entered the employ of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, finally being made manager of their branch office at Elkhart, Ind., where he remained until 1890, when he came to California as manager of the store in the city of Oakland. This position he filled for six months, when he was made special agent, with headquarters at Sacramento. In 1893 the company sent him to Fresno as manager of their store in this city. Soon afterward he enlarged his business and put in a stock of pianos and musical instruments, and in 1895 he disposed of the sewing machine business, since which time he has devoted his entire time to the building up of his present extensive piano and music business, having the largest piano house in this section of the state. All the leading makes are carried in stock, including Weber, Fischer, the Behning, Kohler & Chase, and many others. His store and show rooms occupy two floors, 150x25 feet.

After coming to Fresno Mr. Neu married Miss Lola A. Avila, who was born in San Francisco. Mrs. Neu is very popular in Fresno and has done much to assist her husband in the prosecution of his business. Mr. Neu is a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce, having formerly been connected with the board of trade. At the time the Chamber of Commerce was organized he was appointed a member of the executive committee, and in January, 1902, was elected president of the organization. This position he filled for a term of two years, and was very active in promotion work, often devoting time to that work that should have been used in his own business. It was during his term of office that the Chamber erected its building near the Southern Pacific depot. This structure is 42x66 feet in dimensions, and is used for exhibiting purposes, a fine display of Fresno county products being on exhibition there all the time.

Fraternally Mr. Neu is a member of the Elks, in which he is Loyal Knight; the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights of Columbus, being grand knight in the last-named organization. In politics he is inclined to the Democratic party, especially in national affairs, but in local matters believes in voting for the man whom he thinks is best qualified for the office. In 1905 he was a candidate for the office of Mayor of Fresno.

J. F. GREELEY. A pioneer of California and a resident of the San Joaquin valley for the past twenty-five years, J. F. Greeley is now living retired on his twenty-acre ranch adjoining Fresno on the west. He was born June 30, 1830, in Rochester, Vt., the sixth child in a family of seven born to Robert and Desire (Hosford) Greeley. Robert Greeley came of Scotch ancestry. In addition to following his trade as contractor and wheelwright, he also carried on farming. He enlisted for service in the war of 1812, but the struggle ended before he saw active service.

The education of J. F. Greeley was received in the common schools of Vermont. At an early age he left school to fill a clerkship in a general merchandise store, and while so employed heard much of the wonderful discovery of gold in California. At the age of nineteen he decided to cast in his lot with the tide of emigration, and came to this state via the Isthmus of Panama. He embarked from New York on the old steamship Uncle Sam, crossed the Isthmus by tow-boats and re-embarked on another vessel for California. He almost despaired of reaching his destination, however, as the boat took fire and endangered the lives of all the passengers. Arriving in San Francisco, which was then a tented city, with but fifty cents in his pocket he was ready to accept any honest employment to replenish his exchequer. Anxious to reach the gold fields, but having no money, he accepted a position, at a lucrative salary, in Mount Gregory, Eldorado county, as clerk in a general store which furnished supplies to the miners.

Leaving Mount Gregory with five thousand dollars in gold, Mr. Greeley engaged in the enterprise to flume the middle fork of the American River, and while thus employed saw pans of gold weighing twenty-seven pounds taken from pockets. The high waters swept everything away before the work was completed and he abandoned the task, poorer in pocket. For a time afterward he bought gold dust. At American bar he also engaged in a general mercantile business successfully for four years, when the floods once more laid waste the work of years. He then went to Dutch flat and opened a hotel. For four years he served as constable, and also was deputy sheriff, during which time he saw exciting times during the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad through the mountains. He enlisted in the Home Guards, becoming enrolling officer.

Some time later Mr. Greeley started a general store at Truckee and served two terms as postmaster there. He experienced the season of lawlessness which called into existence the famous Vigilance Committee known as "601." After eleven years in Truckee, he located in Fresno, in 1880, at which time there was but one brick house on Mariposa street. He engaged in work as a carpenter for a time, and lived in a house which stood on the present site of Barrett & Hicks' hardware store. He then purchased the twenty acres of land upon which he still resides. The orchard which he set out was drowned out by heavy rains, and he later set out a vineyard of raisin grapes. Still retaining his home place, he spent three years in Selma as agent for the Union Ice Company, and also manufactured carbonated waters, after which he went to Portersville and engaged in the same business for that company. While doing business in that city he made a trip to his ranch and there met with an accident which crippled him for life. While pruning some tall poplar trees he fell and injured himself, since which time, 1895, he has been unable to engage in any work, though he has managed the work on the ranch.

In Auburn, Cal., in 1861, Mr. Greeley was united in marriage with Margaret O'Bay, a daughter of James and Mary (McCullen) O'Bay. The former located in Canada in 1810, later went to Montpelier, Vt., and still later to Rochester, Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Greeley have been born four sons: William Henry, of Fresno, an expert mill mechanic, is married and has two sons, Harry and John; Clarence Eugene, also engaged in mill work, has one son, Irwin; Albert H. is mentioned on another page of this volume; and Edward Foster, also of Fresno, is an insurance solicitor; he has one daughter, Esther. In politics Mr. Greeley has always been a Republican. For many years he was an active Odd Fellow, joined the order when there were but fourteen lodges in the state, has passed all the chairs of the lodge and was also a delegate to and an active worker in the Grand Lodge.

EDWARD P. HUGHES. A successful ranchman and one of the oldest settlers of the Malaga district, Fresno county, Edward P. Hughes is numbered among the pioneers of the state. In Independence county, Ark., he was born September 7, 1835, a son of Thomas Hughes, a native of England. The latter came to the United States in 1816 and settled in Morgantown, N. C., where he engaged in the trades of tinner and coppersmith. Later he located in Arkansas, and in 1849 crossed the plains to California and settled in Los Angeles. After a short residence there he went to the Sandwich Islands, returning to California in 1853, when he went to the mines in Calaveras county. His death occurred in this state at the age of seventy-four years. His wife was Sarah Elizabeth McGuire, a native of Scotland.

Until he was seventeen years old Edward P. Hughes remained in his native state, and in 1853 crossed the plains to California via Pike's Peak and Carson City, and located at Murphy's Camp, in Calaveras county. For the ensuing five years he was interested in mining, after which he located in San Joaquin county and engaged in farming, until 1864. He was there married to Elizabeth C. Smith, who was born in Platte county, Mo., February 3, 1848. She was the daughter of James C. Smith, a native of Tennessee, who married Harriet Melcina Boone, a grand-niece of Daniel Boone, her father being a nephew of the famous Kentucky frontiersman. Mrs. Hughes' parents crossed the plains in 1852 and located in San Joaquin county, shortly after which her father returned to Missouri and brought back with him a large amount of live stock. He then engaged extensively in stock raising, becoming widely known throughout the valley, his cattle ranging as far south as Fresno county. He died at the age of seventy-eight years. In July, 1880, Mr. Hughes came to Fresno county, and in October of the same year settled in the Malaga district on his present property, becoming the owner at that time of one hundred and sixty acres, though he has since disposed of all but forty acres. At that time there were no settlers between his ranch and the city of Fresno, and he is now the oldest settler of the locality. The first year of his residence there he raised grain, while the next year he planted his vineyard, which is one of the oldest in that section. He has led an active and busy life, and has won a competence through his well directed efforts.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hughes were born nine children, of whom Edward Aaron, the eldest, died at the age of three years. The others are: Burt L., Harriet Melcina (the wife of W. W. Boust, of Fresno), James C., Bessie L., John P., Thomas E., Richard L., and Edith.

GEORGE S. BLOSS, SR. Among the liberal and public-spirited men of Merced county, George S. Bloss; Sr., occupies a prominent place. He was born in Bethlehem, Conn., November 26, 1847, a son of George T. and Emily (Brown) Bloss, both natives of the same city, the former being of French and the latter of Scotch ancestry. The paternal ancestors of Mr. Bloss settled in Killingsworth, Conn., upon their removal from France, and in that state George T. Bloss followed farming for a livelihood, remaining so occupied until his death at the age of forty-one years. George S. Bloss spent his boyhood days on the home farm, attending the local schools of his section, while at the same time he received the practical training of a farmer's son. In manhood he engaged in farming pursuits, remaining a resident of his native state until he was thirty-six years old.

Deciding to locate in the west, Mr. Bloss came to California in 1884 and purchased land in the vicinity of Atwater, Merced county, where he engaged in the raising of stock and grain, having had broad experience in this line in his New England home. He has prospered in his efforts and is to-day the owner of two sections of land in Merced county, one section at Atwater, comprising the home place, of which one hundred and seventy-five acres is devoted to alfalfa and the balance to grain; while the other section is ten miles distant and is given over entirely to the cultivation of grain and the raising of cattle. In addition to his agricultural pursuits he has taken an active interest in a corporation known as the Fin-de-Siecle Investment Company, which was organized in 1899, with Mr. Bloss as president. This company purchased the estate of John W. Mitchell, who died November 26, 1893, at which time Mr. Bloss took up the duties of administrator, to which office he had been appointed, and gave his undivided attention to this work until 1899. The careful manner in which he executed the trust reposed in him has won the approval of all connected with the vast estate. This estate formerly contained one hundred and seventeen thousand acres, but is now reduced to ninety thousand and comprises land in Stanislaus, Merced, Madera and Fresno counties, devoted to stock and grain raising. The Fin-de-Siecle Investment Company held this property intact until August, 1904, when they sold their interests as follows: one-third to the Bloss Land and Cattle Company; one-third to Crane Brothers Company; and one-third to the Geer-Dallas Investment Company. Mr. Bloss has shown business ability, shrewd judgment, and a practical knowledge in his management of the affairs intrusted to him, and has ably demonstrated the fact that conservative methods may yet be progressive ones.

Mr. Bloss has been married twice, his first union having taken place in 1873, when Ella Stone, formerly of Woodbury, Conn., and niece of the late John W. Mitchell, became his wife. She died in 1893, leaving two children, of whom Edna is the wife of Julian Thorne, of San Francisco, and George S., Jr., is a prominent stockman in Merced county and director of the Commercial Bank of Merced. February 2, 1904, Mr. Bloss was again married, being united with Mrs. Edna (Thompson) Hull, whom he had known from early childhood, her birthplace having also been Bethlehem, Conn. In addition to his varied business interests Mr. Bloss is a director of the Security Bank of Merced, and exercises a broad influence in the matter of progress and reform throughout the county. He is a man of public spirit and is held in the highest esteem by all with whom he has come in business or social contact.

GEORGE TAYLOR FRANKUM. Five miles east of Portersville, Tulare county, in the Rosedale Colony, is located the ranch which belongs to George Taylor Frankum, an enterprising and substantial orange grower of this section. A native of Russell county, Ky., he was born August 12, 1855, a son of William Frankum. The latter was a native of the same state, who, in 1857, removed as a farmer to Jasper county, southwestern Missouri, near Carthage, where his death occurred April 19, 1866. During the Civil war he enlisted in 1862 in the Union army, serving until 1864, when he was discharged on account of a fever which settled in his left arm leaving him a cripple. His wife, formerly Elizabeth McClure, also a native of Kentucky, died in Missouri in 1874, when about fifty-four years old. They were the parents of four sons and one daughter, of whom George Taylor Frankum was the second in order of birth.

A rather limited education was all that George T. Frankum was enabled to obtain through an attendance of the primitive schools of the early day, on account of the war. In 1870 he went to Denton county, Tex., and engaged as a cowboy throughout the state, working on the range for a time, after which he commenced driving on the trail. He remained so occupied for five and a half years, in 1876 going to Colorado and engaging in mining in San Juan county for seven years. Following this he was located in Pendleton, Ore., in the same occupation, where he remained until 1891, in which year he came to California and settled near Portersville. He bought ten acres six miles east of the city and planted it to oranges, and in 1902 bought his present property of thirteen acres, where he has since engaged in the nursery business, raising orange trees.

In Missouri Mr. Frankum was united in marriage with Mollie Watkin, a native of that state and they are the parents of three children, namely: Clarence, Nettie and Claudie, all at home. Fraternally Mr. Frankum is a member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M., and the Woodmen of the World. Politically he was a Republican but is now a staunch advocate of socialism. He owns one share in the Rochdale store of Portersville, and is interested in every way in all movements which tend to develop the resources of this section.

H. C. WARNER is remembered in Fresno as a successful business man and one who proved himself an important factor in the commercial upbuilding of the city and surrounding country. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 22, 1849, a son of Christian Warner, who emigrated from Germany and became a merchant tailor in that city, where he engaged in active business for many years. Upon his retirement he continued to make that city his home, and still resides there at an advanced age. He is a Lutheran in religion and politically is a staunch Republican. Of his three children, all of whom are deceased, H. C. Warner was the eldest. He received his education in the public schools of Cincinnati, which he attended until attaining the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the jeweler and watch-maker's trade. When twenty years old he came to California on one of the first trains that ever crossed the continent. Upon his arrival he engaged in business in San Diego for one year, and following this he spent the same length of time in Castroville, Monterey county. He then located in Gilroy, Santa Clara county, and established a jewelry business, as well as practicing as an optician. He made that city his home until 1880, when he located in Fresno and established the first permanent jewelry business in this city, being located on Mariposa street, in the building now occupied by C. H. Reige. He first purchased a frame store building, but later put up a brick building, and was established in that location for many years, but finally sold and removed to a place on J street, near the corner of Mariposa. He was the first optician in this city, having taken a course in San Francisco, and was very successful in his work.

Mr. Warner was a citizen of worth and integrity, who won the highest appreciation from his fellow-townsmen. He was active in the Baptist Church as trustee and treasurer, and politically was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Watsonville, becoming a member of Lodge No. 247, of this city, and was also a member of Trigo Chapter No. 69, of this place, and a charter member of Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T., having been made a Knight Templar in Visalia Commandery. He also belonged to the Order of the Eastern Star. His death occurred June 25, 1897, at the comparatively early age of forty-eight years.

In Gilroy, Cal., January 25, 1873, Mr. Warner was united in marriage with Laura Bennett, a native of Sonora, Cal. She is the eldest of three children now living. Her father, William C. Bennett, was a native of New Preston, Conn., and the son of Joseph Bennett, a miller of the same place, where he also died. The paternal ancestors were patriots in the Revolutionary war and were active in colonial development. William C. Bennett came to California in 1849, via Cape Horn, and immediately sought the mines at Sonora. He finally located in Salinas valley, where he engaged as a farmer, and later went to Gilroy, near which city he engaged in the raising of grain. Removing to Merced he spent the last years of his life at that place, his death occurring from the effects of an accident at the age of sixty-eight years. Fraternally he was a Mason and politically was a staunch Republican. He belonged to the Presbyterian Church. His wife, formerly Abigail Noble, was a native of Maumee, Ohio, and came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in the early '50s. She died in Fresno in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Warner, at the age of forty-seven years. Mrs. Warner spent her childhood in Gilroy, where she was married, and in 1880 became a resident of Fresno. Since her husband's death she has conducted the business under the old name, her son, Albert O., acting as manager of the establishment, which is now located at No. 1819 Mariposa street. She has three children, namely: Albert O., who graduated from the high school and from the University of California with the degree of Ph. G., and who later took a course in optics; Edna F., the wife of Dr. R. B. Cockrill, of Fresno; and Frank Edmund, who graduated from a New York College with the degree of Doctor of Optics; later he passed the state board examination and is now a practicing optician. For many years Mrs. Warner was a member of the Order of the Eastern Star, and is an active member of the Parlor Lecture Club of Fresno. She is a member of the Baptist Church.

LAWRENCE C. ELFERS. Two and three-quarter miles southeast of Conejo, Fresno county, is located the ranch which belongs to Lawrence C. Elfers, one of the successful and prominent men of this section. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Oakland August 30, 1866. His father, Archibald D. Elfers, was a native of Germany, who came to California in 1854 and located in Marysville, where he engaged as a miner. Later he removed to San Francisco and engaged in the brewery business and the manufacture of cigars. In 1870 he went to Stanislaus county and in the vicinity of Crow's Landing engaged in farming until 1892, when he removed to Alameda, where he is now living retired. His wife, Catherine, is also a native of Germany. They became the parents of twelve children, eight of whom attained maturity, four sons and four daughters, of whom Lawrence C. was the tenth in order of birth.

Lawrence C. Elfers received his education in the common schools of California, after which he engaged in farming in Stanislaus county, where he remained until 1901. Locating in Fresno county in that year he purchased his present property, consisting of three hundred and thirty acres, which he has since devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa and the raising of stock. He has added many improvements to his property, in 1901 building a fine residence on the ranch, and has installed a pumping plant, operated by a gas engine, drawing water from a well one hundred and seventy-eight feet deep, for irrigation purposes. He is a director in the Immigrant Irrigation Ditch, and still owns an interest in a warehouse at Crow's Landing.

In Stanislaus county, Cal., in 1891, Mr. Elfers was united in marriage with Georgia Albina Kinnear, a native of Canada. Her father, James Kinnear, a native of Scotland, came to California in 1865, and now makes his home three miles west of Modesto, Stanislaus county, where he is engaged in the raising of stock and alfalfa. To Mr. Elfers and his wife have been born three children, Irma Catherine, Cecil Raymond and Louie Roderick, all at home. Fraternally Mr. Elfers is associated with the Woodmen of the World, of Selma, and politically is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party.

JOHN THOMPSON. Recent years have witnessed the subdivision of many large tracts of grain land into small fruit farms, and the property which Mr. Thompson acquired by purchase in 1902 forms an instance of this nature. Three years after buying the land he moved thereto, hence is a newcomer in his vicinity, but possesses thorough familiarity with the soil, climate and the fruit-growing business, and is in every respect sufficiently experienced to justify the belief that he will reap success in his new venture. By birth he is of English nationality, born in Yorkshire, March 4, 1865, being next to the youngest in a family of four sons and four daughters who lived to mature years. His parents, Thomas and Jane Ann (Tindall) Thompson, were born, reared and married in England, and there continued to reside until death, the father following during all of his active life the occupation of a boot and shoe-maker.

Until nine years of age John Thompson attended public school, but at that time he was put to work and had no further opportunities for acquiring an education. The wages which he received were the smallest, being but $15 per year, and his work the most arduous and wearing, but with the optimism of youth he endured hardships with a cheerful face and steadfast heart. At the age of seventeen years he came to the United States in the hope of bettering his condition. At first he settled near Jacksonville, Ill., where he worked as a farm hand for three years. During 1885 he came to California and established his headquarters at Fresno, meanwhile working as a farm hand wherever opportunity offered. In those days he had many discouragements, though he found steady employment as soon as he was located. Finally he was fortunate in securing employment in orange orchards with F. G. Berry, under whom he remained for fourteen years as a permanent assistant, in full charge of Orangedale, a farm of seventy acres under cultivation to citrus fruits. With the savings of those years he purchased the property which is now his home, comprising twenty acres three and one-half miles northeast of Sanger in Centerville district, in a locality adapted to fruit culture. Here he has a vineyard of fourteen acres, besides two acres in oranges, two acres in peaches and two in alfalfa. A neat residence adds to the homelike attractiveness of the fruit farm, and it is the owner's hope to make other improvements from time to time, as his means permit.

After coming to California Mr. Thompson remained a bachelor for fifteen years. In 1900 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Lizzie Weldon, a native of Texas, and by this union there are two children, Fulton G. and Fannie Lois. Besides his home place Mr. Thompson is interested in the Del Rey packing house. Fraternally he is connected with various organizations, including the Knights of Pythias at Fresno, and in political affiliations he sympathizes with Republican issues and principles. Industry and perseverance have helped him out of poverty into a position of independence. A high sense of honor, displayed in transactions of every nature, has brought him the confidence of associates. Being of a quiet and home-loving disposition, when other duties permit he finds his greatest happiness in his home and the society of wife and children; notwithstanding this, he neglects no duty as a citizen, but in his new home, as in former locations, may be depended upon to support movements for the benefit of the people.

JOHN QUINN BYERS. Since his twentieth year John Q. Byers has lived on the farm which he now calls home, and where he is conducting an extensive stock business, in addition to a dairy and wood business. Skirting the San Joaquin river, and located four miles northeast of Crow's Landing, he has five hundred and twenty acres, all admirably adapted to the purpose for which it is required. As a pioneer of 1853 the genial owner enjoys an esteem in the community commensurate with his well-balanced and industrious life and with the steadiness and success with which he has pursued his time-honored occupation. That the farm is his by inheritance in no wise detracts from his ability to have earned it had the necessity presented itself, for his management evidences those solid traits of character which are bound to win their possessor a realization of his expectations.

Born in Preble county, Ohio, August 24, 1833. Mr. Byers' family was established in the Buckeye state by his paternal grandfather, Isaac, who was born in Virginia in 1802, and who brought to the wilds of Ohio a knowledge of blacksmithing and bell manufacturing intelligently pursued for many years. Of an equally ambitious and courageous nature, his son, William, the father of John Q., sought a larger field of activity in Delaware county, Ind., where his wife, formerly Jane Quinn, died when her only son, John, was about two years old, and from where he removed to Morgan county, Mo., his last home in the middle west. In 1853, when John was twenty, his father came with him to the coast, driving an ox team, and bringing a herd of cattle as a nucleus of the intended large stock-raising business. Soon after arriving in the state he settled on the river farm since in the possession of the family, homesteading a hundred and sixty acres, and remaining there until his death, February 11, 1889, at the age of eighty-six years and ten months. On this same farm his second wife, Elizabeth (Malcomb) Byers, died December 27, 1882, aged sixty-six years.

To the original purchase William Byers added as success came his way, and was able to leave to the care of his son five hundred and twenty acres of good land, which is devoted entirely to stock raising and pasturage of cattle. To J. Q. Byers the land represents all that he has accomplished since he started out in life, and the pride which he naturally feels is reflected in the judgment of everyone privileged to witness the work of his hands. He married into one of the pioneer families of the state, Miss Mary Elizabeth Bishop being a daughter of Eli Bishop, who first came to California in 1858, when his daughter was three years old. Again he crossed the plains in 1875, and died at Modesto, Cal., where he had lived retired for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Byers became the parents of ten children, one of whom died in infancy. The others are: Mrs. Amanda J. Allen; William Eli; Mrs. Frances E. Patchett; John Cleveland, who was accidentally drowned April 22, 1892, aged eight years; Mary Bell, Isaac Q., Edna E., George F. and Cordelia Ann. Mr. Byers is independent in politics, and in religion is a member of the Adventist Church. Though well along in years, and in a position to practically retire from active life, Mr. Byers still maintains his interest in the smallest details of his farm, encouraging by his precept and example the happy band of youthful workers who are preparing to follow in his footsteps.

GEORGE LARSEN. Born in Horsholm, Denmark, May 15, 1866, George Larsen inherited from a long line of Danish ancestors those sturdy qualities which have made these people citizens to be desired in any country. His father, Jorgen Larsen, was in the Danish army, and was so severely wounded in the battle of Saukelmark that he was incapacitated for five years. He died in Horsholm in 1870. His wife, formerly Charlotte Oleson, survives him and still makes her home in Denmark. Of their six children five are living, three sons having located in the United States, of whom Ole and Peter participated in the Civil war, in which both lost their lives.

George Larsen was the youngest in the family of children born to his parents. He was reared in Copenhagen and Horsholm, receiving a very limited education in the common schools, for at eight years of age he went to work on the farm. He continued in that work and also learned the butcher business, combining work at the two until he was seventeen, when he was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade. He continued in Copenhagen for three years, after which he traveled throughout Denmark and Germany, eventually working for thirty months in the largest iron works in Denmark. In 1802 he came to Fresno, Cal., without a dollar, but with a good trade, plenty of muscle and good health, and an energy and determination which could only bring him success eventually. For seven months following his arrival he was employed in a vineyard, then worked at his trade for a year, after which he established a shop of his own, going in debt $485 for machinery and tools. He met with deserved success and in 1806 built a shop on his lot 50x150 feet in dimensions, and two stories in height, the first floor the manufactory and the second a store-room. He manufactures plows, wagons, carriages, etc., being specially well-known for the quality of the plows he turns out. He has also built a comfortable residence at No. 1407 Fresno street, where he makes his home.

Mr. Larsen was united in marriage in Fresno with Marie Jensen, a native of Copenhagen, and they have five living children, namely: Halvor, Edward, Ollie, Roy and Otto. Mr. Larsen belongs to the Danish Brotherhood, of which he is ex-president, the Dania Society of California, of which he is past president, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America. Politically he is a staunch Democrat.

ADIE B. EVANS, as superintendent of the San Joaquin Ice Company, is giving his best efforts toward the advancement of the company's interests and the increase of general business in Fresno and vicinity. A native of Huntingdon, Pa., he was born August 15, 1867, the youngest in a family of nine children, of whom four are living. His father, J. W. Evans, was an ordained minister of the Baptist Church. He was a native of the vicinity of Tredga, Wales, but became a pioneer of the Schuylkill valley, where he studied for the ministry. He was later located at Cambria, Huntingdon, Irwin Station, Philipsburg, and in Dividing Creek, N. J., about 1892 coming as far west as Nebraska, where he was stationed at Beatrice. In 1895 he came to California and now resides in Fresno. His wife, formerly Rebecca Bowen, is a native of Wales. They are the parents of four children now living.

Adie B. Evans received his education in the public schools of his native state, and Keystone Academy, Factoryville, Pa., from which institution he was graduated in 1887. He then took a commercial course in Wood's Business College, and as a bookkeeper came to California in March, 1889, following this work in Fresno for one year. Going to Bakersfield, Kern county, in 1890, he entered the employ of Miller & Lux as bookkeeper and manager of their store on Button Willow ranch. Following this he served one term as deputy county clerk of Kern county under F. W. Craig, his time of service expiring after four years, January 1, 1899. In April of the same year he returned to Fresno and entered the employ of the San Joaquin Ice Company at the time of its organization, holding the position of bookkeeper until the death of the superintendent, W. J. McNulty. In August, 1902, he was elected to succeed the late superintendent, and has since discharged the duties of this office with efficiency and energy. This company has one of the largest manufacturing plants of Fresno, comprising a cold storage plant with a three thousand ton capacity, an ice machine with a capacity of fifty tons per day, and a one hundred and eighty horsepower steam engine. The plant is located on the Santa Fe railroad and on a spur of the Southern Pacific, their products being shipped throughout the valley, to every important city and town from Modesto to Bakersfield. This company has also engaged extensively in the manufacture of butter and cheese, having a creamery at Fresno, with a capacity of six thousand pounds per day, and a cheese factory at Selma, with a large capacity and modern plant. They have fifteen agents in Fresno, Kings and Tulare counties, and also receive cream from Madera county. This company are largely engaged in the cattle and dairy business, and have been the means of enlarging this industry to an appreciable extent. They took the initiative in importing from the east pure bred cattle—Holstein, Jersey and Guernsey, placing them with the dairymen and allowing them to pay from the returns, charging no advance, and paying the regular market price for butter. This enterprise required a capital of $100,000, but has been the means of bringing to the county and company a vast increase of business, adding to the prosperity of the farmers of the community, and proving an important factor in the development and upbuilding of the best interests of the general public.

In Green Grove, Lackawanna county, Pa., Mr. Evans was united in marriage with Carrie M. Lowrey, a native of Dundaff, Susquehanna county, that state, and a daughter of Wright Lowrey, a farmer of that locality. They are the parents of two children, Elma and Mildred. Mr. Evans is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and has served on its executive committee. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias, the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias, and in the line of his business belongs to the California Creamery Operators' Association. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

CHARLES M. McCARDLE. The McCardle family has been prominent in the pioneer history of this section, where James McCardle located many years ago. He was a native of Belfast, Ireland, at the age of thirteen years leaving his home and going to Liverpool, England, from which port he shipped as a sailor before the mast. His first long trip was around Cape Horn and up the Pacific coast, and his second trip was made in the fall of 1848. Arriving in San Francisco he left the vessel, going first to Sacramento, thence to Tuolumne county, and later locating in Mariposa county, where for some years he followed both placer and quartz mining. He finally engaged in a mercantile enterprise and also the raising of stock, becoming prominent in Fresno county, where he located in 1873. In 1874 he was elected constable, when he removed to Fresno, and was later elected deputy sheriff. In 1884 he resigned that office and bought an interest in what was known afterward as the Smith & McCardle Lumber mill at Pine Ridge. This business he continued successfully until his death, which occurred in 1898. Politically he was a staunch Democrat and took an active part in the workings of this party in Fresno county. Fraternal he was a charter member of Fresno Lodge No. 186, I. O. O. F., at Millerton, the pioneer lodge of this organization in the county, and in this he served in all the offices. His wife, formerly Ellen G. Baley, was a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Judge Gillum Baley, who came to California across the plains with ox-teams in 1852. Judge Baley engaged in mining until 1859, when he returned east and brought his family back to California across the plains. He located them near Chowchilla, Mariposa county, where he followed mining for a time, then removed to the old toll house of Fresno county, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He was elected county judge when the county seat was at Millerton, and held the office two terms; the county seat was afterward removed to Fresno. He then located in this city, where he engaged in the mercantile business until his death at the age of eighty-five years. His wife, formerly Parmelia Myers, survives him, making her home in the city of Fresno, at the age of eighty-five years. Mrs. McCardle is also living, residing upon her ranch in the Arizona Colony. She is the mother of three daughters and four sons, of whom Charles M. McCardle, the subject of this review, is the third in order of birth.

A native son of the state, Charles M. McCardle was born at Fine Gold (now O'Neils), fifteen miles above Fort Miller, November 7, 1869. He was reared and educated in Fresno, and at the age of thirteen years was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade, serving four years in this capacity. He continued at his trade for three more years, being employed at the Fresno Agricultural Works, then followed the lumber business for about four years. He then accepted a position in the grocery of R. B. Parker, maintaining a clerkship until his nomination for the public office which he now holds, that of county recorder. The memorable fight of 1902 attracted considerable attention in this section of the state. The general returns gave Barstow, the Republican candidate, the election by eighteen votes, when he obtained a certificate and assumed the duties of the office. Mr. McCardle filed contest and secured a recount, which gave to him the election by forty-eight votes, according to the superior court, and in the supreme court he was awarded over one hundred votes in majority. He then assumed the duties of the office, entering upon the work November 18, 1904, and although but a short time has elapsed he has already given evidence of the ability and integrity which have won him the esteem and respect of all who knew him in his past career.

In Fresno Mr. McCardle was united in marriage with Olivia R. Vogel, a native of Illinois. Her father, Jacob Vogel, was formerly engaged in the mercantile business in Clinton, Ill. He came to Fresno in 1886 and became prominent in business affairs, now serving as a director in the First National Bank, of this city. He now resides in Fruitvale, Cal. Mrs. McCardle received her education at Stanford University, and is a woman of culture and refinement. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. McCardle is a Democrat politically and is associated with the Native Sons of the Golden West through membership in Fresno Parlor.

CHARLES W. BARRETT. The Barrett family was established in America prior to the Revolutionary war, in which the great-grandfather of Charles W. Barrett, an esteemed resident of Fresno, Cal., was a participant. The name was prominent in Maine, where F. A. Barrett was born, and whence he removed to New York City, and engaged as a builder. In 1861 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, and located as a contractor and builder in San Francisco, working at this business in different sections around the bay until his death in 1899. His wife, formerly Agnes Berry, was born in New York state, the descendant of an old New England family. She survives her husband and now makes her home in Fresno. Of their three living children Charles W. Barrett is the eldest, his birth having occurred in New York City May 11, 1859.

Brought to California in 1861 by his parents, Charles W. Barrett was reared to manhood in San Francisco, where he received his education in the grammar and boys' high school. He studied bookkeeping while attending the public schools, and at the age of fifteen years learned the plumber's trade. Deciding to locate in Fresno, he came to this city in 1882, and entered the employ of the Donohoe-Fanning Company, with whom he remained four years. He then established his present business, which has since grown to large proportions, locating first on J street and later removing to 1035 I street. The firm, which is known as the Barrett-Hicks Company, was incorporated in 1895, with Mr. Barrett as president, and today they carry on the most extensive hardware business in the city of Fresno. Their wholesale and retail establishment, where they display general hardware, stoves and tinware, is 50x150 feet in dimensions, while the shop is 35x150 feet, and is three stories in height. Their warehouses are located on the Southern Pacific Railroad. This business has proved one of the chief enterprises of Fresno, and has added much to the commercial prestige of the place.

Mr. Barrett was united in marriage in San Francisco with Minnie Thomas, a native of Philadelphia, Pa. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Fresno Lodge No. 247, of which he is past master, and also belongs to Trigo Chapter, R. A. M., of this place; Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T., and is also associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a Republican in his political convictions, and is a member of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Barrett is a charter member of the Chamber of Commerce, belongs to the Retail Hardware Association of the Pacific coast, and is a member of the Master Plumbers' Association.

H. H. SARRINGHAUSEN is a farmer of Fresno county, located within four and a half miles of Reedley, and engaged in general agricultural and horticultural pursuits. He was born in Ripley county, Ind., December 28, 1869, a son of Conrad Sarringhausen, who came from Germany to the United States in an early day and became a farmer in Ripley county, where his death occurred in 1872. His wife, Maggie, also a native of Germany, died in Indiana, leaving a family of five sons and three daughters, of whom H. H. Sarringhausen is the youngest. He received a limited education in the common schools of his state, and in the passing years has added to the foundation he then laid by broad reading and observation, which have given him a place among the well-informed men of the community. He worked on a farm in Indiana until 1883 when he came to California and located in Fresno and found employment in a planing mill. Following this he bought his present ranch near Reedley in 1886. It consists of one hundred and sixty acres located four and a half miles southwest of Reedley, forty acres being in vines, four acres in trees and forty acres in alfalfa, while the balance is devoted to grain. He also owns stock in the packing house at Parlier, and is a member of the Parlier Packing Association. He owns stock in the Reedley State Bank, and is prominent in business affairs in that town.

Fraternally Mr. Sarringhausen is identified with the Woodmen of the World, of Reedley, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

JOSEPH PARKER LANE was born in North Carolina, a son of John Lane, a native of the same state, who removed to Tennessee when his son Joseph was but a few months old. His mother was a niece of Noah Macon, United States Senator from North Carolina. In Knoxville Joseph P. Lane was given the benefit of a good education, supplementing his public school learning by a thorough study of law, later being admitted to the bar of that state. At the age of twenty-two he removed to Texas, locating near the present city of San Antonio, and there he practiced law to some extent. In 1849 he came to California, the journey being made with a pack train through Sonora and Mazatlan to Los Angeles. From the latter city he went direct to Stockton and engaged in trading in the mines. In 1850 he located in Stockton and in partnership with Nathan Fairbanks, opened a wholesale liquor store after the big fire.

In Stockton Mr. Lane was united in marriage with Ann Mary Barnett, who was born in Hayward county, Tenn., November 6, 1851, a daughter of Bird B. Barnett, a native of Carroll county, that state. Mr. Barnett was a large planter and tobacco grower. He married Martha Walker, who was born in Charleston, S. C. In 1848, with his family, Mr. Barnett located near St. Joseph, Mo., where the winter was spent. The following summer they continued on to Salt Lake, intending to reach the coast that year, but on arriving in the latter place it was too late in the fall to attempt the journey across the mountains, so they remained in that city until the following spring, when they continued their journey, reaching California in July, 1850. The first settlement was made on Weaver creek, where Mr. Barnett opened a hotel, which he conducted until the following year, when he removed to Stockton, shortly afterward buying a ranch three miles from that city. There in addition to farming and stock-raising he conducted a hotel, which was extensively patronized by the early settlers. Besides this property he also owned a large ranch on the Calaveras river. He died when over eighty years of age, at the home of a daughter, Mrs. C. D. Reynolds, in Calaveras county. His wife passed away in Stockton, where they had lived continuously for twenty years, after having spent about six years in Mariposa county.

After his marriage Mr. Lane continued in business in Stockton until 1855, when he disposed of his interests and with his wife removed to Monterey county, where he purchased a farm adjoining the town of San Juan and engaged in the stock business for four years. While there he served as justice of the peace and took a prominent part in county affairs, also serving two terms as supervisor. Subsequently he removed to Mariposa county, locating on Little Mariposa creek, where he engaged in the cattle business until 1868. From that year until 1870 he was interested in the sheep business, but at the end of that time sold out and came to the San Joaquin valley, settling near what is now known as Lane's Bridge, ten miles east of the present site of Fresno. In this section he resumed the stock business and as the years passed accumulated about seven thousand acres of fine farming land. In all his business ventures he met with success, and at the time of his death was considered one of the most substantial men in this section of the state. He was accidentally killed December 15, 1879, his death causing deep regret among his many friends. Since his death Mrs. Lane has carried on the business. She became the mother of five children, namely: Joseph Adolphus, of Fresno; Mary, now Mrs. Liddell; Edward, who is engaged in farming near Fresno; William Henry, who resides in Santa Cruz county; and Frank Mark, a graduate of the State Normal school at San Jose and now principal of the Hawthorne school in Fresno. Her children remained on the farm until they were all married, after which, in 1897, she moved into Fresno, where she has since resided. During her residence here she erected her home at No. 1652 N street, besides which she also owns several thousand acres of land on the San Joaquin river, which is rented. Mrs. Lane is an active member of St. James Episcopal church and is very popular with all her acquaintances, being one of the few pioneer ladies living in the city.

In politics Mr. Lane was a Democrat, but he never had the time nor inclination to take an active part in public matters, though none had the interest of his county at heart more than did Mr. Lane. He was at all times ready to give of his time and means to further any movement that was calculated to be of material benefit to the county or state. His life was a success and in his history there is much that could be read with profit by the young men of the present day. He met and overcame all obstacles, and was ever willing to give credit to his wife, who was at all times a worthy helpmeet.

GEORGE S. BAMBAUER. As one of the live and progressive agriculturists who are continuing the work of upbuilding begun by their pioneer sires, George S. Bambauer commands consideration from his fellowmen in Stanislaus and Merced counties, more especially because of the wholesome ambition and energy which is characterizing the management of his farms six miles south of Newman, one comprising forty and the other fifty-five acres. Extended mention is given the early struggles and subsequent success of his parents, in another part of this work, and it is sufficient here to locate him as the third in a large family, and one of the most zealous in keeping the children together after the rather premature death of his father. With a common school education to back him, he removed from the farm in San Joaquin county, where he was born August 7, 1862, to Merced county with his mother, managing a ranch in the Cottonwood district, below the canal. His ambition to become an independent land owner was realized in 1894, when he bought his present farm of forty acres, and later added the farm near by. His land is under alfalfa and pasture, and a dairy of eighty cows offers abundant opportunity for a model and paying milk and butter enterprise. Mr. Bambauer owns stock in the New Era Creamery, to which he sells his products, and he is otherwise identified with the business interests in his immediate neighborhood.

As becomes so broad-minded and public-spirited a man, Mr. Bambauer is interested in the political outlook, and an earnest promoter of the principles and issues of the Democratic party. He has been called upon to represent his district in county and state conventions, and has always done so with distinct credit to those who honored him with their preference. His genial and kindly manner causes him to be a welcome addition to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Workmen of the World, and his sociability and good fellowship are further recognized in his home, where hospitality and sympathy await the many friends of the family. Mrs. Bambauer was formerly Mary Alzina De Mont, who was born in Oakland, and who is the devoted mother of three children, L. Lloyd, Stephen and an infant son. Mr. Bambaier's career presents many points of encouragement for aspiring land owners and developers, for he is an acknowledged practical and reliable man, depending solely upon the gifts with which nature has endowed him, and striving always for the best possible of attainment in his line.

G. P. CUMMINGS. The position of esteem and respect occupied by G. P. Cummings has been won by sterling traits of character rather than by influence. Irrespective of party lines he was chosen by the board of supervisors as county assessor in 1900, and performed the duties incident to his office with the same efficiency and thoroughness which had previously characterized his work as deputy county clerk and acting clerk of the board of supervisors. A native of Warren county, Tenn., he was born near McMinnville, May 30, 1856, the youngest in a family of ten children, all of whom attained maturity, he being the only one located on the coast. The family came originally from Virginia, which was the birthplace of his father, G. P. Cummings, Sr., the youngest child born to Col. Joseph Cummings, who went to Virginia from Scotland and won his title in the war of 1812. Colonel Cummings engaged in farming near Spencer, Van Buren county, Tenn., after the war of 1812, his death occurring in that locality at the advanced age of ninety-nine years. G. P. Cummings, Sr., followed the occupation of farmer and was also sheriff of Van Buren county, whence he removed to the vicinity of McMinnville. He served in the latter location as district assessor, and also engaged as a farmer until his death, at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Plumlee, was a native of Virginia and the daughter of John Plumlee, who took part in the war of 1812. Her death also occurred in Tennessee.

G. P. Cummings, Jr., received his education in Burritt College, Spencer, Tenn., and in 1876, when nineteen years old, began teaching, which occupation he followed for nine years, in time winning a place on the county board of teachers' examiners, of Warren county. Deciding to locate on the Pacific coast, he came to California in 1885 and in Fresno county taught school at Eastin (now in Madera county). In 1887 he came to the city of Fresno and secured employment as clerk in a grocery establishment, where he remained for one year, when he entered into business for himself. He was located on I street, and the firm was known as Cummings & Higgins. This enterprise was continued successfully until 1894, when they sold out and dissolved partnership. For a time he was employed as traveling salesman, but on January 1, 1899, he was made deputy county clerk under George W. Cartwright, and was the clerk of the county board of supervisors from that time until July 30, 1900. Upon the last-named date he was appointed by the board of supervisors to fill the unexpired term of J. W. Ferguson, county assessor. This office he filled acceptably until January, 1903, when he retired and engaged in the real estate business under the firm name of Murdock, Cummings & Murdock, being located on Tulare street. January 1, 1904, they dissolved partnership and he then accepted a position with the county recorder, to make abstracts of mortgages for county assessor. On the 1st of February, 1904, he was appointed under sheriff by J. D. Collins, since which time he has discharged the duties of that office.

Mr. Cummings' home, at the corner of O and Kern streets, is presided over by his wife, formerly Bettie Smartt, a native of Warren county, where they were married. She was a daughter of George M. Smartt, a farmer of Tennessee, and a granddaughter of William C. Smartt, a patriot in the war of 1812, who emigrated from Virginia to Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Cummings are the parents of four children, namely: Bonnie Jean, George, Annabel and G. P., Jr. Mr. Cummings has taken an active interest in educational affairs in Fresno, and for five years has served as a member of the city board of education. During the building of the high school, the Park Avenue, and the remodeling of the Emerson school, on K street, he served as secretary of the board, and was an important factor in the progress of the school system. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the Independent Order of Foresters, of which he is past chief ranger; Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor commander; Woodmen of the World; and St. Andrew's Society. Politically he is a staunch Democrat, having served as a member of the county central committee.

ELMER E. GRAHAM. A native of Iowa, Mr. Graham was born in Birmingham, May 22, 1862, a son of Joseph and Margaret (Walters) Graham. The father was born near Zanesville, Ohio, a son of Joseph, a native of Virginia, who was an early settler in Van Buren county, Iowa, where he was a successful farmer and stock raiser. Joseph, the father of Elmer E. Graham, was engaged in general merchandise business in Birmingham until 1894, when he retired from active pursuits and is now living on a farm adjoining the city where he was for so many years a successful figure in the mercantile world. His wife was born in West Virginia, and by her marriage became the mother of four children, two of whom are living. She died in Iowa in 1881.

Elmer E. Graham received a fair education in the public and high schools. Between the ages of eighteen and twenty years he served an apprenticeship at the cabinet maker's trade, and in 1882, went to Minneapolis, Minn., where he secured employment in the railroad depot as assistant depot master. Seven years later he engaged in the restaurant business in the same depot, which business he followed for some ten years. In addition to his stand in the Union depot, he had several other restaurants, and at one time was conducting a large and profitable business. While living there he spent several winters in California, and in 1894 purchased twenty-one acres of orange land near Portersville, in the Sunnyside district. Ten acres of this he set out in oranges, while the balance was devoted to peaches and prunes. Up to 1902 he continued his residence in Minneapolis, coming to California each year to look after his property interests. In that year he disposed of part of his business interests in the east and located here permanently. In 1904 he set out six acres to grapes and otherwise improved his possessions, and since then he has set out more orange trees, and now has one of the finest ranches in this section of the county. He was one of the organizers of the Sunnyside Water Company and has served as president and director from the first. The company has three wells, all connected, which furnish water for irrigating nearly two hundred acres. The wells being about one hundred and sixty feet deep are never failing. He is also interested in the Zante packing house, being a director of the association. In addition to these interests he is engaged in the restaurant business in Minneapolis, owning the Powers' restaurant, which is located in the Powers' mercantile company's large department store.

While living in Minneapolis Mr. Graham married Della G. Alguire, who was born in Montreal, Canada. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Royal League. His success in life is the result of his own well-directed efforts. While he has lived in Tulare county but a few years, he has attained a position of prominence both in the business and social world. He and his wife are highly esteemed, and have already a large circle of friends.

JULIUS A. MILTON. Located upon his ranch of forty acres three miles west of Reedley, Fresno county. Julius A. Milton is engaged in horticultural pursuits and meeting with success in his work. He was born in Rutherford county, N. C., April 18, 1848, a son of Lindsay F. Milton, a farmer of the same state, and grandson of Cornelius Milton. The latter was a planter and farmer of Virginia, who, during the Revolutionary war, removed to North Carolina and engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. Lindsay F. Milton also died at that location, as did his wife, formerly Sallie Fortune, a native of North Carolina. They were the parents of seven daughters and one son, all but one now living. Julius A. Milton was the youngest of this large family of children. He received his education in the common schools until 1864, when at the age of sixteen years he enlisted in the Confederate army as a courier on the staff of General Barrington, Hampton's Corps of cavalry. He served eighteen months, and upon the close of the war remained in his native state until June, 1869, when he started via the Isthmus of Panama for California. He arrived in San Francisco July 3, when he located at Farmington, in the San Joaquin valley, and rented land upon which he engaged in ranching. In 1891 he came to the vicinity of Reedley, Fresno county, and purchased his present property, eighteen acres of which he planted to vines, four acres to trees, while the balance is devoted to alfalfa. He carries stock in the Growers' Winery at Parlier, and is interested in all movements pertaining to the general welfare of the community in which he makes his home.

In Stockton, San Joaquin county, Cal., Mr. Milton was united in marriage with Josephine Martin, a native of that county, where she also died. She left one son, Frank T., who is located on property adjoining his father on the east. In Calaveras county, Cal., Mr. Milton married Blanche Schrack, and they are the parents of two children, Clay and Susie. Fraternally Mr. Milton is identified with Farmington Lodge No. 297, I. O. O. F., and politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

HAROLD V. ARMITAGE, agent for the Wells Fargo Express Company, of Fresno, Cal., was born in Bowling Green, Ky., October 4, 1867, the eldest of two children born to his parents, Valerius and Sarah (Hess) Armitage. His father was left an orphan at an early age, growing to manhood in Bowling Green, whence he crossed the plains in 1849, via Council Bluffs to Portland, then south to California. He engaged in mining for two years, then returned east by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Locating again in Bowling Green he engaged in the hotel business until his death. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, serving in the First Indiana Regiment of Volunteers. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Armitage is a native of Bowling Green, Ky., and the daughter of Alexander Hess, who was engaged in the hotel business at that place until his death. She is residing in the old home in Kentucky.

Reared to young manhood in Bowling Green, Harold V. Armitage received his education in the public schools and Ogden College, graduating from the latter institution in 1885. The following year he came to California, securing employment with the Wells Fargo Express Company in San Francisco, in the purchasing and supply department. He remained in the main offices for several years, the last year being in the superintendent's department, when he was transferred to Fresno as clerk, coming to this city in 1889, when there were only about five thousand inhabitants. He continued as chief clerk until 1892, when he was made cashier, and in 1896 was made agent, which position he has since held. From a small office requiring the services of three men the business has grown to such proportions that twelve men are needed, and thus the entire attention of Mr. Armitage is required in the discharge of his duties. The office is located at No. 1038 J street. In 1902 he built a comfortable home at No. 455 Neilsen avenue.

In Fresno Mr. Armitage was united in marriage with Ella Daly, a native of Millerton, Fresno county, Cal., and the daughter of Judge R. H. Daly, who was county judge at the time the county seat was removed from Millerton to Fresno. They have one daughter, Helen Elizabeth. Mrs. Armitage is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Politically Mr. Armitage is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is active in his efforts to advance the general welfare of the city and county.

ALBERT B. CLARK. Among the prominent men of Fresno mention belongs to A. B. Clark, who has been active for a number of years in the development of the natural resources of this county and the upbuilding of its best interests. He was born in Fort Madison, Iowa, October 10, 1858, the descendant of an old Maryland family prominent in the history of the country, his grandfather having taken part in the war of 1812. His father, John H. Clark, a native of Maryland, went to Indiana when a boy and learned the trade of a tanner. When of age he began farming at Rising Sun, and later was a pioneer of Fort Madison, Iowa, where he engaged in the manufacture of shoes with the firm of Clark & Elschrode. This business he continued for several years, when he removed to the vicinity of West Point, Iowa, and again engaged in farming. In the fall of 1870 he removed to Eldorado, Butler county, Kans., and homesteaded property, as well as purchasing land, and there followed farming and stock-raising until 1882, when he came to California and located in Modesto, Stanislaus county. He made that city his home after his retirement from active cares, his death occurring in that locality in 1890, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which he had been identified throughout his entire life. Following the example of his patriotic ancestors, he enlisted for service in an Iowa regiment during the Civil war, but was rejected on account of an injury to his shoulder. His wife, formerly Edith E. Emerson, was a native of Ohio, and the daughter of Asa Emerson, who died early in life. She still survives and makes her home in Oakdale, Cal. Six children were born of this union, four of whom are living. By a former marriage Mr. Clark had four children, one now surviving, two sons, Frederick and Emer, having come to California as farmers, where both died in 1890.

A. B. Clark was the eldest child born to his parents. He was reared in Lee county, Iowa, on the paternal farm, and attended the public schools. In 1870 he went to Kansas and attended Ward's College, at Wielita. Deciding to locate on the Pacific coast, he came to California in 1875, and settled near Stockton, where he engaged in farming in various parts of San Joaquin county for several years. He met with fair returns from his work and finally purchased five hundred acres near Modesto, Stanislaus county, renting adjoining land, which gave to him a farming area of three thousand acres. He still owns the five hundred acre ranch located six miles west of Ceres, now in the Turlock Irrigation district, a twenty-foot ditch running through the entire place. Since 1887 he has rented the land to the same tenant. In 1887 he moved to Kings river, three miles south of the present site of Reedley, where he rented a farm of five thousand acres and began the raising of grain. He continued in that location until 1893, and in the meantime set out three hundred and twenty acres of vines on contract, at the end of three and a half years becoming the owner of one hundred and sixty acres. Following this he gave his attention to his vineyard for two and a half years, after which he once more took up general farming, renting two thousand acres northeast of Reedley. Four years later, in September, 1899, he removed to Fresno, and in 1901 built the residence which he has since made his home. He sold his large vineyard in 1903, but still owns several smaller ones, as well as farming lands near Reedley, and two hundred acres two miles south of Parlier, one hundred and sixty acres of which is in orchard and vineyard. During his long period in the work Mr. Clark has improved about six hundred and forty acres of vineyards, and has been an important factor in the development of that industry.

WOOLSEY WEYANT

MRS. S. L. WEYANT

In Modesto, Stanislaus county, Cal., Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Susie Crispin, a native of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and the daughter of Frank Crispin, a farmer, who settled in Modesto in 1883. He was associated with the Society of Friends. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Clark, Georgia and Eva. Mr. Clark is prominent fraternally, having been made a Mason in Reedley and now belongs to Los Palmas Lodge, of Fresno, and Trigo Chapter, R. A. M.; Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T., of which he was eminent commander in 1903 and '04; Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco; Fresno Lodge of Perfection, and Rose Croix Chapter. Both himself and wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Clark is past matron. Politically Mr. Clark is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party.

WOOLSEY WEYANT. During Mr. Weyant's residence in Fresno county, from 1894 until his death, October 10, 1902, was demonstrated his character and ability. He was born October 25, 1837, near Ft. Montgomery, N. Y., and was reared and educated on Iona Island, in the Hudson. He learned the vineyard business there, and for twelve years was engaged in propagating and growing vines for a Dr. Grant. In 1869 he removed to Nebraska and settled fourteen miles west of Lincoln, where he homesteaded and improved a farm, eventually adding three hundred and twenty acres adjoining, upon which he raised grain and stock. He then removed to Lincoln and embarked in the grocery business for a few years, then began buying and improving business and residence property and selling at advanced figures.

In 1894 Mr. Weyant sold out his holdings and came to California and at once settled in the Eggers Colony, where he purchased forty acres, which he set to vines and built and improved a comfortable home place. He added forty acres which he also improved, and continued actively interested as a vineyardist until his death. The lady who became the wife of Mr. Weyant was formerly Saloma Louisa Rhodes, a native of Rockland county, N. Y., and a daughter of William and Permelia (June) Rhodes, the former a native of England, and an only son of William Rhodes, and a native of Staffordshire. Mr. Rhodes settled in New York and found employment in a wholesale establishment, but subsequently he removed to Haverstraw and engaged in manufacturing silk covered wire, later embarking in a farming enterprise, and then his death occurred. His wife was a native of Rockland county, N. Y., a daughter of Ethiel and granddaughter of Ethiel June, who was a Revolutionary soldier. She died in 1884 in New York state, on the farm where she was born. Mrs. Weyant was reared and educated in her native state and near Ft. Montgomery met and, February 24, 1855, was united in marriage with Woolsey Weyant. They became the parents of ten children, nine of whom reached maturity: Woolsey, engaged in the oil business in Texas; Oscar, in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in San Francisco; Luther, a vineyardist in the Eggers Colony; Charles, likewise engaged in the Jefferson Colony; Sidney, employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad at Beaumont, Cal.; Eva, wife of Frank Naden, of Fresno county; Ella, who married T. J. Alexander and resides in Temperance Colony; John, a vineyardist in Eggers Colony, and Aretes, in the same place.

Mr. and Mrs. Weyant gave their children such school advantages as the times afforded. They were members of the Methodist Church and in politics always staunch Republicans. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Weyant has continued to reside on the home place and carry on the vineyard. She has purchased four lots, and erected a cottage in Fresno on Clark street. Mr. Weyant had purchased one hundred acres of land in Texas at what is known as Pierce Junction, six miles from Houston, and since his death oil has been discovered on this property, making it very valuable. Though a resident of Fresno county but a few years, Mr. Weyant became identified with the business interests of the county, and by his straightforward manners, strict integrity and public spirit soon made a host of friends. Mrs. Weyant has ever extended a helping hand to those less fortunate than herself and now in the afternoon of a well-spent life can enjoy the comforts that the passing years have brought to her.

JOHN H. COCHRAN is well known throughout Fresno county, where he has been engaged for fourteen seasons in operating a threshing outfit. Disposing of these interests in the fall of 1903 he settled on the property upon which he now makes his home. He was born in Plymouth, N. H., March 22, 1844, a son of David Cochran, a native of Ireland, who came to the United States in an early day and located first in Massachusetts and later in New Hampshire. In 1851 he went to Derby Center, Vt., where he followed farming until his death. His wife, formerly Mary Burk, was born in Nova Scotia and died in New Hampshire. They were the parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom John H. was the second child.

John H. Cochran received his education in the common schools of Plymouth, N. H., after which he engaged in farming on the home place with his father. In 1866 he secured employment with the Boston, Concord & Montreal Railroad Company, and later became engineer. He remained in that connection for five or six years, then was employed by the Mount Washington Railway for the ensuing five years. Following this he was engaged as stationary engineer for two years, working principally in sawmills. In 1882 he came to California and located at Stockton, San Joaquin county, where for two seasons he ran an engine in threshing. He then came to Fresno county and ran an engine for William J. Berry for five seasons. In 1880 he took up the business for himself, equipping himself with a threshing outfit and in partnership with Samuel Kline, which partnership lasted two years, he followed the business throughout the county for fourteen seasons. He also ran stationary engines and conducted combined harvesters. In the fall of 1903 he sold his outfit and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles north of Huron, on the west side of the San Joaquin valley, which he still owns. On the property where he lives twenty acres is in vineyard, while he rents one hundred acres in wheat and one hundred acres in barley.

In Staunstead Plain, Canada, Mr. Cochran was united in marriage with Elizabeth Rock, a native of Vermont, who died in California in 1899. They had two children, Ada, the wife of William Levis, in this vicinity, and Joseph E., of Boston, Mass. Mr. Cochran is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and politically is a Democrat.

MANUEL ENOS. A general blacksmithing and horseshoeing business is conducted by Manuel Enos, in Reedley, Fresno county, Cal., where he has made his home since 1896. He is a native son of the state, having been born in Trinity county, August 1, 1865, the eldest in a family of nine children, two daughters and seven sons. His father, Manuel Enos, Sr., was born in Portugal and immigrated to California in 1849 in search of gold. He engaged in mining in Trinity county, Cal., until 1876, when he went to San Leandro, Alameda county, and secured employment in a plow manufactory of that place. He continued in that location for a time, after which he engaged in ranching at Pescadero. Returning to Newark he was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company until he resigned and went to Selma, Fresno county, where he now owns a ranch. He is seventy years of age and makes his home with his sons and daughters. His wife, formerly Mary Carmel, also a native of Portugal, is deceased. Manuel Enos, Jr., received his education in the schools of California, after which, at the age of sixteen years, he was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade at Mission San Jose. In 1880 he worked in the Southern Pacific Railroad shops in Newark for the period of four years. In 1884 he located in Hanford, Kings county, where he followed general blacksmithing for one year, then removed to Selma, where he made his home for eleven years, following his trade. In 1896 he came to Reedley, and has here built up a lucrative business as a blacksmith.

In Fresno Mr. Enos was united in marriage with Maggie Reynolds, a native of New York, and they are the parents of five children, all of whom are at home, namely: Mary, Leo, Lewis, Ida and Paul. Mr. Enos is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

JOHN NELSON POOL. As a successful farmer John Nelson Pool has done much toward the agricultural development of Fresno county. He is located on a ranch a mile and a half east of Fowler, and engaged at present in horticultural pursuits. Born in Bond county, Ill., August 12, 1850, he is a son of Alexander Pool. The latter was a native of Hardin county, Tenn., where his birth occurred December 15, 1824, his father, William Pool, of North Carolina, having brought his family to Illinois in 1829 and located in Bond county, where he engaged in farming until his death. Alexander Pool came to California in November, 1874, and located near Isleton, Sacramento county, where he farmed until his death in 1879. His wife, formerly Martha Ann Myatt, was a native of Hardin county, Tenn., whose parents removed to Illinois and spent the balance of their lives. Mr. Pool and his wife, became the parents of twelve children, three sons and nine daughters, of whom two sons and three daughters are deceased.

The fourth child in order of birth in the family of his parents, John Nelson Pool received his education in the common schools of Illinois, after which he engaged with his father in farming. He came to California with the latter in 1874 and located near Isleton, on the Sacramento river, where he followed farming for a time, later purchasing land in that vicinity. Six months later he sold his property but continued to make his home there until 1881, in which year he came to Fresno county. He bought railroad land at Lone Star, where he engaged in general agricultural pursuits for nine years, removing in 1890 to Del Rey and in 1902 to his present property, which consists of twenty acres a mile and a half east of Fowler. Ten acres of this property is devoted to vines, six acres to trees and the balance is in pasture. In Bond county, Ill., in 1870, he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Levick, a native of Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of the following children: Francis Marion, of Lone Star, Cal.; Woodson Alexander, a farmer of this vicinity; Salina Letitia Ann, at home; Charles Henry, of Lone Star; Lester Percy, at home. By a former marriage Mrs. Pool had one son, William Louis Levick, whose home is with his mother and Mr. Pool. They also have an adopted daughter, Lillie May, who is at home also. Fraternal Mr. Pool is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Fowler, in which lodge he has passed all the chairs. Politically he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

REV. MARTIN MILLER. A pioneer minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. Martin Miller is held in the highest esteem throughout the San Joaquin valley, where he has been instrumental in organizing a number of churches of this denomination. He was born in Carroll county, Ohio, December 11, 1836, a son of Joseph Miller, the latter having been born in the vicinity of Harrisburg, Cumberland county, Pa. The elder man was a farmer who emigrated to Carroll county, where he married and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He made that locality his home from 1828 to 1862, when he removed to Montgomery county, Ill., where his death occurred in 1873, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, formerly Isabelle McClintock, of Ohio, now resides in Illinois, at the age of ninety years, still active and well preserved. They were the parents of six sons and one daughter, of whom Martin Miller was the eldest.

Martin Miller received a preliminary education in the common schools of Ohio and also attended an academy in that state. After his removal to Illinois he took a theological course in the Illinois State University at Springfield, graduating therefrom in 1865. His first charge was in Montgomery county, Ill., and following this he was located in Warsaw, Camp Point and Nokomis. He came to California in 1873 and was in charge at Georgetown, Eldorado county, for three years; then in Richland and Marysville, and in 1880 located in the vicinity of Reedley, Fresno county. In January, 1882, he organized the first Methodist Episcopal church in Fresno, Cal. The same year he organized the first Methodist Episcopal Church at Selma, of which he remained in charge for three years. In 1894 he was located at Hanford, Kings county, and the following year at Sanger, Fresno county. During 1887 and 1888 he preached at Traver, Tulare county. He now has charge of the church at Parlier, which he organized in January, 1904. Since his location here he has been absent only two years, which time he spent in Los Angeles educating his children, and while there he preached at Ivanhoe. He also became interested in real estate in that city, owning some property in partnership with a brother-in-law. In 1878 Mr. Miller bought forty acres of land near Parlier, where he located in 1880, making that his home until recently, when he sold out and has now moved to his new home on the banks of the Kings river, just opposite Reedley. This consists of forty-four acres, ten of which are planted to oranges, and twelve acres to Smyrna figs.

In Illinois, August 19, 1866, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Ardalissa M. Dryer, a native of that state, and a daughter of Albert and Louisa (Weber) Dryer, natives respectively of Vermont and Pennsylvania, but of Holland descent. They were among the early settlers of Montgomery county, Ill., and were held in high esteem there. They were prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he was an officer and leader. He died at the age of ninety years and she at the age of eighty-four years. They were the parents of six children, who are all living, three of them being in California. Rev. and Mrs. Miller became the parents of three sons and one daughter, of whom George A., a graduate of the Stanford University, is pastor of the English-speaking Methodist Episcopal Church in Manila, Philippine Islands; Charles D. is located in Los Angeles, Cal.; Clara I. is at home; and John M. is attending Stanford University. The daughter is a well-known teacher of music. In his political convictions Mr. Miller is independent, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

AXEL THEODOR LINDGREN. As cashier and secretary of the Kingsburg State Bank, of Fresno county, Axel Theodor Lindgren is one of the prominent business men of Kingsburg. He was born in McPherson county, Kans., February 10, 1872, a son of S. P. Lindgren. The latter was a native of Sweden who came to the United States in 1868 and located in Chicago, Ill., thence going to Lindsborg, Kans., becoming secretary of that colony when organized and for many years conducting a hotel and drug store in the place. He came to California in 1888 and located in Kingsburg Colony, where he engaged in farming until his death in February, 1902, at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, formerly Martha Olson, also a native of Sweden, survives him and makes her home with her son, Axel Theodor. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters, of whom A. T. Lindgren was the youngest. He received his preliminary education in the common schools, after which he took one year at the Lindsborg College. He located in California when sixteen years old and here grew to manhood. In 1899 he was made manager of the Linnea Packing Company at Parlier and Kingsburg, the following year taking a leave of absence and going to Nome, Alaska. While there he made his expenses, but after a few months returned to California and resumed the duties of his position. In 1902 he entered the Stockton Business College and took a commercial course, and in 1904 was active in the organization of the Kingsburg State Bank, of which he became secretary and cashier. He was also one of the organizers of the Rochdale store, and also of the Mutual Protective Fire Insurance Association here. He is still associated with the Linnea Packing Company as secretary, and in addition to these interests owns a sixty-acre ranch, where he raises orchard fruits, grapes, stock, etc., having received at one time the first prize at the state fair for his Poland China hogs, and in 1904 secured the seventh prize on Buff Leghorn chickens at the St. Louis Exposition. He also owns a packing house and warehouse here, which he leases. He is a member of the Swedish Mission Church, of this place, and politically is an active Prohibitionist, during the last campaign serving as president and secretary of the committee.

FRED SARRINGHAUSEN. Four and a half miles southwest of Reedley, Fresno county, Cal., is located the ranch of one hundred and sixty acres belonging to Fred Sarringhausen, one of the enterprising agriculturists of this section. He was born in Ripley county, Ind., November 17, 1858, a son of Nicholas Sarringhausen, a native of Germany, who came to the United States in 1850 and located as a farmer in Ripley county, Ind., where his death occurred. His wife, Maggie Sarringhausen, also a native of Germany, died in Indiana in 1865. They were the parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom Fred Sarringhausen was the third in order of birth. He received a very limited education in the common schools of his native state. Losing his mother when only seven years old and his father when eleven, he made his home with an aunt for a time, when he became dependent upon his own resources and found employment on a farm in Indiana. In 1882 he came to California and first located in Fresno, where he worked on a ranch until 1884, subsequently purchasing eighty acres near Reedley, but continuing to make his home in Fresno, however, until 1887, when he purchased his present property, of which fifty acres is devoted to alfalfa, five acres to orchard, and fifty-five acres to vines of raisin grapes, the balance being given over to the raising of grain. He also devotes his ranch of eighty acres to grain, owning in all two hundred and twenty-five acres, of which twenty-five acres is overflow land along the river. He also conducts a dairy of seventeen cows. On his place he has a stock-grower's winery and also a grower's packing house. He has recently rebuilt his residence and has made many other improvements which have increased the value of his property.

In Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Sarringhausen was united in marriage with Sophia Clostermier, a native of Indiana, and they are the parents of the following children, all at home: Serena A. M., Hazel Dorothy, Dorma F. D. and Elenor Sophia. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

GEORGE S. COLQUHOUN. Nearly the entire life of G. S. Colquhoun has been passed in Fresno, where he has worked himself up from a lowly position to one of importance. This success is the result of his own efforts, as he has never had the benefit of influence, his position being the just reward for many years of honest labor. Born in Oakland, September 26, 1872, he is a son of M. W. and Annie E. (Bouton) Colquhoun, the former a native of Cornwall, Ontario. The grandfather emigrated to Canada from Scotland at a very early day, and besides carrying on a farm also acted as Indian agent for the Canadian government. M. W. Colquhoun was a stationary engineer in his native country prior to locating in California in 1866. On first coming to the west he went to the mines near Virginia City, Nev., where he filled a position as stationary engineer until 1879. In that year he located in Eldorado county, where he followed the same vocation until 1881, when he removed to Fresno. Here he entered the employ of the Fresno Water Company as an engineer, continuing in their employ until he was accidentally killed by an explosion in the engine room. At the time of his death he was fifty-two years of age. Fraternally he was a member of the Masons, and personally he was a man well liked, as was shown by his large circle of friends in Fresno. His wife was born in Hillsboro, Ill., a daughter of William and Olive Bouton, who came to California in 1860. Mr. Bouton lived for a time in the Sacramento valley, but after the terrible flood of 1862 he removed to Virginia City, and later to Silver City, Nev. Here he was subsequently made postmaster and also acted as justice of the peace. He is now living retired in Santa Barbara, while his daughter makes her home with her son, our subject.

George S. Colquhoun was nine years of age when his father came to Fresno. Here he attended the public schools until he was fourteen. At that early age he started to learn the trade of a plumber under the direction of Weaver & Dunbar, and the following nine years were devoted to this vocation. Subsequently, for four years, he was in the employ of the Fresno Gas and Electric Light Company as repair-man. The company recognizing his efficiency, in 1898 he was promoted to the office of superintendent of the entire works. In 1902 the California Gas and Electric corporation purchased the plant, and Mr. Colquhoun was made general superintendent. Since that time improvements have been made and the company now has one of the best equipped establishments of the kind in the state. All this has been done under the direct supervision of the superintendent, who has labored industriously to make the business a success.

In Fresno the marriage of Mr. Colquhoun and Mrs. Dora Edith (Lynn) Fairweather was celebrated in 1904. She is the daughter of Theodore A. Lynn, an early settler of this state, who crossed the plains in the customary way. He is now living retired in the city of Fresno. Mr. Colquhoun is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He also holds membership in the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and takes an active interest in the up-building of the city and county.

GEORGE W. WYLLIE. Immediately adjoining Dinuba on the southwest lies Karnak, the home of Mr. Wyllie and declared by competent judges to be as fine a vineyard as California may boast. With the exception of five acres devoted to buildings, lawns and gardens, the entire tract of one hundred and sixty acres is under cultivation to grapes, fifty-five acres being in Muscats, twenty-five in the seedless variety, twenty-five acres in Malaga table grapes and fifty in Emperor table grapes. To facilitate the work he erected a large and well-equipped packing house, where shipments are prepared for the eastern markets. Although the place has been in its present owner's possession for a few years only, such has been the energy and judgment with which he has superintended the vines that in the third year he shipped fifteen carloads and in the fourth year shipped more than forty cars, when under ordinary circumstances few or no shipments would have been possible. One of the improvements on the place, and which shows him to be an excellent carpenter and mason, is a stone bridge across the canal flanked with substantial stone piers and finished with a solid wall each way.

The Wyllie family came from Scotland, John Wyllie, who was a native of Edinburgh, became a pioneer farmer of Lee county, Iowa, where he improved a tract of three hundred and twenty acres until it was considered the best farm in the entire county. On that place he remained until his death in 1872. After coming to America he married Sarah Best, who was born in Illinois, of an old Pennsylvania family, and now makes her home in Los Banos, Merced county, Cal. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters, of whom two daughters are deceased. Of the sons Frank makes his home in Riverdale, Cal., James M. lives near Gilroy, and George W. resides near Dinuba. The last-named, who was second among the children, was born near Keokuk, Lee county, Iowa, February 12, 1856, and as a boy lived with his parents in a log cabin, meanwhile attending common schools and the Denmark Academy. When twenty-one years of age he came to California and for three years taught school in Sutter county, then was similarly employed in Colfax, Cal., and later went to Santa Rosa, where he bought a fruit farm. The climate did not prove satisfactory, but the soil was excellent. At the time of the New Orleans exposition he sent there a pumpkin, weighing two hundred and twelve pounds, and so large that he could not reach around it so as to lift it from the ground. The pumpkin contained a statement that it was raised on his farm. A visitor at the exposition noticed and admired the pumpkin and on coming to California later visited the farm and bought it from Mr. Wyllie. In 1884, after selling, Mr. Wyllie moved to Fresno county and bought one hundred and sixty acres three and one-half miles southeast of Fresno, which he improved, at the same time for a year acting as vice-principal of the Fresno school, and for one year being principal of the Washington colony. The place cost him $4,000 and two years later, after he had set out a vineyard and sown a large acreage of alfalfa, he sold it for $14,000. His next location was near Fresno, where he bought forty acres at $250 per acre. The land was wholly destitute of improvements. Soon he had forty acres in Muscat grapes, which he carefully cultivated until it brought him large crops year after year and enabled him to sell raisins profitably during all of the hard times. In 1899 he sold the place for $14,000 cash, gold, which was the largest price ever paid up to that time for a forty-acre vineyard. Afterward for four years he rented the place of the new owner, whom he paid ten per cent on $14,000 per year as rental. Meanwhile, in 1900, he bought three hundred and twenty acres on section 18, southwest of Dinuba, and here he erected a house in 1903 and brought his family. Since coming to this place he has sold a quarter section in twenty-acre colony lots, and the balance of the acreage, with the exception of five acres, is under grape culture. Ever since the organization of the Raisin Growers' Association, in which he was warmly interested, he has been active in its work, as indeed in all movements allied with the industry to which he devotes his attention. In religion he is of the United Presbyterian faith and in politics favors Prohibition principles. In Salinas, Cal., he married Miss Emma E. Nichols, who was born at Dutch Flat, Placer county, Cal., her father, George, having been a miner in early days and later a merchant. The children of their union are Roy (a student in the University of California), Eva M., Minnie L., Mabel, Carrie Irene, Kirby Ray and Corinne, who are with their parents on the Dinuba homestead.

THOMAS E. COLLINS. Fresno has a citizen in Thomas E. Collins who has at all times been found true to every trust reposed in him. Since locating in this city he has been identified with all the movements calculated to be of material benefit to the city or county. Prominent politically, he is personally acquainted with the leading men of the state, and as a hotel man he has established an enviable reputation.

A native of Ireland, Mr. Collins was born in County Cork, June 20, 1862. His early life was spent on a farm and attending the schools of the neighborhood. Hearing much of the opportunities offered young men in America, Mr. Collins, in August, 1881, bade goodbye to home and friends and departed from his native country to take up the battle of life in America. He has never regretted the decision made and the present shows he has made the best of his chances. On landing in New York he at once proceeded to San Francisco, where he soon after secured employment as a street car conductor. Later he secured a position on the cable line, continuing there until 1884, when he went to Merced and entered the employ of William Fahey, who at the time was proprietor of the Tuolumne Hotel. Two months later he became manager of the hotel, which he conducted until 1886, when he became associated with J. B. Baker, with whom he remained until 1894. In September of that year he came to Fresno, and in partnership with his brother, Daniel E., leased the Ogle House, with which he has since been connected.

January 1, 1897, Mr. Collins purchased the interest of his brother and has since been sole proprietor of the business. During these years he has made many improvements in the building and in the service. In 1897 an addition was erected, containing twelve rooms, and the entire plan of the hotel was changed. Again in 1903 extensive improvements were made, the whole establishment being thoroughly overhauled. New furniture was put in, better service was arranged for, the whole going to make his hotel one of the best equipped in this section of the state. The house is conducted on the American plan, and those who have enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. Collins will vouch for the excellence of the general management. Located opposite the Southern Pacific depot and the Chamber of Commerce building, it is convenient to the trading center, a fact which is much appreciated by out-of-town visitors.

In Merced Mr. Collins was united in marriage with Mary Quilty, who is also a native of Ireland. To this union have been born four children, as follows: Mary Julia, Annie Mercedes, Margaret Josephine and Edward Thomas. Mrs. Collins takes pleasure in assisting her husband, and much of the success that he has attained is due to the good influences and popularity of his most estimable wife. Mr. Collins is interested in several outside ventures, including the Southern Pacific Oil Mining Company, of which he is vice-president and one of the largest stockholders. In Kern county he owns a ten-acre tract which is equipped with wells and a fine pumping plant.

Politically Mr. Collins is a staunch Democrat, and is one of the active workers in that party, at present being a member of the state central committee and serving on the executive board. While he has never cared for the honors of public office, he has, nevertheless, been one of the party's hardest workers, and many successful candidates owe their election to the executive ability of Mr. Collins. In fraternal circles he is a member of the Young Men's Institute, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Foresters of America. He is also a charter member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and was formerly on the executive committee. In this organization he has taken a deep interest, and the list of members contains no name that is more prominently associated with the success of the Chamber than that of Mr. Collins. Coming to this country a total stranger, without money or influence, he has worked his way up until today he is considered one of the influential men of Fresno. This position was secured by perseverance and the ability to take advantage of the opportunities as they were presented.

ASA I. POWELL. A successful rancher, Asa I. Powell enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of his fellow townsmen, holding a high place among the citizens of Reedley, Fresno county, where he has made his home for some time. He is a native of Cambridge county, Vt., where he was born January 24, 1842, a descendant of an old family of Vermont, his father's birth occurring there August 27, 1814. His grandfather, Erastus Powell, also a native of Vermont, served as a patriot in the war of 1812. Salmon Powell removed to Chittenden county, in manhood, and engaged as a farmer until his retirement from the active cares of life, when he came to California, in 1902, and now makes his home with his son at the age of ninety years. His wife, formerly Sarah Ingalls, a native of Vermont, died in Underhill March 24, 1872. They were the parents of six sons and one daughter, of whom Asa I. Powell is the second in order of birth. The other son, Erastus, served in the Thirteenth Vermont Volunteers and died at Camp Corosa, Virginia, May 25, 1863.

Asa I. Powell received his education in the common schools of his native state, and in manhood engaged in farming at Jericho and Underhill, both towns of that state. In the spring of 1890 he went to Jersey county, Ill., and that fall came to California and located at Reedley, Fresno county, in December purchasing twenty acres in Curtis and Shumale Colony. He made the first improvements upon the property, which he planted to fruit and vines, with the passing years transforming it into a valuable property. In 1901 he removed to San Jose for the purpose of educating a niece who made her home with him, and after one year returned to Fresno county. He then rented his ranch and located permanently in Reedley. His niece, Emma M. Powell, graduated at the State Normal and is now a teacher in Fresno county. Mr. Powell has been married twice, his first wife, whom he married in 1864, being Thirza Story in maidenhood, and a native of Vermont, where she died October 2, 1885. They had one child, Erastus Clark, who died May 2, 1888. Mr. Powell was united in marriage in September, 1890, with Lora T. Palmer, of Illinois, and her death occurred here January 1, 1894. Mr. Powell is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is steward and trustee, and is very active in all church work. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

HENRY PHILIP HEDGES. The success achieved by Henry Philip Hedges, an old resident of Fresno and an honored and esteemed citizen, has been entirely the result of his own unaided efforts, and his ability, energy and determination to win a competence. A native of Warren county, N. Y., he was born in Chestertown, August 20, 1824. His father, Philip Hedges, was born in Montauk Point, Long Island, in 1786, the descendant of English ancestry. He became an early settler of Warren county, N. Y., where he engaged as a farmer until his death, which occurred in Chestertown, December 27, 1865. He was a patriot in the war of 1812 and a worthy and esteemed citizen of the community where he made his home for so many years. His wife, formerly Mary Stickney, was a native of the town of Northumberland, N. Y. She died in 1831, leaving a family of three children, two of whom are now living. Moses S. Hedges, a soldier in a New York regiment during the Civil war, resides on the old home place in Chestertown at the age of eighty-four years.

Reared on the paternal farm, Henry Philip Hedges received his education in the public school. He remained at home until attaining his majority, helping his father with the harvest after his twenty-first birthday, when he set out in the world dependent upon his own resources. His first winter he spent in the timber lands, engaged in lumbering, setting out without a dollar with which to provide the necessary outfit, like many others securing credit at the local store until the spring, when he was paid for his work; Shortly afterward he located in Seneca Falls, N. Y., where he found employment in the woolen mills for a period of three years, following which he acted as superintendent of a farm and saw mill in Washington (now Ozaukee) county, Wis., for three years. He then purchased land and improved and cultivated a farm until 1863, becoming a prominent and successful man of that community, serving as township clerk, justice of the peace and other minor offices. Removing to Coldwater, Mich., he purchased a farm, which he made his home until 1865. He then became a resident of Waubeek, Linn county, Iowa, where he engaged in a mercantile enterprise for many years, serving as justice of the peace and township clerk, etc., during his long residence there. In 1881 he sold out, and, coming to California, located in Fresno, which was then but a small town. He bought considerable property, forty acres, then a mile out, on what became Blackstone avenue, and which he afterward laid out in lots and sold as Hedges' Addition. He also had one hundred and sixty acres two miles north of Fresno on the same avenue, eighty acres of which he sold, while the remainder he laid out and designated as the Hedges Colony. He built a residence at No. 2505 Fresno street, which is now the home of the family; also erected the building occupied by Chesnutwood's Business College, two business houses on K street, between Fresno and Mariposa streets, as well as various residences throughout the city. Mr. Hedges has been an important factor in the upbuilding and development of Fresno, and is justly named among the representative citizens of this community.

In New York state, in Cato, Cayuga county, June 8, 1850, Mr. Hedges was united in marriage with Mary Hunt, a native of Ontario, and the daughter of Benjamin Hunt, of Vermont. He was a comb manufacturer and later in life engaged in farming near Coldwater, Mich., where he was accidentally killed in a runaway, at the age of eighty years. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and an esteemed resident of the place where he lived for so many years. His wife, formerly Thankful Tolman, was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., and died in Michigan. Mrs. Hedges was next to the youngest in a family of six children, four of whom are living, her birth occurring November 22, 1826. To Mr. and Mrs. Hedges were born the following children: Luella, who became the wife of A. T. Stevens, and died in Fresno in 1903; Charles, who died at the age of twenty-five in Iowa; Mary, the wife of John H. Pefly, of Amedee, Cal.; and Tena, the wife of William Shaw, of Fresno. Mrs. Hedges has been a member of the Baptist Church for sixty years. Fraternally Mr. Hedges was made a Mason in Ozaukee Lodge at Port Washington, Wis., and is now a member of Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M.; Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M.; a charter member of Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T., of which he has served as treasurer since its organization; and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of San Francisco. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

J. HOWARD WILLIAMS. The Williams family flourished for many generations in the state of New Jersey, the first ancestor on American soil being the representative of an old Welsh family. John Williams, the grandfather of J. Howard Williams, a highly esteemed citizen of Portersville, Tulare county, became a farmer in New Jersey. In his family was a son, Daniel S., who was born in Good Luck, N. J., and who, in manhood, followed the sea. He became a captain and a vessel owner, running a line of vessels in the coast trade and also in the West Indies. He carried on an extensive and successful business, investing his large returns in land in his native state until he owned considerable property. He died at the age of seventy-two years, removing from the community a citizen esteemed for his patriotism and loyalty to the best interests of the country, and a man of much personal worth and ability. His wife, formerly Amelia Newbury, was a daughter of Capt. Corlis Newbury, both being natives of Waretown, N. J. He was a sea captain until his retirement from the active duties of life, being in the government service during the war. Mrs. Williams died in New Jersey, leaving two children, of whom the youngest, Daniel S., Jr., died in the same state. The oldest, J. Howard Williams, was born August 9, 1861, in Good Luck (now Lanoka), N. J.

Reared in his native state, J. Howard Williams received his education in Shortlidge's Academy, of Media, Pa., after his graduation going to sea in his father's vessels when twenty years of age. Although he had been on the vessels constantly from boyhood, he began at the bottom, taking his place before the mast and working his way up until he was in charge of a three-master, being then twenty-four years old. He continued in that work until 1887 when he left a seafaring life, and the following year came to California, and spent the winter at San Diego. In 1889 he located in Portersville and engaged in the planning mill business as a manufacturer. Two years later he returned to New Jersey where he spent the ensuing three years, when he once more located in California. In the meantime, in 1894, he had established himself in horticultural lines, by setting out an orange grove on his ranch adjoining Portersville on the east. This ranch consists of one hundred and fifty-five acres, one hundred acres being devoted to oranges and twenty acres to lemons. It is known as the Winter-Haven ranch and is finely located, laid out with drives lined with beautiful rows of palms, while the home is a beautiful and stately residence. The property is under the Pioneer Ditch Company, the irrigation being done by gravitation, while Mr. Williams also has wells and a pumping plant of fifty-horse power, which furnishes an ample supply of water. He is also largely interested in the stock business, having incorporated the Williams & Young Company, which owns a number of ranches consisting of several thousand acres of land. This company conducts a fine dairy farm west of Portersville planted to alfalfa, where they have full-blooded Holstein cattle, specimens from the herd having taken premiums at the Hanford and Tulare fairs. They have undoubtedly the largest herd of full-blooded Holsteins in the county, and one of the largest in the entire San Joaquin valley. Mr. Williams is a member of the Portersville Citrus Association, of which he is ex-president, while for two years he also served as president of the Tulare County Citrus Fruit Exchange. He is a member of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America, and belongs to the State Game and Fish Protective Association, of which he is first vice-president. In addition to his horticultural and stock interests, he was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Portersville, of which he is now vice-president and director.

In Portersville Mr. Williams married Edith B. Howard, of Tomah, Wis., and they are the parents of five children, namely: Helen E., Amelia N., Katharine, Margaret and J. Howard, Jr. Mr. Williams was made a Mason in Harmony Lodge No. 18, of Toms River, N. J., and became a charter member of Portersville Lodge No. 303. He became a Royal Arch Mason in Siloam

Chapter, Camden, N. J., and was raised to the Commandery in Visalia Commandery No. 26. He is also a member of The Lodge Perfection of Visalia, Cal., and of Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco. In religion Mrs. Williams is a member of the Congregational Church.

GILBERT L. BAKER. A genius for mechanical invention, the ability to make almost anything in wood and iron, the capacity for exhaustive agricultural research, and the ability to forcefully and gracefully set down his observations for the guidance of others, combine to make Gilbert Baker one of the most interesting and useful additions to the community of Oakdale and Stanislaus county. As the correspondent for Stanislaus county to Washington for the past eight years, he is probably better informed than any one in the county on its resources, conditions and possibilities, and those familiar with the position realize that the task would entail laborious study and great accuracy of judgment. To Mr. Baker the task is a pleasant one, furnishing an outlet for his strenuous mind, and at the same time enabling him to acquire that comprehensive knowledge which is at once his pride and that of his fellow agriculturists. It is perhaps as an inventor that his name will longest be identified with the west, for fortunately his thought has run in practical channels, and his products must necessarily reach a corresponding number of people. His inventiveness has resulted in six different patents, one of the most ingenious of which is a combination of harness tools, enclosed in a hammer, and containing twelve different tools; another is a lock snap, taking the place of the ordinary snap, but locking securely; a combination tug hook, which is self adjusting; a door lock; a padlock and safe, and a set of permutation locks. Mr. Baker's knowledge of mechanics enables him to make all of his models out of wood or iron, thus rendering impossible the confiscation or misuse of any of the products of his brain. In the interest of his patents he has made two trips to Washington. His inventions have the merit of extreme originality and practicability, and have at once seized upon the popular approval and support.

The life of Mr. Baker began in Berryville, Carroll county, Ark., February 28, 1867, his grandfather, Aaron, having been one of the first settlers of that locality. While yet the timbers were tall, the rivers unnavigated, and the wigwam of the Indian the prevailing style of architecture, this father came from near Lexington, Ky., made his way up the river for sixty miles, and took up four hundred and eighty acres of land where no white man had as yet made his habitation. A rude log house with greased paper window lights and puncheon floors constituted his home for many months, yet he succeeded in making a profitable and paying investment out of his emigration, rearing a large family of children, and at the time of his death, in 1887, at the age of eighty-five, had cause to view with gratitude the inspiration which led his steps to the wilderness of Carroll county. His son, Alfred, the father of Gilbert L., was born on this pioneer farm, and in time owned and operated land in the same locality. He owned two hundred and forty acres of as fine farm land as the county contained, and his industry brought wealth and comforts his way, as they were understood and appreciated in that day. He died while yet in the zenith of his powers, in 1891, at the age of forty-nine. During his boyhood days in Carroll county he played with the children of one George S. Moody, the latter one of the pioneers of the county, and the owner of a fine five hundred and twenty acre stock and general farm. Mr. Moody was a noted musician, and the composer of songs which he himself sang in a sweet and sympathetic voice, and his home was naturally the scene of much hospitality. His daughter Adelaide grew into a graceful and home-loving woman, and from a school-day friendship, her regard for Alfred Baker developed into something deeper, and their marriage was one of the social events of Carroll county. She became the mother of eight children, five of whom are living, and died at the early age of thirty-six, deeply mourned by a large circle of friends.

Reared on the home farm in Carroll county, Ark., Gilbert L. Baker had more than the average educational chances granted the middle-west farmer lad of his time, attending the public schools, and the Berryville Academy, graduating from the latter April 7, 1882. As evidencing his ambitious tendencies, and preconceived plans, two days after his graduation, on April 9, he started for California, arriving in the Waterford district, Stanislaus county, April 19, 1882. His uncle, William Wilkinson Baker, an Argonaut of 1849, and an extensive farmer, gave him a royal welcome, and under his guidance he pursued the studies in agriculture which had already engaged his time and attention in Arkansas. Eighteen months later he engaged in independent ranching, and in 1888 rented seven hundred and twenty acres of land near Waterford, where he began to raise stock and grain, and in time increased his holdings to twelve hundred and eighty acres. In 1891 he purchased three hundred and one acre of bottom land on the Tuolumne river, and in 1902 bought six hundred and fifty-six acres four miles south of Oakdale, since which time he has operated his own land exclusively. Needless to say that his property is a model of wise management and perfect method, or that the most ingenious of machinery is utilized for its harvesting. A blacksmith shop on his farm enables him to satisfy his craving for manufacture, and practically all of the machinery on his place is the work of his own hands. That purchased because of its bulk and want of facility for proper making is subject to novel and practical changes on the part of the owner, even standard machines, supposed to represent the highest achievements of the agricultural mind, coming in for a share of his inventive skill. He even manufactures his own tools, and probably no outfit thus put together has been of greater use or achieved more practical results. His earnings have of necessity been large, and as a result of his faith in the future of Oakdale he has invested heavily in her town property, owning numerous desirable lots besides that upon which his own delightful home has been built, and of which the family took possession in 1902. In Oakdale, Mr. Baker married Mabel Roberts, born at Knight's Ferry, Cal., a daughter of Thomas Roberts, now deceased, the original owner and builder of the Oakdale Water Works. Two children comprise the Baker household, Irwin and Ethel. Mr. Baker is a Democrat, and an attendant at the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a man of remarkable reserve force, of unflagging industry, and of great belief in the ability of mankind in general. While naturally gifted, he is the advocate of perseverance as an avenue to success, and believes that more can be accomplished by the average individual than he knows of or himself believes. His achievements, both as an inventor and as an advocate of the climatic and other resources of Stanislaus county as embodied in his monthly reports to the agricultural department at Washington, reflect lasting credit upon his adopted state, besides placing him among the wealthiest and most prominent of the men who have aided the agricultural upbuilding of the county.

MARTIN MADSEN. Denmark has furnished the United States with many successful men and there is scarcely a state in the Union but has been greatly benefited by this class of citizens, especially the states of the west and northwest, where pioneer developing work has been done in the past fifty years. Among this class of Danish-born Americans who have come to this country without money or friends and by their own efforts have made a success in life may be mentioned Martin Madsen. At an early age he started out to make his own way in the world, since which time he has climbed the ladder of success rung by rung until now he is at the top.

In no other country in the world can a man rise, by his own efforts, to such an enviable position.

A native of Denmark, Martin Madsen was born January 28, 1857, a son of Madsen and Bertha (Jorgensen) Jensen. The father was a farmer, which occupation he followed up to the time of his death in 1895. His wife bore him eight children, five of whom are living, two being residents of this state, Martin, and a brother, Jens, who resides near Fowler. Martin Madsen was reared on his father's farm and obtained a limited common school education. In 1874 he determined to start out in life for himself, and as he had heard much of the opportunities which existed in America, he bade good-by to home and friends and sailed for New York. The first location was in Perth Amboy, N. J., where he followed the trade of a butcher, working for others until 1879, when he engaged in the same business for himself, continuing there until 1881. He then sold out and returned to his native country for a visit. After three months he again came to this country, locating in California. Taking up his residence in Fresno, he has since made this place his home, and during the years of his residence here has gained a comfortable competence. Soon after arriving in Fresno he opened a meat market on Mariposa street, which he conducted for a period of ten years. In 1888 he formed a partnership with Thomas Pickford, the firm bearing the name of Madsen & Pickford, wholesale dealers in meat, etc. This firm, under the personal direction of Mr. Madsen, met with splendid success and built up a large business enterprise, which was continued until 1891, when Mr. Madsen sold his interest to Mr. Pickford. Subsequently, accompanied by his family, he crossed the water to the country of his nativity, spending seven months in Denmark and touring other countries in Europe. On his return to Fresno he engaged in farming, which he followed until 1901, when he again formed a partnership, this time uniting his business interests with M. L. Woy, under the firm name of Woy & Madsen, dealers in real estate, with offices at No. 1138 J street. In addition to the real estate business the firm also dealt extensively in oil stocks, Mr. Madsen being prominently identified with several of the largest oil companies in the state, including the Commercial Oil Company, of which he was one of the organizers and is now a director, and the Montana-Fresno Oil Company, being also a member of the board of directors in this organization. In the meantime Mr. Madsen has been extensively interested in farming, stock raising and fruit growing. Eight miles southwest of Fresno he owns six hundred and forty acres, which he devotes to the growing of alfalfa. On Blackstone avenue, one mile out of town, where he makes his home, he has forty-five acres, devoted to an orchard and vineyard. In 1902 he laid out the "Poppy Colony," located one mile north of Fresno. This tract was divided into five, ten and twenty acreages, most of which have already been sold.

Since coming here Mr. Madsen has been united in marriage with Anna Dorothea Petersen, a native of Denmark, and to them have been born the following children: Bertha, Martin, Theodore and Nadine, all living at home. In politics Mr. Madsen is a staunch Republican, but aside from casting his vote and being deeply interested in the success of the party he has never cared to take part in public affairs, preferring rather to devote his time and attentions to his own business interests. Fraternaly he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. Both he and his wife occupy a prominent place in the various social circles of Fresno, and are highly respected.

JAMES JOHN REYBURN. Owing to the death of his father, J. J. Reyburn obtained but a limited education, having had to make his own way in the world from an early age. A native of Ohio, he was born in Miami county, August 14, 1836, a son of John Stewart Reyburn, who was born in the state of Kentucky. The grandfather was a soldier in the war of 1812. On reaching maturity J. S. Reyburn removed to Miami county, Ohio, where he followed the trade of a cabinet maker until 1839, when he migrated to Burlington, Iowa. Later in life he purchased a farm near that city, on which he was living at the time of his death, May 31, 1840. His wife bore the maiden name of Nancy Davidson. She was born in Virginia and died in Iowa, September 30, 1860. Of her union with Mr. Reyburn four children were born, two of whom are living, a son Joseph, and James John, of this review. The former crossed the plains to Oregon in 1862 and later located in Stanislaus county, this state. Subsequently he lived for a time in Fresno county, but later removed to the Jefferson district, where he is now living.

James J. Reyburn was the third child of the family of four children and was but a boy when his father died. This made it necessary for him to strike out for himself at an early age. His first employment was on a farm five miles west of Burlington, Iowa. Later he entered a flour mill and subsequently purchased an interest in the Franklin Mill at Des Moines, Iowa, where he continued in business until 1866, when he sold out and went to Missouri. Locating in Scotland county he engaged in general farming and stock-raising until 1873, when he disposed of all his interests in the east and came to California. First going to Stanislaus county, he became interested in raising wheat near Salida, remaining there until 1875, when he moved to the Big Dry Creek district in Fresno county. Here he pre-empted and homesteaded a tract of land, later adding by purchase until he owned six hundred and forty acres, all in one body on Big Dry Creek, fourteen miles northeast of Fresno, at a place called Red Bank. He continued living on this place until the spring of 1890, devoting his attention to the raising of wheat, at times having many acres of rented land under cultivation. In the last year mentioned he purchased eighty acres of land ten miles northeast of Fresno, set out a vineyard and orchard, both of which are now in fine bearing, of which he retains forty acres. While living on this ranch he engaged in raising fancy chickens, and at the poultry exhibitions secured many prizes for his fine birds. In 1903 he disposed of his six hundred and forty acre ranch on Big Dry Creek and located in Fresno, where he is now living a retired life, although he still looks after his various interests.

In Mount Pleasant, Iowa, Mr. Reyburn married Mary McDonald, and to them have been born five children, namely: John S., deceased; Chester H., William D., Clarence J., and Nancy, the wife of M. M. Shaver. Mr. Reyburn has at all times taken an active interest in county affairs, and while living on his ranch acted as school trustee for several years. In politics a Republican, he is deeply interested in the welfare of the party. He has seen many changes in the San Joaquin valley since first coming here, and in the onward march of civilization he has performed his part.

JAMES H. MORTON. The Morton family, well-known and widely esteemed throughout Tulare county, was established in America by James Morton, a native of the north of Ireland, who came to New York state and thence via the Isthmus of Panama to California. He first followed mining in Tuolumne county and was later located in Mariposa county until 1860, when he began stock-raising on the west side, on the Orestimba, Stanislaus county. He remained in that location for some time, when he removed to Merced Plains and continued in the same business. In 1880 he located in Tulare county, where, in partnership with Timothy Paige, he purchased a three-thousand-acre tract of the Bain ranch, and under his direction orchards were set out—the beginning of horticulture on a commercial scale in Tulare county. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1894 at the age of sixty-one years, twelve hundred acres had been put to orchard and vineyard, and success had accompanied the venture in a measure to place Mr. Morton among the representative horticulturists of this section. His wife, formerly Jane Ball, was also a native of the north of Ireland, their marriage having taken place in New York. Her death occurred in San Jose in January, 1903. Born of their union was a son, James H. Morton, whose birth occurred at Horseshoe Bend, Mariposa county, July 22, 1864.

James H. Morton was reared principally in the northern counties of the San Joaquin valley, removing at the age of seventeen years to Tulare county, where he took an active part with his father in the setting out of orchards and their cultivation. He remained so occupied until 1891, when with a son of his father's partner and L. F. Montegale he bought and set out a vineyard of three hundred acres. Later he purchased independently a tract of six hundred and forty acres six miles northeast of Tulare, where he began improving an orchard of two hundred and forty acres, set to peaches and plums, while the balance of the ranch was devoted to alfalfa. At the same time he improved and developed a handsome property in Tulare city, owning one hundred and thirty acres, which is devoted to a fine dairy. He has beautified his place in many ways, one noticeable feature being the row of palms, which he has set out along the drive from the house. In horticultural pursuits he is justly considered an authority, having done much to bring to a prominent place this branch of work in Tulare county. He is as well identified with many of the most important enterprises in this section, being interested in the Tulare Flour Milling Company, a director in the Rochdale Company, and a director in the Bank of Tulare. Mr. Morton has also won for himself the respect and esteem of the citizens of Tulare county for his excellent services rendered as a member of the Bond Liquidating Committee, which succeeded in compromising with the bondholders at forty-one cents on the dollar, making possible the liquidation of the Tulare Irrigation District bonds. By this equal assessment they secured the consent of property owners, both local and foreign, which paid off the $500,000 bonds and accrued interest, thus placing the land owners free from an incumbrance which had hung over them for years, and had more or less impeded progress and advancement, as it seemed at one time impossible to pay off this great indebtedness. The benefit of this movement is incalculable, the change which is noticeable in the comparatively brief time since the event being only the presage of the prosperity yet to follow.

In San Francisco Mr. Morton was united in marriage with Cora Wallace, who was born in Placer county, Cal., a daughter of William H. Wallace. He came to California about 1850 from Massachusetts, and engaged in business in San Francisco, becoming the head of the firm of Sisson Wallace & Co., wholesale merchants and bankers. He was also largely interested in lands in the San Joaquin valley and was an important factor in the development and upbuilding of the best interests of the country. His death occurred in San Francisco. Mr. Morton is a Republican in his political convictions, and fraternally is a Mason, having been made a member of that organization in Tulare lodge.

LEVI GARRETT. In the history of Mr. Garrett there is much that is worthy of emulation. His life is a splendid illustration of what one may accomplish if he but possess the grit and determination to succeed. In young manhood he had no special advantages, but as a result of his industry and perseverance he is to-day the leading citizen in the thriving town of Kingsburg, and while he has written the word "success" in a bold hand, he has at no time neglected his duties as a citizen. On the contrary, he has been most active in promoting the welfare of his state and country.

A native of Pennsylvania, Levi Garrett was born in Delaware county, near the city of Philadelphia, February 27, 1842. His father, Simeon, was also born in the Keystone state, and as a man became engaged in the mercantile business and general farming, in Delaware county, seven miles from Philadelphia, where he lived until his death. He married Julia Ann Hall, also a native of Pennsylvania, whose death took place in Wilmington, Del., in 1865. She became the mother of six children, Levi being the fourth child. He received a good common school education, which was supplemented by a course in the Fairville Academy. On September 6, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry. His company was attached to the Army of the Potomac and Mr. Garrett participated in thirty-two battles, including Cold Harbor, Fair Oaks, Gettysburg, the siege of Richmond, and many other of the most important engagements of the Civil war. While he was never wounded he had several narrow escapes. At the battle of Cold Harbor his saber was cut from his hand, and while in front of Richmond a bullet tore his spur off. After three years of active service he was honorably discharged, his papers being dated September 6, 1865. Following his discharge he returned to Philadelphia, and soon after engaged in farming in Delaware county. A year later he went to Chester county, the same state, and remained two years. He then returned to Delaware county for a short time, and finally purchased a farm, near Wilmington, Del. Later he engaged in the meat business, and in 1878 he again went to Philadelphia where he lived until 1887, the year of his arrival in this state. He located in Kingsburg July 1, 1889. Soon after taking up his residence here he became interested in the warehouse, taking charge for The Granger Bank of San Francisco. May 1, 1890, he purchased the livery stable which business he has since conducted, although he is interested in many other ventures. Public spirited he assisted in organizing the local board of trade and is now president of that body. He is also interested in the Kingsburg bank, being its present vice-president. As secretary and treasurer of the Kingsburg Colony Ditch Company, he has been influential in making that business a success. It is worthy of mention that every business house or block has been burnt in Kingsburg except the livery barn owned by Mr. Garrett.

In West Chester, Chester county, Pa., Mr. Garrett was united in marriage with Elizabeth C. Richards and to this union have been born four children, viz.: Josephine H., now Mrs. James A. B. Hanby, of Fresno; Theona, now Mrs. E. G. Dobson, of Hanford; Emily B., the wife of Dr. M. A. Gilreath, of Selma, whose sketch will be found on another page of this work; and Charles H., who lives at home.

In political matters Mr. Garrett is a staunch Republican and has been one of the most active workers of the party in this county. For six years he served as deputy sheriff and for four years was constable of this place. He is also a member of the county central committee. While living in Wilmington, Del., he served for four years as a member of the city council. In fraternal matters Mr. Garrett has also been quite active. He was made a Mason while living in Wilmington thirty-two years ago. He also joined the Odd Fellows in the same city. For the purpose of keeping up old associations he has for years been a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and has served as an aide-de-camp on the staff of General Rice, the department commander. Although well along in years, Mr. Garrett is still hale and hearty, an exception to most veterans of the Civil war. Far-sighted and possessed of a keen business judgment he has prospered, and both he and his most estimable wife have scores of friends in whose homes they are at all times welcome visitors.

JASPER NEWTON MUSICK. There is probably no man residing in Fresno that has taken a more active part in the upbuilding of the city and county than has the gentleman whose name introduces this review. Born near Jefferson City, Mo., Jasper N. Musick is a son of Abraham and Nancy (Davis) Musick. The father, a native of Wayne county, Va., of Scotch-Irish descent, removed to Kentucky when a boy and after reaching his majority migrated to Missouri, locating near what is now Jefferson City. At that early day St. Louis was only a small trading post. There on the western frontier he purchased land and improved a farm, at the time of his death owning four hundred acres of fine land, all under cultivation. In politics he was a Democrat and in religious belief a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He died at the ripe old age of ninety-three years. His wife, who was born in Kentucky, of English descent, died at the age of eighty-five years. By her union with Mr. Musick she became the mother of fifteen children, twelve of whom reached maturity and three of whom are still living. One son, Jeremiah, came to California after the close of the Civil war and here engaged in an extensive stock business. Later he purchased land in Fresno and laid out an addition. He died in January, 1904. Another son, Thomas, died on a farm owned by his brother, J. N.

Jasper N. Musick was the sixth child in the parental family. His early life was spent on his father's farm, although he was allowed to attend a few terms of school held in a log school-house. At the age of seventeen he started out in life for himself and in company with an older brother, Chesley, he crossed the plains to California, the party arriving here in the fall of 1850. As far as Salt Lake the trip was made with ox teams, but at the latter place they decided more rapid progress could be made with horses, so traded their oxen and continued the journey. On their arrival in Hangtown they were surprised to see the very oxen they had traded standing in the streets, having arrived several days previous and in much better condition than the horses, thus showing that the "race does not always go to the swiftest." As did nearly all the emigrants, Mr. Musick entered the mines, and for six years followed mining in Amador county, meeting with reasonable success. In 1856 he settled in what was then Mariposa county, but shortly afterward came to Fresno county. He had not been here long ere the Indians were on the war-path, making it necessary for every able-bodied settler to shoulder a musket and go to the front. In this emergency Mr. Musick was not found wanting, being a member of a small company which was present at the battle above the Tule river, where the redmen were defeated and the outbreak quelled. Soon after this he settled at Millerton and engaged in teaming between that place and Stockton and the mines. For hauling provisions from Stockton to the mines he was paid five cents per pound, it requiring ten days to make the round trip. In 1858 he assisted in moving the soldiers from Fort Miller, later in the same year locating on Dry creek, where, in partnership with John G. Simpson, he engaged in the stock business. They also conducted a meat market in Millerton and each spring they drove a band of cattle to Sonora and other places in the mining regions, where they sold their stock for good prices. This partnership was continued with success until 1865, when they dissolved and Mr. Musick entered into the sheep business, establishing his ranch at what is now the town of Letcher. There he entered and purchased land until his ranch now embraces some eight hundred acres, all under cultivation and highly improved. Besides carrying on an extensive stock business, making a specialty of the Short-horn breed, he also raises a large amount of hay and has a fine orchard of oranges and other deciduous fruits, it having been proven that this section of county is especially adapted to the growing of fine oranges.

Up to 1892, the year of his removal to Fresno, Mr. Musick carried on a very prosperous business, but in that year he left the ranch and has since been living in the city. Since locating here he has erected seven residences and in addition owns several building lots. He also owns forty acres adjoining the city near the Pollasky depot, which is now devoted to the growing of alfalfa. At Millerton he owns eighty acres of land on which is located a very fine sulphur spring which is noted for its medicinal qualities. There he has built a summer home where the family reside during the hot months. Located on the proposed electric line that will probably soon be constructed between Fresno and the Yosemite valley, it is quite likely the springs will become a popular resort.

Mr. Musick has been twice married, his first union being with Miss Rebecca Richards, the ceremony being performed on Dry creek. She was a native of Millerton, a daughter of James Richards, who was a pioneer settler of that town. Mrs. Musick became the mother of five children, three of whom reached maturity, as follows: Mary Effie, now the wife of William Henderson of Fresno; Nancy Ann, wife of J. P. Fincher of Westpark; and Laura Isabelle, wife of Benjamin Sims of Fresno. The mother of these children died on the Dry creek ranch.

For his second wife, Mr. Musick married Nancy Jane Messersmith, the wedding occurring at Lemoore, December 27, 1878. She was born in Cole county, Mo., a daughter of Rial Messersmith, a native of Virginia. Mr. Messersmith became a farmer in Cole county, Mo., and after the Civil war came to California, locating at Lemoore, where he engaged in farming. He was living with his daughter, Mrs. Musick, at the time of his death, at the age of eighty-three years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Edna Duncan, was a native of Kentucky, and died in Missouri. She became the mother of nine children.

In politics Mr. Musick has always been an active Democrat and in the early days was a prominent leader of his organization, serving as county supervisor for two terms, being chairman of the board a portion of the time. It was during his incumbency that the county seat was moved from Millerton to Fresno and Mr. Musick was one of the champions of the change, he contending that the county seat should be located on a railroad. He was also in office at the time of the erection of the court house and took an active part in the necessary arrangements and plans. While living on Dry creek, in company with neighbors, he formed a company which built the academy that soon afterward became one of the best schools in that section of the state. Later the building and grounds were deeded to the school district of which Mr. Musick was trustee for many years. It will thus be seen that while he has succeeded in life, he has been prominently identified with many of the most important events that have transpired since he took up his residence in this county.

In fraternal relations he is a member of the Odd Fellows and in religious matters is an influential member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. A resident of the state for over half a century, he has been an eye-witness to the many remarkable changes that have taken place since he crossed the plains. During these years he has had many ups and downs, but as a result of industry and far-sightedness he has accumulated a handsome property, the direct result of his individual efforts. Mr. Musick is a living example of what may be accomplished if one will but persevere and make the best of the opportunities that are presented. Starting out in life at an early age without money or influences he has steadily worked his way upward until today he is one of the most substantial citizens of Fresno county. In early life his advantages were few, but while still a young man he determined to succeed, and with this decision constantly in mind he has labored and saved until now he can enjoy the comforts and luxuries of life, feeling that his life has not been wasted and that while he has succeeded he has not failed to at all times perform his duties as a citizen. The life histories of such men as Mr. Musick contain much that is well worthy of emulation. Both he and his most estimable wife are popular and have hosts of friends wherever they are known.

JAMES MADISON BRALY. A native of Missouri, Mr. Braly was born in Cape Girardeau county, April 26, 1826, a son of Rev. Frank M.

and Elizabeth (Madison) Braly. The father was born in North Carolina, a son of James Braly, who was a native of the same state, of Scotch-Irish descent. He was one of the early settlers of North Carolina, and in 1811 removed with his family to Cape Girardeau county, Mo., where he lived until his death. His son, Rev. Frank, was but a boy when his father removed to the then far west. On reaching man's estate he engaged in farming and was a minister in the Presbyterian Church, following that profession for many years. He finally migrated to Arkansas, locating at Cain Hill, where he died in 1856. He was a very good man and did much good in those early days, and was beloved by all who knew him. His wife, whose maiden name was Madison, was born in Bowling Green, Ky., and died when James M. was but nine years of age. She was a member of the James Madison family.

The early life of James M. Braly was much like that of other boys of that period. His schooling was limited to a few winter terms at the district schools. As soon as old enough he carried on the work of the farm while his father traveled here and there preaching the gospel. In this way he learned the lessons of thrift and industry very thoroughly.

Later he attended the Spring River Academy and there laid the foundation of an education under the tutelage of Robert King, which enabled him to become the scholarly gentleman for which his friends recognize him. During the year of his majority he taught a three months' term of school and following that secured employment as a clerk in a general store at Sarcoxie, Mo. Here he continued until 1850 when, accompanied by others from the same locality he started for California. The long journey across the plains was made with a six mule team and consumed three months and twenty-five days, the party reaching Sacramento August 25. Soon after arrival Mr. Braly engaged in mining on the Yuba river, the spring following going to Nevada City, where he continued at the same occupation for two years. Tiring of mining and with the money he had saved, he located in Santa Clara county, near San Jose, where he became interested in farming, purchasing land near what is now the town of Lawrence. Two years later he went to Amador county, where he remained one year, at the expiration of which time he returned to his farm in Santa Clara county. There he followed farming until 1860, when he went to Virginia City and engaged in mining near Aurora, Nev. While there his camp was visited by Mark Twain, who was collecting material for his story, "Roughing It." While prospecting in Nevada he discovered gold in partnership with James M. Cory. The camp was called Aurora by Mr. Braly, who had the town laid out. He was elected recorder and filled the office for one year. His friends named the mountain south of the town, Mount Braly, in his honor, and as such it is on all the maps. In the winter of 1860 and '61 there were five thousand inhabitants in the town. He was the only civil officer in the camp and disputes of all kinds were decided by him. He followed mining for four years, and during that time the Wells Fargo Express Company shipped fourteen million dollars' worth of gold out of that camp. In 1864 Mr. Braly returned to Santa Clara county. Locating in the city of San Jose he there became engaged in a general merchandise business on First street. Later he sold his stock of goods and established himself in a general mining and brokerage business, which he followed with success until 1881. In that year he came to Fresno and at once became associated with the real estate business. Later he was for a time connected with O. J. Woodward in the same line of business, and together they laid out the Woodward addition to the city of Fresno, consisting of sixty acres which was sold in about three months' time. During these years Mr. Braly has been one of the most active real estate men in the county and has done a great deal to build up and improve this section of the state. Later he erected the business block at the corner of I and Tulare streets, which is 100x75 feet in dimensions, and one of the finest buildings in the city.

While living in Santa Clara county Mr. Braly was united in marriage with Susan I. Braly, a native of Crawford county, Missouri, and a daughter of Rev. John E. and Susan (Hyde) Braly. Her father was born in North Carolina and became a pioneer minister in Missouri. In 1847 he crossed the plains to Oregon. Mr. Braly was captain of the train and the members thereof had a very narrow escape from death, their departure from Fort Whitman occurring just a few days before the fearful massacre of the whites by the Indians. Soon after arriving in Oregon settlement was made in the Willamette valley, where the family resided until 1849, when they came overland to California. The first stop in this state was made at the mouth of the Feather River. Two years later Mr. Braly located in Santa Clara county, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising. He died in San Jose in 1870 at the age of seventy-five years. During those pioneer days he spent much of his time preaching in different sections of the state. It is said that he was the first orthodox minister to deliver a sermon on the Pacific coast, and no one took a more active part in the early work of the church than he. In nearly all the coast counties he formed congregations and erected churches, paying for many of them out of his own pocket. His wife was a daughter of John Hyde, who migrated from his native state of North Carolina to Missouri at a very early day, and who was a direct descendant of the old Hyde family, members of which received a grant of land from the King of England. She lived to reach the age of ninety-three years, her death occurring in San Jose in 1897.

Mrs. Braly, the wife of James M., was the youngest child. She was fortunate enough to receive a splendid education, graduating from the University of the Pacific at San Jose. Since locating in Fresno she has been one of the most active members of the Arbor Club, which organization she assisted in forming. Fresno county owes much to Mrs. Braly, for it is through her efforts that many of the beautiful shade trees now lining the public highways, were planted. Both she and Mr. Braly are very public-spirited and have probably done more than any other couple in promoting and building up the county.

In politics Mr. and Mrs. Braly are warm supporters of the principles and measures of the Democratic party, and during the campaign of 1904 he was treasurer of the Hearst club in this city. In religious views both he and his wife endorse the Presbyterian faith, and in their Christian life they carry the same progressive ideas that they have shown in the business world, believing that one of the best ways to worship God is to do His work sincerely and just as willingly as though it were their own. This worthy couple are now well advanced in years, but both are still hale and hearty.

G. W. ANDERSON has met with success as a member of the real estate firm of Cate & Anderson, with which he has been connected since December, 1904, when he purchased the interest of J. C. Moore, the firm up to that time having been known as Moore & Cate. Mr. Anderson was born in San Francisco, January 28, 1883, a son of Gustav Anderson. The latter came to California in 1881 and found employment in San Francisco as a street car contractor for some time, finally removing to Fresno in 1887, when he engaged in general contracting. He died in 1890, at the age of fifty years. During the Civil war he served in a Michigan regiment of cavalry, and became a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic organization. His wife, formerly Augusta J. Smith, of New York state, died in San Francisco in 1902. They were the parents of three children, all living, of whom John Q. is the secretary of the Pierce Lumber Company, of Fresno, James L., of Fresno, and G. W., the youngest, is the subject of this review.

Fresno has been the home of G. W. Anderson since he was two years old. He received his education in the public schools of this city and afterward attended the high school and the Los Angeles Business College, of Los Angeles, Cal., graduating from the latter institution in 1900. He returned to Fresno and accepted the position of bookkeeper for C. S. Pierce & Co., a lumber firm of this city, maintaining the same creditably until December, 1904, when he resigned to take up his present work as a member of the firm of Cate & Anderson. He purchased an interest in the business, which is both insurance and real estate, and the handling of loans. Mr. Anderson enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who have known him during his brief career in Fresno. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Fresno Lodge No. 247, and also belongs to Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M.

A. W. ANDERSON. The life of Mr. Anderson is a splendid example of what one may accomplish in this country if he but possess the necessary determination and industry. Coming to America from Sweden, he landed in the United States a total stranger, without money or friends, but better still he had a stout heart and a good trade. A native of Sweden, Mr. Anderson was born in Helsingborg, February 28, 1865. He is a son of Andres Nelson and Mary (Jensen) Anderson, both of whom were natives of the same country. The father is still living in Sweden, where he is following his vocation, that of a farmer. His wife became the mother of nine children, eight of whom are still living. Mrs. Anderson died in 1890.

A. W. Anderson was reared on his father's farm and obtained a limited education in the public schools. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to learn the cabinet-maker's trade. This he followed for four years in the old country, but in March, 1885, he bade good-by to his parents and came to the United States. For a time after arriving here he worked at his trade in Albany, N. Y. From there he went to Rockford, Ill., but after a short time he went to Davenport, Iowa. A few months later he made another change, going to Burlington, the same state, where he remained until the spring of 1887. The following summer was spent in St. Paul, Minn., and in the winter of 1888 he arrived in California, first locating in Los Angeles, where he worked as a carpenter until he came north to San Francisco. There he worked at his trade and also engaged in building to some extent. In 1891 he came to Fresno and at once began contracting and building. Later he branched out and carried on a planing mill business. This finally resulted in the starting of his planing mill in 1898, on I street. He built up a fine paying business, engaging in the manufacture of lumber and fixtures, the firm being known as Anderson Brothers. On May 9, 1904, the business was incorporated as the Anderson Brothers' Planing Mill and Manufacturing Company, with Mr. Anderson as president and general manager; H. E. Anderson, assistant manager, and E. E. Hall, secretary. July 11, the same year the I street plant was burned. Directly following this the firm erected their present plant on their own land near the Southern Pacific tracks. This mill is one of the best equipped in the state. The company is engaged in the manufacture of store and office fixtures, sash and doors, and also do a general planing mill business, giving employment to thirty-five men. Since their new mill was started they have turned out some of the finest work ever seen in the city of Fresno, and in their business they are now meeting with well-deserved success.

Mr. Anderson was united in marriage with Miss Neva Colburn, who was born in Napa, this state, a daughter of H. S. Colburn, an old settler of that county. Mrs. Anderson died in 1901, leaving one child, Neva. In fraternal relations Mr. Anderson is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics a Democrat, he is actively interested in the welfare of his party, but has neither the time nor the inclination to take part in political matters. By this it must not be inferred that he is remiss in his duties as a citizen, for there is no man in the city of Fresno that is more willing to support public enterprises than Mr. Anderson. His rise in life has been remarkable. Just a few years ago he came to Fresno without money or acquaintances. Now he is at the head of one of the leading industries in the city, and has attained a position in the business world that he may well feel proud of.

JOHN WESLEY POTTER. The genealogy of the Potter family, represented by this influential citizen of Clovis and Fresno county, is traced back to Derbyshire, England, whence George Potter came to America as a soldier in the English army during the Revolutionary war. Secretly in sympathy with the colonies, when he was made a prisoner of war by them and later exchanged, he neglected to report to his own army, but established himself among the patriots and ever afterward called himself an American. When peace reigned throughout the country, he laid down his arms for the implements of husbandry and became one of the earliest of the white men who penetrated the wilderness of Kentucky. During the year 1818 he removed further west and settled at Boonville, Cooper county, Mo., where he built and for years operated a ferry boat across the Missouri river, eventually retiring from this and all other activities to spend his declining days in the enjoyment of comforts rendered possible by a life of frugality and honor. At the time of his death he was past four score years of age. June 6, 1782, he married Hannah Fitzhugh, who was born August 20, 1758, and died when over eighty years of age.

A son of this Revolutionary soldier, Col. Joseph Anderson Potter was born in Logan county, Ky., July 16, 1803, and accompanied the family to Cooper county, Mo., where he carried on farm pursuits. Upon the discovery of gold in California he joined a party of gold-seekers in 1849 and crossed the plains with ox-teams. After a short experience in the mines of the west he returned via Panama and the Mississippi river to Missouri. The second trip to the coast was made in 1853, when, accompanied by other members of his family, he crossed the plains and settled on Mormon slough, in the San Joaquin valley, entering a tract of land twelve miles northeast of Stockton and near the site of the present town of Linden. From the raw land he developed a valuable farm, which for years continued to be his home. Certain disadvantages, however, led him to seek another location, and in 1875 he removed to a farm twelve miles east of Visalia. He made another trip east in the spring of 1865 just prior to Abraham Lincoln's assassination. That same spring his death occurred, when he had reached the age of seventy-two. The title of colonel by which he was familiarly known came to him during his service in a Missouri regiment at the time of the struggle with the Mormons, and he aided in driving that people out of the state into Illinois, whence later they were banished to the further west.

The marriage of Joseph Anderson Potter united him with Miss Elizabeth Gier, who was born in St. Charles county, Mo., January 21, 1808, and died in May, 1871, in San Joaquin county, Cal. The Gier family is of southern extraction. Her father, Henry Gier, was a native of North Carolina, but at an early age settled in Tennessee, whence he removed to Missouri during the frontier period of that state's history. When he settled in St. Charles county the Indians were still numerous and hostile, and he with other farmers found it expedient to carry a gun when at work in the field. After a short time he moved to Cooper county, where the families of farmers lived in a fort for mutual protection. A man of unusual ability as a mechanic, he was fitted for the hardships of pioneer life, and not only made his own harness and wagons, but also was able to assist neighbors in their needs. In Cooper county he built a horse-power grist-mill, all of which excepting the burr was constructed of wood, and this mill he operated as a means of livelihood and also as a source of aid to farmers for miles around. When old age came upon him it was his misfortune to witness the strife between north and south, and the closing year of that historic struggle was also the year of his death.

Reared in a home where simple and sincere piety ruled the lives of old and young, Mrs. Potter became affiliated with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and through the course of her early useful life exemplified the doctrines of that denomination. After they came to California both Mr. and Mrs. Potter joined the church. In its faith also they reared their children, of whom there were ten. Two of their sons, Henry G. and George, died in Missouri; three others, William Nelson, James Madison and Thomas B., died in California, the first in Fresno county and the two latter in San Joaquin county. The fifth son, John Wesley, forms the subject of this article; the sixth, Thomas Benton, died in San Joaquin county; Logan F. is a builder in Fresno; Joseph and Mrs. Jane Drace reside in Linden, this state; and Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, formerly of Lompoc, is now deceased.

During the residence of the family on a farm near Boonville, Mo., John Wesley Potter was born, January 5, 1837, and there he received his education in a log schoolhouse, which, with its slab benches and puncheon floor, was typical of the frontier schools of the day. Accompanying the other members of the family, in 1853 he crossed the plains, via Forts Kearney and Laramie, through South Pass, along Bear river, by Soda Springs, down the Humboldt river to its sinks, then following the Carson river to California and to San Joaquin county. For twelve years after coming west he remained at home and assisted his father in grain and stock farming. In 1865 he bought a tract of land near Linden and for some years devoted his attention to the transformation of the property from its original wild state into an improved farm. When in 1872 he came to Fresno county the town of Fresno was in its infancy. The only mercantile establishment in the place was operated by Otto Frolich. It was not until two years later that the first experiment was made in grape culture by the planting of a vineyard. Shortly after his arrival he preempted one hundred and sixty acres and later homesteaded the adjoining one hundred and sixty acres, which tracts form a portion of his present homestead three miles east of Clovis. Not a house had as yet been built between his land and the town of Fresno. Travel was not without attendant difficulties. Coming home from Fresno one evening in October, 1874, a heavy rain storm arose and in the dense darkness, he nearly lost his way on the plains.

For years Mr. Potter made a specialty of the sheep business. During the summers his flocks pastured along the mountain sides, while in the winter months they were kept on the plains. By gradual increase he became the owner of three thousand or more sheep and three thousand and two hundred acres of farm land. In 1892 he abandoned the sheep industry and turned his attention to grain farming. At this writing his homestead, which comprises practically five entire sections of land, is under cultivation to grain, with the exception of twenty-five acres in alfalfa under the Enterprise ditch, thirty acres in raisin grapes, and a family orchard. A combined harvester and other modern equipments have aided materially in the cultivation of this immense acreage. Of recent years, finding the personal supervision of the land too arduous for his strength, he has rented the larger portion of the estate to tenants. In 1893 the value of the property was enhanced by the erection of a commodious residence and there are also substantial barns and other outbuildings on the property.

At Vacaville, on Christmas eve of 1873, occurred the marriage of Mr. Potter and Miss Mattie J. Webster, a native of California. Three children bless their union, namely: Kate, wife of Rev. C. T. Clark, of Mountain View, this state; Webster, a vineyardist residing on the home place; and Lizzie, wife of Rev. O. L. Russell, of Cloverdale, Sonoma county. Both the paternal and maternal ancestors of Mrs. Potter were of southern extraction. Her father, Greene Washington Webster, was a native of North Carolina and was the son of a southern planter. The latter at an early age moved to Missouri, where he and his wife (a Miss Leonard) both passed away in life's prime. Left an orphan at the age of eleven years, their son had neither a good education nor ample means with which to take up the battle of life. However, with health and hope to aid him, he earned a livelihood, amassed a competence and gained a reputation for integrity. The occupation to which he was apprenticed, that of a brick-mason, furnished him with a meagre support in youth, and, dissatisfied with the outlook, in 1852 he crossed the plains to California, bringing a band of cattle and consuming six months in the trip. The first year in California was spent in Napa county, after which he bought a tract in the San Ramon valley, Contra Costa county, and the estate there built up by him still bears his name. After eleven years on that place he removed to Vacaville, and carried on large stock operations. While neglecting nothing that pertained to the management of his property, at the same time he was active in religious affairs and held membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. At the time of his death, in 1872, he was fifty-two years of age. During early manhood he had established domestic ties through his marriage to Jane C. Smith, who was born in Tennessee and now makes her home at No. 310 Howard street, Fresno. At the age of one year she was taken by her parents to Missouri, where her father settled in the Platte purchase, became a large land-owner and also was employed by the United States government as blacksmith among the Kickapoo Indians. Though now somewhat advanced in years (being seventy-seven), Mrs. Jane C. Webster maintains her interest in life's activities and particularly in the welfare of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, with which she has been identified for a long period. In her family there are nine children, namely: Mrs. Mary Staton, of Healdsburg, whose husband, Rev. F. M. Staton, died at Gilroy; Mrs. Lizzie Ward, of Berkeley; John M., of Fresno; Mattie J., Mrs. Potter, of Fresno county; Mrs. Eliza Sifford, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Mellie Trezise, of Amador county; Morris S., of Fresno; Abbie, wife of George Shipp, of Fresno; and Josie, wife of Wallace Potter, of Fresno. Mrs. Potter was born in Napa City and received an excellent education in the Pacific Methodist College. Possessing broad mental endowments, she has used her talents in the cause of religion, and has been an active and successful worker in Sunday-school and in missionary societies, aiding her husband by the exercise of tact, judgment and enthusiastic coöperation, as well as by a gentle Christian spirit and devotion to the principles for which Christ lived and died.

During early days, before Clovis was founded, Mr. Potter felt the need of religious services, and so aided in securing preaching at the Mississippi school once a month. Sunday-school was held there each Lord's day, and he was a leader in the work. When Clovis started he and his old friend, J. W. Cate, since deceased, determined to build a church. This was the first church building erected in Clovis. Four lots were bought, lumber was purchased, and a house was constructed where the Methodist Episcopal Church South held the first religious services in the town. Here also the first Sunday-school was organized with about twelve children (since increased to more than one hundred). In this same building the Baptists organized their congregation. Ever since then Mr. Potter has been a teacher or superintendent of the Sunday-school and with his wife has been a factor in the religious life of the community, lending their Christian influence to the building up of the moral and religious life of the community. The first regular minister in Fresno county was Rev. David Latimer, who came in 1854 and who rode a circuit from Millerton to Visalia. A man of noble character and deep spirituality, he gave an impetus to the early work of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this community and left to his successors the example of a spotless ministry. The first congregation was established at Millerton, the second at Scottsburg, and at this writing the denomination has congregations at Fresno, West Park, Clovis, Academy, Sanger, Selma, Kingsburg, Dinuba, Orosi and Visalia, all being well established congregations with resident pastors.

Though a believer in Democratic principles, Mr. Potter is not a partisan at heart, but a man of large and liberal sentiments, and stanchly in sympathy with any movement for the benefit of community, state and nation, whatever party may stand sponsor for the same. In what is now the Clovis (formerly the Mississippi) district he served as a school trustee for some years, and in that capacity, as in Sunday school work, he proved a helpful factor in the upbuilding of the community. Successful in life, prosperous and respected, he is an honor to his county and to the citizenship of the community with which his life for long years has been closely identified.

ALEXANDER WATT, a man of unusual ability, education and pleasing personality, has inherited his sterling qualities of mind and character from forefathers who were natives of Scotland, his own birth occurring in Aberdeen July 15, 1859. His father, George Watt, was drill master and sergeant in the Ninety-second Regiment Gordon Highlanders for seventeen years, but is now living retired in Aberdeen. His mother, formerly Margaret McKay, is now deceased. There were nine children in the family, of whom five are living.

Fifth in order of birth, Alexander Watt was reared in Aberdeen until attaining his majority, attending the public schools in pursuit of an education. Following the example of his father he was interested in military affairs and served as gunner in a volunteer artillery company in Aberdeen for three years. When sixteen years of age he was apprenticed to learn the trade of granite cutter, completing his apprenticeship five years later, when he came to the United States, and in Quincy, Mass., found employment in the prosecution of his trade. He was later associated with the Penryn quarries in Placer county, Cal., subsequently going to Oregon, where for thirteen years, or until they were completed, he was engaged in cutting stone for the Cascade Locks.

In 1895 he went to Jerome, Ariz., and was engaged for two years in that place and New Mexico as a stone cutter. In Raymond, Cal., he spent some time as a granite cutter, then went to Rocklin, Cal., and in April, 1901, entered the employ of the Rocky Point Granite Works, as cutter. In addition to his interest in this capacity he has also homesteaded a claim of eighty acres, on Badger hill, and on the top and north side of Rocky hill, in section 6, township 19, range 27, the view from which was declared by the visiting Knights Templar in 1902 to be one of the finest in California, ranking next to Yosemite. Fraternally Mr. Watt was made an Odd Fellow in Cascade Locks, Ore., of which lodge he is still a member, belongs to the encampment of Portland and the canton of Visalia, and is a drill-master of Orange Blossom Lodge of Rebekahs of Exeter. Politically he is a Republican, and in his religious convictions is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

A. W. PETREA. This well known and highly respected citizen of Fresno county is a son of Augustus Petrea, a native of Mecklenburg county, N. C. A. W. Petrea was born near Charlotte, N. C., in the same county, January 29, 1849. His grandfather, Henry Petrea, served in the war of 1812 and died in Rowan county, N. C., where his father had settled after he arrived in America from Germany. Augustus Petrea settled in Rowan county in 1852. During the Civil war he served in a North Carolina Regiment, was captured and died in prison at Camp Chase, Ohio. His wife, Jane Hunter, was a native of South Carolina, and died in Rowan county. She was married twice, by her union with John Bingham becoming the mother of four children, two of whom are now living. John C. and Henry Joseph were soldiers during the Civil war. By her marriage to Mr. Petrea four children also were born, and two survive, of these Robert W. was also a soldier in the Civil war.

A. W. Petrea was the third child born to his parents. He was reared on their farm and attended the common school and five months at Mount Pleasant Academy, and after the death of his father carried on the home farm for his mother until his twenty-third year. He then went to Dallas county, Ala., where he farmed for two years. He then spent three years in Mississippi on the Yazoo river raising cotton, when, on account of the climate, he started for California. Arriving at Greene county, Ind., he stopped to visit a sister, Mrs. Linn, and becoming interested in farming he continued for six years in that place. May 8, 1885, he came to Fresno county and located near the Toll House in Big Sandy valley, where he pre-empted land. Two years later he secured the contract for carrying the mails from Fresno to Toll House, a distance of forty miles, and put on a stage, making trips twice a week at first and later established daily trips, using twenty horses. He continued this until 1897, when he sold the stage line and embarked in the hotel and general merchandise business at Toll House, also conducted a blacksmith shop and lumber yard. In 1901 he sold these and purchased a sawmill and machinery and moved it to a tract of timber land he owned on Pine Ridge. Here he built a mill with a capacity of twenty-five thousand feet per day, operated by steam power, and at present is conducting an extensive business, hauling to Fresno by teams, a distance of fifty-two miles, using twelve-horse teams, taking eight days for a round trip, and hauling about ten thousand feet to the load. In 1902 he established a retail lumber business at the corner of Fresno and Illinois avenue, also erected a store and conducts a merchandise business. He is also interested in mining on Laurel creek, Fresno county.

Mr. Petrea was married in North Carolina to Laura Petrea, a native of that state, whose father was a cabinet-maker. They are the parents of five children now living: Jane E., wife of George Hawkins, living near Malaga; Allen Anthony; Ancil Lee; Perry L.; and Louis, who remain with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Petrea are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Fresno. He is a member of the Fraternal Aid, and in politics is a Democrat. Since Mr. Petrea has been a resident of the San Joaquin valley he has had the interests of the people at heart, has contributed liberally for worthy enterprises, and as a business man is respected for his integrity and straightforward methods. As a friend and neighbor he has been most valued and has made a host of friends. His business ability secured him a competency, and his fine qualities of head and heart have won for him a host of friends who rejoice in his continued success and who wish him many more years of happiness and prosperity.

A. LEWIS BOLLIN. Numbered among the progressive and enterprising men of Reedley, Fresno county, Cal., is A. Lewis Bollin, a member of the firm of Bollin & Mathews, the principal hardware merchants of this place. He was born in Cooper county, Mo., September 2, 1871, a son of A. Lewis Bollin, Sr., who was a native of Germany, and who immigrated to the United States and located in Cooper county, Mo. Later in life he went to Kansas for a time, eventually returning to Missouri, where he followed blacksmithing until his death, which occurred in 1872. His wife was in maidenhood Minnie Miller. They became the parents of ten children, of whom A. Lewis, Jr., was next to the youngest.

The early education of A. Lewis Bollin was received in the common schools of his native state, being able to obtain, however, but one year's instruction. The fund of information and knowledge which Mr. Bollin now possesses is the result of years of patient endeavor, reading and observation, acquired entirely by his own efforts. He worked on the home place and also learned the trade of blacksmith, and after his arrival in California, in January, 1889, he located in Los Angeles. He then secured employment on a ranch near Traver, Tulare county, after which he clerked in a store in that place. In 1897 he came to Reedley and engaged in a blacksmith and machine shop, known by the firm name of Drake & Bollin. They were burned out in 1900, and the following year he engaged as a blacksmith independently. In February, 1902, he sold out and in partnership with C. W. Mathews purchased the stock of the Gosliner Brothers, who were conducting a general merchandise business, and under the firm name of Bollin, Mathews & Co., the new enterprise was established. In August of the same year they were burned out, their loss, however, being covered by insurance. In October of 1903 they engaged in a general hardware business, under the firm name of Bollin & Mathews, carrying a full line of agricultural implements, etc. They are very successful in this business enterprise, both Mr. Bollin and his partner being men of business sagacity and practical judgment.

In 1891, in Fresno, Mr. Bollin married Ellen Root, a native of California, and they are the parents of three children, all at home, namely: Roy, Nelson and Elsie. Fraternaly Mr. Bollin is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in which he has passed all the chairs, now being past grand of this lodge, and also belongs to the Rebekahs. He affiliates with the Independent Order of Foresters, in which he has also passed all the chairs. Politically he is active in the councils of the Republican party, having been elected a delegate to the county convention in 1904, being then a member of the county central committee. Mr. Bollin has had many reverses in his business career, but he has allowed nothing to daunt him or to lessen his courage. He has continued to give his best efforts to win a competence and has succeeded against heavy odds. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

ALFRED BAIRD. At an early period in the colonization of America the Baird family crossed the ocean from England and identified themselves with the forces struggling to develop the new world. To their English determination of will they added the traits of thrift and economy inherited from remote Scotch ancestry, and thus they were fitted admirably to cope with the undeveloped conditions of the American soil. Josiah Baird, a native of New York state, proved himself a worthy representative of the race. Possessing characteristics which qualified him for the arduous existence of the pioneer, early in life he blazed a way through the forests of Ohio and settled in the midst of a tract of great old oak trees. When these were cleared he began to till the soil, meanwhile building for his family a log cabin of rude appearance, but possessing the comfort of the hospitable frontier home. After many years in Ohio he sold his farm and moved to Winneshiek county, Iowa, where he successfully conducted farm pursuits during the remainder of his active years. Notwithstanding a life filled with the most arduous pioneer work, he was spared in health and activity to the age of ninety-three years. During the existence of the Whig party he supported its principles and later became one of the original supporters of the Republican party. In religion he affiliated with the United Brethren Church. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Ryland, was born in Wayne county, Ohio, and died in Iowa. Of their seven children the second, Alfred, alone survives. One of the sons, Warren, enlisted in the Union army at the opening of the Civil war and went to the front as a member of the Twenty-seventh Iowa Infantry, remaining in service until his death at Little Rock, Ark., before the close of the war.

The pioneer home of Josiah Baird in Richland (now Ashland) county, Ohio, forms the earliest recollections of Alfred Baird, who was born there November 16, 1829, and as a boy aided in clearing the land from its heavy forest growth. When not needed at home he was permitted to attend a school held in a log building near by. The furniture of the schoolhouse was as crude as the building itself. Slab benches afforded the children little comfort, while the slab desk was for use and not for ornament. Text-books were inferior to those of the present day and teachers often illy educated, yet children who wanted to learn had no difficulty in acquiring a knowledge of the three Rs. At the age of sixteen Alfred Baird became an apprentice to the carpenter's trade in Ashland. At the expiration of a service of two years he took up the work of a journeyman. In the spring of 1850 he left Ohio and traveled by the great lakes to Wisconsin, where he crossed to Portage and thence to McGregor, Iowa. Under the employ of Mr. McGregor he aided in the erection of some of the first houses in different towns in that part of Iowa, and for eight years he followed the building business. Each day he earned enough to buy an acre of land, and he invested in property until he had acquired eight hundred acres. Meanwhile a brother-in-law came to Iowa and left $1200 with him to buy school land as it came into the market, and this Mr. Baird did in addition to purchasing his own holdings.

Though prosperous to an unusual degree, Mr. Baird found the climate of Iowa too cold to be congenial, and he determined to seek a home where conditions would be more favorable from the standpoint of personal comfort. Selling out in 1859, he brought his wife and two children across the plains. They left Iowa in April with four yoke of oxen, crossed the Missouri river at Council Bluffs, and landed at Kings river, Fresno county, on the 8th of October. Settling in the Upper Kings River valley, Mr. Baird immediately set to work to erect a log cabin fourteen feet square, his wife persuading him to make a puncheon floor. For a time he followed the carpenter's trade in this locality. Taking up a homestead claim, he built a comfortable house, and the next summer, 1860, brought a seven-mile ditch from the mountains. The terrible flood of 1861 destroyed his orchard and the house which he had recently erected. The barn was carried up stream by a strong current, but the house, being tied down, remained in its place. Mr. Baird afterward took a band of sheep on shares. The outbreak of the Civil war depreciated the value of wool to such an extent that shipments were impracticable, and the wool was utilized for upholstering purposes in San Francisco. When the railroad was completed the demand for wool increased to such an extent that he was enabled to sell it for forty-five cents per pound, delivered at White's Bridge. At first he kept the sheep near Sand creek, but after a year he took them to the St. Johns river, near Visalia, where he bought a half section of land. Owing to another disastrous flood he was driven out of that section.

During 1868 Mr. Baird removed to Letcher, Fresno county, and homesteaded a portion of his present ranch, where he embarked in the sheep business. Naturally he encountered considerable antagonism from cattlemen, but he held his own against their formidable opposition, and gradually increased his herd until he at one time had as many as five thousand head. In 1887 he sold his flocks of sheep and began to raise cattle and also to devote considerable attention to grain. In early days no one supposed the grazing lands were adapted for grain. Accidentally some barley hauled to the cattle was tramped into the ground and the rains caused it to sprout, producing as fine a crop of barley as cultivated land made possible. People quickly acted after this and soon grain was being raised on the former grazing lands. In other places it was found that the land that was almost too barren for sheep pasturage could be profitably utilized for vineyards and orchards, hence these occupations began to attract new settlers to the locality.

By gradual purchase Mr. Baird has acquired six thousand acres in a body fourteen miles east of Clovis, three thousand five hundred acres of this being fine grain land. On section 19 he erected a comfortable residence and the other buildings necessary to a model ranch, in addition to which he has five other sets of improvements scattered over the large acreage. Besides his vast tracts here he owns six hundred and forty acres (the old Hughes place) about seven miles southwest of his home, and also owns one thousand acres near Visalia, all of which property is rented to tenants. The first oranges in this part of the state were raised on his ranch. The work accomplished by him in stock-raising, farming and horticulture has been along pioneer lines and will prove most helpful to the future development of the region. To an unusual degree Mr. and Mrs. Baird possess the pioneer trait of hospitality. The guest to their home is welcomed with unfeigned cordiality. A visit there is an event never to be forgotten, and chief among the memories which the guest carries away is the thought of the unflinching courtesy extended.

At Washington Prairie, Winneshiek county, Iowa, February 17, 1853, occurred the marriage of Alfred Baird and Lydia K. Beard, a native of Yellow Springs, Greene county, Ohio, born December 2, 1829. Her father, Benjamin Beard, was born on the Susquehanna river in Pennsylvania, and removed to Greene county, Ohio, thence to Laporte county, Ind., and afterward to Winneshiek county, Iowa, where he became a prominent farmer. For a half century he officiated as an elder in the Presbyterian Church and at the time of his death he had reached the age of ninety-three, dying in California at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Baird. During early manhood he had married Mary Ann Knott, who was born in New Jersey, and was a daughter of Peter Knott, also born in that state. At an early period the Knott family settled in Greene county, Ohio, where Peter Knott passed his last days. Mrs. Mary Ann Beard came to California and died in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Baird, when seventy-one years of age. Of her eleven children five are living. One of her sons, James, served in an Iowa regiment during the Civil war, and later came to California, where he now makes his home at Laytonville, Mendocino county. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Baird there were six children, namely: Benjamin Morgan, now a farmer in Fresno county; Addison, who died in Visalia at the age of twelve years; Lewis Edwin, also deceased; Mrs. Sarah A. Rutherford, who resides with her parents; Matie Ellen, who died in Santa Clara at the age of seven years; and Florence G., Mrs. Rollo Keeler, of Tulare county.

During the memorable political campaign of 1860 Mr. Baird was an ardent admirer of Abraham Lincoln and cast a ballot for him in the election at Scottsburg, but the returns showed no Republican votes cast. It was his privilege to be present at the first Republican meeting held in Fresno county, and on that occasion he was nominated for the state assembly, but of course in those days the ticket had no chance for victory. Always he has been staunch in his adherence to Republican principles, no less in the days when those principles were new and unpopular than now, when a Republican presidential candidate at the last election received an overwhelming majority. Though not personally connected with any denomination, he is a believer in religious work and contributes to the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife long has been a member.

JOHN R. MULLINIX is a prominent and representative citizen of the Hanford district, in Kings county, Cal. He is rapidly nearing his eighty-second milestone, and for more than a quarter of a century has been a resident of this county. His identification with Kings county dates back to 1877, when it was a part of Tulare county. The first two years after locating here he rented land near Hanford and was afterward enabled to purchase an eighty-acre ranch in the same locality. At the time of purchase this land was a wild, sandy desert and contained only one tree. Here he helped put in the first irrigation ditches, and from the desert made a home, and upon this land, which is four miles southwest from Hanford, Mr. Mullinix has passed the intervening years of his life in general farm pursuits. Although advanced in years, he is still able to oversee affairs on his place, which he leases to his grandson, with whom he makes his home.

A Tennessean by birth, John R. Mullinix was born in Greene county of that state, November 27, 1822, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Reed) Mullinix, the former also born in Tennessee and the latter a native of Scotland. The father, a lifelong farmer by occupation, served with distinction under Gen. Andrew Jackson, and was severely wounded in the left shoulder. He died at an advanced age and his wife was also about sixty years old at the time of her death. John R. spent his boyhood days at home with his parents until he reached his majority. He then began farming on his own account, remaining in the home locality until 1849. He then went west to Monroe county, Iowa, when that country was new and undeveloped, and here for a period of nineteen years he followed general farming and stock-raising, when he sold out and removed to Schuyler county, Mo. Here he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land and continued his favorite vocation until 1877, selling out at that time and locating permanently in California. In this vicinity Mr. Mullinix still owns his original purchase, and his farm is well improved and highly productive.

He was joined in marriage with Miss Alzara Brandon, who was born in Tennessee and died in 1902 at the advanced age of seventy-four years. This aged couple reared three children; of these, Esther, the eldest, is the wife of George Fees, of Exeter, Cal.; Eliza, the second child, married Stephen Hicks, of Kings county; and Elizabeth, the youngest, married Peter Scazighim, of Grangeville, in the same county. Politically Mr. Mullinix is an ardent Democrat, and he is highly esteemed in his locality. He has not only been a practical farmer, but a good business man in every particular, having made friends of all with whom he has had dealings. In his younger days he was a man of splendid physique and of stalwart frame, being six feet in height, with an average weight in his prime of one hundred and eighty pounds. It is a remarkable fact that he reads now without the aid of glasses, nor has he ever used them. Mr. Mullinix enlisted in Company G, Forty-sixth Iowa Regiment, and served three months as a private in Memphis, Tenn., and in Mississippi, and while in the service he threw the champion wrestler, a strong and powerful man of the regiment, which contained one thousand men. His military career was cut short by illness, however, and after being sick for six weeks he returned to his home and did not enlist.

WILLIAM HENRY SEAWARD. Pennsylvania has furnished California with many of her most substantial and highly respected citizens. Among those who have migrated from that state here is W. H. Seaward. His birth occurred in Bradford, McKean county, September 26, 1846, a son of J. S. and Daphne D. (Farr) Seaward. The father was born in Allegany county, N. Y., August 7, 1816, and in 1840 removed to Pennsylvania, where he engaged in school teaching. He is still living, making his home in Bradford, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. To Mr. and Mrs. Seaward were born twelve children and of this large family, W. H. was the third child.

William Henry Seaward was educated in the common schools of his native state and was also instructed at home, his father being a man of exceptionally fine attainments. On starting out in life for himself he learned the occupation of a stationary engineer and for twenty years acted as an engineer in the oil regions of the Keystone state. In July, 1898, he removed to Washington county, the same state, where he resided until 1893, the year of his removal to California. His first home in this state was at Kingsburg, where he still resides, having purchased his present place of twenty acres. Here he is now conducting a very successful fruit business, also devoting some attention to the growing of alfalfa. Aside from his private ventures he is a stockholder in the Co-operative Packing Association, having served for two years as a director.

In Jamestown, N. Y., was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Seaward and Miss Anna El Martin. She is a native of Sweden and by her union has become the mother of four children: Charles Leonard, Gale W., Sophia Anelia and Lizzie Margaret. All are at home with the exception of the first named, who is engaged in carrying the mail on Route 1. All his life a staunch Republican, Mr. Seaward has taken an active interest in the affairs of his party. Three times he has served as a delegate to the county convention and in other ways has done a great deal to assist the candidates, but as for himself he has never cared to seek public favor. He and his wife are highly respected and have hosts of friends. Mr. Seaward has made a success of his life and is now enabled to enjoy his declining years surrounded by every comfort.

A. S. EDGERLY. A resident of California and Fresno county since 1887, A. S. Edgerly has been actively engaged in the upbuilding of the city of Fresno since that date. He was born in New Hampton, N. H., March 15, 1834, a son of David and Sarah (Sanborn) Edgerly, both of whom were born in Meredith, N. H., and there died at advanced ages. The grandfather, Samuel Edgerly, was born in the New England states, of English parentage. On the maternal side the grandfather, Asa L. Sanborn, was of English ancestry and was a farmer. Edwin and Orrin Edgerly were soldiers in the Civil war, the former being wounded in an engagement.

The sixth in order of birth of twelve children, A. S. Edgerly was reared on a farm in New Hampshire, at New Hampton and Meredith, until nineteen years of age, being given such advantages as the common schools afforded. He entered New Hampton Institution, then Hillsdale College, where he remained but one year, when, on account of failing health, he was obliged to leave. He engaged in teaching near Cuthbert, Ga., in 1859, as proprietor of Springvale Institute, and remained at the head of that institution until 1866, at which time he went to Sandwich, Mass., as principal of the high school, and held that position four years. Engaging then in the life insurance business, he was made special state agent for Vermont of the Continental Life Insurance Company of New York.

In 1873 he removed to Otoe county, Neb., and at Palmyra purchased six hundred and forty acres of railroad land and engaged in the stock business until 1875, when he removed to Lincoln and went into the hardware business under the firm name of Parker & Edgerly, which continued four years. The partnership being dissolved, Mr. Edgerly embarked in the real estate business, buying, improving and selling residence and business properties until 1887. Disposing of his interests, he located in California and at once settled in Fresno, where he engaged in the real estate business. Having a firm belief in the future of that city, in 1889 he manufactured the brick and erected the Edgerly block on the corner of Tulare and J streets. In 1891 he built an addition, the whole being 150x70 feet, with an L 40x80 feet, three stories high. He also improved considerable residence and other business property in the city. Among his other enterprises worthy of special mention is the laying out of the Hartley addition of ten acres into lots, which was soon disposed of. With William Harvey and W. R. Thomas he laid out the Belmont addition of eighty acres, which was sold off in two months in city lots, with the exception of three blocks which had been reserved. He now owns two hundred acres, one mile north of Fresno on Blackstone avenue, which is devoted to a vineyard, and also has an orchard and vineyard of forty acres near Fowler.

At West Sandwich (now Sagamore), Mass., August 6, 1859, Mr. Edgerly was united in marriage with Lydia E. Crowell, who was a native of that place and a daughter of Paul and Lydia (Ellis) Crowell, both natives of Massachusetts, the former of Dennis and the latter of Plymouth. Of their six children three are now living, Mrs. Edgerly being the second in order of birth. To Mr. and Mrs. Edgerly six children have been born, namely: Willie Alberto, a vineyardist; Nellie Effie D., wife of R. E. Wheeler, of Fresno; Lillian May Rebecca, the wife of J. S. Gardner, of Fresno; Charles D., at home; Fred Lincoln and Nellie Elsie died in infancy.

Through the influence of Mr. Edgerly the location of the postoffice was secured for the corner of Tulare and J streets, by giving the lower floor space, 50x70 feet, to the government for use for a term of years free of charge, with the understanding that the property holders adjacent to that corner would pay the rent of one-half the space. This arrangement was entered into and was carried out for only a few months, when the property owners repudiated their part of the agreement, with the exception of Dr. Chester Rowell, who still fulfills his part. In this way Mr. Edgerly practically gave the use of his building gratis from 1891 until he sold it in 1895.

In politics a Republican, Mr. Edgerly has always had the interests of the party at heart, though never an aspirant for official recognition. As one of the enterprising citizens of Fresno county, he has ever been a supporter of measures that have had for their object the advancement of the people and the prestige of Fresno in the San Joaquin valley. His success in life has been of his own making, and in the annals of his adopted state his name is entitled to enrollment among the progressive builders of a commonwealth.

SAMUEL T. BROWN. Twenty-one years ago Mr. Brown came to California with only $10 in his pocket, and to-day he is one of the most substantial farmers in Fresno county, a result which has been brought about by his own untiring efforts. He has labored industriously, saved his money, and with a keen judgment has invested his savings in land that will, as time passes, greatly increase in value. A native of Tennessee, Mr. Brown was born in Sparta, White county, September 28, 1860, a son of Samuel Brown, who was a native of the same state. In 1849 he rounded the Horn and came to California, where he remained until 1852, spending the time in the mines. In the latter year he returned east and with the money that he had saved purchased a fine farm in Tennessee, where he is now living at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife in maidenhood was a Miss Rebecca Henry and by her union became the mother of eight children, six of whom are living. Mrs. Brown is now in her seventy-seventh year, and, like her husband, is enjoying good health. Both are active members of the Presbyterian Church and have a large circle of friends.

Samuel T. Brown was the fourth child in the parental family. He remained at home until 1884, when he followed in the footsteps of his father and came to California, but, unlike the latter, he has remained here, and his efforts have been handsomely rewarded. The first two years after locating here Mr. Brown worked on different farms in the vicinity of Modesto, and was later employed near Fresno for a year. At the end of that time, having in the meantime saved enough to purchase the necessary equipment, he rented a ranch of six hundred and forty acres and began raising wheat. From the first his efforts met with success, and as time passed he increased his acreage until at one time he was farming two thousand acres. In 1892, with the money he had accumulated, he began buying land in the Garfield country, which he farmed, together with leased lands. In 1897 he purchased the place where he is now living, one of the finest properties in this section of the county. From time to time he has added to his first purchase until he now owns ten hundred and twenty acres, all under cultivation with the exception of one hundred and sixty acres in Aubrey valley, which is used for grazing purposes. The three hundred-acre tract in the Garfield country is devoted to grain and on his home place he has a twenty-acre vineyard. Located four miles east of Clovis, the ranch is one of the most valuable properties in the county. It is equipped with a pumping plant, which supplies water to the entire tract.

In Fresno county was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Brown and Lydia Beard, who is a native of California. To this union have been born five children, viz.: Walter Cate, Charles Kenneth, Samuel Lloyd, and Lydia Irene and Lourine Rebecca, twins. Mrs. Brown and the children are members of the Christian Church, which denomination is also liberally supported by Mr. Brown. In politics he is inclined to be liberal. In national questions he votes with the Democrats, but in local affairs he believes in supporting the man best qualified for the office, regardless of party lines. He himself has never cared for office, and although he has often assisted in the election of others, he prefers to devote his time to his own business. In carving out a fortune Mr. Brown has never allowed himself to become selfish, but at all times has liberally given of his time and means to support any movement calculated to be of material benefit to his adopted state.

CHARLES D. BOYDSTON. The misfortune of failing health, which compelled Charles D. Boydston to seek a milder climate, has resulted in added business for Portersville, Tulare county, where he located and is now carrying on an extensive business as an orange grower. A native of Orrville, Ohio, he was born October 15, 1866. His father, Solon Boydston, was a native of the same place, his father, Thomas, a patriot of the Revolutionary war, being an early settler from Virginia. He was a farmer and died in Ohio. Solon Boydston was in the lumber manufacturing business for years, and later engaged as a furniture and casket manufacturer, his plant being located in Orrville, where he became the most prominent undertaker. He was accidentally killed while serving as county coroner, about 1889. During the Civil war he served valiantly, enlisting in the One Hundred and Twentieth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry in 1861. His wife, formerly Kate Schultz, a native of Pennsylvania, survives her husband, and now makes her home in Chicago with her son, Frank T. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom Charles D. was the eldest.

Reared in Orrville, Ohio, Charles D. Boydston received his education in the common schools of that place and the high school, from which he was graduated in 1882. In the same year he went to Chicago and engaged in the undertaking business, which he had learned under his father. With his brother he established an extensive business, being located at the corner of Forty-second street and Cottage Grove avenue, having about thirty men in their employ. Their business, which is the most extensive of its kind in the United States, is in charge of Frank T. Boydston, who is in Chicago. Mr. Boydston came to California in 1900 to recover from the effects of a severe paralytic stroke. In partnership with his brother he bought his present place, which consists of eight hundred acres five miles southeast of Portersville, one hundred and thirty acres being planted in Washington navels from one to four years old. In the spring of 1906 it is Mr. Boydston's intention to set out two hundred and fifty acres additional in oranges, as the climate is especially adapted to the cultivation of this fruit.

In Chicago Mr. Boydston was united in marriage with Nellie B. Sprague, a native of that place, and they are the parents of two sons, Solon James, aged thirteen, and Charles Raymond, eight years of age. Mr. Boydston is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, known as the Oakland Church, of Chicago, Ill., and politically is independent, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the candidate whom he considers best qualified for public office. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Chicago, and the Knights of Pythias of the same city, and the Sons of Veterans.

HENRY C. WITT. The present postmaster of Success, Tulare county, Henry C. Witt is a citizen who commands the respect and esteem of all who have had business dealings with him. He also conducts a general store in that place, as well as participating actively in the agricultural interests of the section. A native son of the state, he was born in Sacramento county, Cal., February 11, 1868. His father, Henry Witt, was born in Rhea county, Tenn., and in 1852 removed to Texas, thence crossed the plains to California the following year, driving a herd of cattle for James Houston. Upon his arrival in the state he located near Sacramento, devoting his time to farming and giving some attention to mining at Brown's Flat and Nevada City. In 1872 he located in the San Joaquin valley, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres on the South Tule river, where he farmed and set out the first orange grove in this section. His death occurred there in 1897, at the age of sixty years. His wife, formerly Anna Murray, of Pennsylvania, survives him, now making her home in Portersville, Tulare county. They were the parents of nine children, six sons and three daughters, of whom Henry C. Witt is the second in order of birth.

The education of Henry C. Witt was obtained in the common schools of California, after which he engaged in farming and stock-raising with his father. Later he gave his attention to the cultivation of oranges, ten acres of the sixty which he now owns being devoted to that fruit. In 1903 he received the appointment which gave to him the postmastership of the office at Success, since which time he has combined those duties with his work as a merchant. He is a Democrat in his political convictions. February 11, 1902, he was united in marriage with Mattie Livingston, also a native of the state and daughter of J. H. Livingston, one of the earliest pioneers, her birth having occurred in Martinez, Contra Costa county.

DANIEL BROWN, Jr. A man of rare personality and attainments, Daniel Brown, Jr., is cashier of the Fresno National Bank. A native son of the state, he was born in Petaluma, Sonoma county, in 1863, the second in a family of seven children. His father, Daniel Brown, was a native of Tipperary, Ireland, who came to America and located first in New York city. In 1851 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, and after his arrival in San Francisco engaged in the mercantile business in that city. He afterward located in Petaluma, and in 1856 started the banking business of that place, becoming vice-president of the Wickesham Banking Company, and later president of the same. He was also vice-president of the Savings Bank of Santa Rosa. His death occurred in 1902, and up to the last he remained active in the business life which had known the value of his mastermind for so many years. Politically he was also active, being an adherent of the principles of the Democratic party, having served on the state committee and various other committees. His wife, formerly Annie Ferguson, survives him and now resides in San Francisco.

Daniel Brown, Jr., was reared in Petaluma, receiving a preliminary education in the public schools of that place, after which he entered the University of California, then the Hastings Law College, graduating from the latter institution in 1884, with the degree of LL. B. He was admitted to the bar and practiced for about a year, when he gave up the profession and secured a position in the cashier's office in the United States Mint at San Francisco. In 1890 he came to Fresno and for six years engaged in the livery business on I street, in 1900 accepting the position of assistant cashier of the Fresno National Bank, in which he had been a director for several years. In 1902 he became cashier of the bank, which position he has since retained, to the upbuilding and progress of the bank. He is also director in the Fresno Land and Investment Company and the Central Land and Trust Company. Fraternally he is a charter member of the Sequoia Club, of which he is a director and treasurer. Politically he is a Democrat and is an ex-member of the county central committee.

JOHN RANDOLPH HITCHCOCK. Among the men who have been instrumental in the development of the rich agricultural resources of Tulare county, John Randolph Hitchcock holds no unimportant place. He is an extensive landholder, one of the largest stockmen of Tulare county, and one of Tulare's most esteemed and influential citizens. Although the greater part of his time is given to the care of his private interests, he never neglects his duty as a public-spirited citizen, but as opportunity offers assists in the establishment of all beneficial and progressive enterprises. The son of the late Hon. J. R. W. Hitchcock, a prominent pioneer of California, he was born February 10, 1864, in San Joaquin county, of English ancestry. His grandfather, Rev. John Hitchcock, was born in England, and after his immigration to the United States settled in Virginia, locating first in Richmond as a blacksmith and machinist, and later becoming pastor of a Baptist church. He died in Richmond in 1851.

Born, reared and educated in Richmond, Va., J. R. W. Hitchcock learned the machinists' trade when young. In 1849, excited by the thrilling stories of the abundance of gold to be obtained in California, he came around Cape Horn on a sailing vessel, and after a voyage of six months landed in San Francisco. The following two years he worked in the mines at Sonoma and Jimtown, meeting with fair success. Entering land on the French Camp road, eleven miles from Stockton, in 1851, he began his career as a farmer and stock-raiser. Making money in these pursuits, he subsequently bought adjoining land, becoming possessor of sixteen hundred acres in one body, and was one of the first extensive grain growers of that locality. He also became the owner of another good ranch. In the management of public affairs he was very prominent, and as one of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1880 assisted in the framing of the present state laws. He was one of the directors of the Stockton Agricultural Association, and was interested in the building of the first canal in that section of the state; and was likewise one of the originators of the Stockton Farmers' Union, in which he served as a director for many years. Deeply interested in religious matters, he was an active and valued member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died on the home farm in 1901, at the age of seventy-two years, his death being deplored as a public loss.

J. R. W. Hitchcock was married twice. He married, first, Mary Elizabeth Dickey, who was born in Missouri, and died on the home farm, near Stockton, at the early age of thirty years. Her father, Alexander Dickey, came to California as a pioneer in the early '50s, settling first at Point of Timber, Contra Costa county, later removing to Stockton, and from there going to Modesto, where he resided until his death. Of the three children born of this marriage, two are living, namely: Mrs. Fannie C. Leisy, of San Francisco; and John Randolph, of this review. He subsequently married a second time, and of that union five children were born, all of whom are now living.

After completing the course of study in the district schools, John R. Hitchcock entered Clark's Business College, in Stockton, where he was graduated in 1884. The following two years he assisted his father in the care of the home farm. In 1886 he came to Tulare county, and for nine years thereafter was engaged in farming and stock-raising on the sixteen hundred-acre ranch belonging to his father. In 1895 he established himself in the butcher business in Tulare, opening a market on Kern street, and continued until 1904, when he sold out in order to give his attention to other interests, handling his own and the family property. Forming a partnership with P. F. Wood, Mr. Hitchcock purchased from the family estate the sixteen hundred-acre ranch located six miles southwest of Tulare, and has continued its improvement. It is all subject to irrigation, having two artesian wells on the place, and over two hundred acres are already sowed to alfalfa. Here he and his partner are extensively engaged in raising cattle, carrying on a profitable business. They also purchased the old John Jones ranch of eighteen hundred acres, which they sold off in lots. Individually Mr. Hitchcock is engaged in buying and shipping stock to San Francisco and Los Angeles, and also owns two good ranches, one of ninety acres adjoining the old Hitchcock farm, and one of three hundred and twenty acres adjoining Waukena, both of which he rents. He is interested in different ditch companies, being a director in the Elk Bayou Ditch Company, of which he was formerly president, and having been a director in the Farmers' Ditch Company until resigning.

In San Joaquin county, Cal., Mr. Hitchcock married Henrietta R. Von Glahn, a native of that county, being the daughter of C. H. Von Glahn, who settled as a pioneer on the French Camp road. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock are the parents of four children, namely: Ralph, Harold, Ethel and Katherine. Politically Mr. Hitchcock is a Democrat in national affairs. In 1902 he was elected councilman from the fifth ward, now the third ward, and served as chairman of the street committee, and for a number of years he was school trustee. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, of the Women of Woodcraft, of the Improved Order of Red Men, and of the Fraternal Aid. Religiously he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is president of its board of trustees.

JOHN HENRY BURNETT. The largest foundry in Fresno is owned and operated by John Henry Burnett, an esteemed citizen of that city. He was born in Hellstone, Cornwall, England, December 10, 1859, a son of Evan Burnett, a native of Truro, England. His grandfather was a native of Wales and an iron moulder by trade, being engaged in this business at Truro. Evan Burnett also engaged in the foundry business in manhood, being located first at Truro and later at Hellstone. Coming to America in 1868, he went to Chicago, Ill., and followed his trade there for three years, when he came to California. Locating in San Francisco he engaged in the Union Iron Works at his trade for several years, and died at his home in Alameda, aged seventy-six years. His wife, formerly Catherine Rule, was a native of Red Ruth, England, and a daughter of Captain Rule, who was superintendent of the gas plant at Red Ruth, where his death occurred. Mrs. Burnett died in Alameda, January 25, 1905, aged eighty-five years. Of the fifteen children born of this union, eight attained maturity, five sons and three daughters, all of whom are now living except one daughter. Two brothers, Richard and Fred C., are both in Fresno and in the employ of John Henry Burnett, who was the fourth in order of birth of the living children.

In the common schools of his native country John Henry Burnett received his education, remaining in England until 1868, when he accompanied his parents to Chicago. He attended school there until their removal to California, where, at the age of eleven years, he was apprenticed to learn the moulder's trade in the old Union Iron Works in San Francisco. He remained there for four years, when, in September, 1879, he came to Fresno. He first engaged in the vineyard culture in this locality, purchasing forty acres in the Scandinavian Colony, where he remained for four or five years. He then sold out and bought eight hundred acres on Dry creek, where he followed the stock business for several years, and then engaged in mining in Fresno and Kern counties. This venture proved unsatisfactory, so he once more engaged at his trade, three weeks after his return to the old work being made foreman of the foundry. A year later he leased the foundry and engaged in business for himself, since which time he has continued profitably. In 1904 he built a new foundry on the Santa Fe, the largest in the San Joaquin valley, having a capacity of casting ten tons per day. He manufactures structural iron and steel work, and also a general line of castings and foundry work. He has made a success of his work and has proved his exceptional ability as a business man.

In Fresno Mr. Burnett was united in marriage with Annie E. Firebaugh, a native of Santa Cruz, and the daughter of Andrew Firebaugh, who came from his native state of Virginia to California as a pioneer. He located in Santa Cruz for a time and then went to the present site of Firebaugh, where he was one of the first white settlers on the west side. He built the first ferry at the town now known as Firebaugh, and also the Pacheco Pass road over the Coast range as a toll road, and later sold it to the county. He engaged in the stock business in Fresno, where he spent his last days. His wife, formerly Susan Berges, daughter of Judges Berges, survives him and makes her home in Fresno. To Mr. and Mrs. Burnett were born two daughters, Maude E. and Winnifred, who died aged seven years. Mrs. Burnett is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally Mr. Burnett is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party.

JOHN B. LEWIS. A native of Illinois, J. B. Lewis was born in Bond county, November 13, 1862, a son of Alfred and Rhoda (Powell) Lewis. The father was born in North Carolina, but at a very early day removed with his parents to Illinois, where he later became engaged in agricultural pursuits, which occupation he followed until his death in 1879, at the age of forty-five years. His wife, who was born in Tennessee, is still living and makes her home in Selma. By her marriage she became the mother of nine children, six sons and three daughters.

John B. Lewis obtained a limited common school education and remained at home until 1880 when he came to California with his mother. Six years later he engaged in the stock business on his own account in the Riverdale district, where he lived until purchasing his present fine property of forty acres, nine miles west of Laton. To this he has lately added seven hundred acres, most of which is used for grazing purposes, Mr. Lewis being extensively interested in the cattle business. He also conducts a dairy of forty cows, being one of the leading dairymen in the county.

In Gilroy, Santa Clara county, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Lewis and Miss Nannie A. Turner. Mrs. Lewis was born in Monterey county and a daughter of James H. Turner, who came to California across the plains in 1849, and again in 1852. He was a stock-raiser in Monterey county and followed general farming in Santa Clara county. In 1883 she went to Fresno county and engaged in teaching in the Riverdale district and remained three years. She also taught one year in Santa Clara county and one in Butte county, when she returned to Santa Clara county, where her marriage occurred. To this union have been born two children: Alfred T., and Tina, both of whom are living at home.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Lewis is one of the active workers of that party in the county. Although he has never desired public office, he has served as road overseer for the past five years and during this time has constructed many miles of splendid road. Public-spirited to a large degree, any movement calculated to be of material benefit to the county receives his hearty endorsement. He was one of the promoters and is a stockholder in the Farmers' telephone line and is also interested in many other enterprises of like nature. As for his business ventures, they have been successful and he is named as one of Fresno county's leading and influential citizens.

HON. MARVIN SIMPSON. Adding to the prestige of an honored family name the impetus of his own forceful personality, Mr. Simpson has gained a reputation for capability and enterprise, and deservedly is honored as one of the public-spirited men of Fresno county. His worth as a citizen has been recognized from his youth and his influence has been felt by all coming in contact with him in local gatherings or in committee work. As a staunch upholder of Democratic principles, he possesses influence among the local workers of the party and further has wielded influence in the councils of state. On the regular party ticket in 1900 he was elected to represent the sixty-third legislative ticket (now the sixty-first) in the lower house of the state legislature, receiving a fair majority of the ballots of the people. In the session of 1901 he served as a member of the committees on claims, prison and reformatory institutions, public morals and election laws, in each capacity proving himself to be intelligently informed concerning the needs of the people and the importance of careful legislative action. On the expiration of his term he declined to be a candidate for re-election, and has since devoted himself to the management of his large landed interests.

A lifelong resident of Fresno county, Marvin Simpson was born at Academy August 31, 1869, and was fourth among the children of John G. and Sarah M. (Baley) Simpson, concerning whom mention appears elsewhere in this work. When he was eight years of age his father died and afterward he remained on the homestead with his mother, receiving such advantages as the Academy school district afforded. Upon attaining his majority he started out for himself, receiving as his share of the estate an amount sufficient to give him an excellent start in the world. Stock-raising and general farming have been his hobbies (if such they may be called), and there is no department of activity in connection with these specialties that he cannot handle judiciously and with promptness.

It was during 1893 that Marvin Simpson settled on his present place near Letcher, Fresno county, and began the series of improvements that have converted the property into one of the most desirable for many miles around. Included in the homestead are four hundred and twenty acres three-fourths of a mile east of Academy, in addition to which Mr. Simpson owns five hundred and twenty acres lying on sections 16, 9 and 8, township 12, range 22; also six hundred and forty acres on sections 26 and 27, township 12, range 22; and in addition about six hundred acres in the foothills and mountains where he ranges his cattle in the summer months; also, in partnership with his mother, two hundred and forty acres on the Middle Fork of the Kings river, forming fine meadow land; and lastly a tract of forty acres five miles northwest of Fresno. The possession of so large a landed estate makes Mr. Simpson one of the most extensive property owners of his community and gives to him, at an early period of life, considerable influence among the cattlemen and grain-raisers of the eastern half of Fresno county. Some years ago he sold fifty-one acres which is now being developed into a granite quarry, opening a new industry on Big Dry creek and furnishing monumental granite than which none finer can be found in the entire state.

The marriage of Marvin Simpson was solemnized in Woodville, Tulare county, and united him with Miss Ida May Hedgepeth, who was born, reared and educated in California, and possesses qualities admirably adapting her for high social position. Of their union the children are Myrtle, William Robert and Elizabeth Irene. Mrs. Simpson is a daughter of Rev. Joel and Hester (Anderson) Hedgepeth, natives respectively of Missouri and California, and among the seven children of the family (all but one still living) she was second in order of birth. When a young man Mr. Hedgepeth crossed the plains as a member of Governor Edwards' party, some of whom were massacred on the Colorado river in an attack made by Indians. The survivors of the ill-fated expedition, deprived of their oxen, were forced to walk back to Albuquerque, where they arrived in a famished condition. The trials of that memorable journey were borne by women as well as men with fortitude and heroism, and when eventually they reached their destination they had little inclination ever again to brave the terrors of hunger and thirst on the desert. For a long period Mr. Hedgepeth taught school in the central part of California, and in that occupation his splendid education (largely acquired by self-culture) enabled him to wield a large influence for good over the students under his supervision. Eventually he concentrated his time and attention to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in whose work he has been active throughout the state and now preaches to the congregation at Academy. Mentally he is in his prime, although sixty-four busy years have left their traces on face and form. In the respect of the community and the affection of his parishioners he occupies an enviable position and with his wife, who also survives, he is enjoying the comfort possible to the twentieth-century citizens of the state.

In their denominational connections Mr. and Mrs. Simpson affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he serves as a member of the board of trustees and has been a generous contributor to all church activities. In fraternal relations he holds membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Fresno. Besides the office of assemblyman previously mentioned, he has served as school trustee for one term, but with these exceptions has declined official recognition, his tastes being less toward public service than toward the peaceful pursuit of his chosen occupation.

JOHN WILLIAM BEALL. The qualities of character which have won for Mr. Beall a financial success in his efforts have also won for him the esteem and respect of all who have come to know him, either socially or in a business way. He is a successful ranchman and is located six miles west of Laton, Fresno county, while he has also taken an active interest in real estate operations throughout this section. He was born in Ripley county, Ind., September 14, 1840, a son of John T. Beall, a native of the same place, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. His grandfather, Zephaniah Beall, was born in Maryland, and in 1818 located in Ripley county, Ind., where he became a pioneer farmer, hewing his farm out of the timber lands of the state. He was the descendant of Revolutionary ancestors of a fine southern family. John T. Beall married Elizabeth H. Hancock, a native of Indiana, where she now resides at the age of eighty years. She was the mother of eight sons and three daughters, of whom John William was the third in order of birth.

John William Beall received his preliminary education in the common schools, after which he attended Moores Hill College, an institution supported by the Methodist Episcopal Church in Indiana. Upon the conclusion of his studies he engaged as an educator in Indiana until 1874, when he came to California. He located near Visalia, Tulare county, where he took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres just east of that city, and two years later came to Fresno county and bought twenty acres in Temperance Colony. This was planted to orchard and vineyard, and he cultivated it for eight years, when, in 1884, he bought one hundred and sixty acres adjoining the city of Fresno. He retained this property until 1888, when he sold out to F. G. Berry, who made it an addition to the city. Mr. Beall then located in Fresno and engaged in the real estate business, purchasing a block on Mariposa street, at the corner of R street, and also built a residence, disposing of his interests in 1894, when he removed to Oakland. In the latter city he engaged in the produce commission business on Eleventh street, remaining in that location for four years, when he sold out and traveled for a year, and in 1899 came to the vicinity of Laton, where he purchased forty acres. The greater part of this property he set to peaches, apples, apricots and pears, while an acre and a half is devoted to the cultivation of Logan and blackberries. The balance of the land is in alfalfa, and he also gives some time to the raising of stock. He owned six hundred and eighty acres in Riverdale, which he divided and sold in small tracts, and has since bought two thousand acres in partnership with A. S. Kellogg, of Healdsburg, Cal. Mr. Beall is a director in the Murphy Slough Association and is president of the Riverdale Canal Company.

In Fresno county Mr. Beall was united in marriage with Martha Ann Hutchings, a native of Iowa, and they have one daughter, Adelle Lorena, who married E. P. Blanchard, of Laton. In their religious convictions they are members of the Seventh Day Adventists and are active in the work. Politically Mr. Beall is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

EZRA M. RUSSELL. A veteran of the Civil war and a resident of California for over thirty years, Mr. Russell is entitled to a place in this work. From early manhood he has made his way in the world, never receiving assistance from outside sources, his success being the result of hard work and perseverance.

A native of New York, he was born in Oswego county, January 16, 1841, a son of Jonathan W. and Elizabeth (Secner) Russell. The father was a brick mason by trade and in 1847 removed from New York to Illinois where he lived until 1853, when he located in Iowa. There he worked at his trade and also engaged in farming. In 1866 he sold out and started to cross the plains, but owing to the uprising among the Indians he was compelled to give up the venture. After living in Denver for a short time he returned to Iowa, where he remained until 1872, when he came to California. Locating near what is now the town of Kingsburg he purchased land and followed farming and fruit-raising until his death. His wife, who also died in this state, became the mother of ten children.

Ezra M. Russell was the second child. His education was obtained in the district schools, but at an early age he was obliged to give up school. He started out in life as an apprentice to the brick mason's trade, which he followed until 1873, when he came to California, locating in Oakland, and continued working at his trade. Later he went to Clear Lake and still later to Fresno, arriving in the latter place in 1874. Soon after he took up a soldier's homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres near Kingsburg, where he has since made his home. He is now engaged in general farming and stock-raising, also devoting a portion of his land to the cultivation of grapes and other fruits.

In 1862 Mr. Russell enlisted in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment, United States Infantry, his company being attached to the Western army. At the battle of Vicksburg, where he received seven separate wounds, he was severely wounded by being shot in the left foot. He was honorably discharged from active service in 1864, but in the spring of 1865 he assisted in organizing a company of which he was elected captain.

In Iowa Mr. Russell was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Jane Jones, who was born in Lake county, Ill., January 12, 1845. Her father, Jonathan, was a native of New York state. Later in life he removed to Illinois and still later took up his residence in Iowa where his death occurred. To Mr. and Mrs. Russell have been born eight children, namely: Alice, now the wife of F. Enos Silva; Ada, deceased; Rena, now Mrs. E. Vanwinkle; Nellie, Benjamin, Cassie, Clark, who is married and lives near Kingsburg, and Chester. In fraternal relations Mr. Russell is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Atlanta Post, of Fresno. Like nearly all old soldiers, he is a staunch Republican, but he has never cared to take a very active part in political matters. Here in this section of the county where he has lived for so many years and where he is so well known he is highly respected. He was one of the first settlers in the Kingsburg country, and has never neglected to do his part in the work of building up and improving the country.

EDWIN PICKETT. A native of England, Edwin Pickett was born in the city of London, January 26, 1842. His father, Joseph Pickett, was also a native of the same country and for years followed the trade of a brickmason. He was also engaged in contracting and building. His marriage to Miss Sarah Butler resulted in the birth of two children. Both the parents died in England.

Edwin Pickett, soon after completing his education, enlisted in the English army, joining the Fifteenth Hussars, Light Dragoons. The following three and one-half years were devoted to the service of his country, but at the expiration of that period he resigned and came to the United States. Locating in the city of New York, he remained there for a time, or until the latter part of 1862, when he enlisted in the United States Navy, being assigned to the bark William G. Anderson, which was connected with the Western Gulf squadron. Subsequently he was transferred to the gunboat Scioto, then to the Itasca, on which he served while the former boat was being repaired, it having been torpedoed in Mobile Bay. When the Scioto was once more ready for active work, Mr. Pickett was promoted to the position of master at arms and served in that position until 1865, when he secured a leave of absence, but owing to the close of the war just at that time, he never returned. The same year he went to Lowell, Mass., where he secured employment in the woolen mills. A year later he went to Rhode Island and worked in the mills in that state until 1870. That year he joined the Greeley Colony and migrated to Colorado, living near Greeley for eight years. Following his residence there he came to the coast and for four years lived in Washington, being engaged in farming and stock-raising. It was in 1882 that he arrived in California. Soon after he located near Hanford and purchased a ranch. This he soon sold and accepted a position as a clerk in a general store at Kingsburg. From there he removed to Selma, following the same line of business until finally he grew tired of the indoor life and located near Huron, where he made his home until 1899. That year he came to Conejo, where he engaged in the general merchandise business. This he has since conducted, meeting with excellent success in his venture.

In Fresno, in 1887, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Pickett and Miss Elizabeth Burns, and they have one child, Lucile Irene, who was born in Visalia in November, 1893. In politics Mr. Pickett is a Republican, and since living in Fresno county has been an active worker for his party's interest. June 21, 1899, he was appointed postmaster of Conejo and re-appointed for a second term. He has made his own way in the world, and in spite of great obstacles and many disappointments, has succeeded, and now has a comfortable home and a competency. Both he and his wife are highly respected and have a large circle of friends.

GEORGE WESLEY RAGLE, the son of E. T. Ragle, whose biographical sketch appears elsewhere in this volume, was born September 15, 1860, in Sonoma county, Cal. At an early age he accompanied his father to Tulare county, where he has since made his home. His education was received in the district school in the vicinity of his home, and he was early trained in the practical duties of a farmer's son. Upon attaining his majority he began farming for himself in Antelope Valley, making a specialty of grain raising. In partnership with his father he bought three hundred and twenty acres at Naranjo, Tulare county, to which he has added by purchase from time to time until he now owns over one thousand acres. A large part of this is devoted to grazing purposes, and he also raises considerable grain, and has five and a half acres in oranges. He has made a success of his work and is named among the representative farmers of this section.

Mr. Ragle has been married twice, his first wife, Margaret Shipley, being the daughter of Benjamin Shipley, a native of Arkansas. At her death she left one child, Maggie Ethel. Mr.

Ragle has since married Mrs. Maggie Williams, nee Awbrey, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Thomas Vernon and Eunice Gertrude. Mr. Ragle is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

JUDSON SETH PELTON. For nearly thirty years J. S. Pelton has been a resident of the state, and during that time he has witnessed the wonderful growth of this favored section, performing his share in the onward march. He is now living on a ranch near Selma, surrounded by all the comforts of life, made possible by years of industry. He has cause to feel proud of his life's work, as he started at the bottom of the ladder and without friends or special influence has climbed upward, until now he is named as one of the substantial men of Fresno county.

A native of Ohio, Judson S. Pelton was born in Cuyahoga county, July 17, 1835. His father, Seth D. Pelton, was a native of Connecticut and served as a captain in the war of 1812. In 1880 he removed to Ohio where he lived until 1885, the year of his death. His wife, who was born in Connecticut, bore the maiden name of Mary Porter, and by her marriage became the mother of five boys and three girls.

Judson S. Pelton was the sixth child. He remained at home, attending school when the work of the farm permitted, but in those pioneer days the youth was expected to assist in the making of a home, although many hours were devoted to study after the day's work was over. Mr. Pelton was an exception, as he was permitted to attend the academy at Norwalk and later engaged in teaching, but only followed that occupation one winter. In 1858 he removed to Iowa, and at Mount Pleasant engaged in the general merchandise business. Subsequently he sold out and for a time followed farming. In 1866 he migrated to the state of Kansas and in Topeka re-engaged in the mercantile business, also conducted a small farm near the town. There he made his home until 1875, when he disposed of both the farm and store and came to California. His first business venture here was in San Francisco, where he engaged in the buying and selling of real estate. Later he sold out and purchased a ranch in Solano county, near Cordelia, which he conducted but a short time when he again located in San Francisco, and engaged in the livery business until locating in the San Joaquin valley, when he purchased the place that has since been his home. This ranch of sixty acres is two miles south of Selma on the McCall road. Twenty acres are devoted to a vineyard, the same amount to fruit, and the balance is used for growing alfalfa. He also has a small dairy.

In Iowa Mr. Pelton married Miss Margaret Bale, and to this union have been born eight children, namely: Berdie, deceased; Maud M., now Mrs. Rev. N. L. Rowell, of Los Angeles; Harriett S., wife of T. D. Black, of Oakland; Margaret B., now Mrs. Bradford Webster, of Oakland; Dr. Harrison S., who went to Alaska in 1898, and was frozen to death near Nome while attempting the rescue of some comrades; William, also deceased; Paul F., who is mining in Alaska; Mabel M., wife of Dr. C. A. Cameron, of Redlands. All his life a Republican, Mr. Pelton is very active and one of the leaders in this section of the county, but he has never cared for office, preferring to devote his energies to the management of his own business. Both he and Mrs. Pelton are members of the Baptist Church of Oakland. Mr. Pelton's early life was surrounded by many disadvantages, but in spite of the environments at that time he has made a success. In the different parts of the state where he has lived, and where he is well known, he has many friends among whom his word is considered as good as his bond.

BENJAMIN MORGAN BAIRD. The ranching interests of Fresno county are ably represented by Benjamin Morgan Baird, who is a man of progressive spirit and keeps abreast with all the developments made in agricultural affairs in his community. A son of the honored pioneer, Alfred Baird, he inherits from his father qualities of the greatest value in the upbuilding of character as well as in the accumulation of property; and through the possession of sterling personal attributes he has won the good will of his associates and the confidence of friends. While it has been his good fortune to reap the benefits of his father's financial acumen and large success, such are his traits of enterprise and thrift that probably unaided by others success would have rewarded his sagacious undertakings.

While the family were living in Iowa Benjamin Morgan Baird was born at Frankville, Winneshieck county, December 27, 1853. At the age of six years he came across the plains with his parents and settled in Visalia, where he had public school advantages, supplemented by study under Father Dade. His education was completed by attendance at the San Jose State Normal School and by graduation from the business college in San Jose. On his return home he took up the sheep business in partnership with his father, but some years later became connected with an independent business in sheep-raising in Tulare county. During his sojourn there he sowed the first alfalfa in the vicinity and set out a vineyard of fifty-five acres, the first in all that neighborhood. Another forward movement which owed much to his enterprise was the organization of a ditch company, and it was in this way he secured water for irrigating his land. On selling out his sheep he embarked in the grain business with John A. Patterson, they being the first to place under cultivation the Glide ranch in Stokes valley, also the first to introduce the L. U. Shippey combined harvester operated by sixteen horses. For two of these machines they paid $400 freight to Cross creek. Under ordinary circumstances they would have reaped large profits from their cultivation of four thousand acres, but poor crops and low prices combined to make the investment unprofitable, and they sold out their holdings.

On his return to Fresno county Mr. Baird became interested in the grain and cattle business, which he now conducts on his father's homestead. In politics he supports Democratic principles and keeps posted concerning events and issues affecting the progress of our government and the welfare of the country. For years he has affiliated with the Masons, his connection with the order dating from his taking of the first degree in the blue lodge at Visalia, F. & A. M. At Reno, Nev., January 24, 1898, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary (Davis) Givens, a native of Mariposa county and a daughter of William and Sarah J. (Ellis) Davis, born respectively in Arkansas and Virginia. Her father was a second cousin of Jefferson Davis and the family features can be noted in her face. When eighteen years of age William Davis crossed the plains to California and settled among the pioneers of Millerton, where he became interested in the stock business, making a specialty of sheep. During the Indian troubles he assisted in bringing the savages into subjection to authority. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Baird was Dr. T. O. Ellis, a member of an old Virginia family and the first physician to practice in Fresno county, also the first incumbent of the office of county superintendent of schools, and in addition the first man in the entire county to set out a vineyard and an orchard. When he passed away in 1871, the county lost one of its most progressive pioneers, a man whose citizenship had been of the highest value in the development of latent resources. Since the death of William Davis, which occurred in 1871, his widow has made her home near Academy. Of her six children all but one are living, Mrs. Baird being the third among these. Educated in Visalia and Oakland, she received advantages which qualify her to adorn the best circles of society. By her first marriage she had two daughters, Hazel and Edith, who are now students in the Fresno high school. Of her union with Mr. Baird there are three sons, Walter Addison, Morgan Corwin and Carroll Hubbard. Besides these sons Mr. Baird had five children born of his first marriage, namely: Nellie Ray, who married Frank Beck, a photographer in Fresno; Clifford Jefferson, an electrician engaged in business in Fresno; Alfred Morgan, at home; John Alexander, who died at Fresno in 1899, and Robert Lee, an electrician in Fresno. In religious belief Mrs. Baird holds membership with the Episcopal Church and supports by influence and financial aid those movements calculated to advance the spiritual welfare or the moral life of the community.

NICHOLAS LANG is one of the leading German-American residents of Fresno county, and since coming to this state he has had many ups and downs. Soon after his arrival he lost $15,000 in the oil business, all the money he possessed, but with an energy characteristic of the race he went to work and has since met with success in his ventures, being now considered one of the most substantial men in this part of the county. For many years he was a "soldier of fortune," fighting under different flags and taking part in some of the most important battles this world has ever witnessed. Among these can be named the battle of Sevastopol. Mr. Lang being under the command of Napoleon.

A native of Lorraine, Nicholas Lang was born December 16, 1831, a son of John George and Barbara (Greer) Lang. His father was a bricklayer by trade and also followed farming. He died in his native country, as did his wife, who by her marriage became the mother of five children. Of this family, Nicholas was the third child. In 1851 he entered the French army, and followed the life of a soldier for sixteen years. During this time he was in the war between Italy and Austria, fighting under the flag of sunny Italy. At the time of the war between the United States and Mexico he was prepared to come to this country and assist the States in the struggle for supremacy, but was unable to get away. In 1871, when Germany and France were disputing over certain territory, the former country endeavored to force Mr. Lang into service, but he did not propose to be coerced and one day bade good-by to all and sailed for America, arriving in New York in June of that year. From that city he went to Pittsburg, Pa., where he became interested in the oil business, continuing there until 1882, the year of his migration to California. Locating in San Buena Ventura he engaged in the oil industry, which at that time was in its infancy. While in Pennsylvania, Mr. Lang had worked in one of the best refineries in the state and consequently understood the refining of the crude oil. Up to that time no refining had been done in California, but soon after coming here Mr. Lang began to refine the oil and established the first complete refinery of the oil industry in California. Later, through speculations, he lost every dollar, some $15,000, that he had made since immigrating to this country. After that he secured employment with the Standard Oil Company, with whom he remained until 1886, when he went to Santa Cruz and engaged in the restaurant and hotel business, continuing there four years. At the expiration of this period he sold out and came to Fresno county, locating on the ranch that has since been his place of residence. Here he owns eighty acres, all under a high state of cultivation, two and one-half miles southwest of Selma. Thirty acres are in orchard, about twenty in a vineyard, and the balance is devoted to general farming and stock-raising. He also conducts a small dairy.

While still living in the fatherland Mr. Lang was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ann Oblinger, and to them have been born five children, namely: Barbara, wife of Joseph Haselhofer, at home; Mary, wife of John F. Howard, Michael and Charles, who are all living in Los Angeles. Charles has a position as an electrical engineer. One son, Joseph, was accidentally killed while working as an electrician in Fresno, aged twenty-five years. Mr. Lang is a Republican, but has neither the inclination nor the time to take part in political matters. Both he and his wife are popular with a large circle of acquaintances, all of whom are pleased that his efforts have made it possible for himself and wife to be surrounded by comforts and many luxuries.

RICHARD GREEN MIDDLETON. A native of Mississippi, Mr. Middleton was born July 10, 1845, a son of David Middleton. The father was born in Arkansas, but removed to Mississippi where he lived for some years, later returning to the state of his nativity, residing there until 1859 when he sold out and crossed the plains to California, six months being consumed in making that long, tiresome journey. Unfortunately, after withstanding the hardships of that trip he lived but ten days after his arrival in Yolo county. His wife bore the maiden name of Miss Jennie Brazell and by her union with Mr. Middleton she became the mother of eight children. She was a native of Alabama.

Richard G. Middleton was the second child in his father's family. Owing to the circumstances that his parents were in financially he was unable to obtain an education, not even attending the district schools, as most youths of his day. At the time his parents crossed the plains he was fourteen years of age and after the death of his father it was necessary for him to work. Entering the mines in Grass valley he remained there two winters and at the end of that time went to Virginia City where he engaged in teaming. Later he lived in Silver City, Utah, until 1875, when he returned to California and located on Cash creek, and secured employment on a farm. The summer of 1880 he arrived in the San Joaquin valley, and with the money that he had saved from his earnings he purchased a farm near Hanford. There he followed farming for a time, subsequently selling his land and removing to the vicinity of Visalia where he lived until taking up his residence near Huron. Here he located on a half section of land and engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1895. In that year he removed and located near Lemoore and rented land and continued his farming operations until 1903, the year of his removal to the place that is now his home. Here he first purchased forty acres, but has since added ten acres more. This ranch is located nine miles west of Laton and is one of the good paying properties in that section of the country.

Near Visalia was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Middleton and Miss Flora House, who was born in Mendocino county, this state. They have two daughters, Vera Belle and Margaret, both at home. Mr. Middleton is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and formerly of the Odd Fellows. In politics a Democrat he has always taken an active interest in the welfare of his party, but has never cared for political honors. Starting out in life when but a boy, he has had to make his own way in the world ever since.

MILTON F. MASON was born in Harrison county, Mo., April 14, 1859. His father, James Mason, was a native of North Carolina and at an early day migrated to Missouri where he lived until 1865 when he moved to Iowa, settling near the city of Des Moines. There he engaged in a general farming enterprise and lived until his death in 1902. He married Miss Sophia Baber who was born in Indiana and died in Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Mason were born three children, two sons and one daughter.

Milton F. Mason was the second child, and after completing his schooling he engaged in farming in Iowa on rented land, where he lived until 1887 when he disposed of his interests and came to California. Locating near Fowler, he purchased twenty acres of land, but later he sold it, and in 1892 bought his present fine ranch of forty acres. Twenty acres of this is in vineyard and the balance is devoted to the growing of alfalfa.

While living in Iowa Mr. Mason married Miss Sarah Fannie Rife, and to them have been born nine children, as follows: Ira, George, James, Walter, Harvey, Chester, Francis, Maud and Myrtle. All the children are living at home and their parents are giving them the benefit of a good common school education. Mr. Mason is a member of the Woodmen of the World and in politics is independent, believing it best to vote for the man whom he thinks qualified for the office. For eight years he has served as school director and was clerk of the board most of the time. He has met with splendid success in his undertakings, all the result of his own efforts, as he has made his way in the world alone since leaving home.

GEORGE PICKFORD. Associated with George M. Kohler as one of the proprietors of the City Bakery and Restaurant, George Pickford is named among the business men of Fresno. He was born in Trempealeau county, Wis., December 28, 1861, the fourth in a family of eight children. His father, Oliver Pickford, was a native of Manchester, England, and an early settler of Wisconsin, where he engaged as a farmer and an engineer. He is now living in Fresno at the age of seventy-six years. (For more complete details concerning his life refer to the sketch of George M. Kohler, which appears elsewhere in this volume.)

Until he was fourteen years of age the home of George Pickford remained in Wisconsin, where he attended the public schools. Removing with his parents to California in 1875, he was located for a short time in Cambria, San Luis Obispo county, in 1879 coming to Fresno, which had then less than one thousand inhabitants. He secured employment shortly afterward with the Madera Planing mill, where he remained for one year, when the loss of the fingers on his left hand caused him to leave the business. He then learned the butcher business and established a place of his own in Mariposa street, between I and J streets, which was known for eight or nine years as the firm of Pickford Brothers. Disposing of this interest, he became the proprietor of the Ogle House, which he conducted for one year, and also of the Pleasant View Lodging House, at the corner of Fresno and J streets, and conducted it for two years, when he sold out and established the Armory Stables on K street, following the livery business for about three years. In 1895 he disposed of this business and established the City Bakery and Restaurant, which has since grown to be the most extensive business of its kind in the city. The bakery is thoroughly equipped and modern in every way, the large oven having a capacity of three thousand loaves, from five to eleven hundred being disposed of each day. The restaurant is the largest in the city and has a capacity of one hundred and fifty people. Mr. Pickford also owns real estate in Fresno in addition to this property, and is interested in both business and residence property in Oakland and San Jose. He is an important factor in the business progress of Fresno and is esteemed by all who know him.

In Fresno Mr. Pickford was united in marriage with Ida Studer, a native of New York city, and they are the parents of two children, Rollin A. and William O. Mr. Pickford is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

DARIUS PRATT. A native of Parke county, Ind., Darius Pratt was born February 4, 1859, a son of Darius Pratt, Sr. The latter was a native of Ohio, who as a pioneer farmer located in Indiana, where his death occurred. His mother, formerly Lucy Rinehart, was also a native of Ohio, who died in Indiana. Of their two children Darius was the youngest and the only one now living. He received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, and at the same time was trained to the practical duties of a farmer's son. In 1874 he came to California and engaged as a machinist, and was later employed as the engineer of a stationary engine in San Jose, where he had first located, having crossed the plains from Missouri. He located in that state in 1869, and engaged in farming near Kingsville, Johnson county. After nine years spent in California he made a trip back east, where he spent a year and a quarter, then returned to California. Until 1884 he remained in San Jose, when he came to Tulare county and engaged in farming for six years. In the spring of 1890 he went to Arizona and worked in a machine shop in Prescott for three years, then returned to California and accepted a position as engineer in a sawmill in Kern county. He continued so occupied for three years, in the meantime (in 1896) purchasing his present property, which is located five miles east of Portersville, in Rosedale Colony, and is planted to oranges. In 1897 he located on this property, where he has since made his home during the summers, and has also worked in mills as engineer.

In Tulare county, September 26, 1900, Mr. Pratt was united in marriage with Ada I. Duncan, a native of Visalia, and the daughter of O. H. P. Duncan, a sketch of whose life is given elsewhere in this volume. They are the parents of one daughter, Jennie May. Mr. Pratt is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Portersville, and politically is a Socialist, having left the Republican party to take up these interests. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World of Portersville.

FRED JAY STONE. As a contractor and builder Fred Jay Stone has taken an active part in the material upbuilding and development of the city of Fresno, Cal., where he has made his home since 1887. A native of Montpelier, Vt., he was born February 14, 1865, the descendant of an old French family originally known as La Roche, the name being changed to Stone by the great-grandfather of Fred Jay Stone. This ancestor emigrated from France to Ontario, Canada, thence to Vermont (where the name was legally made Stone), and again located in Ontario, where he died. His son, John Stone, engaged as a farmer in Ontario, where his son, John Stone, Jr., was born. The latter became a farmer in Montpelier, Vt., where he remained until 1868, when he removed to Wisconsin, and at Fox Lake and Green Lake engaged as a farmer. In February, 1887, he immigrated to California and located as a horticulturist and farmer in Fresno, where he died in 1902. His wife, formerly Sarah Phillips, a native of England, died in Fresno in 1895. They were the parents of two sons, of whom George is foreman for Fred Jay Stone.

In Wisconsin Fred Jay Stone was reared until attaining his majority, receiving his education in the district schools. At the age of seventeen years he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter and builder, near Hurley, Iron county, Wis., where he remained until 1887, during the last eight months of his stay there engaging in contracting and building. Upon his arrival in Fresno he engaged in the prosecution of his trade, following the same to the present time. Among the residences, business houses, etc., that he has erected are the following: Residences of Dr. Thomas, Dr. Buker, Adam Mowat and Louis Kutner, the W. Parker Lyon building, the Dunn block, the Green block, the Porteous Agricultural works, the Moultn block, the O'Neill block, the Diamond street school, and moved the Hawthorne school building one block and made the addition of the second story, which was considered one of the most difficult feats ever performed in the city in this line of work. He has been very successful and is accorded a prominent place among the contractors and builders of Fresno.

In Neenah, Wis., Mr. Stone was united in marriage with Carrie Larson, a native of that place, and they are the parents of three children, Emery, Opal and Vivian. Mrs. Stone is a member of the Adventist Church. Politically Mr. Stone is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally affiliates with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is now building a handsome residence on T street, near Mariposa street, where the family will reside. Mr. Stone is an enthusiastic sportsman and has been instrumental in the organization and support of various gun clubs throughout the country. He was one of the organizers of the Fresno Gun Club, of which he is ex-president, and is a member of the Golden Gate Gun Club and the California Wing Club, both of San Francisco.

J. C. Thompson

JOSEPH COE THOMPSON. Not only by reason of identification with California during the historic period beginning in 1849, but also by virtue of his long association with the stock and farm interests of Fresno county, Mr. Thompson holds a leading position among the citizens of his community. When in 1864 he came to his present location at Letcher few attempts had as yet been made to place the surrounding country under cultivation and he was one of the first settlers along Dry creek. On entering a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, he turned his attention to raising hogs and later became interested in the sheep business, having flocks on his farm and in the mountains. Eventually he embarked in the cattle industry and there now may be seen upon his estate full-blooded high-grade Shorthorn and Hereford cattle, representing as fine breeds as the district can boast. In the homestead he now has three hundred and thirty-two acres on sections 15, 12 and 22; in addition, with his son, James W., he now owns a mountain ranch of two hundred and eighty acres, a stock farm of five hundred and sixty acres known as the Bacon place, and the old Burton place, comprising more than a section of land, which is utilized for a stock ranch.

In tracing the family history of Mr. Thompson we find that his paternal grandfather removed from Maryland to Rockingham county, N. C., and there lived upon a plantation during his remaining years. The father, Henry Thompson, was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and became a teacher in Hardeman county, Tenn., where also he cultivated a farm. After his removal to Missouri in 1839 he became a teacher in Cole county and also improved a farm from a tract of raw land. After more than eighty years he passed to his grave, honored and mourned as a useful citizen and generous friend. While still living in North Carolina he married Elizabeth Lee, who was born in Maryland and from there removed to Rockingham county, N. C., with her father, Willoughby Lee; her death occurred in Missouri. Of her thirteen children all but one attained mature years, but Joseph, the ninth in order of birth, is the sole survivor and the only one who ever settled on the coast. Born in Hardeman county, Tenn., January 24, 1828, he remembers well the privations and hardships of the days of his childhood, and recalls the excitement incident to the removal from Tennessee to Missouri when he was eleven years of age. Later he was a pupil in a school taught by his father in Cole county. The school was held in a log building of primitive construction, erected on land donated by his father, and there the children learned to write with quill pens and gained their ideas of the world from the pages of the blue-backed spelling book.

When the discovery of gold drew thousands to the then unknown regions west of the Rocky mountains Mr. Thompson became fired with enthusiasm on the subject and determined to risk the perils of the overland trip in the search for gold. With a comrade he left home April 28, 1849. After waiting at Independence for some time, they secured outfits and other supplies, and then proceeded with Governor Edwards along the old Santa Fe trail and Cook's route, arriving safely at Los Angeles during the latter part of October. From there they traveled northward through the Tehachapi Pass and the San Joaquin valley. All through what is now Tulare and Fresno counties not a white man was to be seen except a few travelers who, like themselves, were hastening toward the mines. When they reached Mariposa they began to dig for gold, using the old-fashioned method of washing with rockers. The claim proved to be a good one and Mr. Thompson met with reasonable success. The gold thus secured he sent home by express and in 1853 he journeyed east via Panama and New York, thence to Cole county, Mo. The proceeds of his western trip were invested in a farm and to that new home he brought his bride, Elizabeth Greenup, a native of Missouri. A few years were spent there in reasonable prosperity. However, the thoughts of Mr. Thompson often turned toward the far west, and finally he and his wife decided to seek a home on the coast. In 1861, accompanied by their three children, they went to Panama and from there sailed to San Francisco. Immediately after their arrival they came to Fresno county, where Mr. Thompson engaged for some years in the stock business with N. L. Bachman four miles from the Fresno river. From there he removed to his present place at Letcher, where he and his only son, James W., conduct extensive stock operations. Since the death of his wife in 1875 his home has been presided over by his daughter, Annie L., who looks after his comfort with careful solicitude. His other daughters are dead, the youngest, Isabelle, having died in Missouri at six months; the eldest, Mary, came to California with the family and married Pierce Bailey, but a few years later died at Tollhouse, Fresno county. Mrs. Thompson was the daughter of John Greenup, a Kentuckian who became a pioneer of Missouri and spent his last days on his ranch at Dog creek in California.

On the organization of the first board of school directors in his district Mr. Thompson was chosen a trustee. Later he assisted in establishing and building the academy, of which for years he officiated as a trustee. In politics he has been a staunch Democrat, yet not an active partisan. The Methodist Episcopal Church South numbers him among its earnest supporters. Not only has he been liberal in gifts of money, but he has aided materially through service as trustee, steward and Sunday school superintendent. The denomination with which he is identified merits distinction as the first to enter this field, its original representative, Rev. David Latimer, having engaged in missionary work in this locality as early as 1854, and after him came Rev. Mr. Overton, Rev. Mr. Turner, Rev. B. F. Burris, and other capable and pious laborers on whom the mantle of their distinguished predecessor worthily fell.

F. A. JONES. Although still a young man, Mr. Jones has attained an enviable position in the railroad world. This success is not the result of any special influence, but the direct reward for honesty, perseverance and industry. He is now filling the important position of general agent (freight and passenger department of the San Joaquin valley) for the Santa Fe and is considered by his superiors to be one of the most efficient men in the service.

A native of Illinois, Mr. Jones was born in Lafayette, Stark county, January 5, 1863, a son of J. M. and Katherine (Atherton) Jones. The father was born in Ohio and became one of the early settlers of Stark county, Ill., where he engaged in the harness business for many years. He is now living retired, devoting his time to the management of his extensive farming interests. A Republican in politics, he has at all times been an active worker for the success of that organization, but has never cared for the emoluments of public office. In fraternal relations he holds membership in the Masonic lodge, and is considered one of the most substantial citizens of the county, where he has lived for so many years. His wife is a native of Hancock county, Ill., and a daughter of Milton Atherton, who migrated from Pennsylvania to Hancock county at a very early day, later settling in Stark county. At the time of the Black Hawk war he took an active part in the campaign, and three of his sons were in the Civil war.

To Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Jones were born two children: Nellie, Mrs. Frank Quinn, of Stark county, Ill., and F. A. The latter's boyhood and youth were spent in Lafayette, where he attended the public schools, later entering the Kewanee Academy, and after completing his studies in that institution he matriculated in the Northern Illinois Normal School, at Dixon, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1883. Soon afterward he entered the employ of the Iowa Central Railroad as timekeeper, and subsequently, when the road was extended to the Mississippi river, he was promoted to the position of cashier in the office at Peoria, under John F. Wallace, who is now the chief engineer of the Panama canal. While acting as cashier Mr. Jones decided to come west, and in 1884 located in Topeka, Kans., where he secured a position with the Santa Fe in the general offices, which position he held until 1886. In that year the road was building extensively in California, and Mr. Jones was transferred to this end of the line. For a time he was agent at various places, as the road progressed, finally being appointed agent at Santa Ana. Subsequently he was promoted to the position of traveling freight agent, making Los Angeles his headquarters, and for four years prior to locating in Fresno he was general agent at Santa Barbara. Soon after the Santa Fe secured control of the San Joaquin Valley road Mr. Jones was transferred to Fresno as district freight and passenger agent, in 1900, and since that time has made this city his place of residence, being now the general agent of the valley division, a very responsible position.

Aside from his duties in connection with the railroad, Mr. Jones has taken a prominent part in the work carried on by the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and in many ways has done much to further the interests of the city and valley. Always obliging and willing to do his duty, he has not only pleased the railroad company, but has secured the good will and friendship of all with whom he has had dealings.

In Oceanside Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Miss Florence Croff, a daughter of John P. Croff, and a native of Minnesota. To this union has been born one son, Lloyd Francis. While residing at Santa Ana Mr. Jones was made a Mason, and in Santa Barbara attained the Royal Arch degree. In the same lodge he was made a Knight Templar, being a member of St. Omer commandery. He is also a Shriner, being associated with Islam Temple, of San Francisco; is an Odd Fellow, being past grand of the lodge at Oceanside, and is also a member of the Encampment. At one time he was a member of the Knights of Pythias, but has demitted from that organization. Since coming to Fresno he has joined the Elks and is a member of the Woodmen of the World. In politics Mr. Jones has always been identified with the Republican party, but has never had time to take an active part in political matters. In connection with his railroad associates he is a member of the Transportation Club, of San Francisco, and a charter member of the Sequoia Club, of Fresno.

CHARLES SHARP. In Elgin, Kane county, Ill., March 14, 1846, occurred the birth of Charles Sharp, a son of Craigie Sharp, whose history is given at length in another part of this volume. His life began under very untoward circumstances, his first home being a log cabin in the midst of the prairie lands of Illinois. He was taken by his parents to Dover, Bureau county, same state, where his home remained for but a brief time, when he removed to North Prairie, five miles west of LaMoille and fifteen miles each from the towns of Princeton and Mendota, Ill. There he was reared to young manhood, receiving his preliminary education in the district school in the vicinity of his home. Against the disadvantage of a slight frame and apparently weak constitution, his thirst for knowledge, indomitable will power and ambition to excel spurred him on to exert himself beyond his physical ability. His parents having the greatest desire to give him what he so ardently wished, sent him to Abingdon College, whence he returned so broken in health that he was not recognized by his father. Shortly afterward he became very ill and it was thought that he would never recover, but his will power again asserted itself, and without the help of physicians he gradually came back to a health and strength which he had never before known. Within nine months after his severe illness he weighed one hundred and eighty pounds, could lift nine hundred and fifty pounds, and neither his father nor any of his brothers were willing or able to match him in strength or physical ability. That was his first great victory in the battle of life and the foundation for all the success which he afterward achieved. His next step was to acquire the education which had been interrupted so many times, and accordingly he attended Eureka College for four years, in the meantime giving his oversight to the farm work during vacations, holidays, etc., while in the summers he traveled for various agricultural manufacturing companies, among them that of J. D. Easter, Gammon Deering Company, and the C. H. & L. J. McCormick. He became an expert binder and holds the world's championship as the fastest binder on record. Upon the completion of the scientific, classical, theological and commercial courses in Eureka College, Mr. Sharp continued in the employ of the various harvester companies until 1878. In that year he was employed for C. H. & L. J. McCormick and had contracted to represent them at the exposition in Australia, but the company withdrew, believing it to be too late to ship machinery. Mr. Sharp, being in a position to make a change of residence, decided then to come to California, inducing his father, who was then on the eve of a removal to Texas, to locate also in this state, on account of the superior advantages of climate, of which he had learned in the teaching of a district school early in his career. In 1879 Mr. Sharp located temporarily in San Francisco, while his brother, Robert Sharp, went to Santa Rosa. For a time following his location in the state Mr. Sharp traveled throughout various sections and thus became acquainted with the advantages of certain localities. Deciding to locate in Hanford, Kings county, in partnership with his brother he established a hardware and agricultural implement business, which they conducted for several years with profit. Their business was destroyed by fire at a loss of $9,000. Charles Sharp then bought out the interest of his brother and built what is known as Sharp's block on the corner of Sixth and Harris streets, where he has continued up to the present time in the sewing machine and household furnishing business—continuing in this location for twenty-six years and being known as the oldest merchant in Hanford. Throughout his long residence here Mr. Sharp has taken a most active interest in the upbuilding of the place and the development of its best interests, and has constantly exerted a strong moral influence in the community. He has been noticeably successful in his temperance work, through his publication of the Alliance Messenger, of which he was editor and proprietor, his efforts proving him a strong factor in the carrying of Kings county for prohibition. Through his efforts the first Christian church building was put up here (the first also in the San Joaquin valley), in 1884. In addition to his mercantile interests he is also extensively interested in oil transactions, being president of and owning the controlling interest in the Lady Bryan Development Company. This company was incorporated March 9, 1900, and controls twenty-four hundred acres in the Devil's Den oil district in Kern county, which district contains ten townships. Mr. Sharp owns personally about six thousand acres of the cream of the Devil's Den oil district unpatented land. The country is as yet undeveloped, but holds out great promise of future success if the enterprise is followed up, and Mr. Sharp expects to make his fortune out of the oil interests with which he is connected.

The marriage of Mr. Sharp united him with

Jane A. Smyth, a native of Ireland, and to them were born three children, namely: Craigie S., a clerk in Hanford; Sidney J. W., a student; and an infant daughter deceased. In his political convictions Mr. Sharp is a staunch Prohibitionist and has for many years been active in advancing the principles he endorses, although personally he has never cared for official recognition. He has been a member of the Christian Church since he was thirteen years old and has always taken an active interest in its work, which has resulted, by study and research, in making him an entertaining and instructive teacher in the Bible class of the Sunday school. He has also officiated in the church in various capacities, and is now the only charter member of the Hanford Christian Church. Mr. Sharp can always be depended upon to give his best efforts to advance the mental, moral and physical culture of whatever community he makes his home. The qualities of his Scotch ancestry were a part of Mr. Sharp's inheritance, and to these were added the training received under the parental roof, as well as the experiences received through direct contact with the world. One of his most commendable characteristics was his unbounded devotion to his parents and the sacrifices he made for them while living. He is to all men true, earnest, honest and just, giving to them an implicit faith which is reciprocated by all who come in contact with him. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of many friends who have been associated with him either in a business or social way, commanding the respect of all for the progressive yet conservative methods which have distinguished his career, and the unswerving integrity noticeable in all his transactions.

THOMAS FRANKLIN MOODY. The son of a California pioneer, Mr. Moody was born in Santa Clara county, May 31, 1855. His father, G. W. Moody, was a native of Missouri and in 1847 he crossed the plains with ox teams to California. Locating in the beautiful Santa Clara valley he there engaged in farming and stock-raising for several years, but finally sold out and moved to San Benito county, where he lived until 1880, when he came to Fresno county. Ten years later he again made a change, this time going to Santa Barbara county. Here he made his home until 1902, when he sold his farm and returned to Fresno county where he has since made his home with his son Thomas. In young manhood he was united in marriage with Miss Emily Lynn, who was born in Illinois and died in Santa Clara county. By her union she became the mother of eight children, five boys and three girls.

After completing a common school education

Thomas F. Moody engaged in agricultural pursuits. Coming to Fresno county in 1878 he located near Lemoore. Since then he has lived in Kings and Tulare county, but in 1901 he purchased his present fine ranch of one hundred and fifty acres which is located five miles west of Laton. Here he is now carrying on a dairy business, having thirty head of milch cows.

In Napa county in 1877 was celebrated the union of Mr. Moody and Miss Lovey Jane Deitzman, also a native of Santa Clara county. To them have been born seven children, namely: Pearl E., Ernest L., Lela M., George C., Thomas LeRoy, Lester D., and Elmer I. All the children are at home. Mr. Moody is a staunch Democrat, but has never cared to enter the lists for public favor. He has made a success of his opportunities and is one of the most highly respected citizens in Fresno county. Both he and his wife are members of the United Brethren Church and take an active part in church work.

WILSON R. SMITH is one of the oldest residents of the Laguna de Tache tract. During the many years that he has made this place his home he has been prominently connected with the upbuilding of the country and at all times has performed his part. A native of New York state, Mr. Smith was born in Franklin county, August 14, 1832, a son of David and Eliza (Jackman) Smith. The father was born in Vermont, but at the age of ten years he was taken by his parents to New York. In 1836 he left his home and moved to Ohio, where he remained for one year, then going to Indiana, he resided in that state a like length of time, in 1838 locating in McHenry county, Ill., where he followed farming until 1850. In that year he crossed the plains to California and lived here until 1861, when he returned east. Locating in Iowa, he engaged in farming and continued there until his death. His wife was a native of the old Bay State. She died in Illinois in 1856, aged forty-seven years. By her marriage she became the mother of seven children.

Wilson R. Smith was the second child. He obtained a limited education in the common schools and engaged in farming in the east for a time, but in 1860 he came to California. Taking up his residence in San Joaquin county, near Stockton, he became interested in farming, remaining there until the spring of 1871, when he sold out and came to Fresno county, locating thirteen miles east of Fresno, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of raising wheat. In 1881 he disposed of his ranch there, which consisted of three hundred and twenty acres, and purchased twenty acres in the Temperance Colony. This place was sold in 1888 and Mr. Smith went to Fresno, where he established a feed and wood yard. In 1892 he became interested, as a contractor, in the building of canals in the Liberty country. A year later, however, he rented land in the Laguna de Tache tract, having four thousand acres under his control. The larger part of this was used for grazing purposes, although a portion was devoted to the raising of wheat. He now leases one thousand acres, and in addition owns one hundred and sixty acres one and one-half miles north of Laton. The place where he resides is composed of thirty acres, all of which is devoted to fruit and alfalfa. Aside from his fruit interests he is now conducting an extensive dairy, which is a very profitable branch of his business.

Carlino Ottom

While still living in Illinois Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Susan Smith, who, however, was no relation. To this union have been born three children: Wilson R., who is married and is now engaged in the real estate business in San Francisco; Charles E. lives near his father's place and conducts a skimming station; Albert E. lives at home, being in partnership with his father. On the occasion of their golden wedding, September 28, 1893, Mr. and Mrs. Smith were taken by surprise by their friends and neighbors, who invaded their home on that memorable evening to the number of one hundred and five and left with them substantial mementoes of their good-will and golden opinions in the way of gold articles, among them a beautiful gold-headed cane for Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith cast his first ballot for Abraham Lincoln and has never failed to vote for the candidates of the Republican party. He has certainly made a splendid success of his life and deserves credit for the work he has accomplished. Starting in life without a dollar, he has, by the exercise of a keen business judgment, accumulated a handsome property, the result of perseverance and industry. While he has never cared for public office, it must not be understood that he has lived within himself, for no man in the county is more liberal or more willing to give of his time and means in the support of a movement that he deems of material benefit to the country and its people. Both, he and his family are highly respected and have hosts of friends.

JULIUS ORTON. One of the oldest pioneers of the state, Mr. Orton is still hale and hearty and can relate many stirring stories of those early days. The pioneers were a brave and fearless people and when they blazed the way across the plains and through trackless forests they little realized the great good they were doing future generations. Since the arrival of Mr. Orton in California there have been many changes.

A native of Richland county, Ohio, Julius Orton was born August 29, 1825, a son of Miles and Lucy (Gamble) Orton. The father was born in Connecticut, where the grandfather was also born. From the state of his nativity Miles Orton migrated to New York, later removing to Richland county, Ohio. There he engaged in farming near the town of Shelby until 1838, when he removed to the northwestern part of Missouri. Locating in Gentry county, he entered land and engaged in agricultural pursuits. At the time of his settlement there were only about twenty families in the county and when he was ready to raise his log cabin the whole population of the county was on hand to assist. Now, where his farm was located, stands the thriving town of Albany. Mr. Orton married Lucy Gamble, a native of New York state, and a daughter of James Gamble, who settled in Richland county, Ohio, at a very early day. The land he entered is now the site of the city of Shelby, which was named by Mrs. Orton's father. To Mr. and Mrs. Orton were born four children. Both parents died in Missouri, Mrs. Orton being over ninety years of age at the time of her demise.

Julius Orton was the oldest in the family and about all he can recall of his early life is the fact that he had to work all the time. A few terms of school was the limit of his educational advantages. The schoolhouse was built of logs with slab benches for seats, while quill pens were used for writing. He remained at home assisting in the work of the farm until the breaking out of the Mexican war, when he hired as a teamster in the Oregon Battalion, in the quartermaster's department. Soon afterward the news of the discovery of gold reached him and he decided to come to California. The journey was made with ox teams, via Fort Hall, the Humboldt and Carson rivers, Mr. Orton arriving in Hangtown September 10, 1849. Remaining there until the following March as a miner, he then went to Georgetown, where he engaged in mining on Canyon creek until 1852. Tiring of that life, he went south to the Santa Clara valley, where he worked as a farmer for a time. Subsequently he went to Santa Cruz county and there engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1859, when he came to Tulare county, driving his cattle before him. At that time it was all open country and on arriving at his destination he entered land and continued in the cattle business. In 1861 he settled on section 10, pre-empting one hundred and sixty acres for his home and headquarters. In 1884 he homesteaded his present place, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres in section 14, which he has improved and placed under a high state of cultivation. In addition he owns a ranch on the Tule river which he devotes to the stock business.

While living in Santa Cruz county Mr. Orton was united in marriage with Lucretia Kirby, who was born in Pittsburg, Pa., a daughter of Gresham Kirby, a native of the Keystone state who migrated to California in 1853, settling in Santa Cruz county. His wife was in maidenhood Lucy Moon, a sister of David Moon, who was with Perry at the time of his great battle on Lake Erie. Mrs. Orton died April 22, 1900.

To Mr. and Mrs. Orton were born the following children: Lucy, wife of E. J. Hunsaker; May, wife of George DeWitt, of Lindsay; Charlotte, wife of John Keeley, of Lindsay; Jesse T., a farmer near Lindsay; Silas G., a farmer near Exeter; Eugene, who lives in Lindsay; Eben, manager of the Spaulding Lumber Company, of Lindsay; and Clyde, a butcher living in Lindsay.

Socially Mr. Orton is a member of the Pioneer Society of Tulare county. In politics he has always been a firm supporter of the men and measures of the Republican party, but has never cared for public office. He served as school trustee for several terms.

OTTO LOESCHER. Born in Prussia, Germany, December 29, 1859, Mr. Loescher is a son of Gustave and Caroline (Dolke) Loescher, both of whom were natives of the same country. The father was a mill owner and resided in the fatherland until his death. His wife became the mother of five children, two sons and three daughters. Of this family Otto was the eldest son and the third in order of birth. His education was obtained in the public schools and at an early age he was apprenticed to learn the miller's trade. Coming to the United States in 1886, he located in the state of Indiana where he followed his trade for two years, when he came to California. Soon after arriving in this state he settled in Selma where he engaged in the carpenter business. Later he worked in the grist mill, and finally, having been saving of his money, he was able to purchase a ranch, in the meantime operating the mill at Reedley. In 1901 he located on the place that has continued to be his home. Since taking possession he has erected a fine residence and otherwise improved the place until he has one of the finest properties in this section of Fresno county. His land holdings consist of forty acres adjoining the town of Fowler on the north and forty acres on the south. The larger portion, some seventy acres, is devoted to the growing of grapes.

Since coming to Fresno county, Mr. Loescher has married Miss Katie Vietor, a daughter of Frank Vietor, a sketch of whom will be found on another page of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Loescher have been born three children: Ella, Agnes and Edward, all living at home. Fraternaly Mr. Loescher is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He worships at the German Lutheran Church. Since coming to California he has worked hard, and as a result he has not only accumulated a comfortable fortune, but has made for himself an enviable reputation, his word being considered as good as his bond.

B. OROGNET. Residing on a farm which adjoins Los Banos is Mr. Orognet, who has made his own way in the world, and by the exercise of his native industry and talents has accumulated a fair share of this world's goods. A man of good judgment, possessing much business ability and tact, he has been identified with different industries, and in his undertakings has met with noteworthy success. A native of France, he was born January 1, 1864, in Oloron, department of Basses-Pyrénées, which was also the birthplace of his father, Antoine Orognet. His father, a farmer by occupation, married Catherine Boy, and both are yet living in their native country. They have but two children, and both are residents of California, John residing in San Francisco, and the subject of this sketch.

Receiving but a limited common school education, B. Orognet began work on the farm when a mere boy, remaining with his parents until after attaining his majority. Desirous then of seeing more of the world, he immigrated to America in 1885, taking up his residence in San Francisco. Entering into partnership with his brother, he was there engaged in the restaurant business for a year. Locating on the west side of Merced county in 1886, he worked as a ranchman for Miller & Lux for three or four years, in the meantime saving some money. Embarking then in business on his own account, Mr. Orognet was for a while employed in sheep raising in Calaveras and Merced counties. Returning to San Francisco from there, he remained in that city a year, being engaged in various pursuits. Subsequently opening the "Bon Ton" in Los Banos, Mr. Orognet has since been prosperously engaged in the restaurant and liquor business. In the meantime, making judicious investments of his money, he purchased the farm which he now occupies, and on which he has made improvements of great value. It contains twenty-one acres of good land, the larger part of which he devotes to alfalfa. He has erected a substantial residence, and in the care of his property finds pleasure and profit. He also owns valuable residence and business property in Los Banos, all of which he now leases, receiving a good annual income from the rental of these.

In Los Banos Mr. Orogren married Annie Hoffman, who was born in Alamo, Contra Costa county, a daughter of Henry Hoffman, and a sister of Edward H. Hoffman, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere in this biographical work. Politically Mr. Orogren is a straightforward Republican, and fraternally he belongs to Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82, I. O. O. F.

A. J. DELANEY. As president of the A. J. DeLaney Company, a large hardware establishment of Portersville, Tulare county, Mr. DeLaney is numbered among the representative business men of this city and holds a prominent place as an upbuilder of the best interests commercially and socially, and also in being instrumental in bringing many new settlers to this prosperous city and vicinity. A native of Ogdensburg, N. Y., he was born October 22, 1852, the second in a family of five sons, of whom four are living. His father, James A. DeLaney, who removed about 1855 to Canada, was engaged for many years in manufacturing agricultural and mill machinery in Peterboro, Ontario, Canada, but having sustained a heavy loss by fire in 1878 he removed to the then territory of Dakota, where he dealt in real estate, carried on farming, etc., being quite successful and prosperous. Later he removed to Grafton, N. Dak., taking an active part in political and other public affairs for the advancement of the city. He served as judge of the city for several years, after which he continued the practice of law until his death in 1902. He died in Grafton, N. Dak., as did also his wife, formerly Annie Wilson, of Ogdensburg, N. Y.

A. J. DeLaney was reared to young manhood in Ontario, Canada, receiving his education in the various schools, and later passed a successful examination for teacher. After graduating he was offered a position at his home in a general merchandise store which he accepted, and in this work he laid the foundation for his future success. Later his father offered him an interest in his manufacturing business in Peterboro, which he accepted, and remained with him until they were burned out in 1878. He then went to the new northwest country and settled in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, and engaged in manufacturing, mercantile and real estate business in that vicinity until 1882. Having been successful in the meantime, he retired from active business for a time, but in 1882 the great land boom of the northwest broke and a reaction set in, which brought values down to almost nothing. Having faith in the country and believing the depression to be only temporary, Mr. DeLaney decided to await the return of prosperity and associated himself with a legal firm in Pembina, N. Dak., where he studied law. After being admitted to practice in the state courts he immediately purchased an interest in said legal firm in Pembina, practicing in this connection for a year, after which he engaged in business on his own account. In 1890 he removed to California and located in Hanford, Kings county, purchasing an interest in a hardware and plumbing business in that city. In 1892 he purchased his partner's interest and became sole proprietor, after which he carried on a hardware and general merchandise business. In 1895 he established a branch store in Portersville, Tulare county, the two being conducted profitably until 1899. Becoming attached to Portersville on account of its beautiful surroundings and advantages, he sold the Hanford store and has since devoted his time and attention to his business in this city. He at once took steps to enlarge his business, having now a building 40x125 feet in dimensions, with an L on another street. Here he conducts an extensive business, and carries a full line of hardware, stoves and tinware, agate ware, crockery, glassware, paints, oils, glass, blacksmith supplies, agricultural implements, wagons, and in addition carries on a plumbing business and handles all the necessary supplies. In 1902, with a capitalization of $20,000, this business was incorporated under the firm name of A. J. DeLaney Company, of which Mr. DeLaney is president and principal owner.

The pleasant and comfortable home which Mr. DeLaney established in Portersville is presided over by his wife, formerly Jennie Anderson, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., with whom he was united in marriage in South Falls, Canada, in 1875. Fraternally Mr. DeLaney is identified with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Foresters, and in his political convictions is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He is an active member of the Board of Trade of Portersville, and as a broad-minded and liberal citizen takes an active interest in all movements that pertain to the general welfare of the community.

OSCAR DUKE. A prominent and successful ranchman, Oscar Duke is now engaged in conducting a dairy of sixty cows, while he also engages extensively in the raising of stock on his place of five hundred and twenty acres, known throughout Fresno county as Poverty Row Stock Farm. He was born in Lee county, Miss., June 17, 1864, a son of Thomas L. Duke. The elder man was a native of Massachusetts, who located in the south, thence came as far west as Colorado, and to California in the fall of 1875. He located in the Mussel Slough country, where he served as presiding elder of this Conference for one term, being a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Later he preached in Davisville, and Winters, Yolo county, after four years returning to Fresno county for a like period; thence to Merced and then to southern California. He is now retired from active work and makes his home near his son. His wife, formerly Henrietta Virginia Stone, was also a native of Mississippi, and is now deceased. Of their three sons and two daughters, Oscar was the eldest.

Oscar Duke was reared in the various states and localities in which his parents lived, attending school in Mississippi and Colorado for a limited time. In California he soon found employment on various ranches, in 1881 coming to Fresno county and worked on his father's ranch in the vicinity of Selma for three years. Upon the sale of this place he engaged in draying in Selma for a period of four years, when he went to San Francisco and was employed as gripman on the cable cars of that city. After seven months he returned to Selma and purchased property which reached a high figure at the time of the great increase in property values of Selma. In 1895 he bought twenty acres of unimproved land three miles west of Conejo, later added by a purchase of twenty acres, and then by forty, eighty, and three hundred and sixty, owning in all five hundred and twenty acres. With the exception of thirty acres this is all under irrigation, and all but eighty acres in alfalfa. He has a herd of three hundred cattle and also carries on a dairy of sixty cows. Up to a short time ago he had charge of the large ranch owned by Clarence J. Berry, but found it impossible to manage his constantly increasing personal interests and that of his employer, and consequently was forced to resign from the position. He is a man of energy as well as ability, and bids fair to win more than an ordinary success as a ranchman of this section.

In Madera, Cal., Mr. Duke was united in marriage with Mrs. Lottie Norris, a native of New York state, who had one son, Raymond Norris, Jr., by her first husband, Raymond Norris. Politically Mr. Duke is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

JOSHUA PECKHAM. Among the representative men of Fresno county mention is due Joshua Peckham, a retired citizen of Fresno. He was born August 15, 1839, in Middletown, R. I., a son of Joshua and Eliza R. (Tilley) Peckham, both natives of Newport, R. I., and representatives of prominent old families of the New England states, where the grandfather Peckham was a farmer in Middletown, R. I. They had a family of seven sons and seven daughters born to them, of whom two sons and one daughter are living, Mr. Peckham being the only one to make his home on the Pacific coast. Reared on a farm in Rhode Island, Joshua Peckham attended the public school of his locality. At the age of seventeen years he started westward, remained in Chicago a short time, then went to East Bend, Champaign county, Ill., and purchased eighty acres of land from the Illinois Central Railroad Company. This he started to improve, but did not complete and farmed on other land in that county. After the battle of Bull Run, July 4, 1861, Mr. Peckham enlisted in Company F, Twenty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was sent to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., then on to Rolla, Mo., and did guard duty at Lamine River Bridge; there their first engagement with Price's army occurred. While there Mr. Peckham was taken sick with intermittent fever and was in the camp hospital for one month and was then sent to St. Louis General Hospital, New House of Refuge, where he had typhoid and finally contracted rheumatism with which he is still afflicted. February, 1862, he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability and at once returned to his home, where he spent the greater part of that year in regaining his health. He then took up farming for one year and met with success, raising a good crop and receiving good prices. In 1863 he erected a store at East Bend and engaged in the general mercantile business, also started a meat market in connection with the store. Later he began farming on a large scale. In the fall of 1869 he made a trip to his home in Rhode Island and resided there from 1869 until the spring of 1880. At Newport he purchased a grocery store and in March, 1870, put in a stock of goods in addition to the old stock. Between March 1, 1870, and January 1, 1871, he sold $28,000 worth of goods, and the second year about $40,000; quadrupling the volume of business done by his predecessor. He purchased property, erected another store with two flats above for his residence. From 1872 until 1877 he conducted a large business as a general merchant as well as operating a grist mill from 1872 to 1875, first with two partners, but eventually succeeded to the entire ownership. In the fall of 1871 he restocked his old store with $5,200 worth of boots and shoes, conducting all three enterprises separately and successfully. January 1, 1877, he sold and retired from active business temporarily. In 1880 he came to California and near San Jose engaged in the grain, orchard and vineyard business on Senter Road and Coyote creek, remaining so engaged for two years. He then purchased property in San Jose and embarked in the real estate and livery business. About 1883 he engaged in the tea and coffee business in San Jose successfully and in 1884 opened a wholesale and retail tea and coffee store and manufactured spices in San Francisco for one year; then removed to Bixby's Landing, Monterey county, where he was in the mercantile and lumber business. After a short residence there he returned to San Jose and soon after, in 1890, located in Fresno and purchased the Pleasant View House and conducted a hotel for over six years. Selling out, he went to Los Angeles and in six months had to take back his hotel property in Fresno. Selling again, he spent nearly a year in San Jose, but having a liking for Fresno county again located here, purchasing a farm near Selma, which he set out in orchard and vineyard. He sold forty acres of this and removed to Fresno and located at No. 232 Valeria street, his present home. He later traded his balance of forty acres near Selma for eighty acres near Conejo, which he leases as a dairy farm. He also owns an alfalfa ranch of one hundred and sixty acres near Conejo on which he installed a pumping plant at a cost of $2,000. This ranch is well stocked and a lucrative dairy business is carried on under the management of his son, Joshua Peckham, Jr.

In Newport, R. I., October 5, 1871, Mr. Peckham was united in marriage with Mrs. Hattie N. (Peckham) Kaul, who is a native of Newport, and a daughter of Solomon and Roxanna (Barker) Peckham. Of this marriage three children have been born: Annie R., the wife of L. E. Hughson, of Collis; Joshua, Jr.; and Hattie N., deceased. Mr. Peckham and his wife are Spiritualists in their religious belief. In politics a Republican, he has ever been identified with the party's best interests. Socially he is a member of the Royal Arcanum and the Grand Army of the Republic. In the busy life that Mr. Peckham has led he has never forgotten the duties of a citizen, but has always given of his time and means to further the interests of the communities where he has been a resident. Starting at the bottom of the ladder, he has gradually worked his way by strict integrity and perseverance to a position of affluence, and now in the afternoon of a busy life he is able to live retired from the cares of business and with his wife enjoy a competency well earned.

JAMES B. HERSEY. The ancestry of James B. Hersey, a well-known and esteemed resident of Tulare county, is traced back to the colonial days of our country, when members of his family participated in the stirring events which led up to the independence of our nation. The family flourished in the New England states for many generations, Randolph Hersey, a native of Maine, finally settling in Montreal, Canada, where he became a prominent iron manufacturer, being president of the Pillow-Hersey Manufacturing Company. He is also president of the Hersey-Page Pipe Company, the manufacturers of water and gas pipes. Later in life Mr. Hersey disposed of his interests in Montreal and after a time found his way to California, locating in Santa Clara county, where he purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres five miles from the city of San Jose and engaged in general farming and horticulture. He is now living retired. By his marriage with Mary Louise Price, who is now deceased, the following children were born: John Randolph, general superintendent of an iron manufacturing plant in Montreal, where he makes his home; Theodore, who is engaged in horticultural pursuits in Santa Clara county; Fernando P., of San Francisco; Milton, assayer and chemist in an iron manufacturing plant in Montreal; Arthur, also engaged in the iron business in Montreal; Laura Beatrice, the wife of H. Roland, of Santa Clara county; and James B. After the death of his wife Mr. Hersey again married, by the second union having four children: Effie, Florence, Lena and Gertrude, all of whom are living in the east.

James B. Hersey was born March 30, 1856, and in early manhood learned the trade of a machinist and engineer. Coming to California in 1872 he first found employment in San Francisco, where he assisted in the erection of the Pacific Rolling Mills. Later he followed engineering at various times, making several trips to the Orient as first assistant engineer on ocean liners. He has also devoted several years to mining, being located at times in Colorado, California, Arizona, New and Old Mexico and Nevada, and at the present time he owns two mines on the edge of Death Valley, which he is now operating, having his own stamp mills. Mr. Hersey was in Leadville the year before the discovery of gold in 1877 and later returned to that wonderful region and followed mining for a time. His experience as a horticulturist dates from 1885 and since then he has engaged in this line of business at various times. For a period he was located in the Santa Clara valley, where he purchased and improved a ranch of sixty acres, all devoted to an orchard. This place is now owned by his brother, Theodore. In 1897 Mr. Hersey located in Lindsay, Tulare county, where he has since made his home. The land now in his possession was at time of purchase a stubble field, but under the direction of the owner extensive improvements have since been made. A pumping plant has been installed and with an invention of his own a double quantity of water can be secured. This is the only plant of its kind in the state but it has proved a complete success, and in the future, many, no doubt, will take advantage of the improved methods. As his ranch adjoins the Southern Pacific Railway it is the intention of Mr. Hersey to build a packing house for his own use. Fifty acres of his property are devoted to the cultivation of the Washington navel orange and in the future this acreage will be increased.

In Montreal Mr. Hersey was united in marriage with Albertine M. Holland, and they are the parents of the following children: Mansfield Randolph, Ralph James, Clarence Theodore and Mary Louise, all of whom are living at home. In his political convictions Mr. Hersey is a staunch Republican, but has never aspired to public office.

ELISHA HARLAN has been a resident of California since 1846, growing to manhood among the primitive scenes and conditions of the pioneer days, and experiencing the hardships and privations incident to the lives of the builders of a statehood. He has watched the growth and progress of the state and has been an active participant in the development of Fresno county, where he located in 1860. Born in Berrien county, Mich., August 5, 1838, he was the son of George Harlan. The latter was a native of Kentucky, who removed to Indiana and thence to Berrien county, Mich., locating near Niles. Deciding to cast in his lot with the vanguard of civilization in the remote west, he started for California in 1845, reaching Lexington, Mo., where they spent the winter. In the spring of 1846 they set out across the plains with ox-teams, traveling in Captain Ahrens' company. They left Lexington in March and after seven months of journeying arrived at Sutter's Fort October 8. During the trip they met with the Donner party, but parted from them at Hastings' cut-off. Mr. Harlan located at Santa Clara, where he enlisted for service in the Mexican war, as did his son, Joel Harlan. In the spring the family removed to Mission San Jose, where a crop of wheat was put in, and when the season was over located in Napa valley and engaged in stock-raising. After one year he went to San Francisco and conducted a dairy business, selling out a year later and returning to Mission San Jose and later to Napa City. During the gold excitement of 1848 he went to Coloma, Eldorado county, and mined for six months, then engaged in the butcher business in Sutterville for eight months. For a time following he was located in Cash creek canyon, thence returned to San Francisco and spent the winter. His death occurred in Mission San Jose in June, 1850. His wife, formerly Betsey Duncan, a native of Pennsylvania, died in Santa Clara, in 1846. They were the parents of four sons and three daughters, of whom Elisha Harlan was next to the youngest, and besides him Mrs.

Henry H. Smith of Livermore, Cal., is the only one living.

Elisha Harlan was educated in the common schools of California, and at an early age found it necessary to take up the burden of self-support. He began his work in farming and stock-raising, and after the death of his father he went to live with his brother Joel in San Francisco, and later located at Mission San Jose. He then farmed near San Lorenzo one year, thence to Napa valley, near Calistoga, thence to San Ramon until 1860. In the last named year he came to Fresno county and bought land in the vicinity of Kingston, on the Lower Kings river, where he engaged in the buying and selling of stock. He remained in that location for nine years, when he located on the property which he has since made his home, taking up at that time one hundred and sixty acres and adding by purchase until he now owns seven hundred acres, seventy-five acres in alfalfa and the balance in wild grass. He is located ten miles west of Laton in the Riverdale country, and for the past eighteen years has kept the Riverdale postoffice. He carries on an extensive dairy and is successful in his ranching operations.

In San Luis Obispo, Cal., September 14, 1871, Mr. Harlan was united in marriage with Lucy I. Hobaugh, a native of Indiana, and they have four children, namely: Jerome, at home; Irene, the wife of John Hancock (see personal sketch elsewhere in this volume); Le Roy, at home; and Aleda, the wife of J. Sherrell, minister in the United Brethren Church, at Riverdale. In his political affiliations Mr. Harlan is active in the counsels of the Republican party.

BENJAMIN F. WALKER, M.D. In every profession and trade we find men who have by their own efforts worked their way upward to their present responsible positions. B. F. Walker, by hard work, perseverance and industry, succeeded in gaining a college education and is now one of the leading medical practitioners of Fresno county. A native of Illinois, he was born in Vandalia, March 7, 1877. His father, B. F. Walker, was a native of the same state, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death at the early age of thirty-three years. His wife bore the maiden name of Mildred Yarbrough, and is now living in Laton. By her marriage she became the mother of three children, all boys.

Dr. Walker was the youngest child, and after attending the common schools he was allowed to attend the Fayette county high school in Vandalia, from which he was graduated in 1894. Thereafter he engaged in teaching in his native state for a time, but later accepted a position as a conductor on the Union Depot railway at St. Louis, which occupation he followed for three years, or until 1897, when he entered the Barnes Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1901. Soon after he came to California and located at Tres Pinos, where he engaged in the practice of medicine until February, 1902, when he came to Laton. Here he has built up one of the best paying practices in the county, making a specialty of the nose and throat. Since coming here he has also been engaged in the drug business, but in December, 1904, he disposed of that business.

In Laton, June 24, 1903, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Walker and Miss Edith A. Crews, who is a native of Fresno county, being a daughter of one of the pioneers of this county. Fraternaly the doctor is quite prominent, being a member of the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Woodmen of the World. He has taken an active interest in the affairs of the Baptist Church, and for some time was superintendent of the Sunday-school. Holding membership with the Chamber of Commerce, he has taken an active part in the upbuilding of this section of the state, being at all times willing to give his time and attention to any movement calculated to be of material benefit to the state or county. Since coming here he has not only made hosts of friends, but has become one of the best specialists in his line located in this section of the state. Meantime he has performed his part as a citizen, serving in different capacities. He was one of the organizers and is now a director of the Laton public library. He is deputy health officer, having filled that office for the past three years. In connection with his profession he is a member of the Fresno County Medical Association, the California Medical Society, the Tri-county Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the San Joaquin Valley Medical Association. In all of these he stands high.

GEORGE T. LONG. Since 1902 George T. Long has been located upon his present property three miles southwest of Fowler, Fresno county, where he is engaged in the cultivation of fruit and alfalfa. A native of Washington county, Iowa, he was born October 23, 1861, a son of James Long. The latter was a native of Pennsylvania who located in Washington county, Iowa, in 1856, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. His wife, formerly Margie A. Campbell, a native of Pennsylvania, survives her husband and now makes her home in Fowler, where she located in 1891. She was the mother of four sons and one daughter, of whom George T. was the fourth in order of birth.

George T. Long received his education in the common schools of Iowa, after which he followed farming until 1885, when he came to California. He first located at Selma, Fresno county, where he engaged in house painting for a time, and was then employed in a shingle mill in the mountains. He rented a place near Fowler in 1889, consisting of forty acres, later purchasing the same, and in 1902 he sold out. In that year he bought his present property, consisting of eighty acres, twenty acres being devoted to vineyard, thirteen acres to orchard and forty acres in alfalfa. He built a handsome residence in 1904, presided over by his wife, formerly Joanna Chalmers, of Warren county, Ill., whom he married in Washington county, Iowa. They are the parents of the following children: Charles, Harry, George, Jr., Arthur, Cloice and Roscoe, all at home. Mr. Long is a member of the United Presbyterian Church of Fowler, and politically casts his ballot with the Republican party. He has done considerable speculating outside of his regular work and has met with success.

CHARLES J. LINDGREN. Few general contractors in the state are better or more widely known than Mr. Lindgren. For years he has carried on an extensive business in Fresno and adjoining counties and recently he enlarged his field of operations and is now contracting in San Francisco, Oakland, Bakersfield, Modesto, Fresno, Merced and other places. Mr. Lindgren inherits his ability as a builder from his father, who was for years engaged in that line of business in Sweden, but the position he has attained in California is the result of his own efforts. When he came here he was unknown and without money, but by industry and perseverance he has struggled forward until to-day he is considered one of the most prominent contractors in the state. During this time he has erected practically the entire business section of Bakersfield and Kern City, thus doing a great deal to make these cities modern and attractive to the prospective business man.

A native of Sweden, Mr. Lindgren was born in that country on August 5, 1859. His father, J. F. Lindgren, was also a native of the same country and for years engaged in building, devoting his energies to the erection of stone and granite buildings. He was very successful and owned valuable granite quarries near the city of Nordkoping. During the winter of 1901-2 he visited in California, spending most of the time with his son, and on his return to his home he was taken ill and lived but two months after his arrival. His wife bore the maiden name of Johanna M. Johnson and by her marriage she became the mother of ten children, four boys and six girls. Of these three boys and five girls reached maturity and all are now living in the United States with the exception of two daughters, who remain in the old country.

Charles J. Lindgren was reared in the place of his birth and obtained a fair education in the public schools, but at an early age he started out to make his own way in the world, securing employment on a farm, but soon after he went to work under his father, learning the trade of a granite cutter. Finally he formed a partnership with his father, which continued for about one year, when he sold and came to America. Locating in Chicago, he there worked at any occupation he could secure for two years. Subsequently he learned the trade of a bricklayer and for three and one-half years he filled the position of a foreman in that city. In January, 1888, he came to Los Angeles, where he soon after engaged in the general contracting and building business. From that city he removed to Bakersfield, where as before stated, he has erected practically the entire business section of the city. While there he also assisted in the organization of the Bakersfield Sandstone Brick Co., of which he is now the vice-president. Under his direction a fine plant was constructed and the business gradually increased until today it is the most extensive brick manufacturing concern in the county. From the start Mr. Lindgren has made a success of his various ventures, and since 1900 has been contracting in all sections of the state, building some of the most important structures in the various cities. He is also interested in other ventures, including the Lindgren-Hicks Company of San Francisco; the Golden Gate Sandstone Brick Company and the Holland Sandstone Brick Company, located at Antioch.

In 1903 Mr. Lindgren came to Fresno, where he has erected for himself one of the best residences in the city. Here he and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Christina Bergquist, are living surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. Their marriage has resulted in the birth of three children, namely: Gertrude A., Edna M., and Charles J., Jr. Mrs. Lindgren is a native of Sweden and a daughter of John Bergquist, who was a contractor and builder in that country. He was also an architect of ability and later was the superintendent of a large estate at Mariane Lund, Smoland. Eleven years ago he came to this country and is now living retired in the city of Chicago. His wife was a Miss Stole, a native of Sweden. Her father, John Stole, was an officer in the Swedish army all his life, serving in the Hussar Regiment. He died at the ripe old age of ninety-nine years.

In politics Mr. Lindgren is a Republican, but while he has been too busy looking after his extensive interests to take an active part in public matters, he is at all times ready to support any measures calculated to be of material benefit to the state or county. The success that he has attained shows what one can accomplish in this country if he but possess grit, intelligence and industry.

HENRY KRUSE. A resident of California since 1887, Henry Kruse is classed among the upbuilders of Fresno county. He was born in Westphalia, Germany, July 27, 1859, and is a son of Henry and Fredricka Louisa (Bunkman) Kruse. The former died at his home in Westphalia, where his widow still makes her home.

The third child in a family of four sons and two daughters, Henry Kruse received his education in the public schools and in an Agricultural College. At the early age of fourteen he was apprenticed to a superintendent of a large farm, and later he himself became superintendent of a large place in Westphalia, where he remained until 1886, when he came to America and at once went to Fremont, Neb. In 1887 he came to California, where he secured work for two years with Mr. Eggers as second foreman. He then became superintendent of Los Palmas ranch, a position he held four years. In 1889 he purchased twenty-six acres, which he improved and set out to grapes, later adding twenty-six and one-half acres, also in grapes, all located in the Eggers Colony. He has also set out vineyards for others. Upon his home place he has erected a modern residence and otherwise improved his surroundings.

August 21, 1892, in Westphalia, Mr. Kruse was united in marriage with Anna Hilka, who was born there. They have four children, Freda, Greta, Clara and Ellen.

In politics a Democrat, Mr. Kruse is active in the counsels of the party. A friend of education, he has always favored good schools. He was one of the founders of the German Lutheran Church in Fresno and has been a member of the church board since then. In every sense of the word he is a self-made man and has always given of his time and means to promote the welfare of the county of his adoption, in which he has a host of friends.

ERICK GUSTAV ROSENDAHL. For many years E. G. Rosendahl was an active member of the ministry, but a few years ago, on account of failing health, he was compelled to relinquish his work and take up a rural life. During the time he was a minister he filled pulpits in many of the leading Swedish churches in this country and was considered one of the brightest and most successful men in the Conference. By his retirement the church lost a man who had done much to place the Swedish Church on its present firm basis, but although he is now practically retired from the church, he is still very active in promoting the general welfare of his people.

A native of Sweden, Erick Gustav Rosendahl was born February 22, 1849. He was the youngest in a large family and was able to obtain only a limited common school education. In 1869 he bade good-by to home and friends and sailed for New York, where after landing he continued to reside for five years. At the expiration of that time he returned to his native country and remained there for four years. It was in 1879 that he again took up his residence in the United States, this time locating in Dover, N. J., where he secured a position in the railway shops. Three years later, with the money he had saved, he went to Evanston, Ill., and entered the Swedish seminary at that place, taking up his long-cherished study of theology. The following three years were devoted to the study of this branch of education and that year in the Conference at Dayton, Iowa, he was ordained a minister of the Swedish Church. The same year he was given a charge at a place called New Sweden, in Iowa, one of the oldest Swedish churches in that state, where he remained for one year, when the Conference assigned him to another old and large congregation at Stratford, the same state. Subsequently he was transferred to the California Conference, coming to this state in 1888. The first year was spent in Kingsburg and at the expiration of that period he was compelled to resign, his health having failed and it being necessary for him to take up a different occupation. Purchasing his present place of twenty acres, three miles northeast of Kingsburg, he was one of the very first to locate in this colony. His land is devoted to peaches, grapes and alfalfa.

Since taking up agricultural pursuits, Mr. Rosendahl has been very active in promoting various business ventures. He was one of the organizers of the Scandinavian Mutual Protective Fire Insurance Company, of which he is vice-president, director and appraiser. He is also secretary of the Swedish Methodist Church of the United States, and is interested in the Co-operative Packing Company at Kingsburg, being a director of the same. This section of the county has developed very rapidly, and Mr. Rosendahl was the instigator of the present rural delivery service. He has also been very prominent in school and religious work, at all times doing his part to promote the welfare and growth of the same. He was the first director of Harrison school district and it is said that the people of this section look upon him as the leader of every movement that tends to improve existing conditions. The old saying that "there is no great loss without some gain" is very true in this instance, for while the church lost a very useful leader in the resignation of Mr. Rosendahl this county gained a splendid citizen.

In New York city occurred the marriage of Mr. Rosendahl and Miss Annie Elizabeth Damstrom, who is also a native of Sweden. To them have been born two children: Albert Henry and Hannah Eugene, both of whom are living at home. The entire family is most highly respected in this section of the county where they have a large circle of warm and personal friends.

HERMAN S. BACHMAN. In every locality there is always some man to take the lead and develop some special line of business and to this man the whole country is under lasting obligation. To Mr. Bachman credit must be given for the great work he has done along dairying lines. He was the man to see the possibilities of this business and was the first to engage in dairying from a commercial standpoint. As a result of his judgment the section of the county about Portersville has become enriched to the amount of many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

A native of Maine, Mr. Bachman was born in Cumberland county, near the town of Harrison, November 27, 1854. His father, Sigmund Bachman, was born in Reckendorf, Bavaria, Germany. On immigrating to the United States he settled in Maine, where he engaged in business as a merchant. In 1855 he migrated to Wisconsin, locating in Milwaukee, where he became a prominent wholesale dealer in dry goods. Two years later, however, he removed to the town of Monroe, where he remained until 1861, when he located in Chicago as a dealer in merchandise. There he conducted a very successful business until 1879, when he went to Denver, Colo., where he engaged in business until 1881, the year of his death. His wife bore the maiden name of Susan A. Woodsum, and was born in Harrison, Me. She is still living and makes her home in North Bridgton, Me. By her marriage with Mr. Bachman she became the mother of four children, three of whom are living.

The second in this family was Herman S. Bachman. He accompanied his parents on their removal west and his early life was spent in the various towns in which his father was engaged in business. On the removal of the family to Chicago he was but a boy and there he received his education, but his schooling was limited, for at the age of eleven years he entered the employ of a wholesale men's furnishing and notion store, which was located on Lake street. Beginning at the very bottom as an errand boy he worked his way up, until at the expiration of three years he was promoted to the position of stock keeper. He then was employed in his father's store as a salesman and until 1860, when his father removed to Crown Point, Ind., where he remained for one year. Tiring of a mercantile life he then began farming near Crown Point, continuing for two years or until 1872. That year witnessed his arrival in California. The first winter was spent in Lake county and the following spring he went to San Diego, where he remained for a short time. Going to Holcomb valley, San Bernardino county, he followed mining there, in Kern county and in Arizona, until 1874. From 1874 to 1876 he was with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as foreman of a gang of men engaged in tunnel work. He had charge of the head of the tunnel and during the time he was with the company he had no accidents, neither was a man in his gang injured. After eighteen months he resigned his position and returned to Riverside, where he purchased fifty acres of land and engaged in horticultural pursuits and farming, growing oranges and alfalfa. This venture proved a success and there he remained until 1885, when he sold out and located in Tulare county. For two years after his arrival in the county he was engaged in general farming. In 1887 Mr. Bachman purchased a livery stable in Tulare which he conducted successfully until 1896. In 1892 he had purchased his present farm ten miles southwest of Portersville and on disposing of his livery stable he took up his residence on this farm, which consists of four hundred and eighty acres, two hundred and forty acres of which are devoted to the growing of alfalfa, while the balance is used for grain purposes.

Since taking up his residence on this farm Mr. Bachman has become one of the leading dairymen of the state. He now has sixty head of cattle, Short-horns and Holsteins, and although he was the first to engage in the butter business from a commercial standpoint, that venture has proved a wonderful success. Mr. Bachman is a firm believer in everything modern and his farm is one of the best equipped in California. In September, 1903, Mr. Bachman rented his farm and now lives in Portersville, but while not directly interested, he still manages the farm. He is the largest stockholder and is president of the Poplar Irrigation Ditch Company, and has been prominently identified with water affairs since living on his ranch.

In maidenhood Mrs. Bachman was Miss Cynthia P. Smith, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Henry M. Smith, who was born in New York state and became an early settler of Wisconsin, where he followed farming. During the Civil war he served in a Wisconsin regiment. In 1886 he came to California and located at Riverside, but two years later he removed to Tulare county, where he lived until his death in 1904, at the age of seventy-two years. Mr. Smith married Palmyra Frost, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of Alva Frost, also a native of Ohio. He removed to Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming at the outbreak of the Civil war. Enlisting in a Wisconsin regiment he served until the close of that memorable contest. His wife is still living and makes her home at Rialto. She has six children living, Mrs. Bachman being the oldest. Mrs. Bachman married for her first husband, Ervin Cornell, who died in Nebraska, leaving one child, Minnie, the wife of Isaac Bunton, of Poplar. By her marriage with Mr. Bachman, which occurred February 16, 1885, she has five children: Ervin Herman; Susan Adah, Chloie Annis, Leah Gretchen and Hazel Olive. By a former marriage Mr. Bachman had two children: Howard E., at Tehama, Cal., and Frankie, the wife of James Crose, of Poplar.

Mr. Bachman has always taken an active interest in the welfare of his county and has been especially interested in local affairs. He was one of the reorganizers of the Poplar Co-Operative Association, of which he is now vice-president and director. In politics he is a Democrat and a warm supporter of William Jennings Bryan. He formerly held membership in the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. That success has attended the efforts of Mr. Bachman is the result of his own business ability and perseverance. He has had many obstacles to overcome, but with a determination to succeed he has gone steadily forward, until today he is considered one of the most substantial men in Tulare county. Both he and his estimable wife have a warm place in the hearts of the residents of Portersville, all of whom rejoice in the fact that they are able to enjoy their latter years amid peace and good will.

WILLIAM SHIELDS. Born in the north of Ireland, October 31, 1834, the late William Shields accompanied his parents to America when seven years of age and with them settled in Malone, New York, where he was reared, educated and where he remained until 1855, when he started for the middle west. Settling in Illinois, he improved a farm from the prairie, five miles from Gibson City, Ford county, and engaged in general farming and the stock business. In 1873

he disposed of his interests and came to California, arriving May 10 of that year and locating in Marin county. For two years he farmed six miles south of Petaluma, then purchased three hundred and twenty acres in San Benito county, where he remained until the fall of 1876. Removing then to San Mateo county, he settled near Half Moon Bay, where he remained until locating in Fresno county in 1884. He here purchased eighty acres of stubble land one and one-half miles north of Fresno, on Blackstone avenue, which he set out in a vineyard of fifty-five acres and the balance in orchard, also erecting a comfortable residence. In addition to his other interests he engaged in buying, selling and improving land. He was a Republican and a Mason. Always in favor of education, he took a keen interest in maintaining good schools. He became prominent as a citizen of Fresno county and followed a successful career until his death, March 7, 1902.

Mr. Shields was married in Genoa, Ill., January 1, 1858, to Elizabeth M. Marsh, who was born September 11, 1838, in Chautauqua county, N. Y., a daughter of Alva Marsh, who was born in West Brattleboro, Vt. Her grandfather, William Marsh, was also a native of the same place and served as captain of a company during the war of 1812. His father, also named William, was in the Revolutionary war.

In tracing her ancestry Mrs. Shields dates back to the landing of the Pilgrims. Her father removed to Chautauqua county, N. Y., thence in 1842 to Illinois, by way of Chicago, which was then only a small town, and settled in DeKalb county, where he engaged in farming. He eventually came to California, where he spent his remaining years. His wife, Hannah House, was born in the Mohawk valley, N. Y., of German ancestry, a daughter of Adolphus and granddaughter of another Adolphus House. The latter came from Germany prior to the war of the Revolution, and served as a captain during that struggle for independence. He gave his orders in German, being unable to speak English. He settled in the Mohawk valley and there died. Mrs. Marsh died in California. Two of her sons, Alva and Adolphus Marsh (the latter being raised to a lieutenant), were soldiers during the Civil war. Mrs. Shields is the sixth in order of birth of ten children, six of whom are living. She was reared and educated in Illinois. Since the death of her husband she erected a residence at No. 385 San Pablo avenue, Fresno, where she now resides, having rented her ranch and vineyard.

Mr. and Mrs. Shields became the parents of eight children: Alice V., deceased, married Thomas Newell, of Selma; Adolphus, a farmer on Whites Bridge road, is a Knight Templar Mason; Charles E. died in infancy; Ella M. became the wife of Leon Bean, of Palo Alto; Lillian E. married George Taylor, of Ft. Bragg, Cal.; Josephine P. became the wife of Wright Spencer, of Fresno; Flora D. is Mrs. Frank Montague, also of Fresno; William Alexander died in infancy. Mrs. Shields is a member of the Methodist Church, to which Mr. Shields gave liberally. In all the years of their residence in California Mr. and Mrs. Shields endeared themselves to a wide circle of friends, especially in Fresno county. Since the death of Mr. Shields his widow has ably managed the estate and is living in the enjoyment of a competency which she and her husband earned. In all charitable enterprises Mrs. Shields takes an active part.

HERMAN GRANZ. A resident of California since the spring of 1869, Herman Granz has been actively engaged in building up the commercial circles of the state. A native of Saxony, Germany, he was born near Chemnitz, August 1, 1841, a son of Samuel Granz, who was descended from an old family. A brother, Louis Granz, died in San Francisco in 1904.

Herman Granz was reared on his father's farm and educated in the schools of Germany. At the age of sixteen years he was apprenticed to learn the cabinet-maker's trade, which he followed in Austria, Switzerland and France for a time. Hearing and reading a great deal of the splendid opportunities offered young men in the United States, he decided to emigrate, and in 1868 he was able to carry out his cherished plans. Arriving in New York city, he worked at his trade one year, during which time he heard of the better opportunities for advancement in the newer state of California and with the money he had saved made the trip to San Francisco by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He followed his trade in that city for a time, then started a furniture factory on a small scale in Hayes valley. Later, as his business increased, he established a factory on Barry street, and four years later built on Brannan street, the plant being operated by steam power. Here he manufactured furniture of all kinds and employed seventy-five hands. This enterprise was conducted successfully until 1887, when, on account of ill health, he wished to leave the city.

Upon purchasing his present property in 1881 Mr. Granz began the work of improvement by setting it out to vines, and at the time the railroad was built into Clovis, Fresno county, he had his eighty acres in vineyard. He erected a winery in 1884 and began the manufacture of a high grade of wines and in the passing of the years he has built up a lucrative business. His winery has a large capacity and on his home place, to which he brought his family in 1887, he has erected a fine house and laid out beautiful grounds. It is located four miles east of Fresno, on Belmont avenue.

Mr. Granz was married in New York city to Adelaide Bauhofer, who is a native of Austria. To them have been born eight children, viz.: Carl, of San Francisco, connected with the California Wine Association as city salesman; Emil H., owner of a winery in Sultana; O. J., with his father; Edward H., also with his father; Hermina, who married M. Saier, of Fresno; Sophia, the wife of John L. Gilbert, also of Fresno; Adelaide and Clara, at home.

Mr. Granz has always given his support to the Republican party, though he never would allow his name to be mentioned for office. He is an active member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce. A property owner of Fresno county for nearly a quarter of a century, Herman Granz has given liberally of his means toward the upbuilding of the varied interests that have brought the county to its present position in the San Joaquin valley. He gives employment to a great many people and always extends a helping hand to those less fortunate than himself. Starting at the bottom of the ladder, he is justly entitled to the position of a self-made man.

CONRAD METZLER. A native of Russia, Mr. Metzler was born October 3, 1866, near Saradif, which was also the birthplace of his father, Conrad, who was of German descent. By trade he was a shoemaker. Both Mr. Metzler and his wife, formerly Sophia Elizabeth Fredrick, were members of the Lutheran Church. The former died in his native country.

Conrad Metzler, Jr., obtained a limited common school education and upon attaining his majority immigrated to the United States. Coming at once to Fresno, he worked for two years in the city and one year in a vineyard. Subsequently for about five years he engaged in business as a general contractor, when he purchased a grocery business in Fresno on E street. While conducting this grocery store he did considerable excavating work on contract and finally disposed of his store and engaged in the cement contracting business. From a small beginning this venture developed until he soon conducted the largest cement walk and grading business in Fresno. Early in the year 1905 he took the contract for grading the Visalia and Lemon Cove electric railroad between Exeter and Lemon Cove. Aside from these interests Mr. Metzler owns a ranch of one hundred acres southwest of Fresno, where he is engaged in growing alfalfa and raising stock.

Prior to coming to the United States Mr.

Metzler was united in marriage with Mary Rudolph, whose parents are residents of Fresno. To Mr. and Mrs. Metzler were born seven children, namely: Mary (the wife of V. V. Pittman of Fresno); Conrad, Emma, Henry, August, Alex and Annie, all natives of California. The success Mr. Metzler has made of his life is the result of his individual efforts. Starting without a dollar in a strange country, with the disadvantage of having to learn a new language against him, he has steadily worked upward until he is now one of the leading contractors of central California.

GEORGE HARPER BLAND, M.D. As superintendent and resident physician of the county hospital and almshouse of Fresno county, George Harper Bland has proven himself an important factor in the growth and development of this institution, which is universally acknowledged as one of the best arranged and well kept establishments of its kind in the San Joaquin valley. Dr. Bland is a native of Todd county, Ky., where he was born August 29, 1860. His father, Stewart Dolly Bland, was born in West Virginia, the youngest son of Stewart Bland, who was twice married and had a family of eighteen sons and six daughters. Of these sons some enlisted in the Union army and some in the Confederate, giving their services in the line their convictions lay. Stewart D. Bland served in a Virginia regiment in the Confederate army as captain of his company, and in the various engagements in which he participated was wounded seven times; was captured and in prison eighteen months, spending a part of that time in Camp Chase, Fort Delaware, Johnson, etc. After the close of the war he located in Todd county, Ky., where he became a farmer, and also participated to some extent in public affairs, holding the office of high sheriff for two terms. He is a Democrat in his political convictions, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He married Virginia Harper, a native of Pendleton county, W. Va., and the daughter of George Harper, of Virginia, who became a farmer in West Virginia, where he died, past eighty-three years of age, longevity being a trait on both sides of the house. Mr. Bland had a brother, Adam, who came to California as early as 1850, and died in southern California in 1895, while another brother, Rev. Henry J. Bland, came in 1853 and now resides in San Jose. Mr. and Mrs. Bland are the parents of seven children, having lost two, the third in order of birth being George Harper Bland.

George Harper Bland received his education in the district school near his home in Kentucky, in which state he remained until 1895, farming with his father until attaining his majority, and after that engaging in the nursery business. He came to California in 1805 and in San Jose had charge of the college campus of the University of the Pacific for the period of eight months, when, in the fall of 1896, he entered the academy for a special course, studying until 1899. He then became a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of San Francisco, from which he was graduated in 1901 with the degree of M.D. Following this he became resident physician for the Copper King Mining Company, seven miles above Academy, where he engaged in practice until the closing of the mines, when he located at Academy and continued in practice for one year. In September, 1903, he removed to Clovis, Fresno county, where he built up a lucrative practice, continuing until January 11, 1905, when he received the appointment of superintendent and resident physician of the county hospital and almshouse of Fresno county, to which he has since given his entire attention. The success which Dr. Bland has acquired since locating in California has been entirely the result of his own efforts and while attaining the position given a skilful surgeon and physician, he has also won the esteem and confidence of all who have come to know him either professionally or personally.

W. J. Jones

Lucia A. Jones

In San Jose, Cal., Dr. Bland was united in marriage with Emily A. Nowell, a native of Copperopolis, Cal. She graduated from the State Normal, at San Jose, and attended Stanford University to the senior year, when she began teaching, continuing for six years. They have one child, Virginia. Fraternally Dr. Bland is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past officer; Ancient Order of Foresters and Fraternal Brotherhood. Mrs. Bland is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically the doctor is a Democrat, and in the line of his profession belongs to the County Medical Society, State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

WILLIAM J. JONES. A pioneer of California, William J. Jones is located on his ranch on section 9, township 21, range 26, in the vicinity of Poplar, and engaged in the cultivation and improvement of the land which has transformed the San Joaquin valley into one of the fine farming sections of the state. He was born in Roane county, Tenn., March 15, 1839, and was left an orphan when about three years old. He was then taken into the home of an uncle, J. H. Hacker, and his education was obtained in the common schools in the vicinity of his uncle's farm. By means of ox-teams he and his uncle crossed the plains in 1853, the trip consuming six months. His younger brother, Joseph Jones, was left in Tennessee, where he now makes his home. Upon their arrival in California Mr. Hacker located near Modesto, Stanislaus county, and engaged in farming and stock-raising along the banks of the Stanislaus river. There Mr. Jones grew to manhood, receiving the practical training which enabled him to make a success of his independent efforts. He remained with his uncle for some years after attaining manhood, driving a team and engaging in general farming and stock-raising. In 1879 he came to Tulare county and in the vicinity of Poplar bought two hundred and forty acres of railroad land, upon which he engaged in the raising of grain and alfalfa, besides engaging in stock-raising. He is now the owner of between five and six hundred acres of land, upon which he has made all the improvements, one hundred and sixty acres being located six miles south of his home property, and eighty acres four miles north. He has made a success of his work and is highly esteemed, both in a financial and social way.

In Stanislaus county Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Lucy A. Bailey, a native of Carroll county, Ga., and they are the parents of three children, namely: Oscar, a farmer on Deer creek, Tulare county; Mary, the wife of Milton M. Dale, whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume; and Sarah, the wife of Otto Beeler, located in the vicinity of Pixley. Politically Mr. Jones is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

ABRAM VANWINKLE. Isaac Vanwinkle, the father of Abram, was born in Kentucky and in 1837 migrated to Perry county, Indiana. He followed farming until 1843 when he removed to Iowa, locating in Davis county, and there resumed agricultural pursuits, which he followed until 1850. In that year he disposed of his interests there, outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to California. The first two years after his arrival here were spent in the mines near Hangtown, his efforts being well rewarded. He then returned to his home in Wapello county, Iowa, where he remained the balance of his life, his death occurring in 1895, at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, who in maidenhood bore the name of Agnes Miller, was born in Kentucky, and is the mother of ten children. She is now living in Iowa at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

Abram Vanwinkle, the second in this large family, was born in Perry county, Ind., January 4, 1841. Like most boys of those early days his schooling was limited to a few terms in the district schools near the home farm. In 1862, he started out to make his own way in the world and the same year crossed the plains to California. The first three years of his life in this state were spent in teaming between Sacramento, Virginia City and Austin, Nev. He then engaged in the lumber business on the Russian river in Sonoma county for two years, at the end of which time he located in Napa county, where he engaged in farming until 1870. The next three years were spent in Stanislaus county on the San Joaquin river. Prior to locating in Fresno county he was engaged in the sheep business in Fresno, now Madera county, but this venture proved a failure and he lost every dollar he had. In 1879 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, two and one-half miles west of Kingsburg and three miles south of Selma. Here he engaged in farming and stock-raising, also conducting a medium-sized dairy, and keeping a herd of Angora goats, from which he derives a good profit.

In 1872 Mr. Vanwinkle married Miss Emma Brown, who was born in Australia, coming to the United States with her parents when a child. Her father, Henry Brown, was born in England and at the time of the discovery of gold in Australia, left his native country and followed mining until his emigration to California. To Mr. and Mrs. Vanwinkle have been born three children, namely: Charles, who lives in Arizona; Amanda, wife of Albert Elder, of Fresno county, and Agnes, who lives at home. In politics Mr. Vanwinkle votes the Republican ticket, but further than exercising his right of franchise, he has never cared to appear in the arena of public life. He has, however, been prominent in local affairs, never failing to give both his moral and financial assistance to any movement which he deemed of benefit to the county. Ever since leaving home he has had to make his own way in the world and as a result of his energy and perseverance he has accumulated a competency. During his residence in California, since 1862, he has made five trips to Iowa to visit his parents, making eleven trips over the plains.

SILVIO ADAMS. Born in Switzerland, March 19, 1864. Silvio Adams is a son of Joseph and Marie (Cirini) Adami. The father was, by profession, a civil engineer and for years engaged in contracting and building, but the last forty years of his life was spent as a judge in Switzerland, an office equal to the supreme court of our state. His wife bore him nine children, and five sons and one daughter grew to maturity. Both the parents died in their native country.

Silvio Adams adopted this name upon coming to this country. After completing his education, he engaged in farming and stock-raising in his native country until 1881, when he came to the United States and located in Marin county, Cal., where he secured employment on a farm. Later he lived in Sonoma county for a time, but returned to Marin county, where he continued working for others until 1888. In that year he came to Fresno county, and with the money he had saved from his wages, purchased his present place of three hundred and thirty acres. Here he is now conducting a large dairy business, having about seventy-five head of milch cows. All of the milk is used in the manufacture of cheese, Mr. Adams having a modern creamery on his ranch and his brand, "California Pure Cream Cheese," has a ready sale in the markets of Fresno. Since coming into possession of the ranch, the owner has greatly improved it and now has a very valuable place. While he has been very busy looking after his own interests, he has, nevertheless, taken an active interest in other matters and can be depended on to give his support to any worthy movement, being a firm believer in progress and development.

FELIX DESIRE DUQUESNE is remembered by the old pioneers as an upbuilder of Fresno, and is given an honorable place in the records of the city and county. He was born in Louvain, Belgium, and was there reared to manhood and educated as a physician. On account of his health he gave up the practice of his profession and left his native country. In 1853 he came to California, making the trip by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Upon his arrival in the state he followed mining in Tuolumne county, and later was deputy county trustee and city trustee of Sonora, in which city he also engaged in the liquor business for a time. In 1878 he went to San Francisco and there engaged in the painting business, then spent six months in Kern county, after which he came to Fresno. In 1881 he engaged in the hotel business on H street, remaining so occupied until he was burned out twenty-three months later. In the meantime he had purchased several lots on H street, where he had built a small house. He was employed by Dr. Leach in his distillery until he built on a lot which he owned on I street, where he engaged in the wholesale liquor and wine business, known as the Pioneer Liquor Store. Later he built a winery and wine cellar on H street, known as the Pioneer Wine Cellar. He was very successful in his work, but lived only a short time after, his death occurring November 27, 1887, from blood poisoning, resulting from an accident. Fraternally he was a Master Mason, and in his political convictions was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

In Sonora, Cal., January 2, 1864, Mr. Duquesne was united in marriage with Mathilda Amy, who was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany. Her father, Claude Amy, was born in Lyons, near Paris, France, and was the representative of an old family of that section. He was a wholesale merchant in Frankfort until 1852, when he brought his wife and five children (one son, Victor, having preceded them in 1849) to California. The journey was made via Cape Horn on the Courie de L'Inde and occupied seven and a half months from Havre to the port of San Francisco, a stop having been made at Rio Janeiro in Brazil, and at Valparaiso, in Chili. Upon their arrival in California they went to Sonora, Tuolumne county, where Mr. Amy engaged in farming until his retirement from active duty. His death occurred in that location in 1901, at the age of eighty-eight years. Fraternally he was a Mason. His wife, formerly Julie Deboissy, was a native of Beaumont, and her death occurred in Sonora in 1892, at the age of seventy-eight years. They were the parents of six children, of whom two are living, Mrs. Duquesne being the fourth in order of birth. She received her education in the schools of Frankfort, and was of an age to enjoy the long yet interesting trip from her birthplace to California. Since her husband's death she has looked after the interests of the property, still owning the Pioneer store and her home residence. She has two daughters, of whom Pauline is the wife of Henry Robson, of Oakland, and Leonie is the wife of W. C. Abbay, of Berkeley. She is a member of St. John's Catholic Church, and politically is in sympathy with the principles of the Democratic party.

THOMAS YOST. During the colonial period of our country's history a young Bavarian bearing the name of Peter Yost crossed the ocean and settled in New Jersey, whence he afterward went to the front as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. When peace again reigned and the United States had become an independent power among other nations, he resumed the duties of private citizenship, and eventually moved to Ohio, where his son, Robert Yost, was born. The latter followed general farming, making his home successively in Belmont county, Ohio, and directly across the Ohio river in Ohio county, W. Va. Noah Yost, son of Robert, was born in Belmont county, Ohio, January 30, 1813. The star of empire, which from the beginning of history has wended its slow course toward the west, led him from his eastern home into the then frontier regions of Illinois, where, in 1853, he became a farmer of Pike county. Somewhat later he removed to Piatt county, in the same state, and there his death occurred, February 24, 1892, at the age of seventy-nine years. While living in the east he had married Elizabeth Price, who was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, April 17, 1817, and died in Illinois August 30, 1858, having won many warm friends during her comparatively brief period of residence in Illinois. In her home she was a careful housekeeper, a devoted wife, and a loving mother to her large family, which comprised three sons and nine daughters, two sons and one daughter dying in infancy.

The third member of the family circle was Thomas Yost. As his early home in West Virginia, where he was born on Christmas day of 1840, was exchanged in 1853 for the newer country of Illinois, he was obliged to aid his parents in the support of the large family and had no opportunities for obtaining an education. Notwithstanding this, he is a well-informed man, with a depth of knowledge not always equalled by those whose opportunities have been greater. After leaving the home farm he secured employment as clerk in a general store at Bement, Ill. The opening of the Civil war found him eager to aid the Union cause. May 7, 1861, he enlisted as a private in a regiment authorized by the state, from the Seventh Congressional District, which afterward became the famous Twenty-first Illinois Infantry (General Grant's regiment), being assigned to Company A. Later he was made a corporal. With the army he engaged in service in Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and other portions of the south where the Army of the Cumberland operated. From the ranks he was promoted to be sergeant and continued in that capacity until the expiration of his service. Among his acquaintances he is known as "Captain," a title that clings to him in spite of his earnest protestations that in the war he held no rank higher than that of sergeant. However, it may be stated that many an officer who held higher rank than he suffered far less in the country's cause and gave to the Union neither greater fidelity nor more valiant service than the record of Thomas Yost shows.

While he participated in all the engagements of his regiment, Mr. Yost escaped being wounded for a considerable period, but finally, at the battle of Chickamauga, both arms were broken by minie balls. For twenty-one days he lay on the battlefield, too ill to walk, and overlooked by those who were busy in removing the injured from the field. To protect him from the hot sun by day there was only a small peach tree, in the shadow of whose foliage he found a partial protection from the heat of a Georgia sun. At night the ground and air seemed cold, and this in contrast with the heat of the day increased his misery. Meanwhile his wounds, not being dressed, caused him the greatest agony. Hour after hour slowly dragged away in terrible suffering. By chance a Confederate found him there and with pity for his deplorable condition brought him food and water, but was unable to care for the wounds. Yet, the simple act of charity on the part of the southerner gave the wounded northern soldier a different feeling toward the boys in gray. When finally he was removed by the Confederates he was taken north by slow stages to Richmond, Va., and in Libby Prison it was found that the wounds were so eaten by vermin that recovery would be tedious, and further service being impossible in his crippled condition, he was sent to Annapolis, from there to Chicago and honorably discharged in Louisville, July 5, 1864, after which he returned to his Illinois home with his arms in a sling.

The first visit to California made by Mr. Yost was in 1866, but he soon returned to Illinois. After his marriage in the spring of 1869 he again came west, this time settling at Hollister, where he remained for seventeen years, and carried on business as a dealer in merchandise, stationery and jewelry. During fifteen years of that time he was postmaster at Hollister. After coming to Fresno in 1887 he carried on a jewelry and stationery store. In 1893 he bought thirty acres near Centerville and this he planted in oranges and lemons, later selling the property. In December of 1901 he returned to his old home in the east and remained there for some time, also visited twenty-two states of the Union. Finding no location so satisfactory as Fresno county, in 1903 he returned to California and purchased fifteen acres adjoining Centerville, where he has oranges, lemons, prunes and grapes. In the sunshine and peace of his little home he expects to spend his declining days.

In Homer, Ill., Mr. Yost married Miss Emma Thomas, who was born in Champaign county, Ill., a daughter of Elias Thomas, a Kentuckian by birth, but during the greater part of his life a farmer in Illinois. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Yost was Howard L., who was born May 26, 1870, at Hollister, Cal., and received his education in that town, being a graduate of the high school. At an early age he showed ability as an artist and a number of his paintings are now among the most prized possessions of his parents. After having been in business with his father for some years, in 1894 he was appointed head bookkeeper for the First National Bank of Fresno, and continued in that position until his death, which occurred March 23, 1898. The death of their promising son was the deepest bereavement of his parents' lives, and the years that have since passed have not dimmed the realization of their loss; yet it is their joy to remember that the only sorrow he ever caused them was in his death.

Stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party, Mr. Yost has been active in local politics and has served as a member of the county central committee. In 1900 he was a forced candidate for the assembly and came within fifty votes of being successful. Old war days are kept in memory through the comradeship of other veterans. In Atlanta Post, G. A. R., at Fresno, he has been a prominent member and has been honored with the office of commander of the Post.

JAMES A. BERNARD. The financial genius of a Bernard stepped into a waiting niche in the crude pioneer days of Kern City, developed its resources with far-sighted and correctly gauged judgment, and eventually handed over the splendid results of his toil to his son and heir, no less painstaking and wise in the discharge of a responsibility which bears slight impress of his own making. Of James A. Bernard, engaged in managing his father's large real estate interests, it may be said, that while he is scarcely a self-made man, he has not been unmade by the good fortune which has come his way, a fact equally worthy of commendation. He was born in Rusk, Cherokee county, Tex., January 9, 1854, a son of Arsene P. and Eliza (Miller) Bernard, the latter born in Missouri, and reared and married in Texas, and who is still living in San Francisco.

Arsene P. Bernard was born near Lake Pontchartrain, in the vicinity of New Orleans, La., February 22, 1824, the son of John Bernard, who came from France and was a planter in Louisiana long before the purchase of the territory was consummated. The fertility of the region netted him a handsome fortune, but he died at middle age, when his son Arsene was three years old. The latter had excellent educational advantages, and after graduating from the Jesuit College in St. Louis returned to New Orleans, soon after removing to Cherokee county, Tex., where he engaged in a general merchandise business in a wild and sparsely settled country. In 1857 he went to Central America as an officer in the commissary department of Walker's filibustering expedition, and March 1, 1859, arrived in San Francisco with his wife and only son, James A. For a year he lived in Sacramento, and in 1860 went to Vacaville and engaged in a general merchandise business until 1872, in the meantime becoming prominent in various enterprises for the upbuilding of that section. He was one of the builders of the Vaca Valley Railroad from Elmira to Vacaville, and which is now a part of the Central Pacific Railroad, his partners being men by the name of Mason and Stevenson, who profited equally with him in the ambitious venture. Mr. Bernard arrived in what was then Sumner, now Kern City, in 1872, finding few houses, and but few signs of future prosperity. He inaugurated the first 'bus line between Kern and Bakersfield, and while carrying the mail and express until about 1881, made money with a degree of rapidity scarcely appreciated by followers of the business to-day. Feeling the natural decline of his powers, he retired to his home in Kern City, and died there July 20, 1891, at the age of sixty-seven. While in the stage business he invested his earnings in Kern property, eventually accumulating an estate now valued at $300,000. He bought the south half of the section of land adjoining the town on the north, and much more scattered throughout the community. The Bernard addition is unquestionably the finest residence section in the city, and as such brings the highest prices and commands the patronage of the best class of people. He was somewhat of a politician, and though never seeking office, was elected county treasurer on the Democratic ticket on two occasions. A quiet, unassuming man, he impressed all with his ability and public spirit, his fine personal characteristics winning and retaining a host of friends, as well as influence and prominence in general affairs. He was one of the great majority who gave of their vitalizing energy, their substantiality, and clear judgment to the advancement of civilization in the coast country, and as such his name will go down in history, especially that part of it which has to do with the upbuilding of Kern City.

James A. Bernard is the only child born to his parents and was educated at Santa Clara College, attending for three years. He became of valuable assistance to his father in his 'bus business, and in 1880 embarked upon a railroading career, which at that time he intended to follow indefinitely. He took readily to the occupation, worked as a fireman for three years, and afterward ran a freight engine from Kern to Los Angeles, also from Kern to Tulare. The death of his father in 1891 put an end to his railroading career, for he had been appointed administrator of the estate, and heir with his mother to the splendid legacy of his sire. He has since managed the property with that conscientious regard for details and accuracy which is partly inherited and partly acquired, and which gives assurance that the inheritance will lose nothing of the dignity and integrity associated with its accumulation. Mr. Bernard maintains the family interest in Democratic politics, and filled the office of first trustee of the town of Kern after its incorporation. In 1876 he was united in marriage with Edith Long, a native of Vacaville, Cal., and of this union seven children have been born, one of whom died in infancy. Clophine and Arsene Reed are living at home, and the latter is an engineer on the Southern Pacific Railroad; Edgar Louis is a jeweler at Bakersfield; and Correnah, James A., Jr., and Alton J. are members of the home circle. Mr. Bernard is fraternally connected with the Knights of Pythias, and his wife is a member of the Rathbone Sisters. He is one of the most prominent business men of Kern, and has a reputation for reliability and sagacity commensurate with his training, his adaptability and his progressive tendencies.

WILLIAM HAZELTON. A pioneer and one of the most extensive stockmen on the Upper Kings river, William Hazelton holds a high place among the representative citizens of this section of Fresno county. A native of Albany county, N. Y., he was born September 7, 1825, a son of Joseph Hazelton, of New Jersey, who located in New York state, where he engaged as a blacksmith until his death. His wife, formerly Sophia Cleveland, was born in New York state, where she also died. They were the parents of four sons and three daughters, all of whom are deceased except the youngest, William Hazelton. He received his education in the common schools of his native locality, where in young manhood he engaged as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. In 1845 he went to New York City and enlisted in the United States Second Dragoons, and was later stationed in Florida and the vicinity of the Choctaw nation. Being discharged from the service about the time of the Mexican war, he went to Mexico as a teamster in the commissary department, where he remained throughout the war. Returning to New York in 1848, he followed this with a trip across the plains to California, coming by way of Texas and spending the winter of 1849 in San Diego, Cal. He located in the northern mines, where he met with moderate success, remaining until 1853, when he came to his present place on the Upper Kings river, taking up a quarter section of land, where he has since engaged in stock-raising. He has continued to add to his property by purchase until he now owns over seven thousand acres, on which he has a herd of seven hundred cattle.

In this locality, in 1857, Mr. Hazelton was united in marriage with Mary Jane Akers, a native of Sabine county, Tex., and the daughter of Henry Akers, who was born in Illinois. He located first in Missouri, later in Texas, and in 1852 came to California and located near the home of Mr. Hazelton, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death. His wife, formerly Delilah Miller, was born in Illinois and died in California. To Mr. Hazelton and his wife were born the following children: Clara E., the wife of F. R. Lindsey, of Sanger, Cal.; Wesley B., of Sanger; Henry, a stockman; Laura D., at home; Sophia, the wife of George D. Fisk, of Yolo county, Cal.; Catherine, deceased; John, deceased; Alice C., the wife of R. M. Kimball, of Napa county, Cal.; and Edward, deceased. Politically Mr. Hazelton is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. Although eighty years old he is still hale and hearty and takes a keen and active interest in all his affairs and shows still the superior judgment and business ability which have made his success.

PERRY COMMODORE PHILLIPS. An honored link in the chain which reaches back across the years of the prosperous present to the pioneer days of the state, Perry Commodore Phillips is a representative of the type of citizenship which laid the foundation for the statehood of California. He is located one mile south of Laton, Fresno county, and is engaged in conducting an extensive dairy. In the past he has been prominent among the sheep growers of this section, is an extensive land owner and has taken a deep and helpful interest in the development of the country. Born in Gibson county, Ind., April 7, 1838, he was the son of Robert Phillips, a native of South Carolina, who located in Indiana with his parents, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. His wife, formerly Celia Melbourne, died in Indiana. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters, of whom Perry C. Phillips was the sixth in order of birth.

In the subscription schools as well as the public schools of the early day Perry C. Phillips received his education until he was fourteen years old, when his father died. He then worked on neighboring farms until 1854, when he crossed the plains by means of ox teams, and upon his safe arrival in California located on the Yuba river north of Nevada City, where he was engaged in mining. Later he went to Siskiyou county, where he remained until 1859, when he removed to Solano county and there engaged on various farms as well as attending school for a short time. In the following year he came to Fresno county and on October 23 located upon his present property, purchasing eighty acres in the vicinity of Kingston, to which he has since added until he owns two hundred and forty acres in this place. Seventy or eighty acres of this ranch are devoted to alfalfa, while his chief interest is a dairy of about two hundred cows. At one time he was an extensive sheep grower, having over eighteen thousand head of sheep. In addition to his home place he owns seven other ranches, namely: At Guernsey, Kings county, one farm of three hundred and twenty acres, and the other of four hundred acres, given over to alfalfa and a dairy; twenty-nine hundred acres at Cross creek, east of Hanford; two hundred and eighty acres at Last Chance headgate, called the Fair View farm; three hundred and sixty acres near old Kingston; eighty acres at Coalingo, and one hundred and sixty acres at Eureka school house, Kings county, comprising altogether four thousand seven hundred and forty acres of valuable land. He is also interested in oil lands in the vicinity of Coalingo, Fresno county.

In Solano county, Cal., April 29, 1860, Mr. Phillips was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hildebrand, a native of Shelby county, Ind., where she was born October 22, 1840. She is a daughter of Joseph Hildebrand of Pennsylvania, who came to California in 1853. He located in Vaca valley, Solano county, and after engaging in mining for two years removed in 1861 to Yolo county, and in 1866 to San Luis Obispo county. In the last named location he remained until 1872, when he removed to Kings county and engaged in farming for a time, shortly afterward locating in Hanford, where he lived retired. Eventually he located on his son-in-law's place, where he died October 17, 1895. His wife, formerly Anna Harkarader, of Ohio, died in the home of Mr. Phillips in 1899. To Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were born the following children: Florence Ellen, the wife of Edward Morton, of Bremerton, Wash.; Mrs. Isabelle L. Phillips, near Traver, Tulare county; Carrie Winifred, the wife of Louis Lowe, of Kings county; Ada Bianca, at home; George Hudson, a dentist of Hanford; Robert and Oscar LeRoy, at home; and Dora Elizabeth, deceased. Politically Mr. Phillips is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Both himself and wife are prominent members of the society of this community, highly esteemed for their many fine qualities of head and heart. Mrs. Phillips is gifted with a remarkably clear memory, and recalls with pleasing distinctness the events of the early days, which she retails to the younger generation. She is a woman of rare refinement and culture and has many friends.

JESSE S. TAYLOR. Now one of Fresno county's leading agriculturists, Mr. Taylor was born in Clark county, Mo., April 21, 1861, a son of James H. and Samantha (Sisson) Taylor. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and became an early settler in Missouri, where he followed farming and also engaged in plastering, a trade he had learned in his native state. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Colonel Moore's division Twenty-first Missouri Regiment, U. S. A., and served for four years. He died in Missouri. His wife was born in Virginia and is now living in Los Angeles county, this state, the mother of four children.

Jesse S. Taylor was the eldest child. His education in the common schools was supplemented by a course in a business college at Keokuk, Iowa. After graduation he engaged in book-keeping for a time, but later followed farming. In 1890 he disposed of his interests in the east and came to California, first locating northwest of Selma, where he lived until 1895, when he purchased his present ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, four miles southwest of Selma. Here he is now engaged in general farming and also conducts a medium-sized dairy. His place is one of the best properties in this section of the county, being equipped with all modern conveniences, including a gasoline pumping plant.

In the state of Missouri was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Taylor and Miss Ranna S. Chappell, and to them have been born three children, Charles, Leona and George. Mr. Taylor is a member of the Woodmen of the World, being associated with Camp No. 368 of Selma. In political matters he is not inclined to take a very active part, but exercises his right of franchise in favor of the Republican party. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Mr. Taylor being a trustee. Starting in life without money or influence Mr. Taylor has persevered until now he is considered one of the leading citizens of his section.

PARRIS ALLEN. A native of Dearborn county, Ind., Mr. Allen's birth occurred on August 26, 1852. His father, John Allen, was born in New York state and became an early settler of Indiana. Later he removed to Ripley county, the same state, where he followed agricultural pursuits. His wife bore the maiden name of Mahala Fletcher and lived several years after the death of her husband, her death occurring at the home of her daughter, Margaret A. Bewley, of Selma, in November, 1904, at the age of seventy-five years. By her marriage she became the mother of seven children, four of whom grew to maturity.

Parris Allen was the second child. His education was limited to three months' attendance in the district school. Upon leaving home he engaged in farming, continuing at that occupation until 1875, when he disposed of his interests in the east and came to California. Locating near Winters, Solano county, he secured employment as a farm hand until 1882, when he came to Fresno county and with the money that he had saved purchased the ranch on which he has since resided. This consists of one hundred and sixty acres, located two miles west of Selma, and is said to be one of the most highly improved farms in the San Joaquin valley. Fifty acres are devoted to the growing of grapes, forty is set out in orchard and the balance is devoted to alfalfa.

In Ripley county, Ind., February 12, 1878, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Allen and Miss Mary E. Mills, who was a native of that county. To them have been born two children: George W. and Susan Ethel.

Mr. Allen is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masons, and Eastern Star Chapter, to which Mrs. Allen also belongs, the Woodmen of the World, Independent Order of Foresters and the Knights of the Maccabees. Politically he is a Democrat, but is liberal in his views, and in local issues votes for the one whom he considers best qualified for the office.

JOHN Q. HANCOCK. Although a young man, Mr. Hancock has attained an enviable position in the business circles of Fresno county. He has made his own way in the world since leaving home, in youth and young manhood having had but few advantages.

A native of Iowa, Mr. Hancock was born in Keokuk, June 4, 1868. His father, D. A. Hancock, was born in Indiana, and at an early day located in Iowa, where he followed farming near Keokuk until his death at the age of sixty-five years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Isabella Hare, became the mother of nine children, seven sons and two daughters.

John Q. Hancock obtained a limited common school education and remained at home until 1888, when he came to California. The first month of his residence here was spent in Stockton, but on account of lung trouble he came to Fresno, where the following year was spent in regaining his lost health. He then purchased a team and engaged in hauling lumber from the mountains to Fresno. This occupation he followed for three years, meantime purchasing a place of twenty acres, ten miles east of Fresno, which he planted to a vineyard. In 1893 he located on the Laguma de Tache grant seven miles west of Laton. Here he rented land and engaged in raising wheat, corn and barley, having nearly fifteen hundred acres under cultivation. Five years later, owing to the hard times and drought, he became interested in the cattle business, buying and selling to quite a large extent. About this time the tract was opened up and subdivided, Mr. Hancock buying one hundred acres, four and three-quarter miles west of Laton, on which he engaged in a cattle and dairy business. He also conducted a skinning station, which he still owns. Since making his first purchase he has added land until he now has two hundred acres, and in addition owns another ranch in the Riverdale district which is devoted to the growing of alfalfa. In 1903 he purchased eighteen hundred acres of land in the mountains, where he grazes cattle during the summer, in the winter bringing them to his valley ranch where he feeds and fattens them for market. Aside from his general farming and cattle interests, in October, 1904, he formed a partnership with Alex Sime and purchased the interests of the Laton Lumber Company, incorporated. Mr. Hancock is now serving as the president and general manager of this concern and is also carrying on an extensive hay and grain business. Recognizing the need of better banking facilities, he assisted in the organization of the Laton State Bank, of which he is a director and vice-president.

The marriage of Mr. Hancock and Miss Irene Harlan was solemnized in Fresno. She is a native of Fresno county, her birth having occurred twelve miles west of Laton. By her marriage she has become the mother of two children, Ruth and Hazel. Mr. Hancock has been too busy looking after his extensive interests to take an active part in political matters, and aside from voting for the candidates of the Republican party, he leaves such matters to others. His friends unite in wishing him many years of continued prosperity.

JULIUS F. WARREN. Residing on a farm two miles south of Laton, Mr. Warren is now enjoying life, but in former days when the west was a wilderness, when "cattle was king" and the cowboy reigned, he took a leading part in the life on the range, and can relate many stirring stories of those exciting days. Many a time has he entertained some of the most noted Indian scouts and chiefs at his campfire, but now all that has passed. The cowboy is almost extinct. Civilization has conquered the wilds, and where once roved bands of cattle are now villages and cities, and the screech of the locomotive has taken the place of the shrill whoops of the cow-punchers.

Born in Alabama, December 16, 1861, Julius F. Warren is a son of Ellison Warren, who was a large farmer and sheep-raiser in Alabama. Prior to the Civil war he owned slaves, but after the war and the abolition of slavery he disposed of his plantation and removed to Texas in 1869, where he engaged in ranching until his death. His wife in maidenhood bore the name of Malza Sawyer. She was born in South Carolina and by her marriage became the mother of ten children. She is now deceased, passing away after taking up her residence in Texas.

The third child in this large family was Julius

F. Warren. Reared on his father's farm in Texas, he was early made familiar with cattle, as the state at that time was a cattle country. His first trip was made in 1880, when he assisted in driving nearly three thousand head from Texas overland to Wyoming. The trip was made in safety, although the Indians were bad and gave the party considerable trouble. The spring of 1881 Mr. Warren returned to Texas, assisted in the round-up and again made the trip over the same trail to Wyoming. This time he remained in Wyoming for five years, being in charge of a large cattle ranch most of the time on the Cheyenne river, south of the Black Hills. Subsequently he had charge of a ranch in Montana on the Little Missouri river, remaining there until the severe winter of 1886-87, when out of sixty-one thousand head of cattle on the range he was able to bring in only fifteen thousand, the balance freezing to death. During these years Mr. Warren met many of the most prominent western characters, including Sitting Bull, Buffalo Bill (William Cody) and others. Theodore Roosevelt, now president of the United States, at one time was the owner of one of the ranches on which Mr. Warren was foreman and the ranch was visited by him and party. At this time it was not uncommon to see herds of buffaloes running wild on the plains, but now that noble animal is nearly extinct, with the exception of a few herds in captivity. The spring of 1887 witnessed Mr. Warren's arrival in California. Soon after he entered the employ of Miller & Lux, the big cattle firm of the state, and for several years continued with them, buying cattle in all sections of the state, Arizona and New Mexico. It was in 1897 that Mr. Warren decided to settle down and with the money he had saved he purchased his present ranch near old Kingston, where he engaged in the cattle business.

In the city of Oakland was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Warren and Miss Lella C. Somers, who is also a native of Alabama and a daughter of George and Ellen H. (Wolfe) Somers. George Somers is a native of Germany and came to the United States with his father, George Somers, who lived in Alabama, and there engaged as a merchant. He was known as Captain Somers and was a prominent man in Mobile, Ala. He went to Washington and from there to Oregon and then settled in San Francisco, where he lost heavily. He then removed to Sonoma county and settled near Healdsburg, and from there moved to Oakland, and in 1892 he came to Fresno county, where he bought one hundred and two acres, and now resides at old Kingston. To Mr. and Mrs. Warren have been born three children: Julius Clarence, Myrtle Harriett, and Edna Ellen, deceased. Fraternaly Mr. Warren is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in politics supports the principles advocated by the Democratic party. His life has been filled with many wild adventures. For years his associates were the roughest of men, and in those days it was customary to drink whisky as freely as water, but at that time he never drank a drop of liquor, which was very remarkable. Since locating in this county he has built up a substantial stock business and has also gained a wide circle of warm personal friends.

GODFREY NORWOOD VANWORMER.

A man of education, culture and refinement, G. N. Vanwormer is located within three and a half miles of Fowler, Fresno county, where, in the management of the Maud Vineyard, he is demonstrating his business ability and judgment. He was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., August 20, 1836, a son of John Vanwormer, a native of the same state, and grandson of Cornelius, a farmer there until his death. The latter was a patriot in the war of 1812 and a prominent man in the community where he made his home, his father and nine brothers participating in the Revolutionary war. John Vanwormer was a ship carpenter by occupation, in the employ of the government, working on the famous Constitution and other vessels of note. He came to his death by drowning while out in a small boat in Boston harbor. His wife, Eliza Jane Welch, a native of Boston, Mass., died when her son, G. N., was a lad. He was the only child, and after the death of his mother was reared by his paternal grandparents. He received his education in the common schools and took the junior year at Ann Arbor, Mich. At the age of twenty years he left New York state, and after three months located in Missouri, where for four years he engaged in teaching, and also for a part of the time attended Pleasant Hill Academy, of Missouri; while at this place the Confederate flag was raised on the grounds. In 1860 he went to Michigan to visit an uncle and afterward engaged as a teacher in Genesee. During 1863 he was principal of the Vassar schools, and for one year filled the same position in the Flint schools. Following this he taught in Saginaw for four years, and Bay City for two years, after which he went to Wisconsin, and in Chippewa Falls engaged in the fire insurance business for two years. Later he taught in Mineral Point for one year, when he returned to Bay City, Mich., and engaged in a mercantile enterprise. He then entered the University of Michigan and studied for a time, when he went to Dennison, Iowa, as principal of schools of that place. Deciding to locate in California he came west in 1880, and in Napa accepted the chair of mathematics in the Collegiate Institute. Two years later he accepted the position of manager of the Maud Vineyard, which company he promoted and was an important factor in its incorporation during the winter of 1881 and 1882. The property consisted of one hundred and twenty acres, of which sixty acres were planted to vineyard and the same amount to peaches and nectarines. He still retains the management of the place, in which he owns a half interest, and has brought about the success which has characterized the venture. He also owns forty acres of vineyard and orchard one mile west of Del Rey, Fresno county. Mr. Vanwormer is a member of the Episcopal Church, and politically casts his ballot with the Republican party. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic organization, of which he became a member in Portsmouth, Mich.

ROBERT KENNEDY.

One of the best known stockmen in Tulare and Fresno counties is Robert Kennedy, who is as well an extensive farmer, the Kennedy-Clark ranch being one of the finest stock ranches in this section. Mr. Kennedy is a native of Liverpool, England, where he was born March 23, 1839. His father, William Kennedy, was a merchant in that city. Robert Kennedy received his education in the common schools, after which he was apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade. In July, 1862, he took passage aboard the sailing vessel, Utopia, and sailed from Plymouth to Brisbane, Australia, around the Cape of Good Hope, arriving early in November of the same year. In Brisbane he engaged in contracting and building until November, 1866, when he took passage on the sailing vessel Nimrod, to San Francisco, making a brief call at the Sandwich Islands and arriving in San Francisco in March, 1867. He followed contracting and building in that city for three years, when he came to the San Joaquin valley, which was then merely a stock country. He began the sheep business, locating first on the San Joaquin river below Millerton, and in 1872 settled on the plains twenty miles northwest of Visalia, where he bought a section of school land and later entered a homestead. He continued to add to his land during the years in which he followed this business until to-day the ranch known as the Kennedy-Clark contains thirty-six hundred acres in one body, which is well fenced, under irrigation and planted largely to alfalfa. He also has a mountain ranch of two thousand acres located on Sand creek, and since 1885 has devoted his attention to general stock-raising, although he is very much interested in sheep, having seven thousand head of fine grade. He raises Shorthorn and Durham cattle and is accounted one of the most successful stockmen in the San Joaquin valley. In 1802 he located in Fresno, where he now owns a handsome residence at No. 2907 Mariposa street, considered one of the finest in the city, while he also owns various other residences throughout the city and county. He is a valued citizen in public affairs in Fresno, being a director, stockholder and vice-president in the Bank of Central California.

In San Francisco Mr. Kennedy was united in marriage with Marian Ryce, a native of Scotland, and they are the parents of the following children: May, who became the wife of A. W. Clark, and is now deceased; Margaret, the wife of E. A. Cutter, of Berkeley; Jessie, the wife of Fred D. Prescott, of Fresno; Elizabeth; Ethel; and Helen, the last three named being at home with their parents. In his political convictions Mr. Kennedy is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

A. G. WISHON. The Wishon family came originally of southern stock, the name being prominent for generations in North Carolina. Benjamin Wishon, a native of that state, was the first western emigrant, coming as far west as St. Louis, Mo., where he became associated with Samuel Wiggins in what was afterward known as the Wiggins Ferry Company. Later he went to Crawford county and followed mercantile pursuits, farming and stock-raising until his death, which occurred when nearly seventy years of age. Fraternally he was prominent in Masonic circles, and socially he wielded a broad influence in his adopted community. In his family was a son, Marion, who was born in East St. Louis and in young manhood followed the example of his father in engaging as a farmer and merchant. He was located in St. James, Phelps county, Mo., where he became prominent in local affairs, serving two terms as sheriff upon the organization of the county. His death occurred in 1886, and removed from the community a man of ability and integrity, and one whose best efforts were given toward the progress of the country. He married Mary Coppedge, a native of that section of Missouri which eventually was known as Phelps county. Her father, Lindsay L. Coppedge, a native of Virginia, was the representative of an old and distinguished family of that state. His father became government agent among the frontier Indians, being located in Kentucky and having gone to Southwest Missouri in the first wagon that ever crossed the Gasconade river. He was active during the Black Hawk war as a scout. Lindsay L. Coppedge became a pioneer settler of Pulaski county, Mo., residing for sixty years at Coppedge Mills, which place was given its name through the mill which he built there. He also built many other mills throughout that section of the state, all operated by water. Mrs. Wishon is still living and makes her home in Fresno. To Mr. Wishon and his wife were born seven children, of whom five are living and four are in California.

The eldest in his father's family, A. G. Wishon was born in Phelps county, Mo., November 6, 1858. He was educated at the School of Mines at Rolla, after which, at the age of eighteen years, he became dependent upon his own resources. His first employment was as a clerk in the employ of Moody, Michel & Co., of St. Louis, and later he traveled throughout the south for Adler Goldman Company, cotton brokers of the same city. Deciding to engage in mercantile pursuits independently, he established a store at Sullivan and later at St. James, both of Missouri, which he conducted successfully for several years. Disposing of these interests, he then became chief clerk for Capt. R. M. Peck, superintendent of bridges and buildings of the Missouri Pacific Railroad at Pacific, Mo. In 1888 he resigned this position which he had filled efficiently and came to California, becoming associated with the old San Joaquin Lumber Company at Tulare, which was then under the management of Mr. T. G. Yancey. For two years following this work he filled the position of cashier and bookkeeper for the Tulare County Bank, after which he opened an office in that city for the promotion of various enterprises and the disposal of lands. His first extensive work was the building of the Kaweah Ditch (having then located in Visalia) this being brought from the river above Lemon Cove and along the base of the hills for a distance of about twenty miles, almost to Lindsay, Tulare county. At that time there was not an orange or lemon grove in the section covered by this ditch, but his successful completion of the work has transformed the country into one of the best producing sections in the state. He financed the enterprise and after its completion sold his lands at a considerable profit, the lands which he offered then to the public being those covered with such groves as the Merryman, Newhalls, Moore, Lord, Carson, Burr, Bonnie Brae and others which are today numbered among the finest orange groves in the state. The insufficiency of water to be obtained through the ditch system gave to Mr. Wishon his next idea in regard to the development of the country and accordingly he conceived the plan of securing power to pump the water throughout the country. This resulted in the organization of the Mount Whitney Power Company, and the rights to the headwaters of the Kaweah being secured, he then associated with himself William H. Hammond and the power plant was installed. Mr. Wishon continued to finance and manage the enterprise until an entire success was assured. This plant now distributes power and light to Tulare, Visalia, Exeter, Portersville and Lindsay. Mr. Wishon had already been interested in the Visalia Water Works, and later sold out. Upon his withdrawal from the Mount Whitney Power Company Mr. Wishon arranged with capitalists of Los Angeles to put in a power plant on the Tule river, eight miles above Springville, and when the final papers are completed the work will be prosecuted and a forty-five hundred horse-power plant will be installed and the work carried to a successful issue.

In May, 1903, Mr. Wishon accepted the general management of the San Joaquin Power Company, of Fresno. He is vice-president, director and manager of the Fresno City Railway, and president and manager of the Fresno Water Company, with headquarters in Fresno. He first secured an option on the old Berry & Einstein lines, after which the new lines, built by Griffith & McKenzie, consisting of fifteen and a half miles throughout the city, were bought for the newly organized company. The San Joaquin Power Company installed a plant on the San Joaquin river, which is being enlarged from twenty-five hundred horse-power to twenty thousand horse-power, the water being obtained from the north fork of the San Joaquin river. Mr. Wishon also secured large reservoirs for the company, five being provided for the company's use. This plant also furnishes power for the railway, for the city water works from a system of wells, and also light and power for Fresno, Hanford, Laton and other places. In 1904 Mr. Wishon was associated in the organization of the Fresno Traction Company, with a capitalization of $5,000,000, to absorb the Fresno City Railway and to build a line to Yosemite Valley, a distance of eighty miles, via the company's power plants in Crane's valley, reaching an altitude of five thousand feet at Fish Camp, then down to Wawona, at the edge of the valley, this being one of the finest scenic roads on the coast. He is still interested in Visalia, being associated with the Visalia Manufacturing Company, in which he is a director, and in other enterprises which he helped to found.

In St. James, Mo., Mr. Wishon was united in marriage with Etta Emory, a native of Steelville, that state, and they are the parents of two children: Emory and Jemmy. Mr. Wishon is prominent in fraternal circles, having been made a Mason in Sullivan, Mo., and is now a member in Los Palmas Lodge, of Fresno. He also belongs to Fresno Chapter, R. A. M., and the Knights Templar Lodge at Fresno. He belongs to Sequoia Club and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He gives his support to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member.

CHARLES S. PECK was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1834, a son of Jesse Peck, a native of Connecticut, and almost the first builder in the city of Buffalo, N. Y. The son naturally followed in his father's footsteps, learned to be a practical builder, and evidenced in early life the ambitious tendencies which found vent in the west. In 1849 the family peace was disturbed by the journeying to the coast of two sons of the family, James and John, and the reports sent back by these early Argonauts fired the enthusiasm of Charles S., who followed in their wake in 1852, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Frank Peck was an addition to the family gathering in California in 1853, and he has survived the vicissitudes of the times and still lives on his farm in Merced county.

Soon after settling in Snelling Charles S. Peck built the first stone building there, and afterward went to the mines in Mariposa county, where he achieved ordinary success as a miner. After six years in the rude camps of different parts of the state he returned to New York, and in 1859, in Erie county, married Adaline, daughter of Peter Cook, the latter a native of Genesee county, N. Y., and later a farmer and stock-raiser of Erie county. Mr. Cook married Lydia White, of Vermont. With his wife Mr. Peck went to house-keeping in Buffalo, in January, 1860, his household being enlarged by the advent of his first son, James F., whose cradle was rocked between the performance of many tasks, all relating to the proposed journey overland to the coast. As soon as the snow was off the ground, and thoughts of spring sent hope bounding through the human heart, the father and mother started on their way with horse-teams, consuming twenty-one days more than two months on the way. Locating at Snelling Mr. Peck contracted and built for a short time, moving then to Princeton, Mariposa county, where he erected a large store for Fremont, the Pathfinder, going thence to Mariposa, where he erected the Masonic hall and other buildings, finally returning to Snelling. He arrived in Merced before the town had been platted or a lot sold, and it was he who erected the first brick building in town. For many years he was the foremost builder in this locality, and the majority of the old buildings and residences were erected by him, either wholly or in part. During the last eight years of his life he lived retired from any kind of work, and died in October, 1902, at the age of sixty-eight years. He is survived by his wife, who lives in Merced, and who is the mother of four children, James F.; Lydia, the wife of W. B. Bunker, of Las Vegas, N. M.; Addie M., the wife of H. E. Stemler, of Portland, Ore.; and Jessie A., a resident of Merced.

JOSEPH WAGGONER. The prestige of the Los Banos district as a grain and stock producing center has been upheld by the worthy efforts of Joseph Waggoner, owner of a three hundred and twenty-acre ranch two miles southeast of Los Banos, upon which he has made his home since 1869. Since purchasing his original property Mr. Waggoner has added another ranch of three hundred and twenty acres on Los Banos creek, which is devoted to raising grain. He also owns a typical California home in Pacific Grove, where his family spend the greater part of the year. His land has been made valuable by cultivation and its output presents a fair illustration of what may be accomplished by the exercise of industry, good management and business shrewdness.

Mr. Waggoner, on the paternal side, is of French ancestry. His family was established in America by his father, Bernhardt Waggoner, who came from Alsace-Lorraine and settled first in New York state. He later became a pioneer of Hardin county, Ohio, where Joseph Waggoner was born, October 23, 1840, his parents having also two other sons and four daughters, of whom Joseph and George, who live together and are working in cooperation, are the only ones in California. Bernhardt Waggoner lived near Kenton, Ohio, for many years, and in 1853 gathered together his effects and moved his family by wagon to Jones county, Iowa, where he lived and prospered for many years, his death occurring at the advanced age of ninety years. His wife, formerly Barbara Emart, was born in Pennsylvania and died in Iowa. Joseph, the eldest of the children, attended the public schools of Iowa and Ohio, but first and foremost in his life was the hard work on the pioneer farm in Iowa, which he assisted in breaking with ox-teams during the summer, and in the winter time hauled rails from the near-by woods. Physical labor of the hardest kind developed his physique and gave him a zest for life, but the farm in Jones county gave little promise of the future, and it is not surprising that while he labored in the heat of summer and the cold of winter his ambitious brain was busy conceiving plans of a more cheerful and hopeful nature. At the age of eighteen years he left home and started for Kansas, but becoming sick on the way he was obliged to return, and soon after began to farm in Iowa, remaining there until 1864. In 1862 he married Sarah S. Kuhn, a native of Carroll county, Ohio, and in 1864 he started for California with horse teams, bringing his wife and child with a company unusually small, and therefore more or less defenseless. The journey proved more fortunate than was expected, for although there were several attempts on the part of the Indians to confiscate their stock, the men stood their ground and succeeded in holding their own, as the Indians were out of ammunition. The party came into California by way of Spring Valley and Goose Lake, then via Susanville to Red Bluff, which they reached October 1, 1864. For about four and a half years Mr. Waggoner engaged in the dray business in Red Bluff, and in 1869 went to Livermore, and with this as a headquarters looked around for a desirable farm. The fall saw his plans fairly matured, and he located on the ranch which has since been his home, and which, with the aid of his more recently acquired property, has brought him an income of gratifying proportions.

Mr. Waggoner has been foremost in establishing many civilizing agencies in the Los Banos district. He was a member of the school board that erected the first schoolhouse, giving liberally of his time and means, and assisting with hauling the lumber for the crude establishment from Stockton. In later years he served on the board of education. He has also attended various county and state political conventions. With his family he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Waggoner have eight children, of whom Ida M. is the wife of C. H. Harmon of San Jose; James Franklin died in Fresno at the age of twenty-eight years; George Edward is a resident of Los Angeles; Carrie L. lives in San Francisco; Chauncey Howard is a rancher near Los Banos; Jessie B. is in San Francisco; Arthur B. lives in Plainsberg, Cal.; and Sarah J. is at home. Mr. Waggoner is not only an intelligent and successful business man, but one sociably and kindly disposed, gentle in his judgment of his fellowmen, and having within himself a capacity for making and retaining friends.

CAREY W. MATHEWS. The hardware establishment of which Carey W. Mathews is a proprietor is one of the chief commercial enterprises of Reedley, Fresno county, Cal., and Mr. Mathews is justly named among the representative business men of this section. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Sacramento December 12, 1869. His father, Amos Mathews, of Ohio, was a civil engineer by occupation. He removed to Iowa from the Buckeye state, thence to California via the Isthmus of

Dr. W. B. Ford

Panama at an early date in the history of this state. He located at Sacramento and became prominent in public affairs, acting as captain of the State Guards of California, being stationed at Washington, Yolo county. His death occurred in 1873. His wife, formerly Rosa Woods, was a native of California and the daughter of Jonas S. Woods, who drove cattle across the plains in an early day. Carey W. Mathews was the only child born of this union. He received his education in the schools of the state, after which he took a commercial course in Heald's Business College, of San Francisco, graduating in 1888. His first business employment was in a fire insurance office in Willows, where he remained for two years, coming then to Reedley, Fresno county. He first engaged in agricultural pursuits on rented land, remaining so occupied until 1896, when he found employment with G. W. McNear in his warehouse. He continued until 1901 in this employment, at that time purchasing the general merchandise business of the Gosliner Brothers. In the memorable fire of Reedley he lost his property, which loss, however, was covered by insurance. The firm name at that time was Bollin, Mathews & Co., and is now known as Bollin & Mathews, a general hardware establishment, carrying a full line of agricultural implements, etc. The firm is meeting with success and their business is adding to the commercial prestige of the place.

In Fresno, Cal., Mr. Mathews was united in marriage with Lucy Fairweather, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of John Fairweather, editor of the Reedley Exponent. Fraternally Mr. Mathews is a member of Reedley Lodge, No. 304, F. & A. M., of this place, and the Woodmen of the World, also of Reedley. Politically he is a Republican and is active in the counsels of his party, having served as a member of the county central committee.

JOHN H. BYRD. Along the lines of personal success and public enterprise John H. Byrd is named among the representative citizens of Fresno, Cal., having been a resident of the county since 1858. He was born in Canton, Ga., May 8, 1837, the descendant of a family prominent in the southern states for generations. His grandfather, Thomas Byrd, was a native of Virginia, who removed to Cherokee county, Ga., where he became a successful planter, being largely engaged in the cultivation of tobacco. He was also a millwright and built several water power mills in Georgia. He acquired large landed possessions and wielded marked influence throughout the section in which he made his home. In his family was a son Nathan, who was born in Virginia and reared in that state and Georgia, where he accompanied his parents in youth. He also raised tobacco in Georgia, remaining in that state until 1847, when he removed to Arkansas, and seventeen miles south of Little Rock engaged as a cotton planter until his death at the age of sixty years. His wife, formerly Eliza Jones, was born in South Carolina, a daughter of Caleb Jones, a planter of the Spartansburg district, of that state, who afterward removed to Canton, Ga., where he became an extensive planter. Mrs. Byrd died in Arkansas in 1901, at the age of eighty-five years. She was a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Of her family of eight children, three are now living, the eldest being John H. Byrd, of this review, the only one who has sought a home in California.

When ten years old John H. Byrd accompanied his parents to Arkansas, where he was reared to young manhood. He received his education in the primitive schools of Georgia and Arkansas—log buildings, with slab seats and puncheon floors. In 1857 he left home and went to Sherman, Tex., making the trip on horseback. He remained there until April of the following year, when he set out for California, traveling by ox-team in the Keener train, which took the southern route via Las Cruces, N. Mex., to Fort Yuma, Ariz., thence to Los Angeles. Mr. Byrd came to Visalia, Tulare county, on the 24th of October, 1858, and December 24 of the same year went to work for wages on the ranch of Francis Jordan. For two years he remained in that location, when he bought one hundred and sixty acres on the Kings river bottom and engaged in the raising of hogs. He met with success and gradually accumulated land adjoining and also bought in Clark's valley, in 1870, locating on the latter place, where he established a ranch and engaged in agricultural and stock-raising. He raised sheep for a time, but finally sold out and engaged in the cattle business, raising high grade Herefords and Short-horns and meeting with success in his efforts. He had a single $20 gold piece in his possession when he arrived in Visalia nearly a half century ago, but since then he has accumulated a competency by his own efforts, energy and ability. He owns two thousand acres of land in the Kings river bottom, all under fence and devoted to alfalfa and grass, a fine ranch, which is given over to the grazing of his cattle; and forty-six hundred acres in Clark valley ten miles from Centerville, all under fence and about two hundred acres under cultivation. In 1896 he located in Fresno, where he bought a residence on O and Tulare streets, and since that time has made his home in this city.

In 1870, in Kings river, Mr. Byrd was united in marriage with Sarah C. Robinson, a native of Boone county, Mo., and the daughter of John and Harriet (Phillips) Robinson, the former a native of Kentucky, and of old Virginia and Revolutionary stock, and the latter a native of Missouri. Mr. Robinson brought his family to California in the early '50s and engaged as a farmer in San Joaquin county. Mrs. Byrd is a niece of ex-supervisor Austin Phillips, of Fresno county. To Mr. and Mrs. Byrd were born nine children, of whom eight are living: Harriett, the wife of Alonzo Stewart, of Colusa county; Nellie, the wife of Charles Doyle, of Fresno; Charles, engaged in a bicycle store at Fresno; Kitty, who died at the age of fourteen years; Lucy, the wife of Lee Sim, of Westpark; Walter, Thomas, Marie and Newton, at home with their parents. Mr. Byrd has always taken an active interest in educational affairs in whatever community he has made his home, and for several terms has served as school director. Fraturnally he was made a Mason in Fresno Lodge No. 247, and is also associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. In 1867 Mr. Byrd made a trip back to the eastern states, going and returning by way of the Isthmus of Panama, enjoying a visit among the scenes of his childhood.

JOHN MARSHALL EVANS. Missouri has furnished California with a large percentage of its prominent citizens—men who are hard workers and in favor of improvements. Among these may be named John Marshall Evans, who was born in Pettis county, Mo., May 23, 1838, a son of Thomas and Mrs. Susan Clark (Joplin) Evans. The father was born in Washington, D. C., and when a young man migrated to Missouri, where he took up his residence in Cooper county. He was a physician and practiced medicine in that county for many years, but finally removed to Pettis county, where he lived until his death. His wife was born in Virginia and died at the home of her son in California. Her union resulted in the birth of nine children, six sons and three daughters.

After completing a limited education in the common schools of his native state, John M. Evans took up the occupation of a farmer, which he followed until 1881, when he disposed of his interests in the east and came to California. Locating in Fresno county, he purchased his present fine farm, three and three-quarters miles southeast of Conejo. Here he has for many years carried on a dairy and stock business, meeting with success in his business ventures.

Prior to coming to this state Mr. Evans was united in marriage with Miss Bettie Gentry, and to them have been born three children: Emma, deceased; Henry, of Selma, and Wallace, in the employ of Miller & Lux. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have scores of friends, and by his industry their declining years are surrounded by all the comforts that make old age attractive. Mr. Evans has splendid business ability, and while he is no longer very active, his dairy is paying a handsome profit. He has always been a Democrat, but has been too busy to take an active part in political matters. He prefers to spend all his spare time in his home, and it would, indeed, be a difficult matter to find a more happy or contented couple than Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

ELDER CRAIGIE SHARP was born on a farm near Rosey Hill, County of Perth, Scotland, in 1815, a son of Charles Sharp, also a Scotchman, and a gardener by trade. The latter received a fair education, and was born and reared a Presbyterian Calvinist. His mother, who was naturally independent and a reformer, was also a Presbyterian, but was too liberal to be a Calvinist. Her tenderness and devotion to her son Craigie seems to have been the inspiration of his life. From his mother he inherited in a great measure that fidelity to duty and conscientiousness of character that made him in after life such a benediction to all those who knew him.

Craigie Sharp early developed a religious tendency, which led him to be a very zealous student of the word of God, and quite a successful local preacher and proselyter to the Presbyterian faith. His advanced views led him, with others, to reject infant baptism and follow their Master down into the water, with the result that they were accounted heretics by their Presbyterian brethren and excluded from said church. With Mr. Sharp's devotion and zeal as a proselyter this little nucleus of heretics soon grew into an independent, self-supporting church, and later Mr. Sharp took a charge at Coatbridge, which necessitated his walking from twenty to thirty miles and preaching two sermons each Lord's day.

It was at one of these services held at Coatbridge that three others, with Miss Ann Thom, a farmer's daughter, obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints and renounced their Methodism. The latter not only renounced her Methodism, but also her maiden name, Miss Thom, and ever after bore that of Mrs. Craigie Sharp. For over fifty years they traveled the pathway of life together happily. Shortly after their marriage Mr. Sharp was arrested by the Rev. Mr. Murdock, a Presbyterian divine, whom he had reviewed in a sermon on the topic "Proper Subject and Mode of Baptism." Mr. Sharp was handcuffed and taken to Hamilton jail, but upon trial was acquitted. Instead of remaining and prosecuting said divine for false imprisonment, as he was advised to do, with his wife he shipped to America, a country he had read about as possessing more religious and political freedom than his native land.

The sailing vessel Brunswick, bound for New York, had three hundred and fifty passengers aboard, of whom two hundred were Irish Roman Catholics. During their six-weeks passage Mr. Sharp was asked to take charge of the medicine chest, see that the lights were extinguished at eight p. m., and also to measure out the water to the passengers. By his fair dealing and obliging disposition he soon won the good will of all, even those of opposite faith. Being a strong Abolitionist he was advised by the captain not to settle in the south, but to "go west." However, his means giving out he settled in New Jersey on a farm, working out as a farm hand until he had sufficient means to remove to Illinois. While residing in New Jersey, at Camden, two children were born to them, Craigie, Jr., and Anna.

When Mr. Sharp and his family landed in Chicago it appeared more like a duck pond than a town. All the houses could be canvassed in a few hours, and wagons were mired in the principal streets. Going on west to the Fox river, Mr. Sharp settled near Elgin, Ill., of which city his brother, Peter Sharp, has been clerk for over thirty years, and still makes his home there. Near that town Mr. Sharp opened up a farm, and in order to make the final payment on same was compelled to sell the boots off his feet. It was while the family were residing near Elgin, Ill., that Charles Sharp was born, March 14, 1846.

Selling out his interests in that locality, Craigie Sharp removed with his family to Dover, Bureau county, Ill., which was the birthplace of his son George. He remained there for a year or two, during which time he worked on a farm to support his family. His longest residence at any one place was on North Prairie, where he took up and improved a new farm, remaining on it for fifteen years. Here it was that the rest of his children were born, James, Robert, Bella and Cecellia.

From North Prairie, near La Moille, Ill., Mr. Sharp removed to Minonk, Ill., and opened up a farm of four hundred acres, on which he built a three-story house, the finest and largest in that section of country, and became one of Minonk's most influential business men. Selling out at Minonk, he and his family removed to Hawthorne, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, where he laid out and graded a town. He witnessed the great fire of 1871, and was one of the contractors who assisted in rebuilding that city. Mr. Sharp's financial career was nearly as varied as his religious experience. He was one of the founders of Abingdon College of Abingdon, Ill., and with a Mr. Burt built and owned the first flouring mill at Minonk. There with others, he sunk the first coal shaft, and Messrs. Pierce, Clark and Sharp were the first prime movers, owners and builders of the Chicago, Pekin & Southwestern Railroad. While residing at Hawthorne he was elected and served for years as one of the trustees of the town of Cicero, and it is needless to say that many were the fights against the saloon before the board, in which Mr. Sharp was the principal anti-saloon champion. Thoroughly loyal to his convictions, under no circumstances would he betray his constituency, although at one time he was offered $150,000 if he would sell his interest in the Chicago, Pekin & Southwestern Railroad to a party who declined to make it a competing line. He spurned the offer and died a comparatively poor man, an heir to a kingdom; gold and silver could not tempt him to swerve one iota from the path of duty. His health failing him (lung trouble) he sold out his interests near Chicago and removed with his family to Hanford, Tulare county (now Kings), Cal., and bought a raw piece of land two and a quarter miles northeast from town, which he improved and upon which he resided until his death, December 14, 1893.

In Hanford, Cal., Mr. Sharp will be remembered as the preacher, founder, and elder of the first Christian Church of that city,—one whose services were invaluable in building up that church and uplifting the people of that city. He indeed "Labored not for the meat that perisheth, but for the meat that endureth unto eternal life," and has gone to his reward. He died as he had often prayed to, in the harness, passing away without a struggle. His widow, "Grandma Sharp," as everybody called her, had not a single enemy, and was ever the life and joy of her household. She came of Scotch-Irish stock, a woman of indomitable energy and perseverance, economy and frugality. A mother in Israel, loved and respected by everyone, she fell asleep in Jesus and passed over the river March 21, 1900, aged eighty-nine years two months and twenty-four days. She became the mother of eight children, of whom Cecellia died at North Prairie, near La Moille, Ill., at the age of five years; James T., a young and promising lawyer at Minonk, died at the age of twenty-one years; Anna (Mrs. Welch) passed away about six months after the death of her mother. The rest of the children are living. Bella, the youngest of the family, and the youngest graduate from Eureka College, married C. C. Van Valkenberg, and is now living in Fresno, Cal.; she has one son, Craigie Van Valkenberg. Robert T. Sharp resides eight miles north of Visalia, where he conducts a dairy and chicken ranch; he married Ida Glass, and to them were born two sons and two daughters. George Sharp resides at Pasadena, Cal., and to himself and wife have been born two sons and one daughter. Craigie Sharp, the eldest child in the family, married Miss Sarah Johnson, a native of Michigan, and to them were born two sons and two daughters. Like his father, Craigie Sharp, Jr., has always manifested a great deal of public spirit. He was one of the organizers and managers of the Mid-Winter Fair Exposition at San Francisco, also manager of two other expositions at Oakland (where he resides), and organizer of the Board of Trade of Oakland, being its secretary for six years. Personally he is very frank, open hearted and hospitable.

THEODORE COLLINS BRATTON. A veteran of the Civil war and for many years a resident of Fresno county, Mr. Bratton's life history is one of great interest. In addition to being a soldier and a participant in many of the important battles of the war, he was a member of a general court-martial and in this position became associated with many of the most prominent men of the day. Born November 3, 1838, in Ripley, Brown county, Ohio, he is a son of James and Sally Ann (Kendall) Bratton. His father was also a native of Ohio, a son of Thomas Bratton, who was born in France, and prior to immigrating to this country served as an officer in the French army. After coming to the United States he followed farming in Ohio until his death. James Bratton was a physician and practiced his profession in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, his death occurring in Ohio. Mrs. Bratton, who died in Missouri, was a native of Brown county, Ohio, and a schoolmate of General Grant. By her marriage she became the mother of four children, the youngest of whom was Theodore C. His education was limited. For a time he studied medicine, but in 1860 at the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted in the United States army, Company D, Sixteenth Kentucky Infantry, being made captain. After engaging in the battle at Ivy Mountain, his command was transferred to Knoxville, taking an active part in the siege of that city. During this time he was appointed temporary assistant brigadier quartermaster. In 1863 his regiment reënlisted, Mr. Bratton retaining the same rank in the same regiment and company. Soon after this he joined Sherman's army, which at the time was in the vicinity of Chattanooga, and remained with this famous general until 1864, when at Cassville, Ga., he was wounded, being hit in the right hip by a minië-ball. After his recovery he was detailed as a member of a general court-martial, with headquarters at Louisville, Ky. His associates comprised many of the prominent army officers, and during the time he was a member of the court several very important cases were tried. In February, 1865, not being able for field duty, he resigned and went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he took a course in a business college, after which he returned to Louisville and engaged in the grocery and notion business for one year. He then sold and went to Johnson county, Mo., where he secured a position as a clerk in Marshall. In 1875, thirty years ago, he came to California and soon after arrival located on the place which has since been his home. Here he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, his ranch being two and one-half miles southwest of Selma. Practically his entire time has been devoted to general farming and stock-raising, although he has been interested in several business ventures, being one of the organizers of the Centerville and Kingsburg Irrigating Ditch Company, serving for two years as president, and as vice-president and director for several years.

While living in Missouri Mr. Bratton married Mary Jane Elmore, who was born in New York city. A Democrat in political belief, he takes a deep interest in the welfare of that party. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. In Fresno county, where he has lived for so many years, Mr. Bratton is highly respected and has a large circle of friends. He has made a success of life and is now able to enjoy the results of his early struggles.

FRANK D. ROSENDAHL. The Kingsburg Colony, Fresno county, owes much of its growth and prosperity to the efforts of Frank D. Rosendahl, one of its early settlers and promoters, whose association with the real estate interests of the place has given an impetus to progressive movements. A native of Sweden, he was born June 5, 1843, a son of Henry Rosendahl, also of that country, who came to the United States in 1869 and located first in New York. In Sweden he had engaged as an iron maker in a rolling mill and followed the same occupation after coming to America. He came to California in 1875 and made his home with his son until his death, which occurred in 1890. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Erickson, was born and also died in Sweden. They were the parents of two sons and three daughters, of whom Frank D. was the eldest.

Frank D. Rosendahl received his education in the common schools and in a college of Sweden, after which he studied landscape gardening and surveying in Rosendal College. In 1868 he was engaged to lay out the city park at Umeo, Sweden, and in the same year he came to New York City, and was employed in Central Park, where he remained seven years as a division gardener. In 1875 he came to San Francisco as gardener in Golden Gate Park, which was then being laid out, and a year later engaged in the nursery business in Oakland. In 1878 he came to Fresno county and engaged in fruit raising in Washington Colony, later trading his ranch for one hundred and forty acres in Kingsburg Colony, where he followed the nursery business until 1900, when his son, Henry Rosendahl, assumed charge of the work. In the meantime he engaged in the real estate business from 1885, handling all kinds of property, and giving his best efforts to the colonization of Kingsburg. He is held in the highest esteem by all who know him and appreciated for the qualities which have distinguished his character.

In Sweden Mr. Rosendahl was united in marriage with Hannah Elizabeth Wickman, a native of that country, and they are the parents of the following children: Frank T., a rancher in the vicinity of Bakersfield; Henry, a nurseryman of Turlock; Fannie and Edith, both teachers of Fresno; and Florence, of San Jose, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Rosendahl is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, being active in the lodge of Kingsburg, and politically is active in the counsels of the Republican party.

JOSEPH WILLIAM REESE. The Reese family, represented in Fresno county by Joseph W. Reese, a pioneer settler of this community, is of southern ancestry. An early pioneer, James Reese, a native of Wales, came to America and settled in the part of North Carolina which was afterward made the state of Tennessee. He became prominent, as did also his two sons, Joseph Brown Mackey and William B., the former successful as a physician and the latter as a lawyer and judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. Dr. Reese, a native of Jefferson county, Tenn., graduated from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, Pa., and engaged in the practice of his profession while he also resided on a farm in his native locality. He married Sophia Emerson, a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of Thomas Emerson, of Virginia, a pioneer attorney of Jonesboro and judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, and the first mayor of Knoxville. Mrs. Reese died in Tennessee, leaving a family of seven children, of whom only three are now living, one son, O. B. Reese, being located in Brownsville, Ore., where he is practicing medicine.

The fourth child in his father's family, Joseph William Reese, was born near Knoxville, Tenn.,

February 4, 1834, and was reared to young manhood on the old plantation thirty miles from that city. In childhood he attended a private school, and later entered East Tennessee University at Knoxville, where he remained two years. He then became a student in Emery and Henry College, Washington county, W. Va., which place he left to come to California in 1854. He went to Dallas, Tex., where he outfitted with ox-teams, leaving April 1 and arriving October 1. The train with which he traveled went north across the mountains to Fort Bridger, over the Fremont trail, via Salt Lake, Humboldt river, Honey Lake, to Shasta county, Cal. Following his arrival in the state, Mr. Reese engaged in mining in Eldorado county during the summer of 1855, when he went south to Los Angeles and met a brother who had come through the Tejon Pass to Los Angeles county. He spent some time there, when he went to Mariposa county and again engaged in mining until 1860. Deciding to return east he made the trip via the Isthmus of Panama, landing at New York City, and going thence to Tennessee. At the first tap of the drum he enlisted in the Third Tennessee Regiment, Confederate Volunteers, a member of Company A, serving first as sergeant, later as first lieutenant, and finally becoming captain of the company. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run, and was later transferred to Tennessee, where he served under General Bragg in the Kentucky raid and was also in the siege of Vicksburg. After the fall of that place he was paroled and was later exchanged. Not being notified while in East Tennessee he was captured and sent to Johnson Island, where he remained a prisoner for eighteen months, or until the end of the war. In 1865 he returned home, and until 1874 remained in Tennessee, engaged in trading, and various occupations as a means of livelihood. Once more locating in California he followed a mercantile enterprise in Fresno, conducting it successfully for several years, and in the meantime improved a vineyard and orchard a mile and a half east of this city. Finally locating in this property he engaged in horticultural pursuits, owning sixty-five acres, of the original ninety acres embodied in the ranch, twenty acres being in Emperor grapes and forty-five acres in Muscats and deciduous fruits. After the burning of his residence on the ranch they removed to Fresno, where they have since resided.

Mr. Reese has been married twice, his first wife being Augusta Pryde, with whom he was united in marriage in Tennessee. She died in California, leaving three children, namely: Herbert, on the home ranch; Minnie, the wife of Thomas Patterson, of San Francisco; and Sophia, the wife of John Ash, of Mississippi. On May 17, 1893, Mr. Reese was united in marriage with Mrs. Martha J. (Patterson) Darwin, a native of Newton county, Ga. Her father, Thomas Patterson, was a native of Virginia, from which state he enlisted for service in the war of 1812. He became a teacher and surveyor in Newton county, Ga., and later in Cherokee county, Ala., his death occurring at Cedar Bluff. His wife, formerly Nancy Hendry, was a native of Georgia, and the daughter of Thomas Hendry, a physician of Georgia, in which state he was born and died. Mrs. Patterson died in Georgia, leaving a family of ten children, of whom seven attained maturity, and two are now living, Mrs. Millie Hill of Fresno and Mrs. Reese. John A. Patterson came to California in 1849, crossing the plains, and became a pioneer of Visalia, Tulare county, where he was an extensive farmer until his death. Another son, Elisha Patterson, came to California and died in Fresno. Mrs. Reese was the youngest of the family, and was reared in Georgia, receiving her education in the private schools of that state. In the spring of 1867, with her brother Elisha, she came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, taking passage on the Golden Gate, to San Francisco, whence they came to Visalia. She was first married November 28, 1867, to Andrew Mitchell Darwin, of whom a biographical sketch is given elsewhere in this volume. They had one daughter, Addie Cole, who died at the age of two and a half years. They adopted a daughter, Georgia, who became the wife of William H. Bryan, of Fresno. Mrs. Reese is now the owner of six thousand acres on the Kings river and Dry creek, consisting of grain farm and range lands, where the cattle business is extensively carried on, the property being rented. She also owns an orange and lemon orchard of twenty acres at Centerville, Fresno county. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Reese is a Democrat in his political convictions.

ABRAHAM J. WELDON. While the United States still held rank as one of England's colonial possessions the Weldon family came to this country from Europe and became identified with plantation life in Old Virginia. When the struggle began with the mother country one of the name bore arms in defense of liberty and independence, and years later, when a second struggle took place with England, J. B. Weldon, a son of the Revolutionary soldier, offered his services to the United States, and served with a valor characteristic of the family. Somewhat later, when the tide of emigration began to drift westward beyond the mountains, he left Virginia for Kentucky, and settled on a raw tract of land out of which he cultivated a fine farm. Next in line of descent was Abraham B. Weldon, a native of Kentucky, but in early life a settler of Boone county, Mo., where he entered a tract of land, energetically pursued the calling of agriculturist, and remained at the same place until eighty-eight years of age, when he passed from time to eternity. Many years before this he had lost his wife, Polly Carpenter, who was born in Kentucky and died in Missouri while her children were still young. In the family were four sons and six daughters, Abraham J. being the third in order of birth. A native of Boone county, Mo., born June 12, 1839, he experienced his first heavy loss in the death of his mother. The need of his help on the farm rendered attendance at school impracticable, except for a few weeks of the year, but in spite of lack of opportunities he has gained a broad fund of information on matters of current or historic importance.

At the opening of the Civil war Abraham J. Weldon enlisted in Company I of Clark's Infantry, C. S. A., but later was transferred to Shelby's Cavalry in the Trans-Mississippi army, and with his regiment participated in many bitterly contested battles with the northern troops. When the war ended and the Confederate cause was abandoned as lost, he laid down his arms and returned to his home. In 1866 he settled in Texas and for a time engaged in carpentering in Collins county, but during 1870 became interested in the cotton-gin business in Denton county, same state. Three years later he bought a ranch in Texas and for years made stock-raising his principal industry. The year 1887 found him a resident of California. During his first two years in the state he followed the trade of a carpenter and builder in Fresno, but later became interested in wheat farming at Redbanks. To a tract of thirty acres, previously purchased, he moved in 1896, and here he has since engaged in fruit culture, having the land in a vineyard and orchard. The farm lies three and one-half miles northeast of Sanger in Centerville district and under his close and intensive system of cultivation has been brought to a condition far in advance of former years.

While living in Texas Mr. Weldon was married in Denton county, in 1868, to Miss Mattie L. Lindsay, a native of Alabama. They are the parents of six sons and two daughters, namely: L. E., a carpenter and builder at Clovis, Fresno county; R. W., now living in Burr valley; Roy C., also in Burr valley; James B., a minister in the Christian Church and now instructor of classics at Christian University, Canton, Mo.; W. B., of Burr valley; L. O., who is a student in a college at Louisville, Ky.; Mary E., wife of John Thompson, whose home adjoins the Weldon property; and Fannie I., at home. The family are identified with the Christian Church at Centerville and ever have been zealous in the promotion of the religious life of their community. Fraternally Mr. Weldon holds membership with Sanger Lodge No. 316, F. & A. M. In political matters he always supports Democratic men and measures and has kept thoroughly posted concerning problems affecting the prosperity of state and nation. During a long period of service as school director he had the welfare of the school of his district constantly upon his mind. Any project calculated to give to the pupils better advantages and more carefully prepare them for life's responsibilities received his staunch support, and it was his ambition always to select teachers with such caution and care that the best interests of the pupils might be conserved.

WESTWOOD JAMES BAKER, owner of Tahlequah, on Ventura avenue, four miles east of Fresno, was born in Courtland, Ala., February 25, 1849, a son of Joseph Baker, of English descent and a native of Wiscasset, Me. The latter was an attorney in Courtland and served as district attorney for several years. Fraternally he was a Knight Templar Mason. He died in 1880. His wife, A. A. James, was born in Alabama, a daughter of Westwood Wallace James, who was born in old Virginia, a direct descendant of Sir William Wallace, of Scotland. He was a planter in Alabama. Mrs. Baker resides at the old place. W. J. Baker had two uncles, Edward C. and Westwood James, who were prominent physicians in Alabama and were surgeons in the Confederate army.

After receiving his preliminary education, W. J. Baker began the study of medicine with his uncles, then entered the University of Pennsylvania, medical department, from which he was graduated in 1873 and at once engaged in practice in Courtland, Ala. In 1876 he located in Greenback, Ark., where he purchased a large plantation of two thousand acres on the Arkansas river. He superintended the work of the cotton plantation and practiced his profession until 1880, when he retired from practice and located in Fresno, Cal. He purchased his present place of one hundred acres, which he improved, and now has a valuable vineyard and orchard, a comfortable residence and well appointed grounds, his driveway being bordered with palms and umbrella trees. Dr. Baker still owns large interests in Arkansas. Mrs. Baker, formerly Alice Cary Cooke, was born at Riverside, the country place of her father, Dr. Stephen Cooke, thirty miles from Louisville, Ky. Dr. Cooke graduated from Louisville Medical College, practicing in Kentucky, and later in Arkansas. His father, Dr. John Esten Cooke, a native of Virginia, was professor in the Louisville Medical College and built the country place Riverside. He married Miss Sallie Newsom Cary of Virginia, whose ancestry dates to heroes in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Baker is a cousin of John Esten Cooke, the author. The Estens are of English descent, and one of the forefathers was governor of the Bermudas. By a former marriage Dr. Baker has one son, Joseph Westwood Baker. Mrs. Baker is a member of the Episcopal Church. The doctor has taken an active part in politics, having served as chairman of the Democratic county central committee. He was made a Mason in Courtland, Ala., and now belongs to Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M., was raised to the Royal Arch Chapter in Courtland and is now a member of Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M. At Pine Bluff, Ark., he joined the Knights Templar, and now holds membership with Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T. He is also a member of Fresno Lodge of Perfection and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of San Francisco. In the line of his profession he is a member of the San Joaquin Valley Medical Association.

Since becoming a resident of Fresno county Dr. Baker has closely allied himself with all movements that have had for their object the advancement of the social, moral and commercial prestige of the county, and among the people who have come in contact with him in any capacity, all unite in according him a permanent position among representative citizens of the San Joaquin valley.

ROBERT C. THOM. During the long period of his residence in Fresno county, covering thirty years or more, Mr. Thom has been successful in the accumulation of landed estate. At this writing he is the owner of eight hundred and forty acres six and one-half miles northeast of Centerville, seven hundred acres also in the vicinity of Centerville, three town lots in Sanger, one hundred and sixty acres in Squaw valley, and one-half interest in thirty-two hundred acres of mountain ranch land. The ownership of these large tracts renders possible the pasturing of large herds of stock, and now he has one-half interest in five hundred head of cattle, in addition to other stock. While the raising of cattle is his principal business, he likewise gives attention to general farm pursuits and on his tillable land raises crops of such products as are adapted to the soil.

In Jefferson county, Ind., Robert C. Thom was born December 2, 1830, being a son of Alexander C. and Elizabeth (Taylor) Thom, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and from 1818 until death residents of Indiana, where the father cultivated a farm and followed also the blacksmith's trade. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Thom, was born in county Donegal in the north of Ireland, whence he came to America shortly before the outbreak of the first war with England. In that historic struggle he bore arms for his adopted county and later engaged in farming in Westmoreland county, Pa., but eventually joined his son in Indiana, where his closing days were passed. In a family of six sons and four daughters Robert C. Thom was fourth in order of birth. After having gained a common school education he began to teach, which occupation he followed in Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois.

When gold was discovered in Pike's Peak in 1859 Mr. Thom started for the mines of Colorado in company with two companions, but he was deterred from carrying out his original purpose through meeting disappointed gold-seekers returning east. After considering the matter he decided to push through to the coast and accordingly proceeded with ox-teams across plains, rivers and mountains, in due time arriving in Mariposa county. For a number of years he remained in that section and followed mining and saw-milling, but in 1875 he became a resident of Fresno county, where he now owns a homestead thirteen miles east of Sanger. He has never married, but keeps bachelor's hall on his ranch. Political matters engage his attention to a certain degree and he keeps posted concerning national problems, but aside from voting a straight Republican ticket at all national elections he takes no part whatever in local politics.

ARTHUR C. BLAYNEY. Although a young man, Mr. Blayney has already become well established in Fresno county as one of the representative agriculturists and vineyardists. A native of Kansas he was born in Douglas county, July 5, 1869. His father, Charles O. Blayney, was born in Pennsylvania, and shortly before the breaking out of the Civil war located in Kansas where he engaged in general farming. Remaining there until 1875, he then sold out and came to California. The first two years of his residence in this state were spent near Visalia, where he followed farming. At the expiration of that period he moved to San Luis Obispo county, where he also carried on agricultural pursuits. Subsequently he went to Napa county and in 1882 located in Fresno county, near Fowler, where he was living at the time of his death in 1902, at the age of fifty-eight years. His wife bore the maiden name of Alice Stone and was a native of Wisconsin. She died in 1892.

In their family were eight children, three sons and five daughters.

Arthur C. Blayney was the eldest child, and after completing his education he engaged in farming near Fowler. In 1891 he located on the ranch which he occupies at present, and which he leases, consisting of three hundred and twenty acres. Here he is now carrying on an extensive horticultural and grain business, meeting with success in his ventures. He also raises considerable stock and conducts a small dairy.

In 1891, in the city of Stockton, Mr. Blayney was united in marriage with Miss Mary Gower, who is a native daughter of California, her birth having occurred in San Joaquin county. This union has resulted in the birth of two children: Lillian Alice and Charles Oberlin, both of whom are living at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Blayney are members of the Presbyterian Church of Fowler and take an active interest in church work, and both are members of the Fraternal Brotherhood. In political views Mr. Blayney is a Socialist, believing the principles underlying the organization are correct and that sooner or later the country will be governed by this party.

SIDNEY F. HADSELL. A well-known educator and business man of Fresno county, Sidney F. Hadsell is a worthy representative, born in Calhoun county, Mich., July 13, 1843, a son of Martin and Susan (Forward) Hadsell. The former, a native of Connecticut, went to New York, thence to Ohio, and finally, in 1837, located in Michigan near Battle Creek, where he died. His wife was a native of Ohio and also died at their home in Michigan.

The youngest of three sons and four daughters, S. F. Hadsell received his early education in the common schools and later at Hopkinton College in Iowa. He engaged in teaching in Michigan and in 1868 located in Independence, Iowa, where he continued his chosen vocation and also took the college course, teaching at various places until 1875, when he came to California and located at Santa Rosa.

In 1876 Mr. Hadsell came to Fresno county and secured a position as teacher. He taught the first school in Madera in 1877, the school consisting of but one room. When Madera county was organized he remained in that city until going to Mariposa county, from there returning to Fresno county. In 1888 he engaged in the real estate business, at the same time carrying on a ranch. In Fresno he was associated with the well-known firm of Hadsell, Green & Co., real estate dealers, for three years, 1888, '89, '90. He now owns a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres purchased in 1889, in the Carmelita district, fifty acres of which are in vineyard, fourteen in orchard and the balance in alfalfa and grain. This farm he rents.

In 1876 Mr. Hadsell was united in marriage in San Francisco with Thesta Dana, who was born in Independence, Iowa. They have three children: Dan, attending the State University, Grovino and Edith. In politics he is a Democrat and has been active in the deliberations of that party, though never an aspirant for office. In local issues he is always in favor of men best fitted for the office, and is a member of the county central committee. The cause of education has always found in Mr. Hadsell a warm adherent and he rendered valuable service as a member of the Fresno board of education. In 1885 he platted Hadsell's addition of Fresno, a tract of twenty-five acres, which was sold off in city lots. He makes his home at No. 201 Valeria street. Thesta street in this addition is named in honor of Mrs. Hadsell. In 1888 he platted Elm Grove addition, which was also sold off. At the time of locating in the San Joaquin valley Fresno county was little more than a desert and the change that the years have brought forth has been through the perseverance of such men as Mr. Hadsell. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hadsell have a wide circle of acquaintances and in all movements that have been advanced for the promotion of the welfare of the citizens of their adopted county have taken an active interest. By their united efforts they have accumulated a competence which they are now living to enjoy.

JOHN GREENUP SIMPSON. Significant of the advantages offered by Fresno county is the success achieved both by the pioneers and by their sons, the latter of whom, following in the footsteps and reaping the benefit of the labors of their predecessors, now enjoy comforts undreamed of at an earlier period of the county's history. A gratifying degree of material prosperity attended the efforts of the first John G. Simpson and the second bearer of the name no less is worthy of praiseworthy mention in recognition of his intelligent and well-directed activities in the domain of agriculture. Honorably ambitious to secure independence, nevertheless in his enterprises for the advancement of his personal affairs he has lost sight of no duty as a citizen, but ever has shown a public spirit and high ideal of citizenship characteristic of the family.

A lifelong resident of Fresno county, John Greenup Simpson was born at Academy April 25, 1872, and received a fair education in his native town. The first event of special note in his life was his independent establishment as a farmer, which dates from 1893. During that year he settled near Academy on a tract of eight hundred and twenty acres, lying on sections 9, 10, 16, 12 and 22. This property still continues to be his home and the scene of his activities. The raising of grain and of stock are his specialties, and on his ranch may be found a fine grade of Shorthorns and Herefords, each bearing the brand which he has adopted for his own use in the marking of his stock. As a stockman he shows keen discrimination in the selection of stock and wise judgment in their breeding, and already he has established a reputation in his chosen line of occupation.

It is worthy of note that Mr. Simpson's wife, like himself, is a native of this locality, having been born near Academy and here reared to womanhood. She was Miss Laura Bacon, youngest child of Thomas E. Bacon, now a resident of Fresno. The children of the union are named Mark Story, John Lawrence and Mildred. No trace of partisan spirit has been noticeable in Mr. Simpson's character, yet he is a staunch Democrat, a pronounced supporter of party measures, and has rendered efficient service as a member of the county central committee. A thorough believer in the free-school system, his sympathy with educational movements led him to accept the position as school trustee in the Dry Creek district and also he has been helpful to the work through his service as clerk of the board of trustees. The Fraternal Brotherhood at Clovis numbers him among its members and his fraternity relations are further enlarged through his association with Manzanita Camp No. 16c, W. O. W., at Fresno. To round out a character of more than ordinary worth, the influence of religion is added. In the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church South Mr. Simpson has given liberally of time, means and influence. His willingness to be of service led him to accept the offices of recording steward and clerk of the board of trustees, in which capacities he has proved most helpful to the congregation. Other plans along lines morally or educationally helpful find in him a staunch ally, ready to give all the assistance in his power for their upbuilding and success.

GEORGE D. FULLERTON. A native of Monroe county, Ind., George D. Fullerton was born October 5, 1844, a son of John and Mary D. (Roberts) Fullerton. The father was born in the state of Tennessee and removed to Indiana at a very early day, being a pioneer farmer of that state. Locating near Bloomington he carried on a successful agricultural business for several years, but finally settled in Monroe county, Iowa, where he died at an advanced age. His wife was a native of Kentucky and by her marriage became the mother of six children, all sons, of whom George D. was the fourth. He remained at home and obtained a limited education in the public schools. On starting out to make his own way in the world he engaged in farming in Ringgold county, Iowa, where he lived until 1887, the year of his removal to California. Locating near Easton he there followed his former occupation of farming until his removal to his present ranch near Fowler. His first purchase of land here consisted of twenty acres, but since then he has added to his possessions until he now owns forty acres of as fine land as can be found in the county. In addition to this ranch he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres near Firebaugh. Mr. Fullerton is a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in 1863 in the Third Iowa Battery, and serving until the close of the war. His battery was assigned to the Seventh Army Corps and saw considerable active service. He also had two brothers in the army, both of whom were killed.

While still living in Iowa, Mr. Fullerton was united in marriage with Miss Martha Magaw, a native of Ohio. She has given birth to six children, namely: A daughter who died in infancy; Carl C.; John; Inez, now Mrs. C. B. Scott; Bert and Dwight. All the children live in Fresno county. In politics Mr. Fullerton supports the principles of the Republican party and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He has always been very active, and whenever called upon to give of his time or means in the support of any movement for the betterment of the state or county, he has responded willingly. Both he and his wife are deservedly popular, and have a large circle of friends in this part of the valley where they are so well known.

JOHN K. KENNEDY. An early settler and a pioneer who has endured the hardships and privations incident to the founding of a statehood, John K. Kennedy is living in the enjoyment of the prosperity which has followed his efforts. He was born in Logan county, Ohio, April 21, 1853, a son of William Kennedy, who came from his native land, Ireland, to the United States in 1850. He located for one year in Philadelphia, Pa., where he followed his trade of weaver, and in 1851 removed to Logan county, Ohio, in the vicinity of Bellefontaine. There he engaged as a railway contractor until 1856, in which year he settled in Madison county, Iowa, and followed farming for twenty-one years. He came to California in 1887 and located on a farm adjoining that of his son, in Fresno county, where his death occurred in 1891. His wife, formerly Nancy Brazill, a native of Ireland, died in California in 1896. They were the parents of three sons and five daughters, of whom John K. was the eldest son and the third child in order of birth.

John K. Kennedy received a limited education in the common schools of Iowa, where he grew to manhood and engaged in farming until 1885. In that year he came to California and in December located on his present place, consisting of two hundred and eighty acres, three and a half miles southwest of Fowler, Fresno county. He first followed the cultivation of wheat, but has since devoted a large part of the land to fruit, putting in forty-eight acres of vineyard and eighteen acres of orchard. Sixty acres is devoted to alfalfa and the balance to wheat and pasture.

Near Des Moines, Iowa, Mr. Kennedy was united in marriage with Lydia Hastie, a native of that vicinity, and they became the parents of three children, namely: J. Herman, an undertaker of Fresno; Charles Edward and Clyda Elizabeth, both at home. Mr. Kennedy is a member of the United Presbyterian Church of Fowler, and politically is a Republican.

JOSHUA BENTON CRAVEN. Few of the men now living in the Kings river region have been identified with the locality for a longer period than Mr. Craven claims as the duration of his citizenship in this part of Fresno county, and doubtless no one has been more assiduous than he in endeavoring to place the live-stock business upon a permanently substantial basis. The labors of years have found tangible evidence in the accumulation of property, which is of sufficient extent to place him among the large land-owners of Clark's valley. On taking up his present place, twelve miles east of Sanger, in 1870 he acquired the title to one hundred and sixty acres, but by addition this has been increased to four hundred and sixty acres, in one body, in the homestead. He also owns a mountain ranch of ten hundred and forty acres and two hundred and sixty acres of grazing land just back of the home place, the whole forming ample facilities for the pasturage of his stock, numbering two hundred head of cattle and one hundred and fifty head of hogs.

In Ray county, Mo., Joshua Benton Craven was born, December 26, 1839, being a son of Solomon and Sarah J. (Kincaid) Craven, natives of Tennessee. As early as 1828 his father became a farmer in Missouri, where he improved a tract of land in Ray county. Many years later, following the tide of emigration westward, in 1865 he crossed the plains to Oregon and settled in Polk county, where he took up a tract of farm land and remained until death. In that same county also occurred the death of his wife

They were the parents of nine sons and five daughters, of whom the subject of this narrative was fifth in order of birth. Little of special moment occurred to mark the years of his early youth, which were spent in the schoolroom during the winter months and in the field at work during the summer. When he was twenty years of age the longing to see more of the world led him to join a party bound for Pike's Peak. However, the boom had burst before he reached the mines, and thereupon he pursued his way to the coast. During his first winter in California he worked for Mr. Potter, on Kings river, then secured employment with William Hazelton. In 1867 he made a start for himself by embarking in the cattle business and three years later came to the ranch he still owns and occupies.

For many years Mr. Craven has filled the office of school director and his work in that position has been helpful to the welfare of the school, whose interests he has labored to promote by every means within his power. Active in the local work of the Democratic party, in no capacity has his political service been more helpful than as a member of the county central committee, a responsible position that has been filled ably by him for twenty or more years. After coming to California he married in Kings county, Miss Virginia A. Robinson, who was born in Boone county, Mo. They became the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are living, namely: Sallie, who married W. D. Mitchell, of Sanger, this state; Nellie, Wesley, Chesley, Jennie, Kittie and Laura, who are with their parents on the home farm.

JAMES GORDON FERGUSON was the first settler of the now thriving town of Clovis. Coming here with the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company in 1894, he found nothing but vacant fields, and where now stands a town of fifteen hundred people there was not a single house. Soon after his arrival he erected a residence, which was the first one built here. Thus it was that a native of old England became the pioneer of one of the thriving towns in the San Joaquin valley. At an early age he started out in life by entering one of the greatest financial institutions in the world, the Bank of Liverpool. Subsequently he lived in Australia and for several years has been prominently identified with the lumber industry of our own state.

Born in England, James Gordon Ferguson first saw the light of day in the city of Liverpool, on May 31, 1861. His father, Capt. James Ferguson, was a native of Scotland and as a boy went to sea. As time passed he was promoted from one position to another until finally he was made captain of one of the large vessels owned by the famous Cunard line. Practically his entire life was spent as a sailor in the trans-Atlantic trade. His death occurred in Liverpool. In young manhood he was united in marriage with Helen Kerr Fead, also a native of Scotland, and who is also deceased.

The early life of Mr. Ferguson was spent in the city of his birth. His common school education was supplemented by a course in the Liverpool College, from which institution he was graduated in 1876. Soon after he secured a position in the counting room of the Bank of Liverpool. By industry and a strict attention to his duties he was finally promoted, and in 1883 when he resigned he was one of the tellers, a very responsible position. Following his resignation, Mr. Ferguson immigrated to Australia, where he engaged in the shipping and forwarding business, being located in the city of Sydney. While living there he was united in marriage with Miss Ada Florence Bond, a native of the same city, whose father, Thomas Bond, was born in England. After his emigration to Australia he entered the mines, which occupation he followed for several years, or until his death.

Soon after his marriage, Mr. Ferguson disposed of his interests in Australia and with his bride came to California, arriving in San Francisco July 8, 1886. His first position was with Harpst & Spring, prominent lumber dealers in Humboldt county. Not long after he was offered a position in San Diego as head bookkeeper with the Russ Lumber Company, which he accepted. There he remained until 1889, when he returned to San Francisco and entered the employ of Pope & Talbot as cashier and office manager. Three years later he resigned to accept a position in Fresno with the San Joaquin Lumber Company, with whom he continued as head bookkeeper and cashier until the organization of the Fresno Flume and Irrigation Company. This was the position that brought him to Clovis, and since then he has continued in their employ, being head bookkeeper and cashier.

In addition to his regular duties Mr. Ferguson has taken an active part in political matters and was postmaster of Clovis for two terms. He has also served as a member of the board of school trustees since its organization and was responsible for the erection of the first grammar school building. As a member of the county central committee he is influential in county politics, being considered one of the leading representatives of his party. Quite prominent in fraternal circles, he is a member of the Elks, the Woodmen of the World, the Fraternal Brotherhood, the Ancient Order United Workmen and the St. Andrew's Society. Mr. Ferguson has made a splendid success of his life. Obstacles have been met and overcome with a determination that would withstand no opposition. He has not only made for himself a comfortable competence, but has gained a position in the world of which he may well feel proud. It is a pleasure for us to present our readers with the review of such men's lives, as there is much written here that is worthy of emulation.

JACOB WISE BROWNE is one of the oldest settlers of the San Joaquin valley. Since the year of his arrival here there have been many changes, and in this work of transformation he has taken an active part. Practically his entire life has been spent as a tiller of the soil and as such he has been engaged in developing the land and otherwise improving the country. As a member of this great army he has ever been ready to perform his duty as a citizen, and no man can say that he has ever shirked a duty or refused aid to any movement calculated to be of material benefit to the county or state. A native of Pennsylvania, Mr. Browne was born in the staid old city of Philadelphia, April 7, 1851. His father, Isaac E. Browne, was born in New York, but later took up his residence in the Quaker City, where he worked at his trade, that of a machinist, for several years. Subsequently he removed to Pittsburg, where he worked at his trade until his removal to Winchester, Scott county, Ill. After spending seven years there he again made a change, this time going to Benton county, Mo., where he lived until his death. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company B, Seventh Missouri Cavalry, as a sergeant, and served until the cessation of hostilities. Mr. Browne was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Wise, a native of Pennsylvania, and to them were born seven children. Mrs. Browne's death occurred in Missouri. She was the daughter of Jacob Wise, who was a farmer in the Keystone state.

Jacob W. Browne was reared in Illinois and Missouri, his education being obtained in the common schools of Benton county. At the age of nineteen he took up his residence with an uncle, Dr. Horace A. Browne, who lived in Mercer county, and not only practiced medicine but also conducted a drug store. In this store Mr. Browne was given employment, where he continued for two years. About this time his marriage with Mrs. Rebecca (Weaver) Gates was solemnized in the town of Cameron. She is the daughter of William M. Gates, and was born in Clark county, Mo. Her father was a prominent farmer and lived and died in that state. Soon after his marriage Mr. Browne decided to migrate westward and in 1873 came to California, where he has since lived and where he has done so much in the great work that has been carried on here in the past forty years. His first home was at Modesto, near which place he engaged in farming in what is now called the "pocket." Five years later he disposed of his interests there and returned to Benton county, Mo., where he purchased a farm and conducted the same for the following five years. During this time his father died and soon after he sold out and again came to this state, locating in Fresno in 1884. In the spring of that year he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land on section 18, which he placed under the plow and devoted to the raising of grain. This business he has since followed with great success. In 1892 he erected the fine residence that is now his home, and here, surrounded by all the comforts of life and a loving family, he is enjoying the fruits of his earlier toils.

To Mr. and Mrs. Browne have been born the following children: Dottie, now Mrs. Charles Brown, a sketch of whom will be found on another page of this work; Muriel Daisy, now Mrs. R. G. Johnson, of Oleander; Robert E., of Kern county; Emanuel, of San Francisco; Ella, who is preparing to be a professional nurse in Fresno; J. Wise and Amanda, both at home. In political matters Mr. Browne is a Democrat and takes an active part in the affairs of his party, but has never cared to ask favors from the people. Known all through this section of the county, he has a large circle of friends, and among these his word is considered as good as his bond. There could be no better testimonial than this to define the position Mr. Browne has attained here. Starting in life at the bottom of the ladder, he has steadily worked his way upward.

CHRIS P. JENSEN. A member of the firm of Teilman & Jensen, Chris P. Jensen is justly accorded a high place among the civil engineers of this section, and is named among the representative citizens of Fresno. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Antioch, November 9, 1873. His father, Martin Jensen, came from Slesvig, Germany, to America, locating first in Ohio, where he engaged as a mechanical engineer. He held a position of stationary engineer until 1870, when he came to California and found employment in the coal mines near Antioch, Contra Costa county. He remained in that location until 1875, when he removed to Fresno and purchased twenty acres in Central Colony and engaged in the cultivation of a vineyard and orchard. Since his location here he has bought and sold many pieces of valuable property, purchasing thirty-one acres of the old Frolich place and laying it off in lots, which he sold to good profit. He now resides in Fresno with his wife, formerly Adelheid Jorgensen, a native of Slesvig. They became the parents of two children, Chris P., of this review, and Andrew.

Chris P. Jensen was reared in Fresno county, where he attended the district school, after which he graduated from the Oakland high school in 1891. He then entered Van der Naillen's School of Engineering, of San Francisco, graduating therefrom in 1893, with the degree of C. E. His first work was in San Francisco, where he was employed by the Sanborn Map Company, remaining in that city until 1895, when he came to Fresno and became associated with I. Teilman, the firm name being Teilman & Jensen, surveying and civil engineering occupying their time and attention. They have been associated in the surveying and construction of many important enterprises, among them the Madera Flume, the logging railroad for the Madera Sugar Pine Company; the Fresno Canal and Irrigation Company; the Consolidated Canal and Irrigation Company; the Alta Irrigation District; the '76 Land and Water Company; the Balfour Guthrie Company, from Napa to Portersville, and many others. They are very successful in their work and have done not a little toward the development and upbuilding of this section of the state.

In Fresno Mr. Jensen was united in marriage with Isabelle Baird, a native of Nevada, who died in this city. They had two children, Katharine and Donald. Mr. Jensen is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

HOWARD P. BENDER. During an early period in the history of America the Bender family left Holland and settled at Fort Orange (now Albany), N. Y. A son of the original emigrant was Christian Bender, whose birth occurred in the United States in 1723 and who served faithfully as a sergeant during the Revolutionary war. Next in line of descent was Matthew, a native of Albany county, N. Y., and a lifelong agriculturist. On the old homestead in Albany county his son, Wendell M., was born and reared, and from there he went to the city of Albany in early manhood. Starting with limited means, but with an abundance of energy and determination, by degrees he built up an extensive lumber business. After accumulating a competency he retired from business and spent the remainder of his days in the enjoyment of those comforts which his industry had rendered possible. At the time of his death he was about sixty-eight years of age. His wife, Sarah, was born in Kings county, N. Y., and is now seventy-one years of age. She was of English extraction and a daughter of John F. Porter, a soldier in the Mexican war. Her paternal grandfather was a native of Massachusetts.

Among the children of W. M. and Sarah Bender was a son, the late Howard P. Bender, of Bakersfield, Kern county, who was born in Albany, N. Y., July 17, 1859. At the age of fourteen years he left home and went to New York City, joining an uncle who held a position as agent for the Erie Railroad. For the five following years he worked in the company's freight office in that city. With the restless ambition of youth, desiring to see more of our country and hoping to find business openings in the far west, in 1877 he came to California, arriving in Bakersfield in February, 1878. In this place he engaged in the decorating business and also worked as a paperhanger for nine years. In 1887 he secured employment in a large abstract office, where he was retained as head searcher of records until 1891. At this time he embarked in the real estate and abstract business for himself, and in August of 1894 took into partnership J. B. Hewitt, since which time the firm of Bender & Hewitt, under the title of the Kern Valley Abstract Bureau, has built up a profitable and extensive business.

From the early infancy of the oil industry Mr. Bender was interested in the development of wells, and was one of the original locaters of the Kern Oil Company's property. On the organization of the company he was elected secretary, an office which he filled until his death, which occurred in Bakersfield January 24, 1904. The business of the company developed rapidly, shipments often averaging one hundred and twenty thousand barrels per month. Mr. Bender also owned a controlling interest in the Monarch Oil Company at McKittrick, Kern county, and was not only its secretary, but also a member of the board of directors. Another organization in which he was interested was the Kern County Investment Company. Perhaps no man in Bakersfield was better informed than he regarding the values of properties and titles to the same. His long identification with the abstract business made his advice invaluable on subjects pertaining to the keeping of the records and perfecting of titles. He built up a large business as a fire insurance agent, and also wrote life insurance policies. In addition to his residence at Bakersfield he owned a cottage at Ocean Park.

On New Year's day of 1889 Mr. Bender married Miss Cora F. McGrann, who was born in Mariposa county, Cal., of New York and Virginia descent, and who prior to her marriage engaged in teaching school. Seven children were born of their union, namely: Harold P.; Gerald, who died in infancy; Corinne F., Claire, Chloris R., Clophine and Camille. Politically Mr. Bender was a staunch Republican. For some years he served as secretary of the county central committee. Upon the solicitation of members of his party, in 1890 he consented to become the Republican candidate for county clerk. This being a Democratic county he was defeated, though only by a small majority. In 1892 he was again his party's candidate for the office and again suffered defeat with the balance of the ticket. Upon the organization of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, he was among the first to identify himself with the fraternity and he was also active for a long period in the Knights of Pythias at Bakersfield.

MARTIN ELDER has lived in California continuously for twenty-seven years and was a member of one of the very first parties to cross the plains, making that long journey in company with his father in 1846 when he was a boy of eight years. Subsequently he returned east, but again in 1875 came to this state, where he has since made his home. He is a veteran of the Civil war, serving all through that memorable struggle, and his life has been filled with many strange adventures and hardships.

A native of Missouri, Martin Elder was born in that state July 3, 1838, a son of Turner and Polly (Rhoads) Elder. The father was born in Tennessee, but at an early day moved to Illinois and later to Missouri, where he followed farming in Ray county until 1846. In that year he joined a party and crossed the plains with his family to California. During the journey the famous Donner party were passed by the train of which he was a member. On arriving here Mr. Elder located near Sacramento, but soon after removed to what is now the site of Stockton, where he followed farming on the Mokelumme river. Later, however, after the discovery of gold, he entered the mines, meeting with splendid success. Tiring of the life and having a desire to see the east, he returned to Missouri in 1850 and resumed farming in Ray county, where he is now living at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. His wife, who was born in Illinois, died in Missouri. She became the mother of nine children, four boys and five girls.

Martin Elder was a boy of eight years when his father crossed the plains, and he remembers well the hardships, trials and privations of that long journey. On his father's return east he was a member of the party and thereafter followed farming in Ray county until 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, Third Missouri Infantry, serving under the Confederate flag for the next four years. At the close of the war he re-engaged in farming in Missouri, continuing until 1875, when he once more crossed the plains to the Golden State. His first location was near Lemoore, now Kings county, where he followed farming two years. He then came to Fresno county and settled on the place that has since been his home. This consists of three hundred and forty acres and is one of the most valuable ranch properties in the county. In addition to raising stock and carrying on general farming, he is also engaged in dairying.

While living in Missouri Mr. Elder was united in marriage with Elizabeth Jane Brown, a native of that state, and to them have been born nine children, the order of their birth being as follows: Albert, at home; Thomas, who resides in Kingsburg; Estelle, now Mrs. Bennett; Bernice, at home; Samuel, in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company; Nellie and Nora, both of whom are living at home, and two children who died in Missouri. Mr. Elder has lived in California many years and during this time has witnessed the transformation of the west. Years ago when he first came to the state it was but a wilderness. Where one now sees beautiful farms and orchards was a barren waste of sand or unbroken forest. In all this work of progress he has performed his part, never refusing or neglecting to respond when called upon to support any movement calculated to be of material benefit to the country. Both he and his estimable wife are highly respected for their many admirable traits of character and both have a host of warm personal friends.

FRED DODD. As owner and manager of the Hughes Hotel at Fresno, Mr. Dodd has become known not only as the youngest hotel man in the state, but as one of the most successful. This popular establishment is the largest hotel in the San Joaquin valley, and no town in the state can boast of a hostelry that is more modern or better equipped. A native of England, Mr. Dodd was born in Manchester, a son of Frederick Dodd, who was also a native of the same city.

Fred Dodd was reared in the town of Manchester, where he remained until 1892. That year he went to South Africa, locating at Johannesburg, where he was living at the time of the Metabele uprising. After spending two years in that country he came to California, arriving here in 1894. Going at once to Fresno, he became identified with its business interests, and in 1897 purchased the Hughes Hotel property, taking possession on his twenty-third birthday, at the time being the youngest hotel man in the state. Since becoming the owner of this well known hotel Mr. Dodd has spent $50,000 in remodeling and refitting it; $30,000 of this amount was spent in 1904. In addition to being the largest hotel in the valley, it is also one of the largest buildings in the city of Fresno. Nearly two hundred sleeping rooms are furnished with all modern improvements, thirty having private baths, while all are equipped with a private telephone. Every comfort possible has been installed by Mr. Dodd, the entire building being lighted by electricity, while the sanitary arrangements are the best that money can procure. As an addition to the hotel and for the accommodation of the general public, this progressive business man started an up-to-date steam laundry, which was one of the first of the kind to be erected in the valley. He is also interested in several outside business ventures, including the manufacture of sand-lime brick, which is being put on the market by the Golden Gate Brick Company, of which he is a director and manager.

Mrs. Dodd, formerly Miss Irene Hawkins, is a native daughter of the Golden state. Active in his own affairs, Mr. Dodd also takes a deep interest in matters pertaining to the general welfare of the city, being one of the progressive members of the Chamber of Commerce. In fraternal relations he is associated with the Elks. The progressive spirit shown by Mr. Dodd in the past in connection with the hotel business in Fresno is fully appreciated by the traveling public and the business men of the valley, who realize that they may always depend on him to keep abreast of the growing commercial or tourist trade that must in the near future pass through Fresno, the gateway of Nature's wonderland, the Yosemite valley, as well as Kings river canyon.

Plans are already formulated to build a two-story addition to the Hughes Hotel, and equipping it in every way for a tourist hotel to give every comfort to the most exacting tastes of the traveling public.

ARTHUR MANLOVE. A native of Illinois, Mr. Manlove was born in DeWitt county, a son of John N. Manlove, who was born in Indiana. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California and here engaged in mining. Later he returned to Indiana, where he resided until 1886, when he again came to this state and is now residing in Selma, living a retired life.

Arthur Manlove was the fifth child in a family of nine children. He came to California in 1887, joining his brother Scott, who the year previous had purchased one hundred and fifty-five acres of land three and a half miles north of Selma. Forming a partnership with his brother, the two have since conducted a large vineyard and farming business. In addition to the place mentioned they also own eighty acres one mile north of Selma and have a quarter-section of timber land in Madera county. Both of these young men are highly respected. They have met with success in their business operations and are considered two of the most substantial men in this part of the county.

CHARLES JOSEPH BROWN. A native of Fresno county, Mr. Brown has made his own way in the world since attaining his sixteenth year. His labors have been richly rewarded, and although a young man, he has accumulated a handsome competency and is one of the leading agriculturists of the county. His father, Samuel Brown, was born in Maine, and when a young man "rounded the Horn" to San Francisco. Shortly after he located in Stanislaus county, where he engaged in the stock business. Later, however, he disposed of his interests there and settled on Little Dry creek, Fresno county, where he became interested in the sheep business, subsequently reëngaging in the cattle business, which occupation he followed for some years, but was engaged in farming at the time of his death in 1895. His wife was Miss Jennie Gift, a native of Tennessee, and she survives her husband. This union was blessed by the birth of eight children, four sons and four daughters. Mrs. Brown makes her home on a ranch near where she and her husband first settled when they came to Fresno county.

Charles J. Brown first saw the light of day May 21, 1870. His early life was spent on his father's farm, but at the age of sixteen he started out to make his own way, leasing the Helm ranch and engaging in grain raising. Here he has since made his home, at times having several thousand acres under cultivation, although there are but six hundred and forty acres of the original Helm ranch left. During these years the business ventures of Mr. Brown have met with success and in 1900 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of the Burkhead ranch, to which he added eighty acres later on. In addition he also owns three hundred and forty acres adjoining this place, on which he is now engaged in grain raising and the cattle business. To carry on such extensive farming operations Mr. Brown has the latest and most improved machinery, and also owns nearly fifty head of horses. These he uses for freighting during the winter between Fresno and the copper mines, thus being actively employed twelve months in the year.

In Garfield was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Brown and Miss Dottie Browne, who was born in Stanislaus county, a daughter of Jacob Browne, one of the very old settlers of that section of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of the following children: Floyd, Stanley, and Lawrence Burnette. In politics Mr. Brown is a Democrat, but he has been too busy looking after his own interests to take an active part in political matters. He is at all times ready and willing to give of his time and means to further the interests of his county, and this policy has won, not only friends by the score, but a most enviable position.

SALMON H. LOOMIS. The present postmaster of Kingsburg is not only a veteran of the Civil war, but is one of California's pioneer citizens. His life has been an active one, and during the many years of his residence in the state he has done much to assist in the upbuilding and developing work that has placed California in the front ranks of the states in this grand Union of ours. Born in Ohio, September 13, 1838, Mr. Loomis is a son of Almyron and Roxanna (Moore) Loomis. The father, a native of Ohio, removed to Wisconsin, where he engaged in farming on what is known as Ball Prairie. Remaining there until 1849, he then went to Peoria, Ill., where he secured a position as traveling salesman for the Sanders' Separator, and continued with that company for some time. He finally removed to LaSalle, in the same state, and there engaged in the trunk manufacturing business, in which he was interested up to the time of his death. As a result of his marriage with Roxanna Moore he became the father of nine children, seven sons and two daughters.

Salmon H. Loomis was the sixth child and at an early age was apprenticed to learn the marble-cutter's trade in Peoria. He remained in that city until 1859, the year of his arrival in California. Locating in Georgetown, he followed mining there until 1861, when he enlisted in Company F, Fourth California Volunteer Infantry. At first his company was stationed at Auburn, but later was transferred to Camp Union in Sacramento, being in that city during the memorable flood. Subsequently he went to San Pedro, Camp Latham, Fort Yuma, La Paz, then back to Fort Yuma and San Pedro, where he was honorably discharged in 1864. Going to San Francisco, he reenlisted in Company E, Eighth California Volunteer Infantry, and was stationed on Alcatraz Island until 1865, when he left the service. Returning to Georgetown, he soon after moved to Truckee, locating there in the spring of 1868. While living in this place he conducted a drug store, but finally sold out and secured a position as brakeman on the Union Pacific railroad. In 1869, while making a coupling, he was quite seriously injured and was sent to the railway hospital at Sacramento. On regaining his health he again returned to Georgetown and followed mining, also being interested in the nursery business. From Georgetown he moved to Marysville, securing employment on a ranch near there, where he remained until 1870, when he joined his uncle in Tehama county and followed farming for several years, or until January, 1875, the year of his arrival in Kingsburg. Here for a time he was engaged in the hotel business, but finally sold out and purchased a barber shop, which he conducted until 1901, when he disposed of it, his son taking charge. During these years he carried on quite an extensive business and also followed papering and painting. In 1898 he was appointed postmaster, which office he is still filling, it being but a just reward for the many years he spent as a soldier in the regular army.

In 1870 the marriage ceremony of Mr. Loomis and Miss Mary L. Hoover was celebrated in Marysville, and as a result of this union four children have been born, namely: Acie B., the assistant postmaster here; Calfermie D., now Mrs. A. Stukey, of Arizona; Almyron C., who conducts a barber shop in Kingsburg; and Bessie H., now Mrs. R. D. Adames, of Fresno. Fraternally Mr. Loomis is a member of the Knights of Pythias, being associated with the lodge in Fowler, and is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. A Republican in politics, he is actively interested in the welfare of his party.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN GIFFIN. Six miles east of the town of Clovis is located one of the finest ranches in the San Joaquin valley. On approaching it one is at once attracted by the splendid buildings and the general air of prosperity that is in evidence. The owner is one of Fresno county's most highly respected citizens, a man who is self-made in every particular and one whose integrity cannot be questioned. A native of Ohio, B. F. Giffin was born in Butler county, December 18, 1850, a son of Ambrose and Amanda J. (Closser) Giffin. The father was a native of the same state. For years he followed farming in Butler county, but eventually removed to Iowa, where he took up his residence near Morning Sun, living there until he retired from active life, when he sold out and came to California and spent his last days, his death occurring in Fowler at the ripe old age of eighty-two years. His wife was born in Ohio and died in Illinois. One child, B. F., was born of her union with Ambrose Giffin. At the age of nine years he went to Illinois, where his education was obtained in the district schools. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Giffin started out to make his own way in the world, renting a farm near Salem, Pike county, Ill., where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Later he purchased and improved a place of one hundred and thirty acres, on which he lived until coming to California in 1881. Two years previous he had made a trip to the state and so favorably was he impressed with the climate and general surroundings that he determined to make his home here as soon as he could dispose of his interests in the east. On arriving in California in 1881 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of his present ranch, but since then he has added to it until he now owns eight hundred acres, all in one body and all under cultivation, most of the land being devoted to the growing of grain. In addition he also leases four hundred acres, making in all twelve hundred acres, thus being one of the largest grain growers in this part of Fresno county. In conducting this big business he uses the latest and most improved methods, and being the owner of a combined harvester, he not only harvests all his own grain, but hundreds of acres for his neighbors.

Mrs Emma Swall.

In Pittsfield, Pike county, Ill., was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Giffin and Miss Maria Starkey, who was born in that state, a daughter of Jonathan and Jane (Laughery) Starkey. Jonathan Starkey was a native of Virginia. His father, John Starkey, migrated from Virginia to Ohio at a very early day, and in 1836 the family removed to Pike county, Ill. Mrs. Giffin's father was a large farmer, being at one time the largest land-owner in Pike county. His death occurred in Griggsville, in March, 1890. His wife was born in Ohio, a daughter of Nicholas Laughery, who was a native of Ireland. He immigrated to the United States and died in Indiana. Mrs. Giffin is one of nine children. To Mr. and Mrs. Giffin have been born five sons: Jonathan Ambrose, who is engaged in farming near Clovis; Tracy Adolph, Floyd Mirillo, Lucian Chalmers, and Parnell Childreth.

In politics Mr. Giffin is a Democrat in national issues, but in local elections he votes for the man he deems best qualified for office, regardless of party lines. Ever since locating here he has been active in local affairs and is now serving as president of the board of school trustees. By straightforward dealings and honorable methods Mr. Giffin has established an enviable reputation, his word being considered as good as his bond. Both he and his estimable wife are highly respected wherever known.

WILLIAM SWALL. As showing what may be accomplished by a young man who marks out a career for himself and resolutely goes to work to make his dream of success in life a reality, the career of William Swall of the Visalia district, affords a useful lesson to the youth of a later day. Mr. Swall, who is one of the large land owners and substantial and prominent men of his neighborhood, was born in La Salle county, Ill., November 5, 1848, and is a son of Mathias and Elizabeth (Hayne) Swall, both natives of Germany, the former born in Berlin January 24, 1824. The elder Swall came to the United States in a sailing vessel in 1840, locating in La Salle county, Ill., where his marriage occurred April 16, 1847, and where he continued to farm until 1865. Having become interested in the far west, he came to California by way of Panama in the summer of '65, spending the first winter on a farm near San Jose, and in the fall of 1866 locating on land near Tracy, San Joaquin county. In 1871 he sold his land and removed to Monterey county, engaging in dairying and stock-raising until 1877, in which year he moved to Ventura county, and from there to Sherman, Los Angeles county, in the fall of 1882. Mr. Swall continued to farm and run a dairy until shortly before his death, in May, 1896, being survived by his wife, who still lives in Sherman. Mr. Swall was a staunch Democrat, and in religion was a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

The oldest of two daughters and nine sons, William Swall was educated in the public schools of La Salle county, Ill., and Santa Clara county, Cal., finally attending the San Jose Institute for one term. He was well trained in all phases of farm work, to which he took naturally and with due appreciation of its many advantages, and in 1873 came to Tulare county and homesteaded eighty acres of land, later adding to his possessions by buying land along the Tule river. In 1884 he moved to his present place of eight hundred acres, known as Deep Creek ranch, which he has improved into one of the finest and most productive properties in the county, having one hundred and fifty acres under peaches, prunes and pears, and the balance under hay and grazing. His original place is known as the Tule River ranch, and in all he owns over twenty-five hundred acres of land, his extensive operations necessitating the renting of an additional thousand acres, which he uses for stock and fruit. He has given splendid and intelligent effort to the development of his land, has embraced all of the means at the disposal of the latter-day agriculturist, and has reaped the reward due to so liberal minded and progressive a rancher. Mr. Swall has diverted his energies from the farm to the town, and is a stockholder of the Bank of Tulare, a director in the Tulare Telephone Company, and a stockholder and a director in the Rochdale stores of Visalia and Tulare. He has been one of the foremost promoters of irrigation in the county, and was one of the original instigators of the Tulare Irrigation District. During the settlement in 1903, with the bondholders he was one of the directors of the irrigation district and continues in that capacity to the present time. A Republican of many years standing, he has never been an office seeker, but has nevertheless served as a director of the Elk Bayou school district.

In San Francisco, in 1860, Mr. Swall was united in marriage with Emma Cole, a native of Knox county, Ill., and daughter of Asa Cole, born in Ohio. Mr. Cole is a California pioneer of 1856, having crossed the plains with his family, locating in Contra Costa county. Removing to Santa Clara county several years later, he located in the fall of 1866 near Tracy, San Joaquin county, in 1873 taking up his residence in Visalia, and in 1888 returning to Brentwood, Contra Costa county, where he died the same fall. Mr. and Mrs. Swall became the parents of the following children: George, a dairy rancher near Visalia; Newell, deceased; Walter, a dairy rancher near Visalia; Arthur, a rancher five miles south of Visalia; and William, Jr., living near his father, five miles south of Visalia. Mr. Swall is described by his host of friends as a prince of good fellows, as a man always ready to lend a helping hand to those less fortunate than himself, and as one to whom the responsibilities of citizenship appeal with force and decisiveness. Of resolute and commanding character, he is noted for his fairness in all matters of business, for his leniency, kindness and good judgment, and for his loyalty to family, friends and general interests.

CHARLES HENRY DEWEY. A descendant of a fine old New England family and the son of one of California's most respected pioneers, Mr. Dewey is especially worthy of mention. A native son of the state, he has made his own way in life since attaining young manhood, and that he is now considered one of Fresno county's most substantial citizens is proof that he has made the most of his opportunities. Born in San Joaquin county, April 27, 1858, Mr. Dewey is a son of Henry Dewey, a native of Westfield, Mass., where he was born, February 5, 1825. On leaving the parental roof he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a mason, which he followed in his native state until he disposed of his interests in the east and, owing to the ill health of his wife, he came to California, arriving here January 1, 1857. Shortly after this he located ten miles north of Stockton at Woodbridge, where he lived until 1860, when he purchased a ranch of one thousand two hundred acres near Plainsberg. Mr. Dewey was the first man to patent and make a sixteen-foot header, which he later enlarged to 18, 22, 25, 28 and 34 feet. Owing to failing health he sold his place in 1890 and removed to Fresno, where his death occurred February 13, 1902. His first marriage was with Miss Elizabeth Bromley, who was born in Chester, Mass., May 11, 1828. She died November 10, 1863. This union was blessed by the birth of three children, all of whom are deceased excepting Charles Henry. Later in life Mr. Dewey was again married, his second wife being Miss Jane Applegath. The marriage ceremony was performed in Woodbridge, and to them were born two children, one of whom is living, Amey M., of San Francisco. Mrs. Dewey died at Riverdale.

Charles H. Dewey was educated in the common schools of this state, and up to the time of his father's removal to Fresno in 1890 he remained at home. Soon after taking up his residence here he purchased the ranch that has since been his home and which consists of one hundred and sixty acres eight and one-half miles west of Laton, near Riverdale. Here he is now conducting a general farming and dairy business, a portion of his land also being in vineyard.

On March 18, 1894, in Riverdale, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Dewey and Miss Emma Eliza Ballard, who was born near Stockton, January 23, 1868, a daughter of Simeon Miller Ballard, a native of Kentucky, who came to California in 1852, crossing the plains from Missouri with ox-teams. On arriving here he engaged in farming in different counties until 1881, when he located in Fresno county, near Riverdale, where he was living at the time of his death, March 15, 1890. His wife bore the maiden name of Miss Amey E. Dye and was born in Ohio.

To Mr. and Mrs. Dewey have been born four children, the order of their birth being as follows: Helen; Simeon M., who died in infancy; Emeline, and Charles A., all at home. Politically Mr. Dewey supports the principles advocated by the Democratic party, and during his residence here he has been very active in county affairs, now serving as a member of the county central committee. In fraternal circles he is also quite prominent, being a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Odd Fellows. In attaining the position that he now occupies Mr. Dewey has labored very energetically and has allowed no obstacles to stand in his path. Such a word as fail is not in his vocabulary—he knows nothing but success, and that word has been written in a bold hand on the pages of his life's history.

J. A. BEALL. Twenty-three years ago Mr. Beall came to California. During these years he has steadily worked his way upward from the very bottom until he is now the owner of one of the finest properties in Fresno county. His home, which is known as the "Grant House," is one of the best residences in the valley, and since it came into the possession of the present owner the ranch has been greatly improved and placed under a high state of cultivation. All this has been accomplished as the direct result of his own efforts, as Mr. Beall has made his own way in the world since leaving home. A native of Indiana, he was born in Ripley county, May 16, 1861, a son of John and Elizabeth H. (Hancock) Beall. The father was also a native of Ripley county, where he followed agricultural pursuits all his life. His wife is still living and makes her home in the county where she was born. By her marriage she became the mother of eleven children.

J. A. Beall, on reaching manhood, engaged in farming in his native county until 1882, when he came to California. Locating near Fresno, he continued his farming operations for ten years, when he purchased land in the Laguna de Tache grant, where he resided until 1901. In that year he came into possession of the old Grant House and one hundred and forty acres of land. This is located two miles west of Laton, and is one of the most valuable ranches in the county. Mr. Beall makes a specialty of raising full-blooded Percheron and Norman horses, and has the finest stud in this section of the state. He is also extensively interested in cattle raising, having some two thousand head which he grazes in the Riverdale district, where he leases thirteen thousand acres of land.

In Fresno county the marriage of Mr. Beall and Miss Jennie E. Parks was solemnized, November 10, 1889, and this union has been blessed by the birth of one child, Zona May. Fraternaly Mr. Beall is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in politics votes for the candidates of the Democratic party. While he has never cared to take a leading part in public affairs, he is nevertheless public-spirited and is ever ready to support any movement deemed of value to the county. Mr. Beall has improved his opportunities, and although still a young man, has accumulated a handsome competence. Both he and his wife are highly respected and have a host of friends.

ORVILLE C. HARRINGTON. A native of Audubon county, Iowa, Mr. Harrington was born August 30, 1868, a son of Josiah H. and Mary N. (Montgomery) Harrington. The father was born in Indiana in 1848 and became an early settler of Iowa. By occupation a photographer, he continued in business in the latter state until 1880 when he removed to Nebraska where he lived until his death, which occurred in Denver, Colo. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Harrington married G. D. Miller and resides in this section of Fresno county.

Orville C. Harrington was the eldest child in a family of three. From early boyhood he worked in his father's photograph gallery and later followed that business in Colorado, making a specialty of viewing. Later he engaged in the stock business near Sidney, Neb., where he lived until 1902, the year of his arrival in California. Locating in Fresno county, he purchased his present place consisting of forty acres in the Laguna de Tache grant, six miles west of Laton, and here he is carrying on a successful farming and dairy business.

In Nebraska Mr. Harrington was united in marriage with Miss Agnes Middlesteadt, who was born in Illinois. This union has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Clarence, Florence, Lawrence and Alice, all of whom are living at home. Mr. Harrington is a Republican and fraternally united with the Modern Woodmen of America, while living in Nebraska. He has made a very flattering success of his life, never failing to improve his opportunities. Since locating in Fresno county, he has developed a fine property and is considered one of the most substantial young agriculturists in the Laton district.

JOHN R. TURNER. It is especially pleasing to write of a native son who has made a success of his life, and in John R. Turner we find one who has certainly made the best of the opportunities afforded young men in this state. Mr. Turner's birth occurred in Santa Clara county, December 8, 1871. His father, James Turner, was a native of Illinois and in 1846 crossed the plains to California, being among the first to make the long journey. The following three years after his arrival here were spent in the mines and he then returned to Illinois, via the Isthmus of Panama. Locating near the town of Galena, he engaged in farming, but after three years he again crossed the plains to this state. Taking up his residence in Santa Clara county, he engaged in general farming for several years, but finally removed to San Benito county. Later he returned to Santa Clara county and took up his residence near the town of Gilroy and followed farming until 1887, when he came to Fresno county, settling twelve miles west of Laton, where he remained until his death. His wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Milliken. She was born in Ohio and by her union with Mr. Turner became the mother of seven children, one son and six daughters. A more complete sketch of Mrs. Turner will be found on another page of this work.

John R. Turner was the youngest child. His common school education was supplemented by a course in a business college in San Jose. Later he engaged in stock-raising on the home place and in 1901 purchased a general merchandise store in Laton, which is one of the best paying business ventures in this section of the county.

Since coming to Laton Mr. Turner has married Miss Belle Blanchard, who is a native of Iowa. Mrs. Turner is one of the most popular ladies in Laton and is in no small measure responsible for the social life of the town. In fraternal relations Mr. Turner is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. Ever since attaining his majority he has voted the Democratic ticket, but during the campaign of 1904 he became convinced that the policy of the Republicans was the right one, and having the courage of his convictions, he did not hesitate to cast his vote for that party's candidates. Mr. Turner's future appears very bright. He has labored industriously and deserves success.

MRS. ELIZABETH TURNER. A native of Ohio, Mrs. Turner was born March 2, 1832. Her father, John Milliken, was born in the same state. In 1838 he moved to Illinois and located near Wabash, where he lived for two years. He then sold his farm there and in 1840 took up his residence in Iowa, following farming in Lee county until 1852. In that year he crossed the plains with ox-teams and on his arrival in California located in Santa Clara county, where he lived until his death in 1880. Mr. Milliken was quite a prominent man and took an active part in the affairs of the county. Milliken's Corners was named in his honor, and is now the center of a thriving farming and fruit district. His wife in maidenhood was Miss Nancy Harren, a native of Ohio. She died in Santa Clara county in 1884.

While living in Santa Clara county Mrs. Turner was united in marriage with James Hilton Turner, who was born near Galena, Ill., September 28, 1815. On reaching man's estate he entered the lead mines of that state and also worked in the mines in Wisconsin. Directly after the news of the discovery of gold in California, in 1849, he joined a party and crossed the plains. On arriving here he went into the mines in the northern part of the state, where he remained for two years. His labors were well rewarded and with the money that he had accumulated, in partnership with D. G. Montgomery, he bought a ranch where the town of Marysville now stands. This he sold in 1851 and returned to Galena, Ill. A year later, however, he again came to California, locating in Santa Clara county, where he engaged in farming. Subsequently he disposed of his interests there and removed to Monterey county, but in 1861 he again took up his residence in Santa Clara county, locating near the town of Gilroy, where he lived for twenty-four years. Being much impressed with the possibilities of Fresno county, in 1887 he settled at Riverdale, purchasing three hundred and twenty acres. To this he later added one hundred acres, owning at the time of his death four hundred and twenty acres of as fine land as could be found in the San Joaquin valley.

As a result of the union of Mr. Turner and Miss Elizabeth Milliken seven children were born, as follows: Emma, deceased; Eva, now Mrs. M. C. Roundtree; Nancy Ann, now Mrs. J. B. Lewis, of Riverdale; Mary J., now Mrs. Henry Lewis, of Fresno county; Ida, deceased; Clara B., now Mrs. James T. Crews; J. R., who lives in Laton. In addition there were three stepchildren: Eliza, now Mrs. Waland, of Paso Robles; Elizabeth, Mrs. James Frame, of Hanford, and George, of Oroville.

The death of Mr. Turner in 1897 was a sad blow, not only to his family, but to this section, as he was most highly respected. For years he had taken a leading part in all movements, being at all times ready to give of his time and means to further the interests of his county. All his life a Democrat, he took a prominent part in the affairs of his party and while living in Gilroy, Santa Clara county, served as a justice of the peace. Fraternally he was a member of the Masons, being associated with the order in Santa Clara county. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Turner has continued to live on the ranch, and has assumed the active management of the same. March 1, 1905, she removed to Laton. Her ability as a farmer is proved by the success that has attended her efforts. In addition to general farming she conducts a large dairy which each year nets a handsome profit. Not only in this county but in Santa Clara county, Mrs. Turner has a large circle of friends who wish her many years of continued happiness and prosperity.

EDWARD DUBOIS. With the organization of the Academy Granite Company a new industry was inaugurated which promises much for the future commercial growth of the eastern part of Fresno county. The inception of the new enterprise is due to the sagacity of Edward Dubois, who for almost seven years devoted his time to an inspection of California quarries offering advantages for the development of a dark granite for monumental purposes. Little success met his efforts until he came to Fresno county and inspected a tract of fifty-one acres near Letcher. Here he found a material not only hard and durable, but susceptible to a fine and mirror-like finish, admirably adapted for monumental work, but of course far too valuable for building purposes. In connection with J. S. Williams and M. Marshall, of San Jose, he formed the Academy Granite Company in 1901 and erected der-ricks and other equipments necessary to a modern quarry. As resident partner and manager, the supervision of the entire plant rests with him, and the work of cutting, polishing and finishing the granite comes under his personal charge.

As his name indicates, Mr. Dubois belongs to a French family. His father, Peter Dubois, was a native of France and there acquired a thorough knowledge of landscape gardening and the nursery business. In 1847 he came to California via Cape Horn and settled at Old Mission, in Santa Clara county. Upon the discovery of gold he went to the mines, but after his partner was killed by desperadoes he left the region and went to New Orleans, returning, however, to California a year or more later and settling in San Jose. Thereafter he engaged in the nursery business and landscape gardening, and continued to make the city his home until his death at seventy-eight years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Josephine Guerre, was born in France and died at San Jose at the age of sixty-eight years. Of their four children the second in order of birth was Edward, born at San Jose, Cal., November 17, 1864, and educated in the public schools of his native city. At the age of fifteen years he began an apprenticeship to the trade of granite-cutter, at which he served almost three years, and then as a journeyman traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the gulf to the lakes, visiting every state where granite quarries are to be found, and making a specialty of quarrying and finishing. During the period of his travels, from 1883 to 1900, he not only earned large wages, but had the further advantage of gaining a familiar knowledge of the United States and of its quarries in every portion. Six times he has crossed the continent to the east, and on one of his trips to New York city he there formed the acquaintance of Miss Lillian Teed, who is now his wife.

Born in Detroit, Mich., Mrs. Dubois is a daughter of Edgar Teed, now of New York City, and her marriage was solemnized in Fresno, Cal. One child, William, blesses their union. During the period of his journeyman's experiences Mr. Dubois was employed on the Hall of Record in New York City, the Tombs in New York City, Prospect Park monument in Brooklyn, Grant's monument in Chicago, Odd Fellows' building in San Francisco, Crocker building, Hibernian Bank, and postoffice, also in San Francisco, as well as other prominent structures in the western metropolis. Since acquiring an interest in the company in Fresno county he has devoted himself assiduously to securing success for the new industry, and already a gratifying degree of fame has come to the products of the quarry. Much of the income so far received from the sale of the product has been invested in the plant, which thus acquires a constantly increasing value, and one of his recent acquisitions was a gas engine of ten-horse power for the work of polishing. In view of his wide experience, it may be said that no one is better fitted than he to develop the quarry acquired by his company, and undoubtedly the product of the plant will come into constantly increasing demand as its value becomes more widely known and appreciated. In politics he votes with the Republican party, but the close attention demanded by his business affairs prevents him from taking part in political matters. By virtue of his western birth he is identified with the Native Sons of the Golden West, his membership being with California Parlor No. 1, at San Francisco.

HERBERT KIMBALL HULS. Perseverance and industry have raised Herbert Kimball Huls from a comparatively humble and obscure position in life to one of the foremost farmers and land owners along the Merced river. Since 1889 this popular dairyman, grain grower and general farmer has owned his present ranch of six hundred acres, one hundred and twenty acres of which is rich bottom land. On his place is a skimming station known as Huls station, and the many improvements which have followed in the wake of his ownership indicate the progressive spirit and thrift which have brought him success. Mr. Huls cuts four or five crops of alfalfa a year, and he has a dairy of forty cows, the rest of the property being devoted to grain and grazing.

Born in Kane county, Ill., January 30, 1855, H. K. Huls was reared in Louisa county, Iowa, to which state he was taken by his parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Moore) Huls, when three years old. Henry Huls and his wife were born in New York and Vermont, respectively, and after their marriage started housekeeping in Illinois, which they reached overland with teams and wagons. They lived for some years in Iowa, where Mrs. Huls died in 1868. Subsequently Henry Huls removed to Benton county, Ind., where he died in 1904. Herbert K. was given the average advantages known to the boys of the middle west. His education was acquired mostly in the public schools of Columbus, Iowa, where he lived for a few years, and where also he learned the miller's trade, beginning to work at that vocation when thirteen years of age. Later he settled in Minnesota and followed his trade, and in 1877 came to California, residing in San Francisco for a year. He then selected Merced Roller Mills, located near Snelling, Merced county as a promising field of activity, and from 1878 until 1889 was manager of the

Since then he has been living on and conducting his ranch, which today rewards his industry by a varied and luxurious output.

Through his marriage with Jennie Montgomery Mr. Huls became identified with one of the prominent pioneer families of Merced county, the late Hon. John M. Montgomery, the father of Mrs. Huls, having been one of the foremost early settlers and upbuilders of this section. A sketch of his life appears on another page of this work. Mr. Huls is a staunch upholder of Republican principles, and although no aspirant for political honors, has done much to stimulate good government in the county, and to secure the best possible educational advantages for the youth of his neighborhood. Fraternally he is connected with La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M., with Merced Chapter, R. A. M., and the Knights of Pythias. He is a wide-awake, substantial and popular rancher, enjoying to the full the confidence and esteem of his fellow-men.

EUGENE SHEPHERD. All his life Mr. Shepherd has been engaged in the cattle and meat business, being one of the best posted cattlemen in the state. While he is a young man, he has already attained a high position in the business world, being considered one of the most influential citizens of Laton. A native of California, he was born in San Juan, June 9, 1874. His father, William N. Shepherd, was born in the state of Kentucky and in 1849 crossed the plains to this state, being one of the earliest pioneers. Unlike most of the men who came here in those days, Mr. Shepherd did not enter the mines, but engaged in the stock business near the present town of Hollister. Later he was also the owner of a general merchandise store, and in addition conducted a hotel in what is now Hollister. Subsequently he disposed of his interests there and settled in San Benito county, where he followed farming and stock-raising until 1869. In that year he took up his residence in San Juan and conducted an eating house in that place. Later he moved to Gilroy, purchasing a livery and feed stable, which he conducted for several years. From there he finally removed to San Luis Obispo county and later to San Juan, where he was living at the time of his death at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, who was a native of Clark county, Ill., died in Gilroy. By her marriage she became the mother of eleven children, three sons and eight daughters.

The education of Eugene Shepherd was limited, as at the age of fourteen he was left an orphan and has since been compelled to make his own way in the world. For a time he engaged in the stock business in the San Benito mountains, but in 1898 removed to Kings county, near the town of Hanford. There he followed the same business that he was formerly interested in, continuing to make it his home until 1901, when he became a resident of Fresno county, locating on the place that has since been his home, and which consists of one hundred acres of as fine land as can be found in this section of the county. Here he is now conducting a profitable dairy and stock business, it being his intention to purchase more land as his means will allow and gradually increase his business interests in that direction. The first day of January, this year, he opened a first-class modern meat market in the town of Laton, and from the first has met with excellent success. In connection with this he buys and sells a large number of cattle, owning at the present time about four hundred head.

In the city of Fresno was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Shepherd and Miss Jennie Cameron, and to them have been born two children: Hazel Pearl and Alfred Eugene. Mr. Shepherd is a staunch Republican, and while he has no desire to seek office for himself, he is active in promoting the candidacy of his friends. Ever since he was fourteen years of age he has been obliged to fight the battle of life alone and unaided. That in these few years he has attained such an influential position speaks well for his ability. Perseverance and integrity are sure to bring success, and the many friends of Mr. Shepherd join in wishing him years of prosperity and happiness.

CARL A. JOHNSON. The second representative from Sweden to seek a home in Kingsburg Colony, Fresno county, Carl A. Johnson has been largely instrumental in the upbuilding and development of this section. He was born in Glosjön, Orebro, Sweden, June 18, 1859, a son of John Johnson, a native of the same place. The elder man owned iron mines and shares in an iron furnace in that country, manufactured charcoal, and also farmed, meeting with success in all his enterprises, and being justly named among the representative citizens of his community. His death occurred in that locality in 1864, his wife, formerly Christina Erickson, of the same place, surviving him and now making her home with her son in Kingsburg. They were the parents of two sons, of whom Carl A. was the younger.

Carl A. Johnson received his education in the common schools of his native country, where he made his home until attaining the age of eighteen years, when he immigrated to America. In 1878 he located at Ishpeming, Mich., and secured employment in the iron mines, later being placed in charge of a diamond drill, which work he followed for about five years. In 1882 he engaged in the general merchandise business in that place, where he remained until July, 1886, when he came to California and located at Kingsburg and engaged in the hotel and butcher business. A year later he bought forty acres one mile east of Kingsburg and engaged in horticulture, raising orchard fruits and raisins. He cultivated this ranch until February, 1903, when he sold out. In the meantime he became active in public affairs and served as postmaster of Kingsburg under Harrison's administration and one year under Cleveland. In the spring of 1898 he went to the Klondike and engaged in mining for two years in Dawson City, when he returned to California. Following this he worked for a time in a wholesale house in San Francisco for one year, then located again in Kingsburg and continued farming until 1903. In the fall of the same year he opened his present general merchandise business, which he has since enlarged and has built up a fine custom, his reputation for integrity and straightforward dealing winning him many friends. He has taken a strong interest in all important movements of the place, owning an interest in a packing house here and stock in the Kingsburg State Bank. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally has been a member of the Knights of Pythias.

JAMES C. HARRAH. Although but a short time a resident of California, Mr. Harrah has demonstrated his ability as a farmer. He is located within the vicinity of Fowler, Fresno county, his attention being largely given to the cultivation of fruit. Born in Dexter, Iowa, October 9, 1881, he is a son of William G. Harrah. The latter was a native of Pennsylvania who removed to Iowa in the early '60s, locating near Andrew, Jackson county. At the age of twenty-one years he began farming in the vicinity of Dexter, where he remained until 1902. In that year he came to California and settled two and a quarter miles west of San Jose, on Moorpark avenue, where he is now living. His wife, formerly Katherine B. Graham, a native of Monmouth, Ill., is also living. They became the parents of ten children, eight sons and two daughters, of whom eight are living.

The eldest in the family of his parents, James C. Harrah was reared in his native locality and educated in the common schools. After his completion of the common school course he entered Monmouth College in the fall of 1899 and took the classical course to the junior year. He came to California in the spring of 1903 and located with his father for three months, after which, with his brother, Roy D., he purchased their present place, eighteen acres of which is in vines, eighteen acres in trees and the balance in alfalfa. They have a little cottage on their ranch, modern in every detail, located two and a half miles south of Fowler. They, with others, rent a section of land nine miles west of Fowler which is devoted to grain and alfalfa, and they also rent another small place. In Monmouth, Ill., May 25, 1904, James C. married Effie M. Clark. Her father, J. O. Clark, was a native of Monmouth, where he engaged as a contractor and builder until his death. Her mother, Alice Glenn in maidenhood, is a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. Harrah belongs to the United Presbyterian Church and politically is a Republican.

JAMES WILLIAM HOLIDAY. About sixteen miles east of Sanger, near the base of the mountains that form the eastern border of Fresno county, lies the ranch now and for many years the home of Mr. Holiday, a California pioneer of the '50s and one of the early settlers of the region which still remains his place of residence. Descended from an old Virginian family, he is a native of Kentucky and was born in Bourbon county, December 8, 1834, being the only surviving child of the union of George Holiday and Sarah Ann Hankins, natives respectively of Virginia and Kentucky. His father, who settled in Kentucky at an early age, married in that state and subsequently removed to Missouri, settling in Clay county, near Kansas City, where he remained until his death in 1836. Twenty years after his demise Mrs. Holiday came to California and settled in Fresno, where she and her second husband, John Burgan (whom she married in Missouri), remained until death.

The common schools of Missouri furnished James William Holiday with a fair education, and the knowledge thus acquired has been supplemented by habits of reading and close observation. In 1856 he accompanied his mother to California, and being then of age, he started out to make his own way in the world, his first venture being the raising of stock on the Lower Kings river near Kingston. The year 1868 found him a land-owner at Squaw valley, where he acquired the title to one-half section of land and by subsequent purchases became the owner of fifteen hundred acres, utilized largely for the pasturage of cattle. After having managed the land for years, in 1902 he disposed of it at a fair profit, and since then has devoted himself wholly to the management of his stock and grain farm of six hundred and forty acres situated sixteen miles east of Sanger, in Clark's valley. At this writing he has about forty head of cattle and the balance of the farm not needed for pasture is devoted to crops.

The marriage of Mr. Holiday was solemnized in Fresno county in 1867 and united him with Miss Mary Jane Demasters, who was born in 1850 when her parents were crossing the plains in a "prairie schooner" to California. Mr. and Mrs. Holiday became parents of eight children: Permelia, wife of J. D. Cromley; Laura, wife of S. D. McIntire; George; Nellie, wife of A. E. Pearson; Charles, deceased; Dora, wife of L. L. Scott; Nathaniel and J. Fred. A lady of kindly disposition and gentle manner, Mrs. Holiday's death was a deep bereavement to her husband. The loneliness of his life is increased by his isolation, but he loves the mountains and like all men of sincere yet simple manner to whom solitude and Nature possess a deep charm, he could not content himself if transplanted to the artificial life of a city. In appearance he reminds one of the familiar pictures of Abraham Lincoln, a resemblance that seems deepened by his manner and conversation. To one of his tastes politics possesses no fascination and he has taken no part whatever in such matters aside from voting a Democratic ticket at elections.

WILLIAM McHALEY. Throughout the long period of his residence in Fresno county Mr. McHaley has been intimately associated with the development of its stock and grain interests and has accomplished much toward the development of the eastern part of the county. Upon settling near the upper Kings river in 1879 he purchased a tract of land twelve miles east of Sanger, at the foot of the mountains, and from time to time has added to his original purchase until at this writing, with his partner, R. C. Thom, he is the owner of three thousand acres of grain and pasture land, where now graze six hundred head of cattle. During the winter months he resides in Sanger in order that his children may enjoy desired educational advantages, but through all of the spring and summer months he is busily engaged in the care of his stock and the oversight of his land.

Mr. McHaley is of southern birth and ancestry and was born at Fort Smith, Ark., May 30, 1846. At the age of one year he was orphaned by the death of his father, John McHaley, a Kentuckian, who had settled in Arkansas at an early age. Not long afterward his mother (who was Elizabeth Huckbey, a native of Kentucky) removed with himself and his older sister to Texas, settling at Austin, where she became the wife of Isaac Pierson, a widower with one daughter and two sons. In 1861 the family came to California and settled on the upper Kings river, but later removed to a ranch on Hughes creek, where the mother, at the age of seventy-five years, is now making her home.

It was not possible, owing to the poverty of the family, for Mr. McHaley to secure even a common school education, as his labor was needed to aid in the support of his widowed mother. After her second marriage he remained at home and from Texas accompanied her to California, where he secured employment as a ranch hand. By carefully saving his wages he was enabled after a time to embark in business for himself and began by buying a few head of cattle, to which he added as his means permitted. Thus the nucleus of his present extensive business was established. As previously stated, in 1879 he acquired property in the mountains east of Sanger and since then has built up a large industry in raising cattle and grain.

After coming to the Kings river region Mr. McHaley was united in marriage with Amanda Chambers, who was born in Tulare county, Cal., and numbers a host of friends among the people of eastern Fresno county. Their family consists of the following-named children: Richard, who is employed on the Kings river ranch; Henry, who is similarly interested; Clara, who married C. J. Powell and lives in the old home neighborhood; John M., a ranchman of Fresno county; Joseph W., likewise interested in ranch pursuits; James; George, of Sanger; Frank, Ovilla, Winifred and Annie, who reside with their parents. In the fall of 1904 the family moved into the village of Sanger, where they are surrounded by all the accessories of an enterprising community, including churches and good schools. The winter seasons are spent in town, but in the spring they return to the ranch and aid Mr. McHaley in the important duties connected with his stock and farm interests. In politics he votes the Republican ticket. At no time has he desired office, nor has he taken an active part in local politics, for his tastes incline him toward domestic life and the independence of existence on his mountain ranch rather than toward public affairs with their attendant problems and cares.

AMOS HARRIS has been successful as a farmer in the San Joaquin valley, and has as well won the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens by his manly attributes. He was born in Cayuga county, N. Y., May 29, 1831, a son of Howard Harris. The latter was a native of Connecticut who went to New York about 1800, there grew to manhood, participating in the war of 1812, and engaging in farming as a means of livelihood until his death, which occurred in the town of Locke, Cayuga county. His wife, formerly Melinda Hurlbut, was also born in Connecticut and died in New York state. They were the parents of ten children, six sons and four daughters, of whom Amos was the sixth in order of birth.

In the common schools of his native state Amos Harris received his education, after which, in 1851, he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He followed mining in Nevada and Placer counties, where he remained for six years. He met with a moderate degree of success and carried back to his eastern home a modest fortune. In December of the same year (1857) he located in Jackson, Mich., and engaged in the mercantile business for three years. In 1860 he located in Iowa for a short time and then returned to New York state for two years. Locating once more in Michigan, he engaged in farming at Coldwater, remaining in that location until 1864, when he became a pioneer of Montana, engaging in mining in Virginia City. After a few months he went to Lawrence, Kans., whence he came to California in 1874. He engaged in farming in Stanislaus county on rented property until the fall of 1881, when he came to his present location, purchasing at that time three hundred and twenty acres, all of which except eighty acres he has since sold off in small tracts. Of the eighty acres of land which form his home farm, located one mile southeast of Fowler, Fresno county, twenty acres is devoted to the cultivation of the raisin grapes, ten acres to orchard and ten acres to alfalfa, while the balance is unimproved. He gives the greater part of his attention to the cultivation of fruit, although he is also interested in stock-raising. In addition to this property he owns one hundred and sixty acres in Kern county and three hundred and twenty acres in Kings county.

In Jackson, Mich., in 1859, Mr. Harris was united in marriage with Nettie Pelham, a native of that state, and they became the parents of the following children: Belle, deceased, and Frank B., her twin brother, who is a large contractor in building irrigation ditches for the United States government; Howard A., the editor and proprietor of the Fowler Ensign; and Robert A., deceased. In his political affiliations Mr. Harris is a staunch Republican, and in the interests of his party as well as the general public he has served as school director for many years, acting as clerk of the board for about twenty years.

RICHARD C. JAY. Before William the Conqueror had brought his victorious armies to England the Jay family lived and flourished in the land of Normandy. Early in the history of America some of that name crossed the ocean from England and identified themselves with the patriots in the colonies. The most distinguished representative of that era was John Jay, the first chief justice of the United States. Another of the family, Charles Jay, served in the continental army during the Revolutionary war, having come to this country a short time before the outbreak of the struggle. This Revolutionary soldier had a brother, Stephen, who remained in England and engaged in farming there throughout all of his life. Richard Jay, a son of Stephen, was born at St. Blazey, England, and in 1859 came to the United States, settling on a farm near Honesdale, Wayne county, Pa., and afterward removing to Jermyn, Lackawanna county, where he died. Before leaving England he married Mary Curtis, whose father, William Curtis, was a farmer in England. Her death occurred in Jermyn, Pa. In her family there were four children who attained mature years, namely: Joseph, who died at Jermyn; Thomas, who is engaged in mining and lives at Butte, Mont.; Rev. Stephen Jay, D. D., pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fortyfort, Luzerne county, Pa.; and Richard Curtis, the only representative of the family in California.

The last named child, Richard Curtis, was born at St. Blazey, England, March 1, 1853, and at six years of age accompanied the family to Pennsylvania, where his education was obtained in the Honesdale common schools. While attending school in the winter, after the age of fifteen he clerked in a mercantile store during the summer months. Going to Jermyn, Pa., in 1869, Mr. Jay secured employment as clerk in the general store of John Jermyn, with whom he remained much of the time for twelve years. Meanwhile he had gained a local reputation as a musician. From boyhood he has been fond of music and readily acquired a thorough knowledge of various instruments. In addition to clerking he taught music and founded the Jermyn band, of which he was the leader. Under his skillful training the band won the medal for the district.

On coming to California in 1877 he was engaged as a musician in San Jose. Next he went to Virginia City, Nev., and later taught the band of Eureka, same state, for two years. In 1881 he returned to Jermyn, Pa., and the following year became teacher of the band at Nanticoke, that state, and was proprietor of a music store there. When he again came to California, in 1890, he settled in Madera and embarked in the furniture business. In September, 1894, he added an undertaking business in connection with his other work, and in 1901 converted the establishment into exclusively undertaking and picture framing. During the existence of the Madera band he was its leader.

The marriage of Mr. Jay, in Moosic, Pa., united him with Anna E. Swisher, who was born in Susquehanna county, that state. They own and occupy a residence in the Hughes addition to Madera. Their eldest daughter, Mrs. Ella J. Tuggles, resides in Fresno, but the others, Robert Selden, Mattie S., Stephen and Mary E., are still at home. Mrs. Jay is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the family attend services there. Mr. Jay is an active member of the Madera Board of Trade, a believer in Republican principles, and a progressive citizen, contributing generously to worthy movements. In 1898 the Republicans nominated him county coroner and public administrator and he was elected by a majority of four hundred, taking the oath of office in January, 1899, for a term of four years. So satisfactory was his service that in 1902 he was re-elected by a majority of one thousand and thirty, his second term to expire in January, 1907. The duties of his office and the conduct of his business make him a very busy man, but he finds leisure to participate in the activities of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he is past master workman; and also in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he was noble grand two terms. To prepare himself for satisfactory and efficient work in embalming, he took a course of study in the Champion College at Springfield, Ohio, and later enjoyed the advantage of a practical and thorough course in the New York Training School of Embalming, by means of which he has become fully qualified for the important task of embalming.

SOLOMON M. KING was born in Bedford county, Tennessee, October 26, 1830, a son of Jonathan and Jemima (Maxwell) King. The father was a native of the same state, but in 1831 removed to Illinois, locating in Washington county, where he engaged in farming, but later he sold this place and settled in Perry county, where he lived until his death. His wife, who died in Illinois, became the mother of ten children, only three of whom are now living: Solomon M. and two daughters.

Solomon King was reared on his father's farm in Illinois, his education being obtained in the district schools. He remained in that state, following farming, until 1876, when he came to California, first locating in Stanislaus county, where he remained for one year. He then came to Fresno county, where he has since resided. His first purchase of land was six and one-half miles east of Selma, where he lived until 1898, when he sold and moved to his present fine place, three miles northeast of Kingsburg. Here he owns thirty acres, which is devoted to fruit and alfalfa.

While still living in Illinois Mr. King was united in marriage with Miss Phoebe Parlier and to them have been born eight children, namely: Mrs. Amey Marshall, deceased; Nannie, also deceased; Jonathan A., who lives in Parlier; Cornelius, of Fresno; James, deceased; Mrs. Abigail Sanderson, residing near Parlier; William R., at home; and one who died in infancy. In politics Mr. King is a Democrat, but has never cared to take a very active part in political matters. He is a stockholder in the Growers' Winery and was one of the first to work on the Centerville & Kingsburg ditch. He has made a success here and has a reputation for honesty of which he may justly feel proud.

JUDSON DOUGLAS JACOBIE, M. D. Early in the colonization of America the Jacobie family emigrated from Holland and settled in New York. Nicholas Jacobie, who was a native of that state and the son of a Revolutionary soldier, followed farm pursuits in the same locality throughout all of his active life, and died in Lewis county. Next in line of descent was William Henry Jacobie, likewise a native of New York and by occupation a tiller of the soil. After years of activity in agricultural circles he removed from Lewis county to the west in the fall of 1886 and established his home in Los Angeles. Until his death he remained retired from active cares, spending his time between his son's place in Fresno county and the city of Los Angeles. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lydia S. Douglas, was born in Lewis county, N. Y., and died in Los Angeles, where also occurred his demise.

Among the three children (two sons and a daughter) of William Henry Jacobie, the youngest, Judson D., was born in Lewis county, N. Y., May 4, 1856, and at an early age planned his studies with a view to entering the medical profession. Upon the completion of his classical studies he matriculated in the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he took the regular course of lectures and was graduated in 1885. June of the following year found him in California, where for a time he made his home in Los Angeles, but in October, 1887, came to Fresno county and took up the general practice of medicine at Centerville. To a man alive to opportunities the purchase of land presented a field for profitable investment, and gradually he became the owner of a considerable acreage, which led him to embark in the stock business. Later, however, the stock was sold and he turned his attention to general farming, with a specialty of alfalfa. Eventually he became interested in horticulture, and now has fifty acres in figs, one hundred acres in alfalfa and twenty-four acres in oranges, the balance of the ranch of four hundred and forty acres being in pasture. In addition to this property, which is located at the foot of Mt. Campbell to the west, he is the owner of two hundred and ninety-five acres on the Kings river bottom, adapted not only for the grazing of cattle, but also to a considerable extent suited for general farming, and here may be seen excellent grades of stock, including a number of full-blood Polled Angus cattle. Besides his other ranches he is the owner of Wild Flower place of one hundred and fifty-four acres, situated near Conejo in the Duke school district.

After coming to Fresno county Dr. Jacobie met and married Miss Nancy E. Demasters, who is a native of Tulare county and has spent her life wholly in the west. Born of their union are two sons, Judson G. and Douglas L. (twins), and a daughter, Ninon Adell. While still a resident of New York Dr. Jacobie was initiated into Masonry and still holds membership with the blue lodge in his old home town. Conversant with public questions and familiar with the principles of each of the great political organizations, he gives his preferences to the Republican party and supports its candidates and measures by his ballot.

THEODORE CROCKETT DOUGLASS.

Four miles northeast of Sanger in the Centerville district lies the homestead purchased by Mr. Douglass in 1888 and since that year the scene of his activities. At the time of purchase the thirty acres had been under cultivation to wheat, but he soon made important improvements and now has seven acres in oranges, ten acres in vineyard and the balance in alfalfa. While giving careful attention to the improvement of his property he has found leisure for participation in various movements of a progressive nature, notable among which may be mentioned the Kings River Citrus Association (coöperative), a branch of the Southern California Citrus Exchange. In the organization of this important movement he bore a prominent part, and at this writing officiates as its president and manager.

On a farm in the mountains of East Tennessee Theodore Crockett Douglass was born, November 10, 1838, being a son of Jonathan and Jane Crockett (Young) Douglass, natives of Tennessee. Of a family of nine children he was the youngest and is now the sole survivor. When he was two years of age his father died while visiting in Missouri; afterward his mother remained in Tennessee until her death in 1861. The family being large, the father dead, and their means limited, he was early obliged to earn his own way in the world, and by chance drifted into photography, which in those days was far less of an art than at the present time. Daguerreotypes were much in vogue and he acquired a thorough knowledge of the process, but made a specialty of the style familiarly known as tintypes, the right for which he purchased at considerable expense. With his appliances in a light wagon he traveled from town to town in the eastern part of Tennessee, and always found work in his line.

During the year 1862 Mr. Douglass gave up photographic work and settled in Denton county, Tex., where he became interested in raising sheep and horses, and for years had varying experiences of successes and reverses as the prices of stock advanced or receded. When he left Texas in 1887 he came to California and for a year made Fresno his headquarters, meanwhile with his well-boring machine doing considerable business throughout this part of the state, boring altogether about one hundred wells during the year. In 1888 he came to the eastern part of Fresno county, where he and his wife (formerly Emma C. Darden, and a native of Alabama) have established a comfortable home. They are the parents of nine children, namely: Mrs. Anna Cameron, of Sanger; John, whose home is in Centerville district; William, a rancher of Fresno county; Mrs. Mary Jackson, of Sanger; Charles, who resides with his parents; Viola, who is engaged in teaching school; Emma, Lottie and Kate, at home.

In politics Mr. Douglass votes with the Democratic party and fraternally he is allied with the Masonic order. His membership in the Sterling Price Camp, Confederate Veterans' Union, at Fresno, comes to him by virtue of his war service shortly after he removed to Texas. It was during 1862 that he joined the Confederate cause as a soldier and became a private in Company A of Alexander's Regiment, which was assigned to the Indian Territory to work in coöperation with the Indians there. Until the end of the war he remained in the army and when the cause was lost and the soldiers laid down their arms he returned to his stock farm in Texas and resumed the pursuits of civic life.

WILLIAM TEMPLE COLE. The family represented by this California pioneer of 1849 came to America from France, the first of the name on this side of the Atlantic being one William Temple Cole, who left his native land for the larger opportunities afforded by the new world. After some years spent among the planters of Virginia he joined Daniel Boone in crossing the mountains to the wilderness of Kentucky, where he hewed out a homestead from the timber and endured the hardships incident to frontier life among hostile Indians. At the outbreak of the war of 1812 he and his brother, Capt. Stephen Cole, with five other men, suffered an attack from savages to the number of seventeen. Only two of the seven survived to tell the tale of their sufferings, and they, after seven days of fearful hardship, reached Lauter Island, where they found a settlement of white people. One of the two survivors was Captain Cole, a man of splendid physique and remarkable strength. Alone and unaided he had killed five of the Indians, throwing two of them into the fire and holding them there until they were burned to death. The others he kept at bay with his gun. It was his policy to refrain from shooting, but the Indians, knowing that he carried a loaded gun, were careful to keep out of his reach. During 1818 this indomitable Indian fighter fell a victim to their cruelties, being killed by them near Taos, N. M., and thus was ended a career as remarkable though less famous than that of his friend and associate, Daniel Boone.

When the wilderness of Kentucky began to come under the influences of civilization and settlers poured in from the east, the spirit of Daniel Boone pined for the unbroken forests of Nature primeval, and thus he was led to seek a new home beyond the confines of the white man's power. At the opening of the nineteenth century he took his family to Missouri, and in this journey he was accompanied by Samuel Cole, a Virginian by birth and a son of the Frenchman who founded the family in America. For three years this lad acted as errand boy to the famous frontiersman, and after Boone's death he accompanied the widow and her family to a new location, where a fort was built and the town of Boonville founded. Six years later he moved twelve miles south of Boonville and there remained until his death at ninety years of age. During the Indian wars in Missouri he proved himself as brave a fighter as his uncle, and the company of which he was captain did much to bring the savages under subjection.

After coming to Missouri Samuel Cole married Sally Briscoe, who was born in Kentucky and died in Missouri in 1856. Andrew Briscoe, her father, a Kentuckian by birth, became a farmer in Cooper county, Mo., and during the Creek war served as a colonel under General Harrison. In the family of Samuel Cole there were nine sons and five daughters, all of whom survive but two sons and two daughters, William Temple Cole being the eldest of the family and its only representative in California. Born in Cooper county, Mo., August 2, 1825, his lot in childhood was that of a pioneer's son in a region where work was plentiful and opportunities few. Once, when not well enough to work at breaking hemp, he was sent to school for three weeks, but with that exception he had no opportunity to acquire an education. Such books as he could get (and they were indeed few) he eagerly studied at night when the heavy labor of the day had ended. In this way he has gained a knowledge equal to that of many a high-school graduate. After he started out for himself the world became his school and Experience was his schoolmaster, and who shall say that the lessons there learned were less valuable than those gleaned from the pages of the blue-backed speller, the encyclopedia of knowledge in those days? It is said of him that he possessed remarkable strength and endurance, and never found his superior in a wrestling match, while once in St. Louis he attracted considerable attention by lifting five hundred pounds. He has been a man of magnificent physique, and was a remarkable walker and runner in his day. He has beaten a stage many times, and has walked from Auburn to Sacramento, about fifty miles, in one day and carried $5,000 in gold dust. He was a volunteer in the Mexican war from Boonville and boarded the steamer Louis F. Lin for St. Louis, where he was mustered in and joined a regiment under Colonel Hughes. His company, with Captain Stephens, was stationed in the courthouse and were well treated by the patriotic citizens. No member of his company was arrested for misdemeanor while in St. Louis. They were finally ordered back to Boonville, where they were paid off.

At the age of twenty-one years William Temple Cole started out for himself, and for two years traded with the Indians in Kansas. Upon learning of the discovery of gold in California he started across the plains with mule-teams. At Goose creek his party left their wagons and mules and proceeded with pack-horses to San Francisco, where he landed August 10, 1849. This now famous metropolis of the coast then presented a most unattractive appearance, being a mere brush thicket with nothing to attract settlers except its beautiful harbor of the Golden Gate. Not a house had yet been finished. Incoming vessels and pack-horses from the plains brought their constant throng of gold-seekers to swell the population of a settlement without laws and dependent upon a hastily organized vigilance committee to enforce order among a reckless and lawless band. After having secured the company's mail at San Francisco, Mr. Cole returned eastward and met them on Bear river, near the present site of Nevada City. With the members of the party he then proceeded to the vicinity of Johnson's ranch, where he spent one month in assisting the company to close out its affairs, and then made his way to the Yuba river, where he mined until a severe illness and the advice of his physician caused him to seek another location. Two miles from Sacramento he took up a tract of land, where he embarked in the stock business, and in addition furnished steamers with wood. For a time he was exceedingly prosperous, but all was lost in the floods of 1849 and 1850. After continuing in the stock business there for some years, in 1860 he removed to Fresno county and settled on the Kings river bottom. There, too, a flood soon came to bring him reverse, and in a second flood he lost about $15,000 and a valuable farm.

Desiring to settle in a neighborhood where his children could enjoy educational advantages, Mr. Cole removed one mile above the present site of the academy, which institution he assisted in starting and building, and of which for years he officiated as a director. By gradual purchase he acquired six hundred and forty acres in one body, and this he has improved with neat buildings and good fences. For years he made a specialty of the stock business, but since 1897 he practically has been retired from large farming interests, preferring to enjoy in his declining years the comforts accumulated by long years of toil. Among associates he is regarded as a man of large heart and generous impulses. No one in need was ever turned away from his door empty-handed and hungry. During the early days he proved a friend to emigrants. On the top of the Sierras he had a little store, and when the emigrants landed there, destitute of provisions they gladly availed themselves of the opportunity to replenish their depleted stock of supplies. Flour brought him seventy-five cents a pound, and many willingly would have paid him twice that amount had he cared to demand it; to those who were out of money as well as supplies he gave freely of his supplies, so that emigrants came to regard him as a benefactor and personal friend.

In Solano county, Cal., Mr. Cole was united in marriage, January 12, 1854, with Miss Jane Sweany, a native of Dallas county, Mo., and a daughter of James Sweany, a California pioneer of 1850, for some years living in Nevada City, later carrying on a farm in Solano county, and eventually dying at Visalia. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Cole there are the following named daughters, all of whom received excellent educational advantages and became active church members: Sally, wife of D. C. Sample, of Academy; Alice, Mrs. William Hoskins, who died in Fresno; Mary, Mrs. John Stroud, of Oakland; Angeline, Mrs. Burkhead, of Fresno; Jane, who married Frank Estell, of Academy; Ida, wife of John Bell, of Fresno county; Kate, wife of W. H. Shafer, of Selma; William Grace, who married Robert Hoag, of Fresno; Emily, wife of William Haskell, of Dry creek; and Harriet, who married Alfred Blasingame, of Academy. In their church membership both Mr. and Mrs. Cole are active workers and at one time he officiated as a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to the support of which he has always been a liberal contributor, as he is to other organizations for the upbuilding of the community. At no time active in politics, he takes no part in public affairs aside from casting a straight Democratic ticket at all elections. In fraternal relations he formerly held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HUGH L. HAMILTON. While Mr. Hamilton is still a young man he has accumulated a handsome property and is considered one of the substantial men in Tulare county. His success in life is the result of his own efforts, having made his own way in the world since 1881. He is a native of Arkansas, and was born in Mississippi county, near Osceola, January 16, 1861, a son of Andrew J. Hamilton, who was born in Ireland. The latter was a son of Charles Hamilton, who removed from Ohio to Virginia, afterwards going to Missouri, settling in Cass county, where he became actively engaged in general farming. During his residence in Cass county he made several trips across the plains, and in 1872 located in Tulare county. Here he lived until his death in 1882, at the ripe old age of ninety-seven years. His last days were spent at the home of his son Hugh, near Kaweah.

Andrew J. Hamilton spent most of his life in Arkansas, where he was a large farmer, dying there in 1869. Of his marriage with Elizabeth Moberly six children were born, Hugh L. being the youngest and the only one living. Mrs. Hamilton died in 1864 at her home in Arkansas.

Hugh L. Hamilton was eight years of age when his father died. His grandfather then took him to Cass county, Mo., where he remained until 1872, when he came to California, making his home with his uncle, Hugh Hamilton. Here he lived until the death of the uncle, October 3, 1883. Before this, however, in 1881, he had purchased two hundred and forty acres of land on section 2, which now adjoins the town of Exeter. Following the death of his uncle, Mr. Hamilton engaged in the grain and stock business, in which he has continued to be interested up to the present time. In addition to the land mentioned, he has from time to time made other purchases, some of which he has sold, but he still retains one hundred acres of the land adjoining the town.

Aside from his farming and stock business, Mr. Hamilton has followed his trade, that of a blacksmith, for several years, having opened the first shop in this section of the country. This he did for his own accommodation, but was soon compelled to do custom work for his neighbors, it being the only shop in this part of the county. Being a natural mechanic, Mr. Hamilton enjoyed the work and has continued his shop up to the present time. In addition to general blacksmithing work he also builds wagons and does other work of a like nature, and it has been said there is nothing to be constructed of iron and wood that Mr. Hamilton cannot make.

Mr. Hamilton has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Mildred Ferril, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of John Ferril, who came to Tulare county in 1881 and now lives near Exeter. Mrs. Hamilton became the mother of five children, namely: Mary Leta, Hugh Meredith, John Henry (deceased), Camilla Eleanor and Milton Ferril. The mother of this family died January 15, 1895. In 1897 Mr. Hamilton married Ida M. Butts, who was born near Visalia, a daughter of James H. Butts, who now lives in Hanford. This marriage resulted in the birth of two children: Harry Wheeler and Marion Gertrude. The latter died very suddenly November 22, 1904, falling dead while playing with her little brother.

In political belief Mr. Hamilton is a Democrat and has taken quite an active part in the affairs of the county, serving for a time as a member of the county central committee. He has also been active in school work, being a member of the board of trustees of the Exeter district. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of Pythias. In both these lodge rooms he is at all times a welcome visitor, being popular with a large circle of acquaintances. Mr. Hamilton has an assured position in the affairs of Tulare county, where he has spent so many years.

EMIL WOLFES. In this state where such a large percentage of the population is made up of people who have migrated from other states it is pleasing to meet one who is a native son and who has made a success of the opportunities that have presented themselves. Mr. Wolfes is now the superintendent of the Eggers vineyard. He was born in San Francisco, in 1871, and is a son of Gerard and Caroline Eggers. The father was born in Germany and on immigrating to this country took up his residence in San Francisco, where he lived until his death in 1877. His wife is still living, making her home with George H. Eggers, the founder of the vineyard bearing his name. By her marriage she became the mother of two children of whom E. Wolfes is the eldest. His boyhood and youth were spent in the city of his birth where he obtained a practical common school education. At an early age, owing to sickness, he was compelled to give up his schooling and afterward entered an office as a clerk. Subsequently he became an accountant and bookkeeper, which occupation he followed until 1894, when he located in Fresno county. The first three years of his residence here were spent on the ranch that his mother had previously purchased, but at the end of the two years Mr. Wolfes again took up his old occupation of bookkeeping, entering the employ of a winery. In 1900 he was put in charge of the books of the Eggers' vineyard and five years later was made the superintendent, which position he is now filling. This property is located six miles northeast of Fresno and consists of seven hundred acres, five hundred and fifty of which are in vineyard.

In political matters, Mr. Wolfes is a Republican, but he has never cared to take a very active part in public affairs, preferring to give his whole time to his employers. Enterprising and industrious he has attained an enviable position among the vineyardists of Fresno county.

REUBEN JOSHUA GARRETSON. Born in Pike county, Mo., March 8, 1861, Mr. Garretson is a son of William G. Garretson, a native of Virginia. At a very early day he removed to Missouri, locating in Pike county. Later he took up his residence in Andrain county, where he purchased a farm and lived until his death, March 10, 1900, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife, Lucinda Victoria Mooney, was born in the same state as her husband. In September, 1903, she came to California and is now living in Fresno with her children. Her marriage resulted in the birth of eight children, four sons and four daughters.

Of this large family Reuben J. was the eldest. After completing his education he secured a position as a brick mason, which trade he learned very thoroughly. In 1887 he disposed of his interests in the east and took up his residence in San Diego county, but a year later he came to Fresno and engaged in contracting and building, remaining in that place for another year, or until 1889, the year of his arrival in Conejo, although at that time there was no town here and it was called the "wild flower country." For a time Mr. Garretson worked on different ranches and in 1901, with the money he had saved, he purchased his present place of one hundred and sixty acres, just east of Conejo, and here he is now conducting a profitable dairy and stock business, also raising considerable fruit, mostly almonds and peaches.

Mr. Garretson was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Isabelle Frazier, who was also born in Pike county, Mo., a daughter of William Frazier. Her father died when she was young and her mother subsequently married John Atkinson, and Mrs. Garretson accompanied her mother and stepfather on their removal to California in 1888. Mr. Atkinson is now living in the Perin Colony. Mrs. Atkinson died several years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Garretson have been born six children: Eva May, deceased; William Everett, Lena Belle, Lillian Gertrude, Nellie Arreta and Walter Marvin, all of whom are living at home.

Mr. Garretson is highly respected by all who know him, not only for his high sense of honor, but for the influential position he has attained in the business world. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, while in politics he supports the men and measures of the Democratic party.

JOHN W. SUMMERS. The name of Summers belongs to one of the earliest of the California pioneers, A. G. Summers having come to the state in the historic days and located in Solano county. He was a native of Virginia and brought with him to the west the qualities which have ever distinguished the citizens of that state. His trip across the plains was necessarily filled with hardships and dangers, his early residence in the state from 1858 was one of privation and toil, but no discouragement had power to daunt his energy or ambition and in the succeeding years he became one of the prominent men of Solano county. He owned a thousand acres of land located six miles from Dixon, upon which he engaged in grain-raising for many years. His death occurred in August, 1900, when fifty-three years of age. He was prominent fraternally, being a Knight Templar Mason. His wife, formerly Susan Warfield, a native of Solano county and the daughter of Charles Warfield, who died there, still survives him, and makes her home on the old place. Of their five children four are living, the only son and next to the oldest child being John W. Summers, a well-known and much-esteemed resident of Tulare county.

John W. Summers was born in Dixon, Solano county, Cal., November 18, 1875, and was reared to manhood on the paternal farm. He received a preliminary education in the district school in the vicinity of his home, after which he attended college at Oakland and at College City and Heald's Business College of San Francisco, where he completed a commercial course. He was fourteen years old when he lost his father, and being the only son it soon became incumbent upon him to manage the home place. He engaged in farming for about three years there and in 1899 located in Tulare county on twelve hundred and eighty acres on sections 16 and 21, township 17, range 25, nine miles northeast of Visalia. Eight hundred acres of this large farm are under the Alta Irrigation ditch, his principal occupation being the raising of grain. He has made a success of his work and is numbered among the representative men of this section.

October 24, 1899, Mr. Summers was united in marriage near Woodland with Mattie Cramer, a native of that locality. Her father, Louis Cramer, was born in Kentucky, reared in Ohio and in 1848 crossed the plains to California and engaged in mining on the American river. He became an early settler of Yolo county and engaged in general farming and stock-raising, in partnership with J. L. Pace, the firm name being Pace & Cramer, calling to mind to the oldest inhabitants of the county the most extensive stockmen of their day. Mr. Cramer now owns two hundred and forty acres on Cache creek, within four miles of Woodland, Yolo county, where he is engaged in the fruit business, the entire property being in orchard and vineyard. In California he married Mattie Pace, a native of Missouri and a daughter of the Rev. Russ Pace, a Baptist minister of Missouri. Of their five children all are living, Mrs. Summers being the third in order of birth. She received her scholastic training in St. Mary's Academy, at Woodland. Mr. and Mrs. Summers have one son, Roscoe. The farm upon which they are located has been in the Summers family since 1883, when his father purchased it. Fraternally Mr. Summers is a member of the Woodmen of the World of Visalia, and both himself and wife belong to Women of Woodcraft. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

WILLIAM M. GIBSON. A mile and a half northwest of Conejo, Fresno county, is located the ranch which belongs to William M. Gibson, and where he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He has a dairy of thirty-five cows, eight acres of vineyard, and is contemplating planting to orchard and vineyard a tract of one hundred acres adjoining the one hundred and sixty which forms the home place. He is a native of Jefferson county, Ky., where he was born August 8, 1838. His father, William M. Gibson, Sr., was a native of Bardstown, Ky., and was the son of another William M., who was born in Albemarle county, Va., and in manhood emigrated to Kentucky, where he became a large slave-owner and where his death eventually occurred. William M. Gibson, Sr., was a hatter by trade and also engaged as a teacher in the public schools, teaching in Jefferson county, Ky., and Clark county, Ind., for several years. He died at Gibson Station, Ind., aged eighty-six years. He was reared a Catholic. His wife, formerly Mary L. Hikes, was born and reared in Jefferson county, Ky., and died in Indiana. They were the parents of five sons and six daughters, of whom William M. was the eldest.

Educated in the public schools and in Oberlin

College, Ohio, William M. Gibson engaged in farming in young manhood, in 1862 enlisting in the Fourth Indiana Cavalry, Company D, in which he was elected sergeant and served for three years. He participated in many engagements, among them Perryville, Stone River, etc.; spent two weeks in Libby prison; was paroled with Gilroy's men, and was honorably discharged in July, 1865, in Edgefield, Tenn. He then engaged in farming in Clark county, Ind., where he remained until 1870, in which year he located in Sedalia, Mo. Ten years later he sold out and came to California, purchasing his present property of one hundred and sixty acres, where he combined the interests of farming with general teaming into the mountains. With nothing in the way of improvements Mr. Gibson has brought his property to rank with the best ranches in this section, adding various improvements in the way of buildings and fences, and bringing it up to a high state of cultivation. He now owns two hundred and sixty acres, one hundred of which he intends planting to orchard and vineyard at no distant date, while he also rents land for farming purposes.

In Clark county, Ind., Mr. Gibson was united in marriage with Eliza J. Bennett, a native of Lexington, Ky., and they have one child, Ella, the wife of Rolla Prather, who farms the ranch with his father-in-law. Politically Mr. Gibson is a staunch Republican and is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Fresno Post.

SAMUEL DAVIS. A pioneer merchant of Kingsburg, Fresno county, Samuel Davis has been associated with the progress and development of the place since 1875. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Mariposa county, October 8, 1857, where his father, White Davis, located in 1854, having come to the United States a year previous from Austria, his native land. The elder man followed a general merchandise business in Coulterville, Cal., until his death, which occurred in 1890. His wife, formerly Bettie Weinstock, also a native of Austria, died in San Francisco in 1892. They were the parents of four children, three sons and one daughter, of whom Samuel Davis was the youngest. He received his education in the common schools of his native state, and in young manhood followed the occupation of his father. He located in Merced in 1872, where he engaged in a general merchandise business, and three years later came to Kingsburg, Fresno county, and established a mercantile business, which he has since conducted, having his brother, Solomon Davis, for his partner. They have made a success of the enterprise and are prominent business men of the town. Mr. Davis is associated fraternally with Kingsburg Lodge No. 9138, M. W. A., of this place, of which he acts as secretary, and politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

JOHN LESTER was born in Iowa, near Burlington, February 18, 1844, and is the son of James Lester, a native of Pulaski county, Ky. In that state he engaged in farming, later removing to Iowa, and becoming an early settler of Des Moines county. There he remained until 1863, when, accompanied by his family, he started for California, going by way of New York on the steamship Illinois. They were obliged to remain at Panama from Christmas until New Year's, when they took passage on the steamship America, bound for San Francisco, and reached that city January 13, 1864. On his arrival in California he settled on the Stanislaus river near Salida where he homesteaded land and engaged in grain raising. He died at the age of sixty-three years while visiting in Fresno. His wife bore the maiden name of Sarah Ann De Voe and was born in Baltimore, Md., a daughter of Col. William H. De Voe, who in the early days removed to Burlington, Iowa, where he lived at the time of his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Lester were born nine children, five of whom are living.

John Lester was reared on his father's farm in Iowa where he remained until attaining his majority. During this time he obtained a limited education in the district schools of the neighborhood, but in those days the youth was needed to assist in the work of the farm and little attention was given to educational matters. Upon the removal of his parents to this state, our subject accompanied them and for the two years following his arrival here worked on farms in the San Joaquin valley. At the end of this period he entered land near Salida and engaged in grain raising. Later he became interested in the lumber business on the Tuolumne river in partnership with J. D. Reyburn. Subsequently he again took up farming and also engaged in sheep raising, following the latter business for ten years, his ranch being located on the Cantura creek in Fresno county. In 1888 he disposed of his sheep business and located on his present place two and one-half miles southeast of Clovis. Here he owns six hundred and forty acres which he has improved and placed under a high state of cultivation.

In the city of Stockton, Mr. Lester was united in marriage with Miss Susan Sayre, who was born on Long Island, N. Y., and to them have been born the following children: Frank H.,

Susan C. Callison

who died in Modesto at the age of twenty-three years; Mary Ellen; Hattie S., now Mrs. Fred Dawson; Calvin De Voe, who lives in Santa Ana; Leroy, at home; Grace, now Mrs. William Keller of Fresno; Rose V. and Blanche H., both at home.

Ever since attaining his majority, Mr. Lester has been a staunch Republican but has never cared to enter the arena of public life. Nevertheless he has always been willing to do his part towards promoting the welfare of his county. His success in life is the result of hard labor, industry and perseverance. He started in life at the bottom of the ladder and that he has succeeded is a matter of which he and his children may well feel proud. Such men's lives contain much that is worthy of emulation.

EZ. CALLISON. Few pioneers of the San Joaquin valley have been more successful and none has gained a higher position in the regard of associates than Mr. Callison, who since 1870 has made his home on a farm four and one-half miles east of Tipton, and twelve miles southeast of Tulare. A member of an old Virginian family, who proved to be good citizens alike in war and peace, he was born in Ohio January 30, 1831, and was next to the youngest among eight sons and five daughters of Moses and Catherine (Bonnet) Callison, natives of Virginia. It is worthy of note that all of the sons attained mature years and only one of the number was less than six feet tall. Ez. is the only one in California. Several of his brothers enlisted in the Civil war and died during their service. His father, who was a soldier in the war of 1812 and fought under General Jackson at New Orleans, became a pioneer of Ohio, and in 1832 settled in Vermilion county, Ill., thence going to Greene county, Mo., in 1842, and remaining there until his death when about one hundred and two years old. When the Black Hawk war stirred to action the pioneers of the Mississippi valley, he gave his services in defense of home and country with the same fidelity characteristic of his previous military career. Throughout life he made agriculture his occupation. His wife, like himself, was a Virginian by birth, and died in Missouri when two years past the century mark.

The earliest recollections of Mr. Callison are associated with life upon the frontier. When an infant he was taken to Illinois, where his early years were passed in Vermilion county. When the family removed to Missouri he was ten years of age, and recalls vividly the early days of life in the new country, in a cabin illy adapted to render comfortable those who dwell therein. Nor was the log schoolhouse more comfortable than the home. With walls of logs and floor of earth, with greased paper for windows, and rude benches for seats, there was little in the environment to aid the pupils in the attainment of a common-school education. After leaving this school he was a student in Ebenezer College at Springfield, Mo. While there he heard much concerning California and, fired with an ambition to see the far west, he left college and joined a company outfitted with ox-teams and wagons, and the other necessities of a trip to the coast. At Santa Fe the oxen and wagons were sold and the company, mounted on pack-mules, proceeded through the Rocky Mountains to Utah Lake, where their provisions were renewed. From there they journeyed to Los Angeles and on through the San Joaquin valley to the mines, where they arrived in the fall of 1849. During the next two years Mr. Callison prospected and mined in every part of Mariposa county, but in 1851 he abandoned mining and embarked in the cattle business on Big Dry creek, where he had a herd of about five hundred head. In 1857 he came to the San Joaquin valley, which has been the scene of subsequent activities. On the Tule river, south of Portersville, Tulare county, he established a stock ranch, finding the wild grass of the range furnished abundant pasturage for the cattle. In early days he frequently drove cattle to the Sonora mines for sale. In 1864 he drove a herd to Nevada, where they were sold at a profit.

The property owned and occupied by Mr. Callison since 1870 has been increased from the original tract of one hundred and sixty acres acquired by purchase and a homestead of eighty acres, until at this writing he has forty-one hundred and eighty acres on the Tule river, embracing section 31, township 21, range 26; sections 36, 35, 26, 25, and one-half of 27, township 21, range 25; one-half of section 1, township 22, range 25, and one-half of section 3, same township, all lands lying in one body. All of the improvements have been made under his supervision and prove him to be a thrifty, progressive and resourceful farmer, thoroughly modern in all of his ideas. About fourteen hundred acres are devoted to grain and there are also large tracts used for pasturage. The farm is one of the most extensive and valuable in the entire region and furnishes eloquent testimony to Mr. Callison's wise judgment.

At all times interested in the welfare of his community, Mr. Callison has been a willing contributor to movements of an educational or philanthropic nature, has served as school trustee a number of years, and has been one of Tulare county's most public-spirited men. In politics he gives his support to the Democratic party, of whose county central committee he was at one time a member. His wife, whom he married in Stanislaus county, this state, was Miss Susan Caroline McGee, a native of Missouri, being a daughter of Richard McGee, who was born in Tennessee, became a pioneer of Missouri and in 1850 crossed the plains to California, where he engaged in the stock business until his death in Tulare county. Besides their only child, Louis Napoleon, now a farmer near the old home, Mr. and Mrs. Callison gave a home to a girl whom they reared and who is now Mrs. Mattie Talbott, a teacher in a neighboring school.

JAMES F. MITCHELL. Although Mr. Mitchell is now one of the leading horticulturists of Lemon Cove, Tulare county, he was for many years a prominent railroad contractor, having constructed many miles of road for different companies. But like thousands of others, the quiet life of a horticulturist appealed to him, and it is now his intention to pass the remainder of his life amid the orange blossoms.

A native of Missouri, Mr. Mitchell was born in Benton county, January 28, 1868. His father, Henry L. Mitchell, was a native of Indiana, but in later life removed to Missouri. During the Civil war he served in the Union army, being captain of his company. He saw some active service and at Cold Camp was quite seriously wounded. He died in Nevada, Vernon county, Mo. His wife bore the maiden name of Caroline Osborne, and to them were born thirteen children, ten of whom are living. One son, Edgar, resides in Modesto, and a daughter, Lucile, is now Mrs. Rohrer of Fresno.

James F. Mitchell was reared on his father's farm in Missouri, his educational advantages being limited to the district schools of the neighborhood. In 1877 his parents went to Colorado, where his father engaged in merchandising. James F. removed to Grand Junction at the time when irrigation was first started there, and soon afterward he engaged in general contracting, building many miles of ditches. In 1886 he migrated westward, taking up his residence in Walla Walla, Wash., where for one year he conducted a large livery business. Not being entirely satisfied with the prospects there, he went to Spokane Falls, where he continued in the livery business for five years. At the expiration of this time he moved to Tacoma, Wash., and later to Montesano, Wash., where he conducted a livery and became interested in railway construction as a subcontractor for the Northern Pacific. His next change found him in Astoria, Ore., where for eighteen months he was engaged in railroad construction. Going to Boise City, Idaho, he there followed contracting and building of ditches and roads and farming. The year 1896 witnessed his arrival in Tulare county and for the following two years he was engaged in the deciduous fruit business. In 1898 he purchased ten acres of land at Lemon Cove, where he has since made his home. By purchase he has added to his first ten acres and now has in all twenty acres. This is nearly all set out in oranges and is one of the most valuable ranches in the Lemon Cove district. In addition to his own business he has engaged in contracting, caring for several other groves in this section.

Since coming to Tulare county Mr. Mitchell married Otie Southerland, who was a daughter of Charles Southerland, a resident of Fresno. This marriage has been blessed by the birth of one child, Velma. Fraternaly Mr. Mitchell is a charter member of Lemon Cove Lodge, No. 712, W. O. W. In politics he is a Republican and takes an active part in the local affairs of his party, being a hard worker but not in any way a seeker for office. Alive to the future of the Lemon Cove district, Mr. Mitchell may always be depended upon to do all in his power to favor the interests of this section. He and his wife are very popular among the young people, having hosts of friends who are always pleased to greet them. They are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

RUTHVAN HENDERSON. A descendant of Scotch ancestry, Ruthvan Henderson has inherited the sturdy qualities which have made those people desirable citizens in any community. He was born in Monroe county, Iowa, May 2, 1860, a son of Samuel Henderson. The latter was a native of Pennsylvania, born March 4, 1817, his father being an immigrant to the United States from Scotland. Samuel Henderson came to Iowa in young manhood and located in Keokuk, where he followed his trade of cooper during winters and farmed in the summers. He built up a large trade and acquired a success, but left that location in 1874 and came to California, settling as a farmer in Salinas, Monterey county, where his death occurred November 19, 1887. His wife, formerly Elizabeth J. Colwell, of Ohio, also died in this state. They were the parents of five sons and two daughters, of whom Ruthvan was the youngest.

Educated in the common schools of Iowa and California, Ruthvan Henderson grew to manhood in the latter state, his first independent venture being in the dairy business in Monterey county. Later he came to Fresno county and engaged as a farmer on rented land in the American Colony, and as the colony became more thickly settled he removed farther out and engaged in wheat farming. In 1890 he purchased his present place, consisting of sixty acres, since which time he has planted thirty-five acres to vineyard, and five acres to orchard, while the balance is in alfalfa. In 1901 he located upon this property, where he has since been a resident, being four miles southwest of Fowler, Fresno county.

In Fresno county Mr. Henderson married Mary A. Burrows, a native of California and the daughter of Edward Burrows. The latter was a native of New York state, who came to California in an early day and built up a law practice, becoming judge of Calaveras county, his death occurring during his service on the bench. To Mr. and Mrs. Henderson were born two sons, Miller R. and William L. Fraternally Mr. Henderson is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, of Fowler, Cal., and politically is a staunch Republican, being active in the counsels of the party and a delegate to various conventions. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

J. V. TOSCANO. From a quaint town in the province Di Potenza, Italy, to the energetic and promising Los Banos district, is a distance spanned with gratifying profit by J. V. Toscano, one of the most prosperous of the Los Banos merchants, and one of the most genial and successful of the town's citizens. Mr. Toscano was born December 1, 1868, and spent the first thirteen years of his life in the little village near his father's farm. The family immigration to America took place in 1881, the elder Toscano purchasing a farm of forty acres at Badger Flat, near Los Banos, where he has since continued gardening to his entire satisfaction, and where an outdoor life keeps him in excellent health and spirits. To himself and wife, Maria (Rose) Toscano have been born six children younger than J. V., all of whom have had fair advantages in the public schools.

In the new country to which his father's ambition had led him, J. V. Toscano began at the bottom round of the ladder, and as the oldest son assisted with the family maintenance by driving a vegetable wagon to town. For nine years his goods were as fresh, as varied, and as luxuriant as the soil of the state can produce, and in the meantime the village of Los Banos took on importance, and justified him in establishing a vegetable headquarters within its borders. He gradually added, as custom came his way, laying in a stock of groceries, and branching out as became a thrifty and farsighted citizen. His little store outgrew its usefulness, and in 1890 he erected the frame store now used for his furniture store, and which is 36 x 80 feet in dimensions. Still further increase in business necessitated greater capacity, till in 1899 he built his present store, 40 x 70 feet, two stories in height, as well as a large warehouse. Various lines of goods have increased his usefulness as a merchant, including cigars and tobacco, fancy groceries and provisions, crockery and hardware, clothing and gentlemen's furnishings, hats and caps, boots and shoes, notions, paints and oils and agricultural implements.

Mr. Toscano's success and public spirit are indicated in his town and country investments, owning, besides his own residence, seven others which he rents, and four of which he built himself. He also is the owner of several valuable city lots and three farms, one of eighty-two acres at Badger Flat, and two five-acre ranches near Los Banos. All of the ranches are under alfalfa and are used for dairying purposes. Mr. Toscano is interested in insurance, representing such well-known firms as the Home Fire Insurance Company, the National Union and the Scottish, and he has a bureau of general travelers information and sells steamship tickets. Several years ago he established a home of his own in Los Banos, marrying, in Merced, Mary Sarbo, who was born in Italy, and who is the mother of six children: Joseph, Rosa, William, Maggie, Julia and Antoine. The political sympathies of Mr. Toscano are with the Republican party, and he is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand; the Foresters, of which he is past chief ranger; the Druids, of which he is district deputy; the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Toscano's success is well merited, he possesses the best traits of the Latin race, with the additional advantage of true western grit and determination. He is high-minded and obliging, honorable and fair in his business transactions, and popular with all classes who patronize his establishment.

REV. NICHOLAS GUSTAVUS NELSON was born in Sweden July 14, 1853, and was the son of John and Margaret Nelson, who were descendants of old and honorable Swedish families. The father was an employe of the corporation railroad as a station master until he brought the family to America in 1868, locating in Pierce county, Wisconsin, where he entered land and cleared a farm from the forest. There he made his home and has reached the ripe old age of seventy-nine years. His wife died in 1904, aged seventy-nine years. They were the parents of four children, our subject being the oldest son.

Rev. Nicholas G. Nelson was educated in the common schools of his native country and also assisted his father in the station. At the age of fifteen he accompanied his parents to Wisconsin where he helped them in clearing the farm, remaining at home till 1876, when he entered the Swedish Methodist Theological Seminary at Evanston, Ill., and was graduated in 1880, being ordained a deacon and two years later an elder. His first charge was at Keokuk, Iowa, in 1880, and in 1882 he removed to Rockford, Ill., where he remained two years. He was then transferred to Minneapolis, Minn., where he served three years, thence to Clear Lake in the same state for one year. In 1889 he was appointed to Seattle, Wash., as pastor for two years, and in 1891 came to Kingsburg as pastor of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church. Here he labored faithfully and his efforts were crowned with success, thus aiding greatly in advancing the social, moral and religious welfare of the Kingsburg Colony that has since become so beautiful and prosperous. Afterwards he was pastor of the Easton and Fresno churches. In 1902 he was appointed presiding elder in charge of the Swedish district of the California conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1903 he retired from the ministry to devote his time to ranching. He owns eighty acres two miles northeast of Kingsburg; of this thirty-seven acres are devoted to raisin grapes, twenty acres in orchard and the balance in alfalfa. He takes a very active interest in the organizing and holding together of the raisin growers for the mutual advancement of the industry and securing a reasonable profit to all. He is secretary of the Scandinavian Mutual Protective Fire Insurance Association and was one of its organizers.

Rev. Nelson was united in marriage in Iowa to Miss Carrie Henrietta Peterson, born in Jefferson county, Iowa, and they have six children: Lloyd, Arthur, Lawrence, Clarence, Grace and Helen. The life of Mr. Nelson is worthy of emulation, as by his industry, integrity and great moral worth he wields an influence for good that is felt by all. California can well feel proud to welcome such men to aid in reclaiming and building up the great San Joaquin valley.

HON. ANDREW G. SMITH, a prominent citizen of Laton, Fresno county, Cal., was born in Lanarkshire, Scotland, July 24, 1865, a son of Alexander Smith. The latter was also a native of Scotland, who came to the United States in 1872 and located in Pittsburg, Pa., and followed farming in that vicinity. He removed to North Dakota in 1884 and engaged in the same occupation in Dickey county for twelve years, when he came to California. He located first in Lemoore, Kings county, but has since removed to Santa Barbara, where he is now engaged in farming. His wife, formerly Jane Gibson, was also a native of Scotland. They became the parents of seven children, three sons and four daughters.

Andrew G. Smith received his education in the common schools of Scotland and the United States, after which he taught school in North Dakota for about three years. Following his parents to California, he located in Lemoore in 1898, where he engaged in a general merchandise enterprise, which occupied his attention for four years. Coming to Laton in 1902 he followed the same line until 1904, when he sold out in August of that year and gave his time to the real estate and insurance business. He was appointed justice of the peace in 1903 and also holds the office of notary public. He owns a ranch of thirty acres four miles west of Laton, devoted to alfalfa, and to this he gives his personal attention. He owns considerable town property, having built two business houses and his home residence.

In Chicago Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Maggie I. Byrne, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of two children, Mary Juanita and Harvey, both at home. Fraternaly Mr. Smith is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Laton, and the Modern Woodmen of America and Woodmen of the World, both of the same place. Politically he is an active Democrat. While a resident of Dickey county, N. D., he was elected in 1894 to the state legislature, serving two years. He is interested in educational work here, having served for some time as school director, being clerk of the board. He is one of the prominent men of Laton, taking an active interest in the upbuilding of the place, and giving his best efforts toward all movements pertaining to general advancement.

RASMUS MADSEN is one of this county's most respected citizens. Coming here but a few years ago he has attained not only success but a position among his fellow-men of which he may justly feel proud. A native of Denmark, he was born on the Island of Fyn, April 22, 1866, a son of Madsen Mortensen, who was also a native of the same locality. He was a farmer and in early life married Miss Anna C. Olsen. To them were born nine children, five of whom are living, two being residents of this state. Both the parents are deceased.

Rasmus Madsen was reared on his father's farm, obtaining a limited common school education. As soon as old enough he was obliged to assist his father in the work of the farm, remaining at home until 1885, when he enlisted in the Danish army, serving therein until 1887. The following three years he worked for different ones, saving enough from his earnings to purchase a ticket to America, and in the year last mentioned he bade good-by to his native land and sailed for the new world. The first two years of his life in the United States were spent working on farms in Iowa, but at the expiration of that period he came to California, locating in Fresno county. For a time he worked for others, but he had determined to have a place of his own and eventually leased a fruit ranch which he conducted until he had accumulated enough money with which to purchase forty acres in the Washington colony, seven miles south of Fresno. Since making his first purchase he has become the owner of one hundred and sixty acres more on section 18, which he still owns. It was in 1904 that he purchased his present home, formerly known as the J. J. Reyburn ranch, six miles east of Clovis. Here he has four hundred and eighty acres, which is devoted to grain and stock. It is one of the finest ranches in this section of the county, equipped with a beautiful residence, fine barns and outbuildings and all modern improvements.

Since coming to California Mr. Madsen has been united in marriage with Mrs. Johanna Petersen, also a native of Denmark. Mrs. Madsen is the mother of five children, namely: Christian, Peter, Annie and Mary Petersen, and Thora Matina Madsen, all of whom are at home. The first four children are by a former marriage of Mrs. Madsen to Madas Petersen, a native of Denmark.

Mr. Madsen has made a splendid success of his life and both he and his wife are highly respected for their many admirable traits of character.

THOMAS NEWTON JARRARD was born in Georgia, near Clarksville, November 15, 1827, a son of Thomas W. and Judes (Worley) Jarrard. The father was a native of Kentucky and a son of David Jarrard, who was born in Virginia and at a very early day removed to Kentucky, being a pioneer settler of that state. He was a farmer and was a soldier in the war of 1812. Later in life he moved to Georgia, where he finally died at the age of ninety-four years. His father, also named David, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in France, and met his death while fighting for the independence of the colonies under Washington. Thomas W. Jarrard was a farmer and also engaged in the manufacture of stoneware on his farm, thirteen miles from Clarksville. His first wife bore him one child, Thomas N. of this review, and she died at the early age of forty. His second marriage resulted in the birth of eight children.

Thomas N. Jarrard was reared on his father's farm, and while he was given the benefit of the schools of the neighborhood, he was compelled to take charge of the farm as soon as old enough, so that his father could devote his time to his manufacturing business. Remaining at home until reaching man's estate, in 1851, he started for California, the trip being made via New York, where he embarked on the steamer Brother Jonathan for the Isthmus of Panama. Eleven days were consumed in crossing the isthmus and in reaching this side he took passage on a boat called the Victorine. Upon reaching San Diego the craft was condemned and the balance of the trip to San Francisco was made on the Monumental City, he finally reaching the end of his journey in March, 1852. Soon after landing he went to the mines in Coloma, Eldorado county, where he remained three months. Then, in company with three others, he prospected in the Bear river country until the spring of 1853, when he went to Montezuma. There he engaged in mining until the spring of 1855, when he bought a farm on John's creek, in Stanislaus county. Additions were made to his original purchase from time to time until he owned three hundred and forty acres of fine grain land. While residing there, July 4, 1861, he was married to Virginia Blair, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of James Blair, who was born in old Virginia. At a very early day he removed to Indiana and in 1853 brought his family to California, the journey being made with ox teams and consuming several months. The first settlement was made in Stockton, but he later located in Stanislaus county, where he engaged in general farming and there his death occurred at the age of seventy-nine years. He married Martha Ann Dickerson, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of James Dickerson, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Later in life he settled in Indiana, where his death occurred. Mrs. Blair died in 1899, at the age of eighty-four years. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are still living. Mrs. Jarrard was the second child and crossed the plains in 1853. Prior to her present marriage she became the wife of Barney Cook, who died in the mines of Australia. By this union was born one child, Ina P. Cook, who lives near Lindsay with Mr. and Mrs. Jarrard. By the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jarrard one son, W. A., has been born.

In 1872 Mr. Jarrard located on the plains three miles west of Lindsay, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land. Since then he has been engaged in the sheep and cattle business. He added to his first possession until he owned six hundred and forty acres, but during the winter of 1904-5 three hundred and twenty acres of this were divided into twenty-acre colony tracts, the land being especially adapted to the cultivation of oranges. In addition to the land owned by Mr. Jarrard, his wife has one hundred and sixty acres on section 9, which is highly improved.

Fraternally Mr. Jarrard is a Mason, uniting with that order in Tuolumne county, and he now belongs to Olive Branch Lodge No. 269 of Tulare. Socially he renews old acquaintances in the Pioneer Society of Tulare county. He served as school trustee of the Central district for many years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jarrard are highly esteemed in this section of the county, where they are best known. They have traveled the path of life together for many years, and in all his undertakings Mr. Jarrard has found in his wife a true helpmeet.

HON. DAVID VAN LEAR ROBINSON.

More than a half century has elapsed since Mr. Robinson cast in his fortunes with those of the new state of California. When he was a youth of seventeen years he left his Missouri home and, in company with a brother, John C., who was two years his senior, he joined a train of emigrants westward bound. Leaving Missouri, at Council Bluffs on the 10th of May, 1853, the train of thirteen wagons with ox-teams pursued the long journey over a trail whither had passed a long procession of Argonauts. Fortunately escaping any serious encounters with the red men who roamed the plains, they proceeded up the North Platte and by way of Devil's Gate up the Sweetwater. The 4th of July was spent in Salt Lake City, from which point they traveled down the Humboldt and Carson rivers and into California. After a brief stay at Jackson, Amador county, the brothers went to Tuolumne county and began mining. Knowing nothing of the business, they were persuaded into buying a claim they afterward learned was considered worthless. However, luck was with them, and they were fortunate in obtaining gold representing a value two times as great as the purchase price of the property. Other claims were taken up in the same locality, and for two years the brothers continued together in the mines.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Robinson holds a place among the pioneer miners of the state. In addition he was one of the early stock-raisers of the San Joaquin valley. Ever since coming to Tulare county, in 1867, he has been engaged in the stock business and in general farm pursuits, and has acquired a thorough knowledge of the possibilities of this section from an agricultural standpoint. To such men as he, far-seeing, shrewd, loyal and progressive, the county is indebted for the development of its material resources, and his fellow-citizens have recognized his ability and patriotic spirit by electing him to positions of trust and honor. In these various posts he has shown the same uprightness and intelligence characteristic of his management of private concerns, and has gained a deserved reputation for energy and probity.

The Robinson family is of southern lineage. William L. Robinson, who was born in Lexington, Fayette county, Ky., in 1800, removed to Palmyra, Marion county, Mo., at twenty-one years of age, and began the cultivation of a tract of raw land. Later he added the raising of stock to a general farm industry. At the time of his death, which occurred in Missouri, he had reached the age of sixty-eight years. Afterward his widow joined her sons in California and died at Modesto. By birth and training she was a Kentuckian, and was born in Bourbon county in 1801, bearing the maiden name of Augustina Bidde. Of her twelve children six are still living. It is worthy of note that five sons came to California. Richard B., who was a pioneer of 1849, died at Long Beach in 1894. In 1850 the second son, William T., crossed the plains to the mines of the west, but his death occurred here during the year of his arrival. Milton is still living in California. John C., who came with David Van Lear, died in Montana.

On the home farm in Marion county, Mo., David Van Lear Robinson was born January 24, 1836. From there, at six years of age, he accompanied the family to Schuyler county, Mo., and settled on a farm near Lancaster. Free schools had not as yet been introduced into that section, the schools being still conducted on the subscription plan. During four or five months of the year he attended these schools, which were held in log buildings furnished in a most primitive manner. Although the method of instruction was as crude as the building itself, he gained the rudiments of a fair education, which later years of observation and self-culture have broadened and deepened. When the discovery of gold in California led one brother across the plains in 1849 and another in 1850 he began to dream dreams of the country across the mountains beside the sunset sea, and was eager to try his fortune in the undeveloped west. As before stated he and a brother engaged in mining for two years after landing in California. For the following twelve years he carried on a stage business between Big Oak Flat in Tuolumne county and Sonora.

Coming to Tulare county in 1867, Mr. Robinson remained in Visalia for two years and then pre-empted a homestead on the Cottonwood ten miles northeast of the town. From its primeval condition he transformed the land into a farm improved with buildings and other necessary equipments, and by the purchase of adjoining property he increased his holdings until he owned five hundred and sixty acres. In 1900 he bought nine hundred and forty-five acres on the Turusa road near Visalia and, having disposed of his old homestead in February, 1904, he moved to the larger estate, which he now occupies, subletting much of the land to tenants. While living in Tuolumne county, September 10, 1861, he was united in marriage with Miss Elvira M. Harrell, who was born in Forsyth county, Ga., and in 1859 came to California with her parents, Edward and Nancy (Strickland) Harrell, natives of Jackson county, Ga. Her father, who was the son of John Harrell, a farmer of Georgia and a native of that state, became one of the pioneer orchardists of Tuolumne county, where he remained for many years, but died in Tulare county at the age of eighty. Her mother passed away at Visalia when seventy-six years of age. They were the parents of twelve children, but Mrs. Robinson and three others are the only survivors of the large family. In religious belief she is an adherent of the Christian Church. Born of her marriage are four children, namely: Lee, who at this writing is principal of the Visalia grammar school; Abi, a teacher by occupation; Ida, who is engaged in the photographic business at Visalia; and Tod, a photographer at Madera, Madera county.

From boyhood Mr. Robinson has been a believer in Democratic principles, and since coming to Tulare county he has served as a member of the county central committee. His interest in educational matters led him to accept the office of school trustee, which he filled for a long period. On the Democratic ticket in 1884 he was elected supervisor of the fourth district of Tulare county, his term lasting from January, 1885, to January, 1887. In 1886 he was re-elected, this time for a term of four years, and again, in 1898, he was elected to the office for a term of four years. As the representative of the sixty-fifth legislative district in 1894 he was elected to the state legislature, where he served in the session of 1895 and secured the passage of an irrigation bill of local importance, besides giving his influence to promote other measures of benefit to his constituents.

JAMES THOMAS CROW. One of the best conducted ranches in the vicinity of Crow's Landing is that owned by James Thomas Crow, three miles east of town, and comprising over four hundred acres of land. Mr. Crow's family is too well known in this section to require more than passing mention, for on every hand are evidences of the high regard in which his father was held, one of the most ambitious and resourceful of the grain raisers of the county. Mr. Crow was born in Pike county, Mo., December 13, 1855. In 1865 he came to California with his father. In addition to his public school training he had the advantage of a course at Heald's Business College. After leaving college he farmed his father's land, and in 1884 purchased his present farm in partnership with his brother, B. T. Crow, which then comprised thirteen hundred acres. The tract was subsequently divided between the brothers, and in addition to the portion which James T. Crow owns he also has one hundred and sixty-six acres on the creek, and eight hundred acres of grain land in the Cottonwood district. His home farm is under a high state of cultivation, and the greater part of it is rented out, its owner at present devoting much of his attention to the management of a cheese factory erected on his farm in 1903, which has already proved a paying enterprise.

December 13, 1877, Mr. Crow was united in marriage with Mary D. Riggs, who was born in Ashley, Mo., and is a daughter of Ambrose D. and Ann Eliza (Purse) Riggs, natives of Kentucky and New York City, respectively. Mr. Riggs moved from Kentucky to Missouri with his parents when six years of age, and at Ashley followed his trade of saddle and harness making for the balance of his life. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Crow, of whom Jessie, the eldest, is the wife of W. W. Bruner, a coffee plantation owner of Honolulu, and Ralph, Walter and Georgia are living at home. Mr. Crow has voted the Democratic ticket ever since attaining manhood, but has never sought nor been willing to accept public office. He is a quiet, unassuming, home-loving man, a model husband and father and an excellent business man. He has the confidence of his neighbors and associates in the county, and his lifework maintains the agricultural prestige established by his father. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

EDWIN L. VAN VALER. From the age of six years, when he accompanied his mother to California, until death terminated the business activities that had marked his career, Mr. Van Valer was a resident of Visalia and maintained the deepest interest in all movements tending to develop the resources of this city and the adjacent country. Of eastern birth and parentage, born in New York City September 8, 1849, he remembered the long journey in 1855, when he accompanied his mother, Mrs. Matilda Van Valer, to the Pacific coast, joining his brothers who had preceded them to Visalia. Upon the death of his mother in 1866 he was taken into the home of G. A. Botsford and about the same time began an apprenticeship to the tinner's trade, serving under Charles Strong. Proficiency in the trade led him to supplement the occupation with kindred lines of work, and for some years he not only manufactured tinware and engaged in repair work, but also made a specialty of the manufacture of metal tanks. Later he gradually drifted into the business of well boring, in which he acquired such a reputation that his services in that capacity were in frequent demand, and many of the wells in this part of the country were bored under his personal supervision. That occupation continued to be his special line of work until his death, which occurred in Visalia May 30, 1894. The passing away of a man so long identified with the history of the city and one whose character had ever been above reproach was mourned as a public loss. Masonic honors were accorded him in burial, a tribute from his fellow-workers in the Visalia Blue Lodge. Through all of his life he was a pronounced Republican, voting the straight ticket.

The lady who for years was the faithful helpmate of Mr. Van Valer and who now survives him was Sarah C. Ridgway, a native of Mariposa county and a daughter of Jarrett M. and Ann Mitchell (Barnard) Ridgway, born respectively in Texas and Virginia. Her father, whose birth occurred in the year 1808, came to California at the time of the discovery of gold in 1849, when, after crossing the plains, he became a miner in Mariposa county, where he successfully opened and operated the Princeton mine. Previous to acquiring extensive mining interests he had carried on a butcher shop and also engaged in the bakery business, but these he sold upon engaging in the work of a miner. His death occurred March 9, 1866, long before the demise of his wife, who survived until 1903. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Van Valer was blessed with two sons, namely: Claude O., a traveling engineer for the Standard Oil Company, and Clarence, who represents the same company on the coast. Mrs. Van Valer continues to make her home in Visalia, where she has residence property.

WILLIAM HOFFKNECHT. This well-known farmer and stockman of the British colony, in Merced county, which has been his home for the past ten years, furnishes a good example of what a man may do by his own efforts when he has the brains and energy to improve his opportunity. Born in Westphalia, Germany, December 7, 1866, a son of Frederick and Lovina (Lindwick) Hoffknecht, William Hoffknecht was reared and educated in his native land. His father, a farmer by occupation, died at the age of sixty-three years, and at the age of sixteen William sailed for the United States. The year following his arrival in this country, he came to Sacramento county, Cal., where he had an uncle who kept a store, and for nine months he found employment in this store. He then went into partnership with a brother in the stock business and the partnership then formed lasted for twelve years, which was a prosperous period for both.

In 1894 Mr. Hoffknecht came to Merced county and purchased the farm upon which he resides, located five miles west of Merced. Upon this farm, which contains fifty acres of fine land, he has forty acres devoted to alfalfa, the balance of his land being devoted to pasturage, upon which he raises a large number of hogs, realizing from the sale of the latter from $400 to $500 per year, and he also keeps about twenty-five fine dairy cows, which yield him a fair income. His place is well kept and contains a convenient and comfortable residence. In addition to his home place, Mr. Hoffknecht bought one hundred and eighty acres, and this farm furnishes pasturage for about one hundred head of cattle.

Mr. Hoffknecht was joined in matrimony with Miss Lillian Altnow, who was born in Minnesota, and accompanied her parents to Oregon when young. Her parents were prominent and well-to-do people, and they subsequently came to California. They have three children, Louisa, Frank and Gussie. Politically a Democrat of strong convictions, Mr. Hoffknecht is not an active politician. He is broad-minded, public-spirited, and one who willingly assists in any movement calculated to benefit his county.

REV. FATHER J. D. McCARTHY. A man of much culture and great religious zeal, Rev. J. D. McCarthy, pastor of St. John's Church, in Fresno, is doing a most notable work for the people under his charge. By his ability, his quiet persuasion and his earnest enthusiasm, he has improved the material as well as the spiritual condition of those who have looked to him for help, comfort and advice, all of which he gives freely. Through his efforts the parish has been enlarged, its financial strength increased, new church and school buildings have been erected, and much energy and enthusiasm have been aroused among his parishioners. His ministries in many other ways, also, have been full of good works and faithful service.

A native of New York City, Father McCarthy was born in 1864. After leaving the grammar schools of his native city he prepared for college in Brooklyn, N. Y. Entering St. Francis' College in 1879, he was graduated from there in the class of 1884. Going immediately to Rome, Italy, he entered the American College of the Propaganda, where he remained until forced to give up his studies on account of ill health. In search of a more salubrious climate, he went to Dublin, Ireland, and there completed the study of theology at All Hallows' College. June 24, 1890, he was ordained priest by Bishop Brownrigg, of Ossery, and sent immediately to the diocese of Los Angeles and Monterey, Cal. After remaining at Los Angeles for three years as assistant pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Angels, Father McCarthy was appointed resident pastor of the St. Francis de Sales Church, Riverside, Cal., and during the five years that he was there he started missions at Jacinto, Elsinore, Perris and Corona. In October, 1898, he was appointed pastor of St. John's Church, Fresno, and has served most acceptably ever since. This parish was organized more than a quarter of a century ago by Rev. Father Val Aguilera, who built the first church structure in the place. In 1902 the parish erected a new brick church, and in 1903 made further improvements by building a new priest's house. In connection with the church is St. Augustine's Academy, for the instruction of young ladies, and St. Joseph's School, a parochial institution under the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Cross. This parish is very prosperous, owning much valuable property, and having a membership of five thousand souls, the largest of any congregation in the San Joaquin valley.

JAMES LAKE HAMILTON. A very extensive stockman, and one whose success has numbered him among the representative men of Tulare county, is James Lake Hamilton, who is located seven miles from Exeter. He was born on the Isthmus of Darien, July 4, 1852. His parents dying when he was a small child, James Lake was taken into the home of Hugh Hamilton, given the latter's name and reared with all the care and attention that could be bestowed upon him. Hugh Hamilton, a native of Virginia, came across the plains in 1852 and became the owner of a ranch on the line between San Mateo and Santa Cruz counties. On the 24th of December, 1864, he located on the Kaweah and engaged as a farmer and stockman until his death, which occurred in October, 1883, at the age of sixty-two years. He was very successful in his efforts and became the owner of a large amount of land, the ranch upon which he lived containing ten hundred and eighty acres, while he also owned considerable other property. His wife survives him and is now the wife of T. J. Dale of San Jose.

The only member of the Lake family which attained maturity James Lake Hamilton came to Tulare county at the age of twelve years, attending school in the Kaweah district, while he performed the duties which were his as the son of a farmer. He was also trained in the thrifty habits and strict business methods which distinguished his foster father, and in manhood they have formed no small factor in his successful career. He remained with Mr. Hamilton to the time of the latter's death, the two carrying on the stock business and general farming operations which had engrossed the attention of the elder man for so many years. He was also taught the value of independence and at the age of twenty-two he took a number of hogs on shares, later doing the same with sheep and cattle. After his marriage he farmed on Kaweah, Dry and Yokohl creeks, and in 1887 began the improvement and cultivation of the property where he now makes his home. He owns one quarter of section 28, one-half of section 29, all of section 32, three-quarters of section 33, all of section 5 and one-quarter of section 4, aggregating twenty-four hundred acres in one body and all fenced for stock purposes. He also rents two thousand acres of the Dale property for stock-raising and general farming, and seven hundred acres in the hills adjoining his own lands. The irrigation ditch runs through his property, while he also has a pumping plant, operated by a gasoline engine, to use in dry seasons. He has about seven hundred head of cattle, full-blooded, graded Durham and Shorthorns, comprising one of the finest herds in the San Joaquin valley.

May 8, 1878, Mr. Hamilton was united in marriage with Rebecca Mehrten, a native of Calaveras county, Cal., and the daughter of Louis Mehrten, a pioneer miner. They are the parents of six children, namely: Louis Ray, John Garland, Charles Albert, Troy Edmond, Elizabeth May and Ethel. In national politics Mr. Hamilton is a Democrat, but locally gives his support to the man whom he considers best qualified for public duty. He has taken a broad interest in educational affairs of his community, serving as school trustee of the Kaweah district, having acted as clerk of the board for a time. A broad-minded, enterprising citizen, Mr. Hamilton merits the esteem and confidence which is given him in such large measure by all who have come in contact with him, either in a business or social way.

ALFRED G. STONESIFER. A man of great energy and enterprise, able and far-sighted, Alfred G. Stonesifer, of Newman, has contributed his full share toward the promotion and advancement of the agricultural and industrial prosperity of Stanislaus county. As a sheep breeder and raiser he carried on an extensive and lucrative business for many years, well earning his title of "King of the sheep industry." A native of Adams county, Pa., he was born December 31, 1831, a son of Solomon and Susan (Swope)

Stonesifer, being the youngest child in a family consisting of five boys and five girls. Neither of his parents are living, both having died in Littlestown, Pa., not far from the places of their birth.

On leaving school, Alfred G. Stonesifer began life for himself as a clerk in a store in Hanover, Pa., where he remained four years. Following the march of civilization westward, he went to Alton, Ill., in 1854, and was there similarly occupied for a short time. Going to Pike county, Mo., in 1855, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Louisiana for nine years. March 1, 1864, Mr. Stonesifer started with his family for California, crossing the plains with mule-teams. On September 1 of that year he arrived in Napa City, having only $2.50 in his pockets. The ensuing year he worked at any honorable employment, and saved some money. Coming to Stanislaus county in the fall of 1865 Mr. Stonesifer located in the San Joaquin valley, amid the foothills, on the west side of the creek. Taking up one hundred and sixty acres of land, he stocked the range with sheep of a common grade, and did so well in the venture that he decided to try something better. Purchasing, accordingly, for $4,000, one hundred and sixty head of French Merinos, he has met with noteworthy success in his operations, and is now owner of seven thousand acres of good land, and also has in his home ranch, near Newman, two hundred and thirty-seven acres of valuable land, which he devotes largely to alfalfa. Having by good management, judgment and investment accumulated a goodly property, he is now living somewhat retired from active business, enjoying a well-earned leisure.

In Missouri, Mr. Stonesifer married Sophia Weed, a native of Illinois, and of their union five children have been born, namely: C. A., deceased; Mary B., deceased; Catherine E., wife of Dr. W. H. Mays, of Honolulu; Augusta, wife of A. H. Mays, of California; and Lois, wife of Charles E. Evans, of San Francisco. Politically Mr. Stonesifer is a steadfast Democrat. For a number of years he served as justice of the peace, but while filling that office never brought a case to trial, settling all difficulties without bringing them into court. He married eighteen couples in his official capacity, but he never made a charge for a marriage or for a lawsuit.

NEWTON PHILLIPS. The varied industries which conduce to the development and maintenance of Letcher find in Mr. Phillips a staunch friend and supporter. From the time of acquiring mercantile interests in the village up to the present he has been a leading factor in the commercial life of the place and a contributor to movements for its substantial and permanent progress. No influence has entered into the growth of the little town more important than that exerted by him in his capacity of general merchant, postmaster and proprietor of hotel. Since 1895 he has been at the head of a general store and since 1896 has officiated as postmaster, in addition to which for some years he has carried on the hotel here and superintended his farm of one hundred and thirty acres in the vicinity.

The early representatives of the Phillips family in America were planters in old Virginia. From that commonwealth John Phillips removed to Missouri and took up general farming pursuits. Austin, son of John, was born in Missouri, and became the founder of the family in California, starting across the plains as early as 1848. After he had gone as far as Salt Lake he stopped for a year and hence did not arrive in California until the spring of 1850. For a short time he engaged in prospecting and mining in Tuolumne county, after which he opened a general store at Sonora, and later became identified with ranch and stock interests in San Joaquin county. During 1865 he came to Fresno county and settled on the upper Kings river, where he gradually established large stock and farm interests. At the same time he became a prominent factor in local Democratic politics and for twelve years served as a member of the county board of supervisors. In addition he was active in the Masonic fraternity. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1885, he was fifty-nine years of age. After coming to the coast he married Miss Margaret Barton, who was born in Missouri and during 1852 crossed the plains with ox-teams in company with her father, Jackson Barton. At first Mr. Barton made his home in San Joaquin county, but during 1865 he removed to the upper Kings river and from that time to his death continued to reside in Fresno county. At this writing Mrs. Margaret Phillips makes her home near Letcher, where she has a host of warm personal friends. For years she has been an earnest member of the Christian Church and a staunch supporter of its doctrines.

In the family of Austin and Margaret Phillips there were four sons and two daughters, namely: Newton, whose name introduces this article; William, living in New Mexico; Mrs. Blanche Perry, of Sonora, this state; J. A., whose home is in the vicinity of Letcher; Theodore, now in New Mexico; and Mrs. Pina Bogard, living near Letcher. The eldest of the family, Newton Phillips, was born on the home farm in San Joaquin county February 4, 1857, and at eight years of age accompanied the family to the Kings river ranch, where he soon became an assistant to his father in the improvement of the property. During winter months he attended the public schools and later was a student in the academy. After having assisted his father for a long period, at the age of twenty-six years he left home and started out for himself, embarking in the stock business and general farming on the upper Kings river. The property at that location was sold in 1887 and he then removed to a ranch two miles above Letcher, from there coming into the village during 1895 and embarking in the business he still conducts. For eight years he acceptably filled the office of school director in Dry creek district and for ten years held office as justice of the peace. As a Democrat he has been active in town and county politics and wields considerable influence in local party affairs. Possessing versatile ability, he successfully conducts his store, hotel, postoffice and stock and grain farm, and through these varied avenues of labor finds himself the possessor of a merited competence.

During 1882 Mr. Phillips established domestic ties. The lady who then became his wife was Miss Frances A. Greenup, a native of Cole county, Mo., and a daughter of John C. Greenup. After years of activity in farm pursuits in Missouri, in 1875 Mr. Greenup brought his family to California and settled on a farm in Fresno county, where he remained until death. At her father's home near Letcher Miss Greenup became the wife of Mr. Phillips, to whom she has since been a capable counselor and efficient helpmate. Their family consists of the following named children: J. Austin, Newton Allen, Claude, and Frank, but death has removed from the family circle the third son, who died at twelve years of age. The family are adherents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and Mr. Phillips acts as recording steward of the local congregation, to which he also contributes generously of his means, time and influence in support of its various charities and societies.

JOSEPH SULLIVAN. A pioneer settler of Merced county, Joseph Sullivan has taken an active interest in developing the agricultural industries of this section of California, and while aiding in the upbuilding of the county has improved for himself a valuable farm, which is pleasantly located about four miles east of Merced. He has been an intelligent observer of men and events, and his broad experience and shrewd common sense have been important factors in his success as a farmer and a business man. A son of Lawrence and Catherine (Morrison) Sullivan, he was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1833, and when but three weeks old was left fatherless.

At the age of sixteen years, Joseph Sullivan, who was a bright and ambitious lad, emigrated to the United States, the supposed poor man's paradise, crossing the ocean in 1849. Locating in Virginia, he obtained work on the Valley Railroad, and remained there and in the South for fifteen years. Coming to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1864, Mr. Sullivan was employed in farming in Solano county for four years. In 1868 he removed to Merced county, and located on his present ranch, buying six hundred and forty acres of land, a part of which he has since sold. He now owns three hundred and twenty acres, and is one of the thriving and successful general farmers of this locality, raising principally wheat, barley and stock. His ranch is well improved and productive, yielding him a good annual income. In politics Mr. Sullivan is independent, voting for the best men and measures irrespective of party restrictions. He is a man of staunch integrity, much respected as a citizen, and is a faithful member of the Catholic Church.

In San Francisco, Mr. Sullivan married Margaret Kern, and they have six children living, namely: Mary, a teacher; Lawrence; Joseph; Margaret; Michael; and John.

JOHN D. MCCARTHY. Too much cannot be said in praise of the enterprise and thrift which have brought success to John D. McCarthy, one of the public-spirited and capable business men of Los Banos. Mr. McCarthy has built up a paying livery business since 1896, in which year he bought out the Gardner stable, which he enlarged and improved, and started upon what has proved a successful career. Obstacles have impeded his progress, however, for in 1900 the building burned to the ground, resulting in the erection of a more modern structure, 70 x 100 feet dimensions. He carries a line of equipages suitable for all occasions, and supplies his livery with thoroughbred horses raised by himself on his ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, three miles southwest of Los Banos. This ranch, with its three sets of improvements, and its exceptional value as a dairy center, brings one to a resume of the life of its original purchaser, John McCarthy, the father, for whom the subject of this sketch was named.

John McCarthy was born in Ireland and came as a young man to Boston, where he married Catherine McCarthy, who died in that city leaving one son, John D. of this review, who was born in Boston October 25, 1864. When his son was five years old, in 1869, the elder McCarthy came to California and located on a farm near what is now Los Banos, Merced county, the one now owned by his son and heir. He liked the state, its climate and people, and in 1873 returned east and brought his son, John D., back with him, the youth having in the meantime gotten a fair start in the public schools. Mr. McCarthy engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death in 1896, at the age of sixty years. He was prominent and successful, and unquestionably one of the best and most useful settlers which Merced county has known. He took an intelligent but not active interest in politics, and for years served as a member of the school board.

From 1873 until 1879 John D. McCarthy attended the public schools of San Francisco, then located on his father's Merced county farm, thoroughly learning the science of agriculture. In 1893 he journeyed to Guatemala, South America, and upon his return six months later bought his present livery business in Los Banos. He has leased his finely appointed farm and is devoting his entire time to conducting one of the best livery enterprises in Merced county. The first marriage of Mr. McCarthy occurred in Madera, with Jennie Griffin, born in Ireland, who died in Los Banos leaving three children, Mary, Katherine and Leo. The present Mrs. McCarthy was formerly Mary Maher, and she has two children, Genevieve and Zita. Mr. McCarthy is a Republican. He is a popular, genial, and enterprising member of the community, aiding it not only with his business success, but with his interest in all matters of public moment.

JOHN G. SIMPSON, SR. No state in the Union maintains a deeper pride in her pioneers than does California, nor has any state a greater reason for so doing. It is the pioneers of California who by their hardships and sacrifices rendered possible the comforts of the present era. Their patient courage was the foundation stone upon which the permanent superstructure of a commonwealth was built; their zeal was a constant bulwark against disappointments, and their enterprise founded towns, improved farms and made the "desert to bloom as the rose." Among such pioneers an honored place belongs to the late John G. Simpson, Sr., whose memory is treasured as that of a resourceful citizen and kind friend, and whose name is perpetuated by descendants inheriting the qualities that inspired his successful career.

On a farm in Kentucky John G. Simpson was born October 22, 1829, and from there he went to Missouri with his parents, Robert and Keziah (Greenup) Simpson, settling with them on a tract of raw land in Miller county, where they remained until death. At the time of attaining young manhood he was confronted by the opportunity to settle in California, concerning which but little was known. Desiring to seek his fortune amid the untried conditions of the coast he started with ox-teams across the plains, being a member of the party under Governor Edwards, with whom also came Joseph C. Thompson of Fresno county. At first he tried his luck at mining in Mariposa county, but the result was unsatisfactory, and he turned his attention to teaming from Fort Millerton to Stockton and the mountains. The next venture in which he became interested was a butcher and stock business with J. N. Musick as a partner. On the dissolution of the partnership in 1861 he became interested in ranching, at first renting land on Dry creek and later entering land from the government.

Coming to the vicinity of Academy, Fresno county, in 1863, Mr. Simpson began to buy land and sheep, and eventually acquired the title to about eight sections. The qualities which made him successful in the acquisition of property contributed to his pre-eminence in other departments of activity. The Democratic party, to which he always gave steadfast support, for many years retained him in the office of county superintendent of schools, and as a director he aided in the building of the academy. Indeed, the cause of education in this vicinity had no supporter more staunch than he, and his advice was often sought by those in whose hands rested the training of the youth of this locality. Fraternally he held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious connections affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in whose large and devoted congregation he became a leader by force of his upright character, sincere Christian life and sagacious judgment.

The marriage of John G. Simpson was solemnized at Visalia September 13, 1859, and united him with Miss Sarah M. Baley, who was born in Nodaway county, Mo. The Baley family is of eastern extraction. William Baley, an easterner by birth and education, followed the tide of emigration westward and settled among the pioneers of Missouri, where he passed his remaining years on a farm. Among his children was a son, William Wright Baley, a native of Madison county, Mo., and for some years a farmer in Nodaway county, that state. When the discovery of gold in California in 1848 drew the eyes of the entire world to this section he determined to try the fickle goddess, Fortune, in the far-distant regions. The year 1849 found him a pioneer emigrant on the plains, where he traveled with Judge Gillam Baley. Naturally the mines were his goal and, still following the experience of others, he had no especial good luck in the mines, yet the months were not wholly unfruitful of results.

Returning to Missouri in 1852 William Wright Baley took up agricultural pursuits which he had relinquished for the more adventturous life of a miner. In 1857 he again started for the west, this time accompanied by his family. The second trip was marked by misfortune. After having spent the winter at Albuquerque the party proceeded westward via the Colorado river and there one evening suffered an attack from a large number of savage Indians. The white men were conquered by superior numbers and were forced to helplessly watch the red men drive their stock across the river. Left without any means of proceeding on their journey, men, women and children walked back to Albuquerque. A search there for new equipment was almost a failure, but they finally secured a few thin cattle and started again for the west. Soon the cattle gave out and were killed and eaten by the little band of almost starved emigrants. Again they were forced to return to Albuquerque, this time driven by pangs of keenest hunger. Their condition was pitiable in the extreme. Footsore and starving, they finally landed in the town, where comforts were procured for the suffering crowd. It was remarked by all that the women of the party had endured all of the hardships of this memorable journey without uttering a word of complaint; the frightful sufferings were endured with a patience-born of true heroism, nor did they give up in despair although it became necessary for them to walk the entire distance to California.

After having passed through Los Angeles in the fall of 1858 William Wright Baley settled at Visalia and engaged in teaming. Later he removed to Stockton. About 1865 he embarked in the stock business on Big Dry creek, Fresno county, and here he continued to make his home until he died in 1883. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Nancy Funderburk, was born in Tennessee and died in California. They were the parents of the following children: Sarah M., Mrs. Simpson, of Fresno county; Nancy J., who died at Visalia; Henry, a resident of Fresno; Berthena, who died in Missouri; William Washington, a stock-raiser and farmer at Tollhouse, Fresno county; G. Pierce, a merchant and farmer at Tollhouse; Caleb, who conducts a hotel at Tollhouse; Mary, who died in infancy on the Gila river; Benjamin, who died after the family settled on Big Dry creek; John, a farmer near Academy; and Dolly, Mrs. Parker, whose husband is a minister at Sanger, Fresno county.

As a child Mrs. Simpson was a pupil in subscription schools held in log buildings near her Missouri home, and naturally her advantages were few, yet she has attained a broad knowledge and is a woman of refinement. Since the death of her husband she has continued to reside at the old homestead near Academy, where she owns almost eleven hundred acres and makes a specialty of the stock business. For many years she has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, whose activities have in her a generous contributor and encouraging assistant. In her family there were seven children, but two have passed from earth, namely: Mary, Mrs. Henry Hazelton, who died at Academy; and William who was accidentally drowned in 1893 while bathing in Double ditch, at the age of thirty years. The sons and daughter now living are as follows: Thomas Jackson, Marvin and John G., all of whom operate large stock ranches near Academy; Lizzie, wife of John Fly, of Academy; and George Pierce, who conducts a stock ranch near Academy, Fresno county.

GEORGE PIERCE SIMPSON. Representative of one of the pioneer families of California is the progressive young stock-raiser whose lifelong identification with the county, intimate knowledge of its history, thorough familiarity with its soil and wide acquaintance among its people make him a forceful personality in a locality rapidly gaining prestige as one of the desirable locations afforded by the state. Having known no other home than the county of his present residence, Mr. Simpson naturally feels the deepest interest in the development of its material resources and in the enlargement of its products, and in his own chosen occupation he has accomplished much to benefit the citizenship of the district.

The record of the family appears in the sketch of John G. Simpson, a pioneer of honored memory, for years one of the liberal, popular and resourceful residents of this part of the state. George Pierce Simpson, who was the youngest son of this pioneer, was born at the family home in Academy, Cal., December 18, 1877, and received his education in local schools. Habits of close observation and extensive general reading perhaps have accomplished more for him in the development of a broad culture and the attainment of a liberal education than the study of text-books made possible. Until twenty-one years of age he remained at home, meanwhile preparing himself for life's activities by industry, perseverance and energetic application to the work in hand. In 1886 he established his headquarters on his present property at Academy, where he has erected necessary buildings, made important improvements and established a growing business as a stockman. In addition to superintending this property of eight hundred and thirty-five acres, he owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in the Sycamore district, in the foot-hills, where he has the advantage of an abundance of range for his cattle.

The marriage of Mr. Simpson united him with Miss Imogene Humphreys, a native of Mechan-iesville district, this county. In an early day her father, J. C. Humphreys, crossed the plains from Tennessee to California with ox-teams and after becoming a resident of the west supplemented the blacksmith's trade with the occupation of general farmer and stock-raiser, making his home at Mechanicsville. He is now a resident of San Bernardino county. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Simpson has been blessed by two sons, George Walter and Herbert Wright. Though not desiring political prominence, Mr. Simpson keeps thoroughly posted concerning matters affecting the welfare of the people, and has voted the Democratic ticket in all elections. Being of a genial, companionable disposition, he has found pleasure in the activities of fraternal organizations, and has identified himself with the Eagles at Fresno and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Sanger.

RICHARD NASON BARSTOW. Among the active, useful and highly esteemed residents of this section of the state is Richard N. Barstow of Fresno, the present county recorder of Fresno county. From a long line of New England ancestry he has inherited those cardinal virtues of industry, energy and thrift characteristic of the earlier settlers of the Atlantic coast. Many members of the honored family from which he is descended have acquired distinction in professional, business, political and military circles. His great-grandfather, William Barstow, Sr., a pioneer settler of Haverhill, N. H., was a soldier in the Revolutionary army. William Barstow, Jr., the grandfather of Mr. Barstow, was born, lived and died in Haverhill, N. H., where for many years he served as postmaster, and was also the leading merchant. He was a citizen of prominence, public-spirited and patriotic, and served in the war of 1812. One of his sons, Hon. George Barstow, was a prominent attorney in San Francisco during the '50's, and during one term of the California Legislature was speaker of the House. A large part of the great wealth which he acquired he devoted to charitable purposes, and after his death his widow continued the philanthropical work which he had established.

A native of New Hampshire, Mr. Barstow was born February 3, 1853, in Haverhill. His father, Hon. James Townsend Barstow, was a life-long resident of that place, dying there at the age of seventy-six years. He was a farmer by occupation, and very active in the management of public affairs. For many years he served as town clerk, and for two terms was a Representative to the State Legislature. He was a broad, liberal-minded man, exemplifying in his daily life the precepts of the Golden Rule, which was his daily guide, and his only religious creed. He married Sarah J. Brown, also of Haverhill, being a daughter of Richard N. Brown, a dealer in hardware and tinware. Of the six children born of their union, four grew to years of maturity, and one daughter and two sons are now living.

The eldest child of his parents, Richard N. Barstow grew to man's estate in his native town, acquiring a practical education in the public schools and the village academy. Going to Boston in 1874, he was for five years clerk in a wholesale oil store. In 1879 he came to California as superintendent of the Jones-Hill Hydraulic Mine Company, and had charge of two giant engines until the passage of the anti-Slickens law, and was subsequently general manager for the company until it gave up business, in 1889. Purchasing then a colony lot in Central Colony, five miles from Fresno, Mr. Barstow embarked in the culture of fruit, making a specialty of raisins. Selling out in 1895, he bought three thousand acres of land in the San Joaquin valley, and turned his attention to the raising of grain, in which he was quite successful. In 1901 he bought three hundred and twenty acres of land, and on this, by irrigation, he raises five crops of alfalfa each year, cutting five tons to the acre per season. In the fall of 1902, Mr. Barstow was nominated on the Republican ticket for county recorder, was elected by upward of one hundred majority, and in January, 1903, took the oath of office, and began his term of four years.

In Eldorado county, Cal., Mr. Barstow married Agnes H. Baldwin, who was born in Coulterville, Cal., the daughter of a pioneer family, her parents having removed there from Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Barstow have two children, George, an employe of the Raisin Growers' Association; and James Townsend. Politically Mr. Barstow is a Republican, and for two years was a member of the State Central Committee. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Georgetown, Cal., and now belongs to Fresno Lodge, No. 186, I. O. O. F.

MANUEL GONZALES, Jr. Among the younger generation of men who are successfully following agricultural pursuits in Merced county, and who are doing their part in a practical and intelligent way to make this county famous for its fine farms and excellent products, due mention should be made of Manuel Gonzales, Jr., who takes an active interest in all matters that are calculated to advance the interests of the community in which he lives. Residing on a seventeen and one-half acre ranch in the Atwater colony, devoted to the cultivation of sweet potatoes, it may be said of him that he understands perfectly how to make a success of this product, having raised as high as two hundred bushels to the acre. This is considered an enormous yield and is brought about not only by the exceptional fertility of his land, but also by his excellent methods of planting and caring for his crop.

In Mariposa county, Cal., May 25, 1875, Mr. Gonzales was born, one of three sons born to Manuel, Sr., and Mary (Silva) Gonzales. His father, a native of the Island of Pico, Portugal, was a sailor. In the early '60s he landed at San Francisco and soon afterward he located in Mariposa county. There he followed mining, but subsequently engaged in sheep-raising. When thirty years old his marriage took place in the above named county, which continued to be his home until 1894. He then removed to Merced county and purchased land in the Buhach colony, and in this locality he still owns twenty-eight acres, being now sixty years old. His youngest son, Anthony, assists in caring for this place, and his two eldest sons, Joseph and Manuel, each have seventeen and one-half acres in the Atwater colony.

Reared and educated in Mariposa county, Manuel Gonzales, Jr., when of sufficient age, engaged in sheep-raising, with his father, and at one time they owned five thousand sheep. Upon the removal of the father to Merced county the sons all accompanied him and about two years ago Manuel removed to the farm where he now lives and engaged in raising sweet potatoes, as previously mentioned. He wedded Miss Mary Armas, who was born in Mariposa county, and they have one son, Thomas. In politics Mr. Gonzales affiliates with the Republican party, and as a citizen he is one of the highly esteemed young farmers in the Atwater colony.

PATRICK BOLAND. Engaged in the prosecution of an honorable and independent calling, Patrick Boland of Merced county exercises good judgment and commendable skill in his agricultural pursuits and is contributing his full share in developing and promoting the industrial interests of the community in which he resides. He holds a worthy position among those sturdy and energetic men who have come to the United States from a foreign land, and in the support of the institutions of their adopted country have proved themselves most loyal and patriotic American citizens. A native of Ireland, he was born in 1851 in the city of Dublin, which was also the place of birth of his parents, Patrick and Mary (McGuirk) Boland.

Obtaining his early education in his native city, Patrick Boland remained at home until about fourteen years old. In 1864 he emigrated to the United States and the following year enlisted in the United States regular army, with which he was actively associated for nearly thirty years. A part of this time he held various non-commissioned grades in the Nineteenth Infantry, and for fifteen years was employed in the medical department of the division to which he was attached. Retiring from the army on account of ill health in 1893, Mr. Boland at once located in California, and in the fall of that year purchased his present ranch, which is situated about five miles west of Merced. Here he has forty acres of land, fifteen acres of which he devotes to the culture of fruit, on the remainder raising alfalfa. He is also carrying on a successful business as a dairyman, having eighteen cows of a good grade, which produce a fine quality of milk that is highly appreciated by his customers.

Mr. Boland married first, in 1878, Libbie Fitzmaurice, who died in 1898, and they had seven children, namely: William P., Thomas, Edward, Francis, Harry, James and Mary, the two latter deceased. In 1901 he married Mrs. Nettie (Smith) Woodard, who had two children, Sadie and Ethel, by her first husband. Fraternally Mr. Boland is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

MRS. EMILY J. EDWARDS. A resident of Merced county for many years, Mrs. Emily J. Edwards is widely known and appreciated for her many estimable traits of character, and the business sagacity and judgment which have marked her conduct of financial interests. She is now located upon her ranch of twenty acres, three and a half miles northeast of the city of Merced, in Yosemite Colony, the property being given over to the cultivation of figs, olives and alfalfa. Of sturdy English stock, Mrs. Edwards was born in Manchester, England, the daughter of William J. Molineux.

The Molineux family has flourished in England for generations, having crossed from France during the Norman Conquest. The later members of the family have become factors in the commercial life of their land, both William, Sr., and William, Jr., grandfather and father of Mrs. Edwards, being hardware merchants of Manchester. William Molineux brought his family to the United States when Mrs. Edwards was still an infant, remaining in New York for one year, when they returned to England. A little later they again crossed to the western world, locating in New Orleans, La., where the father engaged in business until 1856, at which time he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Locating in Grass Valley he continued in his mercantile business, conducting a hardware establishment in Nevada county until his retirement from the active duties of life, when he removed to San Francisco, where his death occurred at the age of sixty-two years. Two years after his location in Grass Valley he sent for his family, who came west by the same route as that traversed by him in 1856. Mr. Molineux was a Mason and was quite prominent in the order, establishing a lodge in Nevada county. Mrs. Molineux, who was before marriage Mary A. Weaver, died in 1902, at the home of Mrs. Edwards in Merced, at the age of seventy-eight years.

In California Emily J. Molineux became the wife of C. R. Edwards, who is now deceased, and by this union she had one son, Henry E., of Los Angeles, who has been connected for sixteen years with W. P. Fuller & Co., of that city, and since 1904 has been in business for himself. He married Clara Doyle and they are the parents of two children, Clarence and Glenn. Mrs. Edwards made her home in San Francisco for fourteen years, when, on April 5, 1880, she located in the city of Merced and made that her home until 1903. Removing then to her ranch, as before mentioned, she is now numbered among the agriculturists of this section. In addition to her home property she also owns a business block in the city. In her religious affiliations Mrs. Edwards is a member of the Episcopal Church.

HANS A. HANSEN. A man of unquestioned ability and integrity, active and enterprising, Hans A. Hansen, as manager of the Selma yards of the Valley Lumber Company, is prominently identified with the industrial progress of Fresno county. He takes an interest in the public welfare of the community in which he resides, and enjoys to a high degree the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. A native of Germany, he was born May 28, 1869, in Schleswig, which was also the birthplace of his parents, Ehm and Elsa Hansen. His father, a farmer by occupation, spent his entire life in the Fatherland, where his widow still resides.

The youngest of a family of four children, Hans A. Hansen attended the common schools of his native town until twelve years old. In 1881 he came to the United States, and for two years was employed as a farm laborer in Dwight, Ill. Migrating to California in 1883, he entered the employ of the Prescott & Pierce Lumber Company, at Fresno, serving first as clerk, then as yardman and teamster. This company being merged in the Valley Lumber Company, Mr.

Hansen remained in its employ, being first sent to Caruthers as clerk of the yard in that place, and subsequently occupying a similar position in Sanger. He was afterward placed in charge of the yards at Kingsburg, remaining there until 1898, and from that time until 1899 was manager of the company's branch yard in Fresno. Coming then to Selma, Mr. Hansen has since had entire control of the Selma yards belonging to this company, and as a manager has been very successful in advancing and promoting the material and financial interests of the firm.

While living in Kingsburg, Mr. Hansen was married in 1893 to Minnie Kling, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of John Kling, a resident of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen have three children, Elsa I., Chester O., and Frank P. In political affairs Mr. Hansen is an active and useful member of the Republican party, and is now rendering good service as city councilman, a position to which he was elected in 1902 for a term of four years.

GILLO EDWARD NORDGREN. For some years Mr. Nordgren has been at the head of a furniture and undertaking business that is one of the largest of its kind in the entire San Joaquin valley. Situated on the corner of Main and Alameda streets, his store occupies a site 50 x 150 feet in dimensions, with the undertaking establishment adjoining 25 x 80 feet in size. A gallery enables him to command a greater amount of space than otherwise possible for the display of furniture and carpets, a full assortment of which he constantly carries in stock, together with the latest styles in wall paper and interior finishings. For his work as undertaker he prepared by taking a course in Clark's Embalming School in Chicago, from which he was graduated. In addition to the management of his large business he acts as coroner and public administrator, having been elected to the office in 1902 by a majority of two hundred and fifty-five, for a term of four years.

A native Californian, Mr. Nordgren was born at Saratoga, Santa Clara county, March 25, 1862, being a son of E. H. and Sophia Nordgren, who died at Saratoga. Both his father and grandfather were natives of Stockholm, Sweden, and the former learned the trade of a diamond setter in his native city, while the latter engaged in the occupation of a silver smith. Both came to America and settled in California during the early mining history of this state, having made the voyage hither by way of Cape Horn to San Francisco. For a time the father conducted a jewelry store on Montgomery street, San Francisco, but later gave his attention to setting out and caring for an orchard at Saratoga. However, his ability as a diamond setter was so extraordinary that his services were in demand for such work, and for twenty years he was employed in that occupation by a large jewelry establishment of San Francisco. At the time of his death, which occurred April 17, 1903, he had reached the age of eighty-three years; his wife had died in 1889. Both were faithful members of the Lutheran Church, whose doctrines they endeavored to exemplify in their lives. After coming to America and acquiring citizenship, he voted with the Republican party, but never was active in public affairs, nor desirous of holding local offices, preferring to devote himself to his chosen occupation. Of his three sons and one daughter, there are two sons now living, Gillo Edward being in Merced and Seth in Hollister.

When eleven years of age Gillo Edward Nordgren removed with the family from Saratoga to San Francisco, where he spent the next few years in the grammar school. At the age of fifteen he began as an apprentice to the upholsterer's trade under W. J. Heeny & Co., with whom he served for two and one-half years. The following eighteen months were spent at his trade in Tombstone, Ariz., during the days of that mining town's remarkable prosperity. On his return to San Francisco he became an employe of the firm with which he had learned the trade, but three months later began to work for Clark & Co., in the same line. His residence in Merced dates from November 15, 1884, when he entered the employ of A. G. Clough in the furniture business, his work being in the upholstery department. It was his intention to remain only until after the holidays and then return to San Francisco, but the burning of the store caused a change in his plans and he remained to assist in the task of rebuilding, then became an employe in the furniture department. In 1890 he was admitted to partnership in the undertaking business, the firm title becoming Clough & Nordgren, but in 1899 he purchased the undertaking department and has since continued alone.

After establishing himself in Merced Mr. Nordgren met and married Miss Emma Ludescher, who was born in Mariposa county, and has been of the greatest assistance to her husband by her counsel and co-operation. She is a daughter of Joseph Ludescher, a native of Alsace, who, upon immigrating to America, settled in California during the early history of this state. Throughout much of his life he followed the trade of a merchant tailor and built up a considerable trade in his line at Merced, where he resided during the last years of his life. Always pronounced in his allegiance to the Republican party, Mr. Nordgren has served as a member of the county central committee of his party and on that ticket was elected councilman, serving four years. In Masonry he is identified with La-Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M. While following his trade at Tombstone he was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is now connected with Merced Lodge No. 208, also with the Encampment in that city. In addition he holds membership in the Woodmen of the World, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Merced Parlor No. 24, N. S. G. W.

RICHARD JEFFERSON WIGLEY. Among the prominent and enterprising farmers of Tulare county, Richard Jefferson Wigley is located within the vicinity of Poplar and engaged in the operation of his extensive ranch, consisting of twenty-five hundred and fifty-five acres. He was born in Gordon county, Ga., April 21, 1852, a son of Richard and the grandson of William Wigley, the former born in North Carolina in 1813, where the latter removed from his birthplace in Virginia and followed the occupation of farmer. In manhood Richard Wigley sought a home further south, locating in Gordon county, Ga., about 1850, where he farmed in Sugar valley. In 1866 he removed to Franklin county, Ark., where he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in 1890. His wife, formerly Minerva Mackey, was born in Georgia and died in Arkansas. They were the parents of eleven children, six sons and five daughters, of whom Richard Jefferson Wigley was the ninth in order of birth.

A limited education was all that Richard Jefferson Wigley could obtain among the primitive conditions of the early day. From earliest childhood he was trained in the practical duties which fall to the lot of a farmer's son, assisting his father in farming until 1872. In that year he went to Texas and located at Clarksville, where he engaged in farming for six years. He then went home to Arkansas, and spent the ensuing year with his parents, after which he came to California. For one year he remained in the San Joaquin valley, when he went to Walla Walla, Wash., and remained the same length of time. Returning to California, he located near Poplar, Tulare county, in conjunction with his brother purchasing two sections of land. Later he bought his brother's interest in the land and has continued to add to the original purchase until he now owns twenty-five hundred and fifty-five acres.

About thirty acres of this extensive tract is in alfalfa, while the balance is given over to the cultivation of grain. His interests are very extensive and he has met with success in all of his operations, his property ranking among the finest in this section.

In Visalia, Cal., Mr. Wigley married Laura H. Radliff, a native of Wisconsin, and they are the parents of the following children: Ethel, Amy and Carrie, all at home. In 1901 Mr. Wigley purchased property in Tulare city, establishing his home there in order to give his children the advantages of the high school of that place. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated by the Democratic party.

CHARLES A. ROGERS, M. D. The ancestry of Dr. Rogers of Bakersfield may be traced to England, Scotland and Ireland, and among his personal attributes may be noticed characteristics typical of each of these nationalities. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Rogers, came from Ireland to the United States and settled in Ohio, but soon went to Indiana, where he took up government land near Mechanicsburg, Boone county. By degrees he succeeded in clearing the land and placing it under cultivation. Improvements were made as his means permitted, and at the time of his death, which occurred at sixty-eight years, he owned a valuable farm and was accounted a successful man for those days. His wife, Katherine, also was a native of Ireland, and died in Indiana at fifty-seven years. Among their seven children was a son, William R., who was born near Urbana, Ohio, and in childhood accompanied the family to Indiana, where he assisted in evolving a farm out of the primeval soil. Following the westward trend of emigration he removed to Iowa and settled near Cedar Rapids, where he carried on a farm from 1863 until 1887. The latter part of his life was passed in Topeka, Kans., and he died in that city when sixty-eight years of age. During all of his mature life he was a staunch supporter of the Republican party and maintained a warm interest in politics. When the Civil war opened he offered his services to the Union, but failed to pass the required physical examination and thus was prevented from serving his country as he desired.

The marriage of William R. Rogers united him with Emily Davis, who was born in Indiana and grew to womanhood in her native county of Boone, later spending many years in Iowa, and thence going to Topeka, Kans., where she died at sixty-five years of age. Her parents, Charles and Susan Davis, were natives respectively of England and Scotland and attained the advanced ages of ninety-six and ninety-two years. In a very early day Charles Davis shipped produce down the Mississippi river to southern markets, but later he gave his attention more especially to the development of a farm, meeting with a degree of success that reflected credit upon his energy and judgment. In their religious belief William R. Rogers and his wife were members of the Christian Church. They were the parents of three sons. The second son, J. A., is an attorney and federal commissioner at Clarion, Iowa, where he has long been a leading Republican. Ephraim P., who was graduated from the Topeka Medical College, carried on medical practice until his death, December 17, 1899.

The eldest of the three sons, Charles A., was born on a farm near Lebanon, Boone county, Ind., February 22, 1851, and at twelve years of age accompanied the family to Iowa, where he was a student in the Cedar Rapids high school. At the age of nineteen he entered Cornell College, where he remained for two years, a classmate of Leslie M. Shaw and M. L. Ward of San Diego. His rudimentary knowledge of medicine was gained through study under Drs. Mansfield and Carpenter, of Cedar Rapids, after which he studied in Rush Medical College, Chicago, in the winter of 1873-74. His first experience as a regular practitioner was gained in Brighton, Iowa, where he remained until 1876. The following year he practiced at Sergeant Bluff, Woodbury county, Iowa, and then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1878. A subsequent course in Rush Medical College gave him a diploma from that institution in the spring of 1879. Immediately afterward he came to California and settled in Kern county. After seven months at Kernville he came to Bakersfield, of which city he has since been a well-known citizen and leading physician. In point of years of active practice, he is the oldest physician in the place. He holds the commission of captain and assistant surgeon in the California National Guard, and during the Spanish-American war, while assistant surgeon of the Sixth Regiment of California Volunteers, he was ordered with his company to Benicia barracks and became post surgeon for three months, when he was transferred to the Presidio. On the organization of the Southern California Medical Society he became one of its charter members, and he is likewise identified with the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society and the Association of Naval and Military Surgeons.

In 1872 Dr. Rogers was united in marriage with Miss Frances Case, who was born in Mount Morris, N. Y. They have two sons, namely: Homer, a graduate of the medical department of the University of Southern California and now engaged in practice with his father, and Guy, a graduate of the State University, and now a practicing dentist in San Francisco. Fraternally connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, Dr. Rogers is a charter member of Bakersfield Lodge No. 266, B. P. O. E., which he has represented in the Grand Lodge. The Republican party has always received his ballot, but in no other way has he identified himself with politics, and he has refused to permit the use of his name as a candidate for office. His attention has been given almost wholly to professional duties. It is his ambition to keep abreast of the developments that are being made constantly in the science of therapeutics. With this object in view he is an intelligent reader of medical journals and a close student of every discovery made in the healing art. By his careful diagnosis and skillful application of remedial agencies he has won the confidence of the people of his home city and adjoining region, among whom he has a host of warm personal friends.

WILBUR F. CLARKE. In the days when Virginia was still a colonial possession of the mother country the Clarke family came from England and took up the occupation of planters in the Old Dominion. Christopher Clarke was the son of a native Virginian and was himself born and reared there, becoming in early life a planter and following this occupation through all of his active life, with the exception of the period of his service in the Revolutionary war. At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years of age, while his wife, Elizabeth Hope, lived to be almost one hundred. Their son, Rev. William G., father of W. F. Clarke, was born near Charlottesville, Va., in 1816, and while earning a livelihood from his plantation he devoted all of his leisure hours, gratuitously, to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. A man of deep religious spirit, he counted no labor in vain that advanced the kingdom of God on earth, and many were the sacrifices he made in order that the growth of the church might be promoted. His death occurred in Virginia in 1884, when he was sixty-eight years of age. During the years of his young manhood he married Martha U. Huckstep, who was born in Virginia in 1819 and died there in October, 1902. The family of which she was a member originated in Germany, her grandfather having immigrated from that country to a Virginia plantation. Her father, Charles Huckstep, was a native of Virginia, where he became a prosperous and extensive planter, and died at an advanced age.

In the family of Rev. William G. Clarke there were seven children who attained mature years, namely: W. F., tax collector of Merced county, Cal.; Mrs. Martha W. Taylor of Kern county, this state; Louisa, who resides in Missouri; Christopher, who enlisted in Company K, Second Virginia Cavalry, during the Civil war, and was killed in a skirmish near Winchester, Va., in the fall of 1863; Mrs. Elizabeth Cleveland of Selma, Cal.; Sarah M., who died in Virginia; and Maria, Mrs. Marshall, a resident of Virginia. W. F. Clarke was born near Charlottesville, Va., April 12, 1839, and grew to manhood on a farm twelve miles from that town. After being primarily educated in subscription schools he became a student in Palmyra Academy, and then continued his studies in Emory and Henry College in Virginia. While in the junior year his studies were interrupted by the outbreak of the Civil war. Immediately afterward he enlisted in Company D, Nineteenth Virginia Infantry, with which he participated in the first battle of Bull Run, the engagements at Williamsburg, Seven Pines or Fair Oaks Station, the seven days' battles around Richmond, second battle of Manassas and the engagement at Sharpsburg or Antietam. On being exchanged from the infantry to Company K, Second Virginia Cavalry, he served under General Fitzhugh Lee, in whose army he remained until the close of the war. Among his battles as a cavalryman were those at Fredericksburg, Winchester, Brandy Station and Buckland, Va., a skirmish at Beverly, W. Va., and the battles of Five Forks and High Bridge.

At the close of the war Mr. Clarke returned home to find that his father was financially ruined, the farm laid bare by devastating armies, and the sawmill burned to the ground. On every hand were tales of distress and bereavement. There was none to help and few to encourage. Undiscouraged by the gloomy prospect, the son began to aid in the support of the family. By remodeling and repairing the old sawmill he was able to operate it, and so began to saw pine and oak, which he shipped to Baltimore. By the exercise of patience and tireless labor he placed the business on a profitable basis; and, buying one-half interest in the milling business, he continued the manufacture of lumber until 1869, when he sold out in order to engage in farming. The year 1870 found him in California, where he taught school in Stanislaus and Merced counties, and in 1872 bought a farm of two hundred and forty acres on Los Banos creek, three miles out from the city of the same name. After having engaged in raising grain on this farm for nine years, in 1881 he sold the property and bought one hundred and sixty acres four miles from Merced, where for years he engaged in farming, gardening and raising fruit. Eventually the tract was sold off in small lots. In 1893 he moved to Merced, where he now resides. For ten years after his removal to this city he owned twenty acres in the suburbs, but finally disposed of the tract.

In Fairfax county, Va., Mr. Clarke married, December 12, 1866, Miss Sarah Summers, whose ancestors were the first settlers of Belle Haven, Va. (now Alexandria), and built the first house in the place. Her father, William T. Summers, was born in Alexandria, as was also her grandfather, William Summers, a manufacturer by occupation. The lineage of the family is traced to Scotland. The grandfather married Jane Millan, two of whose brothers were colonels in the war of 1812. William T. Summers became a large and enterprising miller in Fairfax county. For a wife he chose Mariana Johnson, a native of Fauquier county, Va., and a daughter of Moses Johnson, a Virginian planter, whose father, William Johnson, was a hero of the Revolution. The Johnson family is of French extraction, but has been identified with American history since the colonial period. Long surviving her husband, who died in 1858, Mrs. William T. Summers died in Virginia in June, 1903, when advanced in years. She was the mother of six children, namely: Sarah, wife of W. F. Clarke of Merced; Mrs. Mildred Lucas, who died in Kentucky; Elizabeth, wife of J. L. Wright, who holds office as city clerk and assessor of Santa Cruz; Mrs. Isabelle Holden of Fairfax county, Va.; William, a merchant in Chicago; and George, a farmer of Merced county, Cal. Mrs. Clarke was born in Fairfax county and passed the years of childhood on the home estate, situated two miles from the site of the first battle of Bull Run. In this vicinity, indeed, were waged numerous engagements of the Civil war, and the peaceful valley was devastated by the grim hosts of war. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Clarke comprises four daughters, namely: Inez, wife of W. A. Saunders of Merced; Mattie May, wife of E. Langenhovel of Merced county; Isabella, wife of Dr. J. C. Robertson of Modesto; and Ada, wife of Edgar Landram of Merced. The family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which Mr. Clarke acts as steward and has officiated as chairman of the board of trustees. Fraternally he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In national politics he votes with the Democratic party, but in local matters he has never been radical. While living at Los Banos he served for six years as justice of the peace and notary public. As the Democratic candidate in 1902 he was elected tax collector of Merced county by a majority of two hundred and fifty votes, and entered upon his duties in January, 1903, for a term of four years.

JAMES EGGLESTON PETTUS. Bakersfield in its crude and undeveloped state formed the setting of James Eggleston Pettus' career for many years. At no time of his life did he retain a vivid memory of his home in Charlotte county, Va., where he was born February 26, 1827, for when seven years old he removed with his widowed mother to Arkansas, and was reared there on a farm, receiving a scant education in the public schools. Martin and Sarah W. Pettus were natives of Virginia, and the latter continued to live in Arkansas until her death, at the age of ninety years. James Eggleston came around the Horn to the mines on the Feather river in 1850, and while experiencing fair success made his home in Vallejo, then the capital of California. Afterward he kept a hotel in the town with his father-in-law, Charles H. Veeder, who from the standpoint of public spirit deserves to rank with the substantial upbuilders of the state. Colonel Veeder was born in Schenectady, N. Y., and married Lavina Watkins, a native of Canada. In his youth he was a merchant in New York, but removed at an early day to Illinois, and from there to New Orleans, where he studied law, and combined it with his mercantile ventures. With his wife, and daughter, Cornelia E., who became the wife of Mr. Pettus, he crossed the plains with ox teams in 1850, and in San Francisco established a steam laundry, which he operated with fair success for several months. He next went to Vallejo, where he practiced law and ran a hotel, and in 1852 removed to Petaluma, going from there to the site of Calpella, Mendocino county. He laid out the latter town, kept a hotel there, and attended to the legal complications that arose among the early settlers. In time his son-in-law managed the hotel, and for many succeeding years after that the lives of the two men were closely entwined.

In 1866 the Pettus and Veeder families moved down the coast with teams and wagons to San Bernardino, remained there a year, but not being favorably impressed, made their way again to Vallejo. A year later, in 1869, they came to Bakersfield and took up land on section 8, where Stockdale now stands, each man taking one hundred and sixty acres, upon which they followed farming and stock raising. At the same time Colonel Veeder practiced law, finding opportunity especially in connection with contested land claims. He was the only person at the time who knew anything about the laws of the land, and was in consequence a man of prominence and great usefulness. Several years later his health began to fail, and he died in 1876, at the age of seventy-eight years, his wife having died February 28, 1867, at the age of fifty-three. The latter was a devout member of the Episcopal Church. Colonel Veeder, who possessed a strong character and constitution, won his title in the war of 1812.

Until the death of his wife, December 1, 1877, at the age of forty-three, Mr. Pettus lived on his ranch at Bakersfield, and afterward was an interested spectator of the growth of the city over what had once been a dreary desert. His death occurred July 25, 1898, and he left six children, five having died in infancy. Leonora, the oldest of the eleven children, was born in Petaluma, Sonoma county, and came to Bakersfield when a small child. There were four other girls in the place at the time, but she alone has been permitted to live and watch the rise of the populous city. March 6, 1873, Leonora was united in marriage with Howard A. Cross, a native of Farmersville, N. Y., who came to Los Angeles, Cal., as a child. His father, Anson, also born in New York state, came to California at a very early day, and for a time was engaged in the butchering business for the soldiers at Wilmington. With his son he came to Bakersfield about 1869, locating on a ranch near the town, and became prominent in various lines of activity in the community. His son ran a livery stable in Bakersfield for several years, and brought the first hack to the town, at the same time owning a meat market, and inaugurated the first milk delivery in the town. In the meantime the father went to the mines of Arizona, achieved fair success, and finally died in Placerville, Cal., in 1891. Howard A. Cross made a success of his life in Bakersfield, and his name will always be connected with its earliest and most substantial enterprises. In the early days his farm house stood on the corner of H and Nineteenth streets, where the Produce Bank is now located. He was a Republican in politics, but was always averse to accepting office. His death, September 17, 1890, removed from a field of great usefulness a citizen who had won the sincere respect of his fellowmen, and to whom his intimate friends accord a high personal tribute. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cross, of whom Lucy Cornelia is the wife of M. E. Carlock, of Shasta county, this state; Harriet A. is the wife of P. A. Dickman, of San Francisco; James N. is engaged in the cattle business in Kern county; Carrie A. is the wife of D. B. Bristo; and Olive L. died at the age of seven years and seven months. Mrs. Cross is one of the interesting and observing pioneers of Bakersfield, is an entertaining talker, and possesses a fund of information regarding the early days. Her parents, her husband, and her husband's family were all pioneers, and as she was the eldest daughter, a well-loved wife, and always popular with her many friends, she has many memories to keep her heart young, and her life full of incentives to that kindness and consideration for which she is so well known.

CHARLES U. HENDERSON. As agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad at Laton Charles U. Henderson is classed among the rising citizens of this place. He was born at Ripon, Wis., a son of George M. Henderson, a merchant of Aberdeen, Scotland, who came to America and located in Northwest territory, Canada, where he became captain of a vessel in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company. Later he located in Chicago, Ill., where he engaged in business, finally removing to Brownville, Neb., as a merchant conducting a paying enterprise outfitting parties crossing the plains. The transportation business also occupied some of his time and attention, in both of which he met with success. His death occurred in that location at the age of fifty-two years. His wife, formerly Jane Merrill, a native of Connecticut, died in Oakland, Cal., whither she came in 1872. She was the mother of one son and two daughters, of whom the oldest was Charles U. Henderson. He received his education in the public schools of Brownville and the state normal at Peru, from which he was graduated in 1872. The following year he came to California and engaged with the Central Pacific Railroad Company as operator and agent at Alameda, after three years going to Milton, thence to Blue Canyon, Red Bluff, Downey, and in Stockton, San Joaquin county, becoming ticket agent, later having charge of the Stockton Railroad Agency for a period of five years. In 1883 he located on Kings river, south of Kingston, on property which he owned and there engaged in ranching and the cultivation of fruit. He was the first horticulturist in that vicinity, setting out two hundred acres in trees, building a canal for irrigation, etc. After the panic of 1893-4-5, he removed from the ranch and in 1900 was appointed postmaster at Kingston, which office was later removed to Laton, and also had a contract to carry the mail. When Nears & Saunders located in Laton and began to open up the Laguna DeTache grant, he entered their employ as local agent, the business rapidly assuming an important place in this section. When the Santa Fe Railway Company built their road through the place Mr. Henderson was made agent. At the same time he became agent for the Wells Fargo & Co. Express, continuing in his various positions until the building of the station, since which time he has given his attention to the railway and postoffice alone. For a time he was connected with a lumber yard known as the Fassett Lumber Company, which he helped to open up and conducted for a time. Mr. Henderson has been interested in all that has pertained to the growth and development of this section, giving his time and energy in the promotion of irrigation concerns, and the building of good roads and schoolhouses. He was a member of the first committee sent to Sacramento to interest the legislature in the division of Kings county from that of Tulare, he suggesting the name of Kings, by which the county is known.

In Stockton, Cal., Mr. Henderson was united in marriage with Rose S. Sutherland, who was born near Kingston, Fresno county, Cal., and was reared and educated in Stockton. She is assistant postmaster and manages the office. Her father, John Sutherland, was born in England and came to the United States in an early day, locating in St. Louis, Mo., where he engaged as a coal miner. He crossed the plains to California and engaged in mining in Amador county, thence located in King river, Fresno county, and took up government land and added by purchase until he owned fifteen thousand acres south of that town. Later he located in Stockton, where he conducted retail meat markets. He had interests in various parts of the country and in Texas, acquiring considerable wealth before his death. Mr. Henderson is associated fraternally with the Modern Woodmen of America, of Laton; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Masons, having joined this organization in Hanford, Kings county, where he was raised to the Royal Arch degree, and now belongs to the Commandery of Fresno. Politically, he has always been a Jeffersonian Democrat, and on that party's ticket in the early '90s he was nominated for the assembly.

JUDGE CHARLES L. CLAFLIN, of Bakersfield, Kern county, Cal., attorney, and former superior judge of Modoc county, was born in Lebanon, Van Buren county, Iowa, August 17, 1858, and is a son of Ira and Hannah (Richardson) Clafin, both of whom were natives of Addison county, Vt. Both parents were reared, educated and finally married in Vermont, but in 1836 removed to Van Buren county, Iowa, where Ira Clafin found abundant opportunity for the practice of his profession as surveyor and civil engineer. That territory was then wild and the inhabitants widely scattered. He purchased at public auction a tract of land which he set about to improve, developing a fine farm, upon which he lived until his death at the age of eighty-three years. His widow, now ninety years of age, still occupies the old home in Van Buren county. Ira Clafin became a man of prominence and influence in his Iowa home, serving as surveyor of Van Buren county for twenty years, and was also employed extensively by the federal government in surveying public land in Iowa and Wisconsin. Until six weeks before his death he continued in active life, retaining full possession of the faculties which rendered his career broad and successful. For many years he was identified with the Masons and the Odd Fellows. He was a man of public spirit, and at all times exhibited an unselfish desire to do all in his power to bring the raw western territory in which he lived up to a high state of development.

Ira Clafin was a son of Nathan Clafin, a native of Massachusetts, who married a representative of the ancient New England family of Shelby. He was of Scotch descent, the family having been founded in America in 1666 by Robert Mackclothlan, who came from Scotland direct to Massachusetts. Representatives of this family have since become prominently identified with commercial, industrial and financial affairs throughout the country, especially in the eastern states.

At the age of fifteen years Charles L. Clafin left his home in Iowa and visited a sister residing in California. Returning home a year later to complete his education, he entered Troy (Iowa) Academy, going from that institution to the Southern Iowa Normal School at Bloomfield, from which he was graduated. At the age of nineteen years he began teaching in the public schools of Iowa, in the meantime taking up the study of the law. In 1880 he came to California, locating in Modoc county, where he was admitted to the bar in 1881. The following year he was elected district attorney of Modoc county, as the nominee of the Republican party, and served in that office two years. From 1884 to 1890 he remained in private practice in that county. In the latter year he was nominated for judge of the superior court of Modoc county by the Republican party, and though the county was overwhelmingly Democratic he was elected by a large majority, occupying the bench for a term of six years to the eminent satisfaction of all interested. Upon his retirement from this post he removed, in 1897, to Los Angeles, but soon afterward was compelled to abandon the delightful home he had established in that city, owing to a severe attack of asthma. For the following year he practiced in Modoc county, and then went to Susanville, where he remained until December, 1900, since which time he has maintained an office in Bakersfield, where his professional labors have been rewarded with a rare measure of success. He is the attorney for and one of the directors in the Pacific Smelting Works, an industry which is contemplating making Kern its headquarters. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons. May 8, 1884, he was united in marriage with Nellie Welsh, a native of Nevada county, Cal. They are the parents of six children, namely: Harlan W. and Charles Leland, Jr., who are students in the Bakersfield high school, and Anita E., George Elwood, Harry L. and Teddie, students in the lower grades.

Judge Claffin is a strong and forceful man, gifted with keen insight into human nature and current events, and impressing all with his sincerity and courageous convictions. During the years of his residence in California he has made a marked impress upon the trend of public events, his striking personality and breadth of mind winning for him the confidence of all classes of intelligent men, and giving him a place among the leaders in public thought and action. Thoroughly grounded in the principles of the law, he has evidenced rare capabilities in the application of these principles to the causes intrusted to his care, and the success which has attended his practice has caused him to become recognized, by the profession and the laity, as a leader of the bar of southern California.

OSCAR WILLIAM STEINWAND, M. D. Talented, trustworthy, and well versed in medical lore, Oscar William Steinwand, M. D., of Selma, is especially adapted for his professional calling. As a general practitioner he has attained marked success, and during the comparatively brief time that he has been located in this city has won a generous patronage and gained the respect and esteem of the community. Of German ancestry, he was born May 12, 1866, in Chicago, Ill., a son of Joseph Steinwand.

A native of Württemberg, Germany, Joseph Steinwand grew to manhood in the fatherland, living there until 1850. Emigrating in that year to the United States, he followed his trade of carpenter and builder in many of the prominent cities of the Union, including New York, Chicago, Memphis and New Orleans, being also engaged to some extent as a millwright. Returning from New Orleans to Chicago, he remained in that city until 1875, when he came to California, locating in Oakland as a contractor and builder. On January 19, 1881, he bought a raisin vineyard in Fresno county, four and one-half miles east of the city, and has since been successfully employed in its improvement and management. He married Elise Munch, a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and they became the parents of four children, of whom Oscar W., the subject of this biographical sketch, is the second child.

Acquiring the rudiments of his education in the primary schools of Chicago, Oscar William Steinwand came with his parents to this state, living first in Oakland and later in Fresno, in these places continuing his studies. Entering Cooper Medical College in 1893, he studied there two years, and was then engaged in hospital work in San Francisco and Fresno for one year, in 1897 being graduated from the Cooper Medical College with the degree of M. D. Locating in Fresno, Dr. Steinwand remained there until June, 1898, when he removed to San Francisco, where he continued the practice of medicine for one year. Coming to Selma in 1901, the doctor has here built up a large and lucrative general practice, his skill and professional knowledge being known and appreciated. He is a close student, and in 1903 took special instruction in bacteriology and pathology in San Francisco, perfecting himself still further in the science of medicine. He has a finely equipped office, in which, among other valuable instruments and machines, is a sixteen-plate X-ray machine.

In San Francisco, Dr. Steinwand married Louise E. Storz, a native of New Jersey, and they have a daughter, named Grace. The doctor is now serving as city health officer, as such performing the duties devolving upon him most faithfully. He is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; of the California Medical Society; of the Fresno County Medical Society; of the San Joaquin Medical Society; and of the American Medical Association. In politics he is independent, voting according to the dictates of his conscience, regardless of party prejudice. In his religious views he is broad and liberal, and is a valued member of the Unitarian Church. Fraternally, the doctor is a member of Selma Lodge No. 277, F. & A. M.; of Selma Lodge, I. O. O. F.; of the Woodmen of the World; and of the Foresters of America.

ROBERT J. BUTTS. A prominent agriculturist, and an able business man, Robert J. Butts is an important factor in the industrial circles of Merced county, and one of the most valued and highly esteemed citizens of Ingomar. Since coming here to live, on the farm which his wife inherited from her father, the late Henry Whitworth, Mr. Butts has diligently improved the property, which, with its substantial buildings, gives ample evidence to the passerby of his thrift and skill as a practical farmer. A son of Daniel Butts, he was born January 15, 1850, in Rock county, Wis.

A native of New Jersey, Daniel Butts spent a part of his early life in Pennsylvania, and then removed to Rock county, Wis., where he was employed for a number of years as a tiller of the soil. Coming across the plains to California in 1850, he cast his lot with the miners, and was here numbered with the gold seekers for many years. In 1873 or 1874 he went to Oregon, locating in Salem. His wife, whose maiden name was Eunice Berry, was born in New Jersey, and died in Pleasanton, Alameda county, Cal., in 1877. Of the three sons and one daughter born of their union, Robert J. was the youngest child.

Having acquired the rudiments of his education in the public schools of Wisconsin, Robert J. Butts completed his early studies in the district schools of Illinois. He subsequently lived for several years in Illinois, at first running a threshing machine, and afterward being employed in the Chicago Steel Works for five years. His health becoming impaired, he came to California in 1872, hoping in this climate to find renewed vigor and strength. He first found employment in Pleasanton, Alameda county, and was later engaged in mining for two years at Bull Run, in Kern county. Returning from there to Pleasanton, Mr. Butts operated a threshing machine in that locality for several seasons. Settling at Big Valley, near Lookout, Modoc county, in 1884, he bought a half-section of land, and improved a fine ranch, which he still owns, and was there successfully engaged in general farming for twelve years. After the death of his father-in-law he removed to his present farm, and on its four hundred and thirty-five acres of productive land carries on a large and lucrative business as a raiser of wheat and barley.

In July, 1870, Mr. Butts married, in Ingomar, Mary Jane Whitworth, who was born in Tuolumne county, Cal., a daughter of Henry Whitworth. A native of England, Mr. Whitworth immigrated to the United States when a young man, and in 1849 made his way across the continent to California. He traveled extensively throughout the state, finally locating permanently in Merced county. Taking up land from the government, he improved the homestead now owned by his daughter, Mrs. Butts, and also bought other valuable pieces of real estate, becoming a very large landholder, and was here an honored resident until his death, in February, 1807. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Butts has been blessed by the birth of ten children, namely: Grace E., Lillie, Walter, Warren, Robert, Alfred, May Lois, Henry Dayton, Carrie Edith and John William. With the exception of Grace E., who resides in Pleasanton, and Carrie Edith, who is deceased, all of the children reside at home. Politically Mr. Butts is an active member of the Republican party, and one of its most loyal adherents. While living in Illinois he enlisted in the state militia, hoping to enter the army, but was refused admission on account of his youthfulness. Fraternally he belongs to Adin Lodge No. 273, I. O. O. F., of Modoc county.

JONAS A. ALLEN, who since 1898 has been a legal practitioner of Visalia, was born September 10, 1857, in Kane county, Ill., his parents being Aaron G. and Sarah (Lanfeer) Allen, the former of whom was born in Benson, Rutland county, Vt., in 1816, and the latter in Ticonderoga, Essex county, N. Y., in 1821. Aaron Allen removed from Vermont to Whitehall, N. Y., and from there came overland to Kane county, Ill., in 1836, purchasing land of the government near Hampshire, in that county. About 1871 he located in Elgin, Ill., and now is living retired in the renowned watch-making city. His wife died in 1898, having reared a family of three sons and two daughters, of whom Jonas A. is the youngest boy.

Partly through the success of his father, and partly through his own ability to earn money, young Jonas entered the University of Illinois in 1877, at Champaign, remaining until the senior year. He then began to read law with Judge Henry B. Willis and John W. Ranstead, and in the fall of 1880 came west to Santa Rosa, Cal., leaving his legal studies uncompleted. After a year in Santa Rosa, and a year and a half in San Francisco, he returned to Illinois in 1883, and after further study under his old preceptors, was admitted to the bar of Illinois in 1884. Continuing with Mr. Ranstead for a year, he again removed to California in May, 1885, and in Tulare had charge of his brother's ranch business until December, 1886, when he began the practice of the law in Tulare. In 1887 he formed a law partnership with Hon. J. W. Davis, which continued until December, 1898. For years an active Republican, his political aspirations and legal qualifications were happily blended in his election as district attorney in 1898, during which year he took up his residence in Visalia, which has since been his home. He received the Republican nomination for superior judge of Tulare county in 1904, but was defeated by a plurality of forty-five votes, the county being Democratic by thirty-five.

In Belvidere, Ill., in 1885, Mr. Allen was united in marriage with Nettie E. Lawrence. a native of Belvidere, the daughter of E. L. Lawrence, a farmer near Belvidere, and granddaughter of a judge of Illinois. Eugene Lawrence, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Allen, is living with his parents. Mr. Allen is an enthusiastic fraternalist, and is identified with the Blue Lodge, F. & A. M., of Tulare, the Eastern Star and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Congregational Church, contributing generously toward its support. A man of commanding presence, and sane and practical view of life in general, he is a master of the theory and practice of law, and adorns a position in which strength of character, good judgment and integrity are leading requirements.

J. FRED KESSING. The home of J. Fred Kessing, in Plano, Tulare county, is one among the handsome and comfortable residences of this place. He not only built the house, but also furnished it according to his own ideas, filling the grounds with a variety of citrus fruits and plants, which make of it a garden spot even among the beautiful places of the cities of California. In addition to its beauty it also holds out the attraction of hospitality, for Mr. Kessing is widely known for this quality, with generous hands giving to others all wherewith he has been blessed in his efforts. He comes of one of the oldest families of California, being a native of Santa Rosa, where he was born June 3, 1863. His father, John F. Kessing, was born in Hamburg, Germany, and in an early day came to America as a pioneer. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California, settling as a pioneer in Sonoma county, where he served as the first revenue collector, and was one of the pioneer merchants of Santa Rosa. He was also one of the first merchants in Oroville. Subsequently he removed to San Francisco, where for many years he engaged in the commission business. Finally he sold out to his brother, who still carries on the business. Mr. Kessing had originally intended, with the many others who flocked to the west in that year, to mine, but gave it up as too precarious and uncertain a method of obtaining a livelihood. He came south to Tulare county and in 1872 laid out the town of Tulare, about that time becoming a warm personal friend of Mark Hopkins, of the Southern Pacific Railway Company. He is now retired from active labors and makes his home in Alameda, at the age of seventy-four years. His wife, formerly Maria G. Karenberg, of Os-nabrück, Germany, is also living. They became the parents of two sons and three daughters, of whom J. Fred Kessing is the third in order of birth.

In the schools of San Francisco J. Fred Kes-

sing obtained a preliminary education and for a time thereafter attended the university. A natural mechanic, he turned to labors which gave him an opportunity to exercise this ability, in Tulare, in 1872, engaging in contracting and building and meeting with success. He has built over one hundred and sixty houses in Tulare county, as well as other buildings, among them the Rocky Ford schoolhouse. In 1886 he located in Plano and built the wagon road for the Portersville Land & Lumber Company, running from the reservation to the summit. With nothing as a foundation for his fortune, Mr. Kessing has made the best use of the talents given him, acquiring a competence by a steady effort. In 1887 he purchased four lots in Plano, and to this property has added fifty acres by purchase. Nine acres are in alfalfa and the balance is used as a pasture for a herd of twenty-eight Jersey cows; the dairy is superintended by his wife. Mr. Kessing continues to follow his trade of carpenter and contractor, being one of the popular men in this trade in Tulare county. Among other buildings, he put up the bath house at Hot Springs, a credit to his ability and the mechanical talent which he has always manifested.

In San Francisco Mr. Kessing married Gertrude C. McEntee, who was born in Detroit, Mich., in 1863, the daughter of Judge T. M. McEntee. They have two children, Albert F., attending the State University at Berkeley, and Clarence R., a student in the high school. Fraternally Mr. Kessing is a member of Orange Camp No. 333, W. O. W., at Portersville. Politically he is active in the Republican party, and gives his support to every movement calculated to advance the general welfare of Tulare county and California.

CARTER LANDRAM. Occupying a prominent place among the early settlers of Merced, Carter Landram has impressed his worth upon the community as a merchant and grain dealer, as a promoter of education and public utilities, and as an active and liberal member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is one of the many native sons of Missouri who have found a field of activity in the San Joaquin valley, and who reflect credit upon the environment in which their youth was passed. Born in Macon county, Mo., April 13, 1840, he is a son of Reuben and Elizabeth (Dingle) Landram, the former born in old Virginia, and the latter in Kentucky, and of English parentage. His paternal grandfather, James Landram, was born in Virginia of Scotch-Irish extraction, and soon after the birth of his son Reuben moved to Kentucky, where the youth was educated in the public schools, and where he married at an early age. From Kentucky, Reuben Landram moved to Macon county, Mo., where he died at an advanced age, and where several of his nine children were born. Seven of these children attained maturity, and six are now living, Carter being the youngest. Besides the latter, the family is represented in Merced by James E., who came to the west in 1850, and by Abner P., now a resident of Salinas. Reuben Landram was a farmer his entire active life, and to the end of his days recalled vividly his experiences as a soldier during the war of 1812.

Carter Landram was educated in a private school in Missouri, and at McGee College, in Macon county. Prior to the Civil war he engaged in school teaching, which occupation he abandoned to wear the gray of the Confederate soldier. Enlisting under General Price in a Missouri regiment, he served at the battle of Lexington, and was soon after taken ill and sent home to recover from an attack of typhoid fever. Rejoining the army, he was elected lieutenant under Colonel Poindexter, was taken prisoner in Randolph county, Mo., and was imprisoned in St. Louis, Mo., and Alton, Ill., receiving his parole at the latter prison. In 1864 he left home and crossed the plains with ox teams, being six months on the way, and experiencing trouble with the Indians, owing to the soldiers being withdrawn from the plains. Locating in Solano county, Cal., he worked on farms by the month until he had gotten a little ahead, and in 1873 located in Merced, where he invested his capital in a book, stationery and musical instrument store, later adding notions and jewelry. Success came his way and the capacity of the store was enlarged to meet the growing trade. This store was sold in 1884, and in the meantime Mr. Landram had become interested in the grain business in 1881, buying and shipping to different parts of the state until July, 1882. He then entered the employ of Geo. W. McNear, of San Francisco, as agent in Merced, and continued the buyer for the firm at this point until November, 1903. Since then he has conducted an independent grain business, but still continues to represent the San Francisco firm.

Mr. Landram has various interests scattered throughout the town and county. He is president of the Merced Lumber Company, and at different times has owned and operated farms in the county. He was one of the chief instigators, as president of the Board of Trade, to induce the Santa Fe Railroad to run through the town; aided the company in paying for lands, and raised about $5,000 in the town of Merced. He contributed both time and money for this worthy cause, and won the gratitude of the merchants and people in general for the success of his co-operation. He is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M., of which he was treasurer for many years. Mr. Landram is a Democrat in politics, but has never desired or accepted office. He was the first president, and held the position for eight years, of the old Board of Trade of Merced. Near Salida, Cal., Mr. Landram married Alice Kerr, a native of Pike county, Mo., who was reared and educated in California. Five children have blessed this union, of whom four attained maturity: John Max, representing the Merced Lumber Company and the grain interests of his father at Livingston, where there is a branch of the former and a warehouse owned by Mr. Landram; Margaret Mathena, widow of J. C. Landram, of Merced; Hugh Kerr, attending the University of Tennessee, at Lebanon; and Telete, living with her father. October 28, 1896, the devoted mother passed away, leaving a host of friends to mourn her death. Mr. Landram has been active in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for many years, is a ruling elder in the church, and was formerly superintendent of the Sunday school. In his life he bears out the teachings of his denomination, and is one of the high-minded, very liberal, and progressive men of the community.

JAMES FENNER CHAMBERLAIN.

Among the retired citizens of Merced who are drawing liberal incomes from extensive land holdings in Merced county, is James Fenner Chamberlain, representative of one of the old families established on the Pacific coast in 1849. Mr. Chamberlain, whose paternal great-grandfather followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary war, and whose maternal ancestors date their American occupation from the historic Mayflower, was born at Central Falls, R. I., October 18, 1847, a son of Adolphus Chamberlain, a native of Sharon, Schoharie county, N. Y. His mother, Eliza (Patt) Chamberlain, was born in Rhode Island, a daughter of Jabel Patt, born in Cumberland, R. I., and for many years machinist in the cotton mills of that place.

Adolphus Chamberlain was a builder and machinist by trade and being of an ambitious turn of mind came west in February, 1849, leaving his family in Rhode Island, until such time as he had gained a start in California. Setting sail in the ship Shemose, he sailed around Cape Horn, arriving at his destination in San Francisco after six months of ocean voyage. Not realizing his expectations in the mines on the Feather and Yuba rivers and at Hangtown, he returned to San Francisco and worked at his trade, being one of the contractors on the custom house and other buildings erected in the early days. Later he engaged in farming near Stockton and in 1860 bought a ranch in San Joaquin county, which he successfully devoted to grain farming. For one year he lived in Nevada engaged in business, and April 7, 1865, came to Merced county, where he engaged in the dairy business on the Miller & Lux ranch. This proved a substantial undertaking, and included the milking and care of two hundred and fifty cows, and the manufacture of butter and cheese. These commodities were taken to Stockton and to San Francisco by boat, netting their producer a handsome yearly income. In 1869 Mr. Chamberlain purchased four hundred acres of land in Merced county and engaged in the stock and dairy business. He also raised grain on this farm, and in its management duplicated his former pronounced success. His death occurred May 8, 1893, after a career of unusual activity. He was a typical pioneer, generous and unostentatious, making friends all along the course of his useful and well directed life. He was a staunch Republican, and in religion was broad and tolerant. His wife, who survived him until January 12, 1898, left two children, J. F. and Melissa, the widow of J. S. Potter, of San Francisco.

James Fenner Chamberlain was twelve years old when he accompanied his mother and sister to the coast to join his father, leaving New York on the steamer Northern Star and Panama on the Golden Age. After landing in San Francisco he lived in Stockton until his sixteenth year. He then entered the employ of Miller & Lux, upon whose farm his father was a department manager, working for them at stock feeding, and still later building fences for them along the San Joaquin river. In 1875 he engaged in an independent trucking business, and in 1881 bought a farm five miles from Merced, where he engaged in grain raising, and where he now owns seven hundred acres, well improved, fitted with modern buildings and implements. In 1886 he moved to Merced and built his present fine residence, at which place he is living practically retired, although having the supervision of his country properties. Mr. Chamberlain and his sister still own the old homestead of nearly nine thousand acres, of which they rent all but eight hundred acres, and upon that they conduct a stock business, raising principally Shorthorns and Hereford cattle. He also leases his farm near Merced.

Mr. Chamberlain married in San Francisco, Celina Fuller, a native of Rhode Island. They have one son, Fenner Adolphus, attending the University of California. Mr. Chamberlain is a Republican, and is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is highly respected by his fellow townsmen in Merced, by the people with whom he has been connected throughout the county, and represents the solid and substantial men who have profited by the advantages of the great western country.

HON. JESSE RICHARD DORSEY. To none of her professional leaders does Bakersfield point with more pride than to Hon. Jesse Richard Dorsey, an attorney representing the concentrated energy of the west, who has had the inclination and persistency to step out of a trade and farm environment into the most promising legal atmosphere of the state, and in a few years acquire a reputation which would generally be considered liberal reward for a decade of earnest endeavor.

Mr. Dorsey was born in Argenville, Lincoln county, Mo., September 2, 1877, but comes of southern ancestry, early identified with both Maryland and Kentucky, the family having been established in Missouri by the paternal grandfather, Richard Dorsey, for many years a large farmer in Maryland and Kentucky. At the time of the emigration overland, Richard, Jr., the father of Jesse R., was a small boy, and he was reared on the Lincoln county farm, in time witnessing the departure of his father for the war, in which he served in the Confederate army under General Price, in Texas, Arkansas and Missouri. Richard the younger learned the blacksmith's trade in Missouri, thereafter combining it with farming until coming to California in 1888. He married Mary A. Crosland, who lived to share his fortunes until 1896, when her death occurred in Delano, Kern county, Cal., at the age of forty-nine years. Besides Jesse R. she had a daughter, Belle, the wife of N. R. Mitchell, of Delano.

From the age of fifteen to eighteen Jesse R. Dorsey attended the public schools of Watsonville, at the same time working his way through a commercial school, from which he was duly graduated. In Watsonville he began reading law with Judge Dickerman, becoming also deeply interested in Republican politics. After eighteen months of preparation he entered the Northern Indiana Law School at Valparaiso, from which he was graduated in the class of 1898. Returning to California, he practiced law at San Pedro for ten months, and in 1899 was appointed deputy district attorney of Kern county, serving three years in that capacity, when he resigned.

In November, 1902, Mr. Dorsey was nominated on the Republican ticket for the general assembly, and was elected by a gratifying majority in a Democratic county. During the session of 1903 his ability found vent in many directions, and he served as chairman of the committee on claims, and as member of the county and township governments, county boundaries, revision and reform of laws, mines and mining committees, rendering particularly efficient service in the department of mining. Mr. Dorsey is prominent fraternally, and is president of Bakersfield Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and at the state convention of this order, held in 1903, he was elected state vice president. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World, past commander of the Knights of the Macca-bees, and past chief ranger of the Foresters of America. December 30, 1903, Mr. Dorsey was united in marriage with Marion Stokum, who was born in Santa Barbara, and who resided for some time in Kern. Mr. Dorsey has a comprehensive knowledge of general law, but makes a specialty of probate and criminal law. He is conscientious in the discharge of his duties, is faithful to the interests of his large clientele, and throughout his private and public life maintains a dignity which presages a successful career.

J. A. BUTHENUTH. The firm of Buthenuth & Miller is one of the representative enterprises maintaining the stock-raising prestige of Stanislaus county. Both men have years of practical experience behind them, and have a familiarity with the mountains and plains addicted to stock in general, oftentimes not acquired in a decade. J. A. Buthenuth, the senior member of the firm, is a pleasing example of the stockman at his best, his push and enterprise, enthusiasm for his work, and his success as indicated by a competence, and a fine family, conspire to place him among the encouraging and useful citizens of this section.

A native son of the golden west, Mr. Buthenuth was born in Jamestown, Tuolumne county, Cal., December 7, 1855, three years after the arrival on the coast of his parents, Frederick and Maria Anna (Mitchell) Buthenuth, both of whom were born in Germany. Frederick Buthenuth had previously lived a few years in New Orleans, and in 1852 came west by way of Panama, thereafter engaged in mining in various parts of the state, making his home in Jamestown for many years. Eventually he removed to Oakdale, and eight years later died at an advanced age, in 1891. He was a Democrat in politics, and was a substantial, moderately successful miner and business man. He left a widow and seven children, two of his children having died in infancy. Besides J. A., of this sketch, the other children are: Elizabeth, the oldest daughter, now Mrs. Lee, of Oakdale; Frederick, making his home in Oakdale; Caroline, the wife of Mr. Woodside, of Oakdale; Henry F., engaged in mining in Amador county; Joseph, a resident of Oakdale; and Julia, Mrs. Huddleson, of Ceres, Cal. Naturally, the children of Frederick Buthenuth took kindly to mining, and at an early age began to follow their father's example. J. A. continued to mine throughout the state until the business began to wane, when he turned his attention to farming, at first working by the month. In 1892 he inaugurated an independent stock business, rented a range, and was successful as a sheep raiser until 1903. In the meantime he had roamed over the ranges and through the mountains, until the trails became like old friends, their difficulties disappearing the more closely he associated with them. He knows the Sierras all through this section, and carries in his heart a genuine appreciation of their grandeur and influence. At times reverses came to him as to all engaged in the stock business, but he met them calmly and philosophically, profiting by the lessons taught and starting in with renewed vigor to recuperate his losses. When he sold out in 1903 it was with a distinct sense of success and financial gain, and with a justifiable conviction that he had improved his opportunities, and learned all possible of sheep raising. Since then Mr. Buthenuth has been in business with Mr. Miller, raising about five thousand head of sheep a season, and owning a ranch of three thousand acres in Tuolumne county, near Coopertown.

September 25, 1884, Mr. Buthenuth married Clara Boone, a native of Tuolumne county, and daughter of Tobias Boone, a native of Maryland. Mr. Boone is a pioneer of 1852, who crossed the plains and engaged in mining for some years, but finally located on a farm in Tuolumne county. Later he sold his farm and lives in Knights Ferry, where he is highly esteemed and substantially identified with the general interests of the town. His wife, formerly Caroline Blackwell, is also of the south land, and was born near Nashville, Tenn. Reared on a farm, she is a daughter of William Blackwell, an emigrant of the early '50s, and who farmed in the vicinity of Browns Flat for the balance of his life. Mrs. Buthenuth is the oldest of eight children, seven of whom are living. Jefferson, the second oldest, having died in Modesto. Emma, Mrs. Coop, is a resident of Knights Ferry; Frank is a resident of Stockton; Henrietta is the wife of Mr. Morrison, of Knights Ferry; Ida is now Mrs. Morrison, of Knights Ferry; Tobias is a resident of Knights Ferry; and Lulu is Mrs. Collins, of Modesto. Mr. and Mrs. Buthenuth have six children, Emma, Eva, Albert, George, Clarence and Frank. Mr. Buthenuth is well known in politics. He was nominated by the

Abraham R. Ball

Republican party for the office of supervisor of the first district of Oakdale, but was not elected. He has attended many state and county conventions, and has labored zealously for his friends and the party. Fraternally he is connected with the Oakdale Lodge No. 228, I. O. O. F., of which he is past officer, and the Woodmen of the World. Before the discontinuance of the Encampment and Canton, he was active in both organizations, and past chief of the former lodge. Formerly he was active in the Oakdale Parlor No. 142, N. S. G. W., and was the first president of the parlor. Mr. Buthenuth is a man of strong and well directed convictions, of great progressiveness and public-spiritedness, and his character and deeds are a credit to the noblest type of self-made men.

ABRAHAM R. BALL. A veteran of the Civil war, Mr. Ball has an army record of which he may well feel proud. Not many men would reenlist in the service after being honorably discharged on account of physical disability, but in the case of Mr. Ball the first taste of war was just enough to spur him on, and as soon as he was able to pass the examination he again went to the front, taking part in the memorable march of Sherman through Georgia. Since the war he has been engaged in tilling the soil, meeting with excellent success in his undertakings.

Born June 22, 1830, Mr. Ball is a son of Willis and Achsah (Kinsley) Ball, the former born near Bowling Green, Ky. At an early age he removed with his parents to Indiana, where he subsequently engaged in farming, later following the same vocation in Iowa. His death occurred in Peoria, Ill. Mr. Ball was a lineal descendant of Col. William Ball, who was a brother of George Washington's mother. The chart containing this valuable information is in the possession of A. R. Ball and is prized as one of his most valued possessions. Mrs. Ball was born in Indiana, a daughter of John Kinsley, the latter a native of New York state who migrated to Indiana, where he was for years engaged in tilling the soil.

Abraham R. Ball is the youngest son in a family of six children. His boyhood and youth were spent in the state of his nativity, but at the age of sixteen he went to Iowa, where he secured employment on a farm, making his home with his parents until attaining his majority. On starting out in life for himself he worked on farms in Iowa and also engaged in breaking oxen for neighboring farmers. Later he purchased and improved a farm of his own near Osceola, where he was living in 1862, the year of his enlistment in Company H, Fourth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. Later he was taken ill and was finally given his honorable discharge, it being thought that he was in such poor health that it would be impossible for him to remain in the service. A few weeks at home, however, made a new man of him and soon afterward he reenlisted in Company G, Thirteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and in this company he served until the close of the war. He was at the front most of the time, being with Sherman during the Atlanta campaign. After the fall of the Confederacy Mr. Ball remained with his army corps until the grand review at Washington, when he returned to his home in Iowa and there he followed farming until 1884, when he disposed of his farm and came to California.

On arriving here he located in Fresno county, purchasing forty acres of land upon which he took up his old occupation of farming. Later he sold that place and bought the ranch that has since been his home. This consists of two hundred and fifty acres and is devoted to grain and general farming. From time to time Mr. Ball has added to his first purchase, until at the present writing he and his sons, Isaac and Harry, own nearly two sections of land, being among the most extensive farmers in this section of the county. The ranch is equipped with modern appliances, including a combined harvester and other labor-saving machinery.

While residing in Iowa Mr. Ball was united in marriage with Miss Mary Fouche, who was born in Indiana and is a descendant of one of the oldest families of that state. This union has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Della, now Mrs. David Ash, of Iowa; Isaac, at home; Harry, also at home; and Achsah, now Mrs. James Sherwood.

Years ago Mr. Ball was made a Mason and he is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being a member of the Atlanta Post of Fresno. Politically a Democrat, he is at all times actively interested in the welfare of his party. Self-made in every sense of the word, he is to be congratulated on the success he has made of his opportunities, as he started without a dollar. Both he and his estimable wife are highly respected for their many excellent traits of character, and that they may live long and enjoy years of happiness is the wish of a large circle of sincere friends.

CHRISTIAN A. NELSON. For its longest established photograph gallery Bakersfield is indebted to Christian A. Nelson, who came to Bakersfield in the year 1888, when the town had much less than one thousand inhabitants within its borders, and was hardly able to support a resident photographer. Yet by economy, industry and fair dealing, the town in the meantime slowly gaining in size, he succeeded in establishing himself permanently and firmly, and built up a good business, which kept pace with the growth of the city and the improvements in the art of photography.

C. A. Nelson was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, January 4, 1847. He was reared in Odense, which is one of the oldest cities in northern Europe, being named in honor of Odin, the god of the mythology of the Germanic and Gothic nations. This city is also noted as the birthplace of Hans Christian Andersen, the author. As a boy Mr. Nelson enjoyed the advantage of a liberal education. After leaving school he went to sea in merchant vessels, visiting many ports on the shores of the Northern and Baltic seas. At the age of nineteen years, in the year 1866, he came to California and decided to remain here. Later he returned to Copenhagen to study navigation. There he married Eva J. Hoyer, also a native of that city, and brought her to San Francisco in the year 1874. She is the mother of three children, William O., who at this writing is engaged in the plumbing business in Seattle, Wash.; Clara, who is an artist in her father's studio; and Florence, who has received a commercial education as bookkeeper and stenographer in the high school of Bakersfield.

Mr. Nelson became master of vessels sailing out of San Francisco to ports on the Pacific coast of North and South America, from Alaska to Chili, but gave up the seafaring life in 1884, when he, being naturally of an artistic turn of mind, engaged in the study and practice of photography, which he has ever since cultivated. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has at this time held the office of financial secretary of the local lodge for about three years.

GEORGE W. FRANCIS. Since establishing his home in Tulare county and embarking in the stock business Mr. Francis has met with a degree of success that enables him, in the afternoon of a busy life, to enjoy the comforts so richly merited. The possession of large tracts of land indicates that he has displayed wise judgment in investments. Included in his property holdings may be mentioned his old homestead northeast of Visalia, consisting of four hundred and eighty acres; one hundred and twenty acres in close proximity to Visalia; one hundred and sixty acres in Goshen valley and a forty-acre tract near the last-named farm. Although practically retired from agricultural activities he still attends to the buying and selling of cattle and maintains the oversight of his lands.

The father of Mr. Francis was a Virginian by birth and parentage and in boyhood accompanied his parents to Ohio, settling in Muskingum county and engaging in the tilling of the soil. When the war with Mexico broke out he enlisted in the United States army and started for the front, but was never heard from afterward, and it is supposed that he died in battle or in a hospital unknown. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan Holmes, was born in Virginia, and passed away in Ohio in 1899. In their family of seven sons and five daughters George W. Francis was third in order of birth, and was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, March 13, 1830. The family being large and their means small, it was impossible for him to devote much time to school, and his education was acquired principally by self-culture, he having been from childhood a close observer and great reader.

With ox teams, wagons, and a party of emigrants, George W. Francis crossed the plains to California in 1853, and after a journey of five months and thirteen days he arrived at Hangtown, where he began mining. A few years later, in 1856, he went to the mines of Mariposa county. In 1858, abandoning mining, he went to the Kings river region and settled in Drums Valley, where he and Andrew Drum engaged in the hog business. The presence of wild animals, especially bears, incurred constant danger for their drove of hogs, and after a year he disposed of his interest in the business to his partner. About the same time (1859) he removed to a cattle ranch not far from Visalia, where eventually he acquired the control of four thousand acres and had large herds of cattle grazing on the plains. When the compulsory fence law was passed, the cattle business no longer being profitable there, he took his herds to San Luis Obispo county, although still retaining his residence near Visalia.

At Visalia, in 1860, Mr. Francis married Clementine Shipp, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of George Shipp, one of the earliest settlers of the San Joaquin valley. Mr. Shipp was born in Tennessee and there grew to manhood and married. Accompanied by his family, in 1852 he crossed the plains, following the southern route, and settled in what is now Tulare county. Immediately after his arrival he pre-empted land four miles northeast of Visalia and there raised cattle and general farm crops. In 1863 he removed to San Luis Obispo county and devoted his attention to stock raising for some years, but finally retired from active labors. His death occurred in 1894. In Tulare county his name is perpetuated as that of a very early settler. At the time he came to the county he found only a very few residents, and about the time of his arrival there came to this part of the valley such pioneers as Dr. George, Mr. Jennings, Abraham Murray, S. C. Brown, Dr. Cutler, R. Chatten and Nat. Wise, in whose honor the town was named.

Of the eight children comprising the family of Mr. and Mrs. Francis three sons and two daughters are living, namely: Gilmore, who lives near his father's home; Simeon; Walter, residing near Kingsburg; Mrs. Ida Wilkes and Mrs. Katie Weatherman, of this vicinity. The children deceased were named Andrew, William and Fred. During all of his life Mr. Francis has been an advocate of Republican principles and has supported his opinions at the ballot box. There is one thing that Mr. Francis takes pride in, and that is that he voted for Abraham Lincoln at Venice, Cal., in 1861, when there were but seventy-one votes cast and but two of these were Republican. He was implored at that time to change his principles, as Tulare county never would be won by his party, and also at this time the men raised a purse of $2.50 each for the two men who cast the Republican votes. Mr. Francis owned up to his principles but would not accept the money, and said that he wanted to live and would live to the time when his county would be carried by that party. They then told him he would have to live a thousand years, which he said he would do, it making no difference to him. That this desire was gratified was shown by the election held November 8, 1904, when the Republicans carried the county by an overwhelming majority. All through his active life he has officiated as a school trustee, in which capacity he has been helpful in promoting the interests of the school in his district.

SAMUEL HALL. At the time of his arrival in Visalia in 1874 Mr. Hall found a small hamlet planted in the midst of an uncultivated stretch of country, whose value was unknown and possibilities unrecognized. To the south Los Angeles and its outlying country were attracting permanent settlers; to the north the valley of the Santa Clara presented an inviting aspect, while westward lay the mountains that shut off the coast counties and formed a barrier to the ocean. The accident of location had prevented pioneers from investigating the possibilities of the soil, hence the San Joaquin valley was left for the civilization of the latter part of the nineteenth century.

Appreciative of the opportunities offered to permanent settlers, Mr. Hall has never regretted the decision that led him to cast in his lot with the people of Visalia. He is an Englishman and descended from a long line of English progenitors. His father, Thomas Hall, crossed the ocean from England to America in 1841 and settled in Albany, N. Y., where he followed the butcher's trade. Later he was similarly employed in other parts of the same state. January 1, 1853, he left Rome, N. Y., and proceeded to New York City, where he took ship for Panama enroute to California. The journey was uneventful, except for a serious attack of Panama fever. His first location was in Trinity county and from there he went to Shasta county, engaging in the butcher's trade. Eventually he embarked in the wholesale sheep business in San Francisco, where he remained until his death in 1872. In common with the majority of the pioneers he never lost his interest in mining, and not only did he prospect to some extent in his own state, but he joined the gold-seekers at the time of the Frazer river excitement in Montana and also went to Idaho at the time gold was discovered there. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Charlotte Smith, was born, reared and married in England, and died in San Francisco September 1, 1901, having survived him almost thirty years.

Manchester, England, is Mr. Hall's native city, and October 17, 1840, the date of his birth. He was the eldest in a family consisting of six sons and two daughters. When his parents came to the United States he was an infant, hence his earliest recollections are associated with the country which has since been his home and of which he is a loyal citizen. The common schools of New York state afforded him fair educational advantages, which have since been supplemented by extensive reading and habits of close observation. In 1858 he joined his father in California and for a time worked with him in business, later taking up the butcher's trade for himself in San Francisco. For seven years he remained in business in that city and then, in 1874, came to Visalia, where he carried on a meat market for fourteen years, meanwhile also buying and shipping stock. During 1806 he set out an orchard of twenty-five acres upon his tract of fifty-six and one-half acres, the balance of which is devoted to general farm purposes. The value of the property is enhanced by the fact that it all lies within the city limits of Visalia.

The family home of Mr. Hall, at No. 743 Goshen avenue, Visalia, was presided over by the lady whom he met and married in this city, and whose death, June 23, 1903, was a sore bereavement to him and their only child, Glenn Whitt. Mrs. Hall bore the maiden name of Hannah Whitt and was born in Missouri, being a daughter of John G. Whitt, by birth a Kentuckian but after 1812 a resident of Missouri. When quite advanced in years, during 1874, he came to California, and settled in Visalia, where he made his home with Mr. Hall until his death October 7, 1904, at the age of ninety-two years. Fraternally Mr. Hall is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In national problems he supports the Republican party, but in local matters he votes for the men and measures he considers best qualified to promote the welfare of the people.

HENRY CLAY DAULTON. Especial interest attaches to the lives of those men who, during the adventurous days following the discovery of gold in California, braved the dangers of deserts and mountains and in the midst of perils known and unknown made their difficult way toward the Pacific coast. Such a man was Henry Clay Daulton, the son of a soldier in the war of 1812, and the grandson of a Revolutionary soldier, from whom he inherited a steadfast courage and fearlessness of character. The eighth among ten children, he was born at Marysville, Ky., April 7, 1827, and in childhood accompanied the family to the vicinity of Hannibal, Mo., where he grew to manhood. By the death of his parents when he was fourteen he was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood at an age when most boys are unhampered by cares and responsibilities. Working in the employ of farmers, he continued in the home neighborhood until after news had reached him concerning gold in the far west. Immediately he resolved to seek his fortune in the mines. April 7, 1850, with a brother, he started across the plains with ox-teams, arriving August 11 in what is now Placerville. For two years he prospected in the northern mines, but, deciding after a time he could reap larger profits from a stock business, he returned east via Panama to purchase sheep and cattle for a stock ranch. While en route for his home the ship, Republican, was wrecked in a storm and taken into port of Acapulco for repairs, thus delaying him for weeks. After a tedious delay he arrived at home and at once set about purchasing sheep and cattle. In 1853 he started across the plains with his stock, being accompanied by Thomas Hildreth, who later founded the town of Hildreth. The party arrived in Los Angeles early in November, 1853, and for a few years he remained in the San Gabriel valley, but later settled on a farm twelve miles northeast of Madera, where he purchased a large tract of government land.

At the San Gabriel mission, Los Angeles county, in 1854, was solemnized the marriage of Henry C. Daulton and Mary Jane Hildreth, a daughter of Jesse, and sister of Thomas Hildreth, and who had accompanied the party across the plains. She is still residing at the old homestead in Madera county. Of her ten children five are living, namely: Mrs. Ida Saxe, of Madera; John F., of Madera; Jonathan, who is engaged in the sheep business in Madera county; Mrs.

Maude L. Mann, of Oakland; and James William, living at Imperial, San Diego county. In 1854 Mr. Daulton was elected justice of the peace of Los Angeles and held the position until his removal from the county. In 1857 he settled on what is known as the Santa Rita ranch in Fresno county, and later purchased the present homestead, which he called Shepherd's Home. In 1860 he was elected to the office of supervisor of Fresno county, and held the position until 1875, when he declined re-election. However, three years later he was persuaded to accept the position again and served for one more term. At one time the American party nominated him for the senate and he made an excellent race, although the party was numerically weak. When the subject of organizing Madera county was brought up, he became a champion of the movement, and acted as chairman of the commissioners appointed to conduct the election which decided the proposed county division. At that election, May 20, 1893, he was elected a supervisor, and when the county was organized he was made chairman of the board, which position he was filling at the time of his death. Fraternally he was connected with the Lodge and Encampment of Odd Fellows and the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Masonry.

There are few men whose influence has been felt throughout Madera county in a greater degree than that of Henry C. Daulton, and his sudden and accidental death was widely mourned. October 28, 1893, when he was driving home from town, his horse ran away, and he was thrown from the cart, his foot catching in the shaft in such a manner that he was dragged a considerable distance. When found he was dead. His untimely death cast a gloom over the community which he had so long honored by his citizenship and whose growth had been so continuously fostered by his enterprise and progressive spirit.

JOHN L. BROWN. A staunch Republican and business man of recognized ability and integrity, John L. Brown is proving his all-round worth as postmaster of Turlock, an office to which he was appointed seven years ago by President McKinley. Mr. Brown comes of very old and prominent New York ancestors, and his birth occurred in New York City, November 28, 1848. His father, James M. Brown, was born in the same city in 1811, and his largest field of usefulness was the temperance cause, in which he worked zealously for many years. He had the gift of oratory and earnestness, augmented by a singing voice which greatly added to his effectiveness in his chosen work. For years he lived in Yonkers, and so well known was he that he was called "Brown of Yonkers." A member of the Brooklyn board of health, he was also a police officer of that city, his original occupation being that of cabinet-making and building, which he practically renounced for the temperance cause. In New York he married Mary Von Tassel, a member of an old New York family of Dutch descent, and whose father's farm became a portion of the present site of the city of New York. Mr. Brown transferred his allegiance to California in 1867. His brother, John L. Brown, had immigrated to the coast in 1840, locating in Milton, Calaveras county, and thither he went after a brief residence in Stockton, and there his death occurred at the age of sixty-one. He was a man of strong character and fine moral courage, and during his all too brief existence accomplished a world of good among his fellow-men.

Attending the public schools of New York City during his childhood, John L. Brown, the subject of this sketch, later in life learned the printer's trade, and was employed on the Brooklyn Times and at job work until coming to the coast in 1866. Embarking at New York City on the clipper Seminole, under Captain Holmes, he sailed around the Horn on a four months' voyage, joining his paternal uncle in Milton and remaining with him until 1868. He then came to the San Joaquin valley, in the county of that name, and in 1870 moved to Stanislaus county, where he farmed until 1876. During that year he began to work in the Turlock warehouse. In 1889 he was made foreman and held that position for three years before severing his connection with that concern. For a year he lived with his family in Berkeley, and since then has resided in Turlock, having served as postmaster of this city for the past seven years, fulfilling the duties of his position with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the entire community. At one time he served as justice of the peace, and is now a member of the school board. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mr. Brown married Mary J. Laughlin, a native of California, whose children have all been born in Stanislaus county. The eldest daughter, Mamie, is deceased, and the others are Lulu F., Walter M., Leroy Van T. and Aetna.

NEWTON W. MILLER. Although comparatively a recent acquisition to the society of Orsi, Tulare county, Newton W. Miller has already demonstrated his ability and has won the esteem and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact, either in a business or social way. A native of Montgomery county, Ind., he was born near Ladoga January 9, 1857, the representative of a Virginian family, the first of the name born on American soil being Robert Miller, his grandfather, who was a child of English emigrants. He served in the war of 1812 and was a prominent citizen in his community. His son, James, was born in Virginia, and in manhood he located in Montgomery county, Ind., where he engaged as a farmer, and where his death occurred. He married Elizabeth Kinder, a native of Pennsylvania, who also died in Montgomery county. Her father, William Kinder, was a native of Pennsylvania, born of German ancestors and he also became an early settler in Montgomery county, Ind. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller were seven children, five sons and two daughters, of whom four sons and the two daughters are now living.

Newton W. Miller was the fourth child in the family of his parents and is the only one located in California. He spent the first eleven years of his life in Montgomery county, Ind., after which he went to live with a sister on a farm in Parke county. In pursuit of an education he attended the public school and also Wabash College. In young manhood he went to Iowa, where he remained two years, eventually returning to Indiana. He there engaged in farming in Parke county until 1890, when he came to California. He spent the first year in the west in, Visalia, engaged in the nursery business with his brother-in-law, Robert S. Demaree, the two together putting out six hundred thousand grape cuttings. The following year he located in Orsi, purchasing twenty acres of land, which has since been set to fruit trees, having now an orchard devoted principally to peaches and plums. He has also improved his property by the erection of commodious and substantial buildings, among them a fruit shed and packing house, while a railroad connects the dryer and grounds with the sulphur house. In addition to this he owns a ten-acre tract adjoining, given over to the cultivation of grapes, figs and peaches. A half mile above the Alta canal he has forty acres, which he planted to peaches and plums in 1905, the water for which is obtained from his own well. The well known Transvaal Nursery, in the northern part of Tulare county, is also owned by Mr. Miller, and in the foothills, twenty-five miles northeast of Orsi, he owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, where he makes a specialty of apple trees, this ranch being known as the Hooligan Heights apple ranch. Mr. Miller has made a success of his work and holds high rank among the most progressive and enterprising agriculturists of Tulare county.

In Parke county, Ind., December 1, 1881, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Sarah J. McCampbell, a native of that county, and a daughter of John and Nancy (Henderson) Mc-

Campbell. Her father and mother were both natives of Kentucky, of Scotch ancestry, the former a farmer by occupation in Parke county, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Miller became the parents of five children, namely: Blanche, Winnie, Ralph, Maude and Stella. Mr. Miller is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he officiates as ruling elder, and politically is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias of Orosi, in which lodge he is a past chancellor, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World, his wife being a member of the Women of Woodcraft, of which she has served as president.

IRA CHRISMAN. Honored as the descendant of a pioneer family of prominence, and distinguished not only as a native-born son, but as one of the capable and popular public officials of Tulare county, Ira Chrisman is well deserving of special mention in a work of this character. In the positions of responsibility to which he has been called, Mr. Chrisman has invariably discharged the duties devolving upon him with promptness, fidelity and success, winning the approval of his constituents. A son of the late Henry Tyler Chrisman, he was born, April 24, 1863, near Visalia, of thrifty German ancestry. His great-grandfather Chrisman emigrated from Germany to the United States, bringing with him a number of horses, and locating first west of the Blue Ridge. During the old Indian war, he was scalped by the savages while fighting in Tennessee. His son, Job Chrisman, Mr. Chrisman's grandfather, settled first in Virginia, but subsequently removed with his family to Arkansas, locating near Clarks-ville, Johnson county, where he improved a stock farm. During the Civil war marauders set fire to his barn, and when he went to loose his stock he was shot dead by the incendiaries.

A native of old Virginia, Henry Tyler Chrisman was but a child when he was taken by his parents to Arkansas, where he was reared and educated. In 1852, with B. G. Parker, he came across the plains with ox-teams to Tulare county, being six months en route. Locating in Visalia, he continued with Mr. Parker, who was a man of much influence, until 1860, when he bought one hundred and sixty acres of government land, adjoining Mr. Parker's on the west, and began the improvement of a ranch. In 1853 he went east by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and after remaining there two years came back across the plains to the Pacific coast. The following year, 1856, he again went east, again returning to California by teams across the plains in 1857, in the five years between 1852 and 1857 making a wonderful record as a traveler. He met with many narrow escapes from the Indians, just missing the Mount Meadow massacre by separating from the train with which he started, taking a different route the latter part of the journey. Succeeding well in the improvement of his original purchase of land, he bought adjoining tracts, enlarging his farm to six hundred and ninety-four acres, and on his estate, lying two miles northwest of Visalia, he resided until his death, March 16, 1892. He was enterprising and progressive in his agricultural methods, being interested in the Uphill Ditch Company from its inception, serving as its president a number of years. He put his entire ranch under irrigation, and engaged in raising wheat and alfalfa after giving up the stock business. He married Elizabeth Parker, who was born in Arkansas, and died, September 8, 1882, on the home farm, near Visalia. Of the five children born of their union, four grew to years of maturity, namely: Ira, of this review; Anderson, formerly deputy county clerk, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Mrs. L. O. Cutler, of Tulare county, and Elbert, engaged in the stock business in Tulare county.

Brought up on the home farm, and attending the district schools during the days of his boyhood and youth, Ira Chrisman completed his education at Heald's Business College, in San Francisco, where he was graduated in 1883. He subsequently assisted his father in farming for four years, after which, from January, 1887, until January, 1889, he served as deputy county sheriff under George A. Parker. The ensuing two years, from January, 1891, until January, 1893, Mr. Chrisman was deputy county recorder under C. E. Evans. After the death of his father, Mr. Chrisman, as executor of the estate, operated the home farm until it was sold, managing it most successfully. In 1894 he was elected county recorder, on the Democratic ticket, by a majority of two hundred and seventy-five. Taking the oath of office in January, 1895, he served until January, 1899, when he was not a candidate for re-election. His ability as a public official being recognized, Mr. Chrisman was not allowed to retire then to private life, but the same year, 1899, under the old charter, was elected mayor of Visalia, and at the close of his term was re-elected to the same high position. Six weeks later, on the adoption of the new charter, he was elected as the first mayor under the new charter, and served for two years as head of the municipal government of Visalia.

Becoming interested in the oil possibilities of California, Mr. Chrisman became one of the incorporators and organizers of the Devil's Den Development Company, with oil wells in the northwestern part of Kern county, and served as its superintendent for over a year, when he resigned from the position. He then served for a time as deputy county assessor under J. F. Gibson. In 1902, becoming the Democratic candidate for the office of county recorder, he was elected by a majority of nine hundred and ninety-four votes, leading his ticket, and in January, 1903, took the oath of office, for a term of four years. His record of public service has been honorable in every respect, and the handsome majority of ballots which he received at the polls give evidence of his popularity as a man and a citizen.

Mr. Chrisman married, in Visalia, May E. Robertson, a native of Georgia, and they have two children, namely: Ireta and Errol. Politically Mr. Chrisman is one of the leading Democrats of Tulare county, and active in party work. Fraternally he is a member of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., of the Knights of Pythias, of which he has served as an official, of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, which he has served as master workman two terms, of the Woodmen of the World, and was one of the first members of Visalia Parlor No. 79, N. S. G. W. Mrs. Chrisman is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

WILLIAM H. LAREW. On account of the revocation of the edict of Nantes and the massacre of St. Bartholomew the Huguenot family of La Rue were forced to flee from France and seek safety in another land. It was in this way that they became established in America and their settlement in Augusta county, Va., antedated the opening of the Revolutionary war. From there they removed to Monroe county, now a part of the state of West Virginia, but then included in the Old Dominion. Later generations gave the family name to Larue county, Ky., noted in history as the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln. The original spelling of LaRue is still followed by some branches of the family, but others have adopted the simpler form of Larue, while still others have changed the spelling to Larew.

The founder of the family in America was Abraham La Rue, whose son, Isaac, born in Augusta county, Va., was the father of Jacob, a planter of Augusta county and the first to adopt the Americanized spelling of Larew. His son, Peter, removed to Monroe county, where he was the owner of a large plantation and remained on that estate until his death. During the war of 1812 he was a soldier in the American army. Of his two sons the elder, Jacob, removed to Missouri. The younger, John M., who became the possessor of the old plantation, lived to be about seventy-seven years of age and died in the house where he was born. During the Civil war he served in the commissary department and his oldest son, Peter, was also in the army for a short time.

The Larew estate comprises a plantation of five hundred and fifty-five acres, situated three miles from Red Sulphur Springs in what is now West Virginia. The residence was erected by the grandfather, Peter Larew, and has since been added to from time to time. Built after the southern style of architecture, it forms one of the picturesque features of the locality. Since its purchase the property has never been out of the family's possession and is now the home of several of the children of John M. Larew. The latter married Sarah Peters, who was born in Monroe county and died there in 1862 thirty years before the death of her husband. She was a daughter of Col. Conrad Peters, who was born in Monroe county, Va., of German extraction, and married Clara Snidow, of Giles county, Va., also a descendant from German ancestry. In the family of John M. and Sarah (Peters) Larew there were eight children, all of whom are still living. Clara Peters, Peter and Mary Ann still occupy the family residence and Conrad Lewis resides upon a portion of the old homestead. William Henry and his youngest brother, John Snidow, are attorneys-at-law in Madera and Mariposa respectively. Margaret R. married Walter McClaugherty, an attorney of Bluefield, W. Va., and James Alexander follows farm pursuits in Mariposa county, Cal.

At the family homestead in Monroe county, W. Va., William Henry Larew was born February 8, 1855, and there he attended the district schools. At the age of sixteen he began to teach not far from the old plantation. From the time he was eighteen until twenty years of age he taught in the home district where he had attended school in boyhood. In 1875 he came to California with his brother Peter, the latter returning east in 1884. The former secured work in a warehouse at Winters, Yolo county, and then attended the state normal school at San Jose for seven months. His first term of school was taught at Salmon Creek in Humboldt county. In the fall of 1876 he taught in Yolo county and then returned to the normal to take up the studies of the senior year, leaving, however, before graduation to take a school in Hollister, San Benito county, where he was employed as vice-principal for one term. In the fall of 1878 he began to teach in Mariposa county and during the period of his residence there served as a member of the county board of education and also as county superintendent of schools.

When he came to Madera in 1891 it was Mr. Larew's purpose to engage in the manufacture of adjustable blackboards, which he had patented, but he abandoned the plan in order to take up the study of law, his early knowledge of which had been gained during his leisure hours as a school teacher. In the fall of 1891 he was admitted to the supreme court and began to practice in Madera, where he has since become a prominent attorney. Under appointment he held the office of district attorney for two years. In 1892 he organized the movement to divide Fresno county and organize a new county under the name of Madera. Aably seconded by J. W. Watkins and John M. Griffin, he launched the movement, which was successfully presented to the legislature, and the county was organized in May of 1893. He was appointed a member of the county board of education and became its first president, filling the position for a number of years. A thorough believer in education, his children have been given good advantages, in order that they might be prepared for positions of responsibility and honor. His eldest daughter, Clara Peters, married Ernest Brimmer, of Madera; the only son, James W., a graduate of the Madera schools, is employed by the Madera Sugar Pine Company; Virginia is a graduate of the Madera high school and is employed in her father's office, and Christine is a student in the grammar school. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Lawew was made a Mason in Buckeye Lodge No. 195, F. & A. M., at Winters, Cal., and is now connected with Mariposa Lodge No. 24, also Woodland Chapter No. 46, R. A. M., and Opal Chapter of the Eastern Star at Winters. In political views he has always been a believer in Democratic principles and has supported that party and its candidates by his ballot and influence.

E. D. FARROW, M. D. The distinction of being the oldest practicing physician of Tulare county doubtless belongs to E. D. Farrow, M. D., who began his professional career in Farmersville in 1875, thirty years ago. Talented and skilful, he has been very successful in his career, and has established a fine reputation throughout this part of the state as a general practitioner and likewise in eye, ear and throat diseases, which he treats with good results. He is now located at Visalia, where he has a wide and remunerative practice, extending far beyond local limits. As a boy he served in the Civil war as the mascot of the Fifteenth Maine Infantry Volunteers, entering the army before he was fifteen years old, but to this day does not know whether his name appeared on the company's roll, although he afterward drew his clothes, rations and pay, and had a good time, being a favorite with the older soldiers, who cared for him, and protected him whenever they could. A son of John P. Farrow, he was born, May 21, 1849, at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, where his Grandfather Farrow settled on emigrating from England.

John P. Farrow grew to manhood in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, but subsequently settled in business in Portland, Me., as a manufacturer of stoves. Selling out his interests in that city, he afterward removed to Oldtown, Me., where he was successfully engaged as a merchant until his death, at the advanced age of seventy-four years. He married Margaret Stewart, who was born on Prince Edward Island, where her father settled on coming from Scotland to America. She now resides in Oldtown, Me., a bright and active woman of eighty years. Of her children, three are living, Dr. E. D., the special subject of this sketch, being the oldest child.

Brought up and educated in Portland, Me., E. D. Farrow attended the grammar and high schools of that city. During the progress of the Civil war he enlisted without his parents' consent. Leaving his books under a plank sidewalk, he ran away from home, going to Washington, D. C., where he joined the Fifteenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, entering the quartermaster's department, but afterward was attached to Company H as a musician. During the last year of the war he accompanied the regiment through the Shenandoah valley, serving until the close of the war, when, with his comrades, he returned home. He was at that time a strong, wiry and hardy boy, full of life and activity, overflowing with fun, ready to see the humorous side of any situation, and the anecdotes of army life which are indelibly impressed on his mind are both amusing and interesting. Although he had some hard experiences, he stood the long, hard marches most remarkably well.

Returning to Portland from the scene of conflict, the youth completed the course of study in the high school, after his graduation working for a year in the Portland office of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. He subsequently worked as a clerk in a wholesale establishment, later being employed in a drug store in that city. Going thence to Missouri, he located in Hamilton, where his uncle, Dr. R. D. King, was a practicing physician and a druggist. He at once began work in his uncle's drug store, and at the same time read medicine under his instruction, continuing for five years. Entering then the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, he took four courses of lectures there, being graduated in March, 1874, with the degree of M. D. Returning to Hamilton, Mo., Dr. Farrow practiced medicine there for a year, and then, in March, 1875, migrated to California. Locating immediately at Farmersville, Tulare county, he built up a thriving practice in that vicinity, traveling on horseback over a large territory, his trips oftentimes extending over fifty miles. For four years the doctor was away from Tulare county, spending two years in Amador county, and for two years practicing medicine in Salt Lake City. Returning from there to California, he has since been one of the leading physicians of Visalia, having built up a large practice. By his excellent business ability and foresight, the doctor has been financially successful. For a number of years he served as county physician, and now fills that position; he is also district surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

In 1876, in Tulare county, Dr. Farrow married Mary E. Overall, a native of the county and a daughter of one of its honored pioneer settlers, D. G. Overall, a large landholder and a capitalist. Dr. and Mrs. Farrow are the parents of three children, namely: Mary Edna, wife of W. L. Fisher, of Tulare county; Daisy, living at home, and E. D., Jr., a student at the Berkeley high school. Politically Dr. Farrow is a staunch supporter of the principles advocated by the Democratic party, and formerly belonged to the county central committee. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, he is a member of the County Medical Society and of the Pacific Coast Association of Railway Surgeons.

JAMES SHURTLIFF STONE. The history of Stanislaus county runs parallel with the best years of James Shurtliff Stone, a California pioneer of 1850, whose death, December 27, 1900, removed yet another of that brave class of men whose physical and mental strength carried them safely through Indian-infested plains, and made clear their duty to conquer whatever lay in the way of the civilization of the Pacific slope. Mr. Stone is recalled as one of the best and most successful farmers and stock-raisers which this county has known. He was born February 10, 1820, in Jefferson county, N. Y., whither his father, Andrew, had removed at an early day, and where he had cleared a farm in a timbered wilderness. The youth was one in a large family which taxed the resources of the farm, and his educational and other opportunities were strangely in contrast with those enjoyed by the farmer boys of Jefferson county today. His twenty-first year found him with hardened muscles and great capacity for work, and with an ambition which reached out beyond his father's fences, and groped in the little understood country bordering on the Pacific. The early spring of 1850 found him aboard a vessel turned toward the south sea, and eventually he rounded the Horn and proceeded north to the land of his youthful dreams. Four years in the mines of the state enlarged his horizon, made him acquainted with more phases of life than he had ever heard of, and familiarized him with the bravery and good fellowship which often has its being under rough and uncouth exteriors. Returning to New York in 1854, Mr. Stone married Mary McAlister, with whom he had attended the little log schoolhouse of Jefferson county, and who had been his chief inspiration in seeking a fortune in the west. The ceremony gladdened the hearts of the neighbors and friends May 28, 1854, the bride being a daughter of Alexander McAlister, a native of Ireland, and who came to the United States with his parents when twelve years old. Locating in New Orleans, the McAlisters were overtaken by disaster shortly after, for yellow fever was raging, and the parents died leaving five children. Alexander attained his majority amid much tribulation, for responsibility fell thick around him, and left little time for the enjoyment or improvement of his life. Eventually he settled in Jefferson county, N. Y., having previously farmed for a time in Oswego county. In the latter he established a home of his own, marrying Isabelle Lindell, born in Rhode Island, and daughter of English parents who became pioneers of Oswego county. He finally removed to Theresa, N. Y., where he rounded out his busy life managing a grocery business. Like his grandfather, who removed from Scotland and established the family in Ireland, Mr. McAlister lived to a good old age, seventy-four years and several months, being survived by his wife until her eighty-fourth year.

Discontented in the east after his experience in the west, Mr. Stone started for Pike's Peak in 1850, but on the way changed his mind and continued his journey to California. In February, 1860, his wife joined him after a journey across the Isthmus of Panama, and together they followed farming in Tuolumne county, at the same time becoming interested in mining. Mr. Stone opened a mine two miles above Knights Ferry, expecting to realize largely on its output, but a flood filled it with water and cut short his operations. Thereafter he lived on rented farms in different parts of Tuolumne county until 1864. He then bought property three miles above Knights Ferry, and engaged in the stock business. Success came his way, for he was both frugal and industrious, and as good a manager as his neighborhood has ever known. At the climax of his prosperity he owned seventeen hundred and eighty acres of land in one body, and raised hundreds of high-grade stock.

After the death of Mr. Stone his widow continued to live on the farm until 1903, when she rented the property to her brother, Spencer McAlister, who devotes it to stock and grain. She has since built a handsome residence in Oakdale, where she is surrounded with material comforts, and where she enjoys the companionship of many warm friends. A son, Burton W., died in his nineteenth year, and a daughter, Mattie, is now Mrs. Anthony Arnold of Oakdale. Mrs. Arnold has four children: Mrs. Bertha Capps, Edna, Gertrude and James. Mrs. Stone is a gracious and hospitable woman, a believer in the Democratic party, and a staunch supporter of schools and wholesome diversions. She treasures the memory of her kind and sympathetic husband, recalling the noble traits which animated his life and the broad and tolerant sympathies which he held for all mankind.

J. WILBUR CATE. Thoroughness has been the watchword of J. Wilbur Cate of Fresno in whatever he has attempted to do, so whatever of failure has attended his efforts has not been the fault of himself but rather that of a combination of circumstances, while he has labored persistently and untiringly for that success which to-day places him among the representative men of Fresno. As a member of the real estate firm of Moore & Cate he is actively interested in the development of the city and surrounding country, and while seeking his own success also bends every energy to promote the general welfare. Deservedly popular and esteemed, he ranks among the first men of the community. A native Californian, Mr. Cate was born in Los Angeles county, near San Gabriel, November 17, 1863, the youngest member of the family born to his parents, his father dying in March, 1900, and his mother still living in Los Angeles. The elder Mr. Cate was a pioneer of this state, having crossed the plains with ox-teams from New Hampshire and became the first white settler between the two San Gabriel rivers. For more complete details concerning the life of this pioneer refer to his sketch which appears on another page of this work.

In 1888 J. Wilbur Cate attended the Los Angeles Commercial College, and in 1893 he came to Fresno and engaged in business here. With his father he entered into the milling business at Clovis, the firm being known as J. W. Cate & Son, in the course of three years improving and enlarging the business until they had a capacity of one hundred barrels per day. At the expiration of that period they met with a loss of about $30,000 by the burning of the mill. The junior member of the firm then went to Edmonton, Alberta Province, Canada, and in 1897 outfitted a party to establish an overland route to the headwaters of the Pelly river, a tributary of the Yukon. Mr. Cate became captain of the party of twenty-seven men, who took with them an outfit which cost $20,000, consisting of one hundred and sixty head of horses packed with provisions, etc. The expedition met with disaster; the horses died from exposure about a thousand miles out, and with the exception of Mr. Cate and two comrades the party went into winter quarters. These three made their way out by going down Slave lake and river, and Athabasca river, and thence on foot to Edmonton. Mr. Cate then returned to Fresno and engaged as a vineyardist, but shortly afterward bought out the Fresno Undertaking Company and established and built up a successful undertaking business, being located on J street, where he remained for four years. He met with success in this work, becoming widely known as a successful embalmer, and there was every inducement for him to remain so engaged, but he sold out, at the same time giving up the position which he had occupied as deputy coroner under Dr. G. L. Long, having conducted the inquests for the county for four years. In October, 1902, he bought out the interest of I. G. Nees of the firm of Moore & Nees, real estate, loan and insurance men, and since then has been identified with this business.

In Rivera Mr. Cate was married to Jennie A. Coffman, a native of Marysville and the daughter of Alfred Coffman, a pioneer of the Sacramento valley. Mrs. Cate is a finely educated woman, being a graduate of the state normal school at San Jose. Mr. and Mrs. Cate are the parents of three children, Clyde, Leroy and Alfred. Socially and fraternally Mr. Cate occupies a prominent position in Fresno, being a member of the Apollo Club and Fresno Auto Club, and belongs to the following orders: Fresno Lodge No. 274, F. & A. M.; Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M.; Fresno Lodge No. 186, I. O. O. F.; Fresno Encampment No. 78; Fresno Canton No. 30 of the Rebekahs; Fresno Lodge No. 138, K. P.; Uniformed Rank, K. P., and is now serving as quartermaster with the rank of captain in the California No. 4; Woodmen of the World, Fresno Camp No. 160; M. W. A., Sunset Camp No. 7199; and Fresno Parlor No. 25, N. S. G. W. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and president of the Young Men's Christian Association, and politically is a Democrat. Always interested in the advancement of the city's prosperity he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

OSCAR NELSON. Among the younger generation of men who will long be remembered for the influence their personality left upon the community in which they resided is Oscar Nelson, who was born near Oskarson, Smoland, Sweden, April 30, 1867, a son of Nels and Hannah Nelson, the latter of whom died there in 1883. Nels Nelson was a large land holder, and is now a lumber manufacturer in a nearby city.

Oscar Nelson received a common-school education in his home city and in 1886 left Sweden and came to America. Going to Kansas, he remained there a few months, then left for California and located in Tulare county in 1887. He found employment in the lumber camps for about one year, and in 1888 embarked on an independent venture, eventually becoming an extensive dealer in wood, shipping to Kern and Fresno counties, also supplying the railroads. He manufactured charcoal, for which he found a ready market. Purchasing timber land, he cleared it and embarked in the stock business. As success came his way he enlarged his operations and became the owner of two hundred and twenty acres on the St. Johns river. He made Visalia his home until the fall of 1904, removing then to the house he had erected on his land, and where he died December 12, 1904.

Besides his home place he owned eighty acres on the Mineral King road, devoting this and the home ranch to the stock business. He was a member of Four Creeks Lodge, I. O. O. F., a Lutheran in religious belief, and a Republican in politics.

July 6, 1897, in Visalia, Mrs. Sadie E. (Burnham) Carlton became his wife. She was born in Waterloo, Iowa, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Vanderbergh) Burnham. Mr. Burnham was a native of Massachusetts, and followed carpentering in Waterloo, Iowa. Coming to California, he settled in Visalia and followed his trade until his retirement. He was a soldier in the Thirty-second Massachusetts Regiment during the Civil war; was wounded in battle and taken prisoner, being confined in Libby prison. His wife was born in Blackhawk county, Iowa, and became the mother of six children. Mrs. Nelson, the eldest child, was educated in the schools of Iowa and Massachusetts and engaged in educational work until her marriage to David Carlton, in Clear Lake, Iowa. Mr. Carlton died four years later, leaving two children born of this union: Ernest W. at home, and David, deceased. In 1891 Mrs. Carlton came to Visalia and was here married to Mr. Nelson. Four children were born of this marriage, Carl, Paul, Nadine, deceased, and Idene. Mrs. Nelson is a Methodist, becoming converted when sixteen years of age.

Oscar Nelson was a self-made man in every sense of the word. Of strong character and public spirit he made friends wherever he went, was devoted to his family and true to his friends, and his death is a loss felt by the whole county.

and president of the firm of C. W. Wood & Company, commission merchants, 406-408 California street, San Francisco, also owner of one of the finest fruit ranches and one of the most modern country homes in Merced county. Mr. Wood possesses the shrewdness, adaptability and practical common sense which characterizes the men responsible for the upbuilding of the state. He not only is able to recognize an opportunity, but knows how to take advantage of it to the permanent good of himself and others. Behind his effort is the pride of all worthy native sons of California, and more especially that of one thoroughly in harmony with the present and the future of the west. Born in old Gilroy August 21, 1864, he is a son of Uriah Wood, whose life and deeds are set forth elsewhere in this work, and who is numbered as one of the resourceful and successful pioneers of the state.

The oldest of four children, C. W. Wood had exceptional educational advantages in his youth, going from the district schools to St. Augustine College at Benicia, from there to the Military Academy of San Mateo, and later attending the Hopkins Academy of Oakland. After graduating from Heald's Business College in San Francisco he inaugurated his business career as a bookkeeper and assistant cashier of the Bank of Hollister, and eight months later, in 1885, he started a dairy business with three hundred and seventy acres of land and one hundred and twenty head of cattle at San Felipe. His business grew apace, and he established a cheese and butter manufactory on his ranch, having plenty of alfalfa and excellent water from numerous artesian wells. From 1885 until 1889 he supplied the San Francisco markets with butter and cheese, and after disposing of his enterprise came to Los Banos and leased the Los Banos ranch of five thousand acres, devoting the same to grain and stock until 1893. He then permanently located on his present ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, two and one half miles northeast of Los Banos, all under irrigation from the old canal, and upon which he had already set out an orchard consisting of one hundred acres of prunes, ten acres of peaches and five acres of apricots. This was an experimental venture, and was found to be fairly successful, notwithstanding the fact that ten acres of prunes were set out on low ground, and the apricots did not come up to requirements. Mr. Wood has his own dryers and packing house, and furnishes direct to Eastern markets. He has given the study of fruit growing and packing exhaustive consideration, availing himself of every possible means of keeping in touch with the best producers in all tropical climes.

As one of the incorporators and the vice-president of the Uriah Wood Company, Mr. Wood

CHESTER WORTHINGTON WOOD.

Among the foremost and substantial exponents of western success in Merced county is Chester Worthington Wood, one of the incorporators and vice-president of the Uriah Wood Company, has assumed a large and varied responsibility, having the management of the four thousand five hundred acres belonging to the company in Merced county; of the San Felipe dairy, which is leased as a seed farm; and of residence and business property in San Jose. They expect to bring their dairy up to a thousand cattle, and indications promise one of the most complete dairying enterprises in this part of California. As a Republican Mr. Wood has taken a prominent part in the local deliberations of his party, has represented his district in state and county conventions, and served on the county central committee. His influence along educational lines has resulted in constant improvement in school buildings, and in the standard of instruction adopted in both county and towns. He was a member of the school board from 1885 until 1904, and during most of that time was clerk of the board. Fraternally he is connected with the Los Banos Lodge No. 312, F. & A. M., and was a charter member of Fremont Parlor No. 44, N. S. G. W., of Hollister. In Hollister Mr. Wood was united in marriage with Minnow Ingels, born in 1864, while her parents were on a trip to California. Her father, the late Benjamin F. Ingels, eventually settled in the state, becoming a grain and stock-raiser near Hollister, later removing to a fruit ranch near San Jose. Mr. Ingels is survived by his wife, formerly Martha Stewart, who at present resides in San Jose. Mrs. Wood is a graduate of the Hollister College, and is the mother of two children, Chester Earl, born in 1886, now attending the University of California, class of 1908; and Hazel Vivian, born in 1888, a student in the high school of Los Banos. Mr. Wood is one of the substantial and reliable business men of Merced county, and one in whom the future commercial interests of the locality are safely vested. Scattered over the state are many who enjoy his friendship, who feel a just pride in his business success, in his conversational and other gifts and his faculty of diffusing an air of prosperity, happiness and energy. He has a just appreciation of the social duties of life, is a capital shot and sportsman and has in his possession many prizes and trophies of the chase.

ALFRED EDWARD PURCELL, one of the original proprietors of the site of Oakdale, was born in Kentucky in 1825, and when a mere boy removed with his parents to Montrose, Lee county, Iowa, where he was reared on a farm in a new and sparsely settled country. His active mind received its first educational impulse at the rude schoolhouse in the vicinity of his home and his muscles were hardened and his exuberance curbed, in the hard struggle for existence which confronted the youth of his time and place. Into his uneventful farming existence came an opening for something better and broader with the breaking out of the Mexican war, in which he enlisted and veteranized, a volunteer in two Iowa regiments.

With the desire for achievement surging in his brain, Mr. Purcell followed the universal trend of 1850 and crossed the plains in an ox-train, enduring the hardships, suffering and imminent danger common to the lot of the men of daring and courage who comprised the fortune seekers of that time. Not realizing his mining expectations, he turned his attention to sheep raising in partnership with A. J. Patterson, who is still living, purchasing a large tract of land, a part of which eventually became the site of the prosperous and homelike town of Oakdale. Success came his way, and his worldly possessions took on dignified and substantial proportions. The partners, out of the fullness of their opulence, and their public-spiritedness, presented one-half of the town site and the right of way to the railroad company to locate the town, the deeds to lots bearing the signatures of Patterson, Purcell & Jackson. The partners also owned a large tract of land in San Luis Obispo county, twelve miles from Paso Robles, where for some years Mr. Purcell lived, and engaged in an extensive stock business. On returning to Oakdale, he resumed his farming and stock raising at this point, his farm being one and a half miles south of the town, but eventually the approach of old age brought its additional burdens of ill-health and loss of energy, and his last years were spent in Oakdale, where he suffered greatly, although patient and uncomplaining. In this emergency the superintending of his farm and general business devolved upon his step-daughter, Sadie Kelley, now Mrs. Mehler, to whom he was devotedly attached, and in whose good judgment and ability he placed implicit confidence. Mr. Purcell married, in Keokuk, Iowa, in 1873, Mrs. Sabra (Williams) Kelley, who was born in Mansfield, Ohio, the widow of Dr. James Kelley, a graduate of the Keokuk Medical College, and a prominent physician and surgeon of Montrose for many years. Mrs. Purcell had one child by her first marriage, and two by her second. She is now living with her daughter, Sadie, in Oakdale. Mr. Purcell died in Oakdale July 24, 1902, and not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant of the town, has there been more sincere regret at the passing of its most honored men. He was the soul of integrity, the embodiment of industry, and the rarest example of good judgment, large-heartedness, and public-spiritedness, and his services in behalf of the early upbuilding of Stanislaus county and Oakdale cannot be overestimated.

J. D. Ryburn

Mrs. Edward M. Mehler's career presents many claims upon the appreciation and gratitude of her fellow citizens of Oakdale. She is a woman of ability and resource, and in any emergency which has presented itself for her consideration, has proved herself apt and ready and faithful. As the manager of her step-father's estate she has shown unusual shrewdness and reliability. Prior to her marriage she engaged in educational work for ten years, nine of which were spent in her home town. In 1897 she started what has since become the largest, most complete and finest millinery establishment in Stanislaus county, bringing to bear upon her chosen occupation the taste, discretion, obligingness and business sagacity needful for the conduct of an enterprise patronized by the best and most exclusive trade in this part of the county. Mrs. Mehler is the mother of one son, Alfred Edward. Of the other children of Mr. Purcell's family, Alfred Edward died at the age of twenty-three, and Maude L. is the wife of Frank Anderson, of Seattle, Wash. The Purcell family, as established by the grand old pioneer, is honored for its good name, the beneficence of its members, their business ability, and their social and generally useful qualities.

JOSEPH DAVIDSON REYBURN. A pioneer among primitive scenes and conditions, Joseph Davidson Reyburn has been an active participant in all that has tended to develop this section of the San Joaquin valley, his home now being three miles east of Clovis, Fresno county. He is a native of Burlington, Iowa, where he was born December 25, 1840, a son of J. S. Reyburn (see sketch of J. J. Reyburn in another part of this volume). He was reared in his native state and educated in the public schools, which were held in log buildings. Trained to practical farm work, when twenty years old he engaged in this work for himself, being employed on neighboring farms. In 1862 he came west in company with others, traveling by mule team across the plains, via the Platte river to The Dalles, Ore., thence down the Columbia river to Portland, where they obtained their first good meal after leaving home. They went on to Marion county, where they wintered in Howell's Prairie, but on account of the rain they were dissatisfied with the climate, and in 1863 drove over the mountains on the stage route to California. From the Sacramento river they went to Folsom and crossed the mountains into Carson City, Nev., where Mr. Reyburn engaged in teaming to Virginia City until the fall of that year. In September he drove the same team to Stockton, San Joaquin county, Cal., in the vicinity of which place he spent the winter and disposed of his mules at that time. The following season he went to Nevada once more and was employed until the fall of 1864, when he returned to California and settled on the Stanislaus river in the county of that name. Upon the present site of Salida he pre-empted and homesteaded three hundred and twenty acres, for the first two years engaging in the lumber business on the Tuolumne river. He was married in 1869, when he began the cultivation and improvement of his property, continuing in grain farming until 1881, when he sold out for $50 per acre. He then came to Fresno county, and with J. P. Vincent purchased three sections of land on the plains, but later sold two to his partner. The next year he bought three sections more, and with the one which he had reserved in the sale to Mr. Vincent he then owned four. One of these he eventually sold to John Lester, leaving him then three sections located on sections 11, 12 and 13, of township 13, range 21, east. Since his location in California he has been engaged in the raising of wheat, his entire service as an agriculturist being about thirty-eight years, during which he has never had a total failure of crops. Having so much land, he summer fallows a half each year, and in this way keeps it as rich and productive as when he first entered it. He plows three times between crops, the first plowing being between eight and nine inches, the second about four inches. He replants, and in the seeding time he plows again and seeds it. The last few years he has rented to his son, but the same process has been carried out since he has so ably demonstrated the success of the idea. He also improved a home on section 13, where his son now resides. In 1892 he erected a large and handsome residence on section 11, where he makes his home, forty acres in this location being in Muscat grapes, while twenty acres is devoted to a peach orchard.

The first marriage of Mr. Reyburn united him with Mary Ella Lester, a native of Iowa, who came to California and located in Stanislaus county, near the property homesteaded by Mr. Reyburn. She died in 1893, leaving a family of the following children: Charles T., a clerk in Fresno; Leslie D., farming on the home place; Glenn W., attending Stanford University; Emery Everett, superintendent of the home farm; C. Ray and Ida May, twins; Walter P. and John L., all at home, and one child, who died in infancy. In San Jose, May 9, 1897, Mr. Reyburn married Anna P. Buckley, a native of Auburn and a graduate of the State Normal at San Jose. Before her marriage she engaged for eleven years as a teacher. They are the parents of five children, namely: Gilbert Rowell, who died at the age of two years; Gladys, Alfred, Doris and Mary Margaret. For over thirty-five years Mr. Reyburn has been a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in the Clovis church is ruling elder, which office he has filled for twenty years. He has also served as superintendent of the Sunday school. His children all inherit musical talent and are in demand socially on account of their splendid voices. Politically Mr. Reyburn is a Republican and is strong in national politics. He has always taken an active interest in all public affairs. He took a prominent part in the organization of the Jefferson school district, and has been a director for many years. The building erected then is still standing. He assisted materially in the organization of the state grange in Napa in 1876, and was the first master of the local grange at Salida.

WALLACE FERGUSON. The manager of the Oakdale Water Works is eminently fitted for his important responsibility, not only because he is faithful to trusts imposed, and conscientious beyond the average, but because years of his life have been devoted to a trade bearing upon his present occupation. As a blacksmith he was proud of his handiwork, and was never at a loss for occupation, and it is safe to predict that under his management the water works will continue to fulfill their mission of usefulness to the citizens of Oakdale in a manner both gratifying and progressive. Mr. Ferguson is a westerner by adoption, having been born in Amsterdam, Montgomery county, N. Y., September 15, 1842. His ancestry is that of the rugged products of the Scotch highlands, and his tendencies are in accord with their high regard for plain living and honest dealing. His Grandfather Ferguson brought his family to America when John P., the father of Wallace, was five years old, settling in Montgomery county, N. Y., where he lived to an advanced age. John P. Ferguson was reared on a farm, and in early manhood married Maria Van Warner, a native also of Montgomery county, and daughter of an early Dutch settler of that vicinity. The family was an old one on the Mohawk river, owning extensive lands along its placid waters. Not content with farming, John P. in middle life turned his attention to railroad contracting on the New York Central, but died in comparatively early life, when Wallace was eight years of age. He was survived by his wife until her fifty-fifth year. His oldest son, William, served in the Civil war during its entire course, his death occurring while on an expedition up the Red river. John is a retired mechanic of Amsterdam, N. Y.; Almeran P. also lives in Amsterdam; Mark lives in Marquette, Mich.; and Mary E. is the wife of Mr. Davis, of Amsterdam, N. Y.

Until his seventeenth year Wallace Ferguson lived on a farm near Amsterdam, and during that time gleaned whatever of education was to be found in a little red schoolhouse somewhat remotely situated from his home. A leaning toward things mechanical led himself and brother John to learn the blacksmith trade, and he apprenticed in Amsterdam to a man for three years, receiving, in addition to room and board, $25 for the first, $35 for the second, and $45 for the third years, in all $105 in money, for the three years. He afterward worked in a foundry and machine shop for three or four years, and then, with his brother John, bought out the shop in which they served their apprenticeship and ran it for eight years. Feeling the limitations by which he was surrounded, and having great faith in the west as a field of activity for the industriously inclined, Mr. Ferguson came to California by way of Panama in 1874, continuing his journeyings from San Francisco to Burnett by rail, and from Burnett to Knights Ferry by boat. Here he worked at his trade until 1876 for another man, and then rented a shop for a year, at the end of that time purchasing its business and good-will. Twenty-five years he continued the increasingly successful and popular artisan, having a trade extending far beyond the borders of the town, and accumulating a comfortable fortune through the exercise of caution and economy. Weary of the close confinement, and desiring an all-around change, he rented the shop, which he still owns, in 1901, and in 1902 removed to Oakdale, where he built a residence the following year.

In the meantime, December 25, 1879, Mr. Ferguson married, in Knights Ferry, Anna Roberts, a native of that town, and daughter of Thomas Roberts, a native of Cornwall, England. Mr. Roberts immigrated to America and California in 1855, living in Knights Ferry for many years, and in 1884 starting the Oakdale Water Works, of which he eventually became sole owner. The death of himself and wife in 1899 put an end to his management of the enterprise, or rather to his supervision, as he had previously leased the works to a Mr. Rand for a period of ten years. Mr. Rand in the meantime had died suddenly, and his administrator, Dr. C. A. Case, undertook the management of the works. Mr. Ferguson had been appointed administrator of the Roberts estate, and in 1903 bought out the lease of the works and assumed the active management himself. Mrs. Ferguson is the second oldest in a family of five daughters, the others being Salina, now Mrs. Boling, of San Francisco; Nellie, now Mrs. Harriman, of Oakdale; Laura, Mrs. Abernethy, of Santa Cruz; and Mabel, the wife of Gilbert Baker, of Oakdale. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have three children, of whom Herbert J. is in San Francisco, and Beatrice C. and Irma are at home. Mr. Ferguson adds to his business success an inclination toward general affairs, and is of an especially social turn of mind. His standing in the community is attested by membership in the Masonic fraternity, he having come here from the Artisan Lodge No. 84, of Amsterdam, N. Y., and also the Royal Arch Masons. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Ferguson impresses all who know him as a man of latent as well as developed resources, as a man of energy and dignity of character, yet as the most genial and approachable of associates. He is honorable and sincere, public-spirited and enterprising, and as such adds to the importance of an enterprise intimately connected with the welfare of the city.

ORAMIL MCHENRY. One of the soundest and most conservative financial institutions of Stanislaus county is the First National Bank of Modesto, of which that popular and progressive citizen, Oramil McHenry, is the president and propelling force. In his efforts to elevate the standard of his adopted city, though he is himself a native of Stanislaus county, he has given his voice and vote to all worthy causes and has lent the weight of his influence on the side of advancement. He is connected with various of the business movements of the city, and has from time to time become the possessor of much country property, including twelve thousand acres in the Modesto and Turlock districts, the greater part of which is now rented. Possessing a splendid knowledge of finance, which is his by inheritance as well as training, he has made the best of the opportunities with which he was surrounded from childhood, and has, besides, the satisfaction of knowing that all who know him wish him well, and rejoice in the strict integrity which characterizes all of his dealings.

Born November 14, 1861, Oramil McHenry is the son of Robert McHenry, a citizen for many years connected with the business interests of Modesto and revered for the many fine qualities which were manifest in his life. The elder man was a native of Vermont, from which state he emigrated in manhood to New York, later locating in Louisiana, where he had charge of a large plantation. During the Mexican war, in 1846, he came to California via the Isthmus, locating in 1849 in Stockton, where he was engaged in draying. Going to the mines at Chinese Camp, he remained for a period of six months, after which he came to Stanislaus county, and took up the land which now constitutes the ranch known as Bald Eagle. This then consisted of two thousand, six hundred and forty acres, but was afterward increased to four thousand. In 1878 he located in Modesto and engaged in the banking business, becoming the cashier of The Modesto Bank, in which capacity he remained until 1884. Upon the incorporation of the First National Bank of Modesto he became its president and so continued until 1890, when he was succeeded by his son, his death occurring June 2 of the same year. He married Matilda Hewitt, a native of Ohio, whose death occurred here in 1896 at the age of fifty-six years. She had crossed the plains with ox-teams in the early '50s, her father, Samuel, locating in the San Joaquin valley, where he spent the remainder of his life.

The only child of his parents, Oramil McHenry was reared to manhood in Stanislaus county, receiving his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, afterward attending the State University for three years. He then engaged with his father in the First National Bank, acting as bookkeeper until the death of his father, when he became president, assuming the duties in 1890 and acceptably filling the position to the present time. Besides being largely interested in the real estate of Stanislaus county, he is connected with the general merchandise company of Modesto, known as G. P. Shaffer & Co., the stock of their store being valued at $155,000. He is also interested in The Modesto Bank, being a director and the largest stockholder. The growth of the First National Bank has been remarkable, at the time of its incorporation in 1884 having a capital of but $50,000, and three years later doubling that amount, while the capital is now $100,000 with a reserve of $75,000.

The marriage of Mr. McHenry occurred in Modesto and united him with Myrtle Conneau, a graduate of Stanford University, class of 1901. Fraternally he is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and is also identified with the Masons, belonging to the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Modesto, and with the Native Sons of the Golden West. Politically he is a Republican.

R. E. HYDE. The career of no leader in commercial affairs of Tulare county furnishes a more striking example of the wise application of sound principles and safe conservatism than does that of Richard E. Hyde. Like many others who were important factors in shaping the destinies of the new west, he is a product of the east, bringing to the coast the priceless heritage of industry, energy, brains and confidence. These are the men whose influence has been far-reaching and notable in the history of the west. The Bank of Visalia, the pioneer monetary institution of Tulare county, Cal., and one of the oldest in the San Joaquin valley, was established by Mr. Hyde in August, 1874, and has since been under the presidency of this able and high-mindful financier, his present associates being C. J. Giddings, cashier; S. C. Brown, C. L. Adams and E. O. Larkin, directors.

Richard E. Hyde was born in what is now Port Ewen, Ulster county, N. Y., and is a son of David and Sarah (Houghtaling) Hyde, natives also of New York state. The circumstances surrounding his youth were such as to inspire an appreciation of honest toil, of frugality and sterling integrity, and also of sympathy with and good-will toward his fellow men, and with these assets he set forth at a comparatively early age to earn his own living as clerk in a mercantile store. He had six brothers: Abram, Jeremiah, Alfred, Christopher, John and William. His father dying when he was quite young, the training of the sons was watched over by a devout Christian mother, whose love and ceaseless devotion were rewarded by the knowledge that all of the sons developed into exemplary men and were a credit to their respective communities. Two of them, Christopher and John, settled on pioneer land in Wisconsin, and became important agricultural factors in their neighborhoods. John reared a large family, and Christopher reared two daughters and one son, the latter, Clarence, being now in business in Oakland.

Mr. Hyde began his western career as clerk in a mercantile store in one of the mining districts of California. Later he engaged in the mercantile business on his own responsibility in Santa Cruz, still later establishing the Bank of Visalia. Mr. Hyde combines the conservatism and caution of the east with the energy of the west and opportunity has never had to knock twice at his door. His interests are large and invade many avenues of activity, and the faculty of success has found in him a master of strong proportions. The many buildings erected by him in Visalia and his association with commercial undertakings attest his faith in the city and county. He is known as the wealthiest, as well as one of the most dignified and reserved men in the business world of the San Joaquin valley, where he embodies the personification of commercial and social honor. Newer generations will profit by his example and revere his memory.

C. ELMER CODY, who has already gained considerable prominence as an orchardist in Fresno county, Cal., is one of the younger generation of citizens who are rapidly working their way to a place of honor and success by their untiring efforts, ability and energy. Although from his earliest recollections he remembers no other than a California home, he was born August 18, 1871, in Tecumseh, Neb., a son of Truman B. and Mary A. (Vaughn)

Cody, the former born in New York in 1832 and the latter a native of Wisconsin, and it was in the latter state that their marriage took place.

T. B. Cody and his wife came to California in 1875, and located in Tulare county and this continued to be their home for a number of years, and while residing there, farming occupied the attention of Mr. Cody. It was in 1884 that the family came to Fresno county to live, and Mr. Cody purchased at that time a ranch in Rosedale school district, and here it was that his subsequent years were spent until 1903. Leaving his sixty-acre ranch to the care and management of his son Elmer, he retired to Los Angeles, Cal., where he anticipates spending his declining years in the quiet enjoyment of his life of toil.

Being but a few years old when brought to California by his parents, C. Elmer Cody, during his early boyhood days, attended school in Tulare county and after the removal of the family to Fresno county, his education was completed within its borders. Having been reared in the rural districts, he very naturally followed ranching pursuits. In addition to managing his father's farm he owns a sixty-acre farm four miles south of Sanger and upon this he raises fruit extensively. By his marriage October 15, 1896, he united his fortunes with those of Anna E. Powell, a Virginian, and they have three children, Rose Ellen, Hatie May and John C. At all times a staunch supporter of the Republican party, Mr. Cody is not an active politician nor an aspirant to office, and fraternally he is allied with the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Brotherhood of Del Rey. He is one of the enterprising men of his locality and is a man of shrewd and unerring judgment.

JOHN JAY VANDERBURGH. As editor, publisher and proprietor of the Selma Irrigator, John Jay Vanderburgh is widely and favorably known, and is carrying on a successful business. Under his judicious management, the paper exerts a healthful influence throughout the community, encouraging the establishment of beneficial enterprises, and promoting as far as possible its industrial, financial, educational and moral progress. A son of the late Isaac K. Vanderburgh, he was born April 13, 1866, in Waterloo, Blackhawk county, Iowa.

A native of Canada, Isaac K. Vanderburgh was born in Norwich, Oxford county, on the parental farm. After his marriage he settled in the United States, and as a member of a government party helped survey the state of Iowa. He made his residence in Blackhawk and adjoining counties, where he resided nearly twenty years. Coming to California with his family in 1875, he continued in his chosen occupation, living near Firebaugh, Fresno county, four years, and in Santa Cruz county two years. Returning to Fresno county in 1881, he bought forty acres of land lying five miles north of Selma, it being a railway claim, and was there engaged in ranching until his death in 1890. He was a very successful business man, and an active member of the Republican party. He married Pluma Gaines, who was born March 16, 1834, in Barre, Oswego county, N. Y. She is a woman of considerable business ability, and since the death of her husband has been very successful in the management of the home ranch, among other improvements which she has added to the place being the setting out of a peach orchard. She bore her husband six children, all of whom are living, namely: B. D., owner of a stock and dairy ranch near Hanford, Cal.; C. M., living near the home ranch; Annie, wife of S. Bondsen, a dairy farmer and stock-raiser, in Tulare county; Mrs. P. H. McDowell, living with her mother; Mrs. C. C. Cavin, wife of a prosperous farmer of Madera; and John Jay, the subject of this sketch.

Obtaining his elementary education in the common schools of California, and afterward attending the Selma high school two years, John Jay Vanderburgh began his active career as a teacher, and for four years taught school in Fresno county. Engaging in journalistic work in 1893, he bought one-half interest in the Selma Irrigator, and four years later purchased the remaining interest of the paper, of which he has since been editor, business manager and sole proprietor. This paper was established in 1886 as a weekly, being a pioneer in its line, and has now a weekly circulation of six hundred. In addition to publishing the Irrigator, Mr. Vanderburgh also does job printing, carrying on a remunerative business. He is a Democrat in politics and for two years, from 1900 until 1902, served as chairman of the board of city trustees.

Near Selma, in 1889, Mr. Vanderburgh married M. Isabelle Bowen, a native of Missouri, and they have two children living, Zoe and Isabelle. Fraternaly Mr. Vanderburgh is a member of Fresno Lodge, B. P. O. E.; of Selma Lodge, I. O. O. F.; of Selma Encampment; and of the Rebekahs.

HON. STANTON LESTER CARTER. Upon its establishment in America the Carter family was first associated with the history of colonial Virginia, but more recent generations have been identified with the activities of the north and west. Judge Carter's father, Levi Carter, was a native of Jefferson county, N. Y., and during early manhood was interested in lumbering in that state and Canada. In 1854 he became a pioneer farmer near Mount Carroll, Carroll county, Ill., and from there in 1860 crossed the plains to the west. After a short time in Nevada and California, in 1861 he returned via Panama for the purpose of bringing his family to the coast with him. The little party, with Mr. Carter as captain, started on the long journey over mountains and deserts in 1862, joining others who had a similar destination in view. While on the way the party was compelled to battle with the Indians on Goose creek, in which two men were killed. After three months their horse-train arrived in Washoe, Nev. A short time afterward the Carter family proceeded to Diamond Spring, Eldorado county, Cal., and from there to Folsom, Sacramento county, where Mr. Carter engaged in teaming. Next he bought land eight miles east of Stockton and took up farm pursuits. From there he removed to the San Joaquin valley, and in 1868 settled in Stockton, but continued to follow farming until advancing years rendered further manual work impossible. His death occurred on his ranch in Stanislaus county at seventy-six years of age. Three weeks after his demise Mrs. Carter passed away. She was Fama Eve Shoup, of Canadian birth and Dutch descent. They were the parents of five children, of whom three sons and a daughter survive.

The next to the oldest of the children was Stanton L. Carter, who was born in Clayton, Jefferson county, N. Y., January 16, 1853. His earliest recollections are associated with Illinois, for he was only a year old when the family settled in Carroll county. In 1862 he crossed the plains with the family and witnessed many memorable scenes during that eventful journey, as well as later when the family were undergoing the privations and dangers attendant upon life on the frontier and in mining regions. In 1871 he was graduated from the Stockton high school. His first independent work was as manager of a grain warehouse at Ceres, Cal., which he operated during the vacation months. In 1874 he completed the course of study in Heald's Business College. Previous to this he had taken up the study of law, and April 10, 1876, he was admitted to the bar. After gaining considerable experience through clerking in the law office of Byers & Elliott in Stockton, in 1878 he opened an office in Stockton, where, from 1884 to 1888, he was a member of the firm of Carter, Smith & Keniston. In September, 1879, he was appointed city attorney of Stockton to fill a vacancy and subsequently was twice elected to the office.

Removing to Fresno in 1891, Judge Carter has since been a well-known citizen of this place. In 1894 Governor Markham appointed him judge of the superior court of Fresno county to fill a vacancy in the office, and he served for two years, when, the legislature having divided the county and reduced the number of judges from three to two, abolishing the department over which he presided, he retired from the bench and resumed the practice of law. Since 1903 he has been a member of the firm of Carter, Ricketts & Dolph, his partners being A. H. Ricketts, one of the most prominent mining attorneys on the Pacific coast, and Chester V. Dolph, son of the late United States Senator J. N. Dolph, of Portland, Ore. The firm maintains offices in Fresno and San Francisco. Judge Carter acts as attorney for the Santa Fe Railroad Company, the Sanger Lumber Company, the Fresno Building & Investment Company, and the Reedley State Bank at Reedley, and served as counsel for the Emigrant Ditch Company until its consolidation with similar companies. He is also attorney for numerous other corporations. He is a director in various local companies of Fresno. Through his connection with the County Bar Association his influence has been further enhanced among those of his own profession. Staunchly Republican in his political faith, he is one of the local leaders of his party, and had the honor of acting as chairman of the county central committee in 1900, when William J. Bryan's majority of eleven hundred and ten in Fresno county in 1896 was reduced to a tie. On the organization of the Sequoia Club he became one of its charter members. Though not connected with any religious denomination, he is a contributor to the support of the Presbyterian Church, with which his wife is connected. Mrs. Carter, whom he married in Salt Lake City, was Armenia Oliva, a native of Stockton, Cal., and the daughter of pioneer parents. They have three children, Lester L., Royle A., and Armenia Mignon.

Especial interest attaches to Judge Carter's association with the Knights of Pythias, for he has been a leader in that organization. Initiated at Stockton, he has since been active in the work of the order. In 1884 he was elected grand chancellor from the floor. From 1891 to 1899 he held office as supreme representative, and for four years of this time he was chairman of the judiciary committee. In the Uniform Rank he holds rank as colonel on the major-general's staff and is now chief tribune of the Grand Tribunal of California. The Endowment Rank also numbers him in its list of members. During the convale of 1898 at Indianapolis, his name was brought forward for the office of supreme vice-chancellor of the order, and he lacked only eight votes of being elected. Throughout the order he has a host of warm personal friends, who have been attracted to him by those qualities of mind and heart which win admiration in every association, whether political, professional, fraternal or social.

In the practice of the law, Judge Carter's labors have been rewarded with a rare measure of success. He entered upon his legal career unusually well equipped, with a sound foundation of knowledge of the principles of the science, and his ability correctly to apply these principles to the cases in hand has been demonstrated in a marked manner. He is now regarded as one of the leaders of the bar in the San Joaquin valley. Personally he is a high-minded, public-spirited citizen, warmly advocating all measures which, in his judgment, have for their end the advancement of the welfare of the community. He has become recognized as a potential factor in the progress and prosperity of Fresno county, and as a citizen of the highest utility in the daily walks of life.

HON. WILEY J. TINNIN. One of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of the San Joaquin valley is Hon. Wiley J. Tinnin of Fresno, an honored pioneer of the state, and a lawyer of note. He has had a busy and eventful career, and has wisely and faithfully served his fellowmen in various capacities. A man of honor and integrity, he has exerted a healthful influence in whatever community he has resided, and has ever been among the foremost in advancing the interests of town, city and county. A native of Mississippi, he was born near Jackson, October 7, 1829, a son of Asa Tinnin. His grandfather, William Tinnin, was a life-long resident of North Carolina, and was the descendant of a family of Scotch people that settled there in colonial times. One of Mr. Tinnin's paternal ancestors was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving in the swamps of the Pedee under Generals Marion and Sumter.

A native of North Carolina, Asa Tinnin subsequently settled in Mississippi, where he was engaged in raising cotton until his death in 1843. He was a man of patriotism, and served under General Jackson in the Seminole Indian wars in Florida. The maiden name of his wife was Matilda Carr, who was born in Alabama, of Scotch-Irish ancestors, and died in Mississippi in 1836. Eleven children were born of their union, two of whom survive.

Three sons came to California in pioneer times: Wiley J., the subject of this sketch; John, who came in 1849, subsequently becoming a miner at Grand Junction, Colo., where he was murdered by robbers; and William W., who came in 1850 and died in 1880.

Reared on his father's cotton plantation in Mississippi, Wiley J. Tinnin attended first a private school in Jackson, afterward going to Tennessee, where he continued his studies at Franklin College, remaining there until the close of his junior year. In 1850, joining a party of ten well educated and intelligent young men, he started for the Pacific coast. Leaving New Orleans on February 27, he went by boat to the Isthmus of Panama, and from there the party were poled up the Chagres river to Gorgona by naked natives. The party then proceeded on the backs of hired mules to Panama, where they were unable to find a steamer going northward. While waiting in that city for transportation, the party enjoyed themselves as well as they could, considering that the majority of the population spoke Spanish, a language of which they were entirely ignorant, and found ample amusement. At the end of ten days, they embarked on a sailing vessel, the Paola, and on May 12, 1850, landed in San Francisco, just two days after the great fire had nearly ruined the city.

Mr. Tinnin went immediately to a hotel, where he paid $10.00 a day for a room and $1 for each meal. Remaining there but four or five days, he went to the mines on the American river, and for three months was located at Fisher's bar. Going then to Nevada county, Cal., he worked in the mines until the breaking out of the Gold Lake fever, when he joined a party starting for that region. On the Yuba he was taken ill, and while the party waited there the crowd that had preceded them by mule trains began to return, having found out that the man who had started the stampede that cost a half million dollars was insane. The price of mules immediately dropped from $500 to $100 apiece. With his companions, Mr. Tinnin was employed in mining on Poor Man's creek until the fall of the year, when he returned to Nevada county, where, during the big storm that occurred that fall, hundreds of people died from pneumonia, among others being two of Mr. Tinnin's partners. Subsequently, with his two brothers, John and William, he went down the Sacramento valley to Benicia, but finding the prospects for making a living no better than in their former location they started back. On their way home, near Sacramento, they came across vast numbers of geese. A happy idea striking them, they shot a large number, which they packed on their backs to Sacramento, where they sold them for $1 apiece. The business proving profitable, they subsequently bought a mule to do their packing, and in course of time had made a sufficient sum of money to purchase four mules. Loading these animals with a quantity of provisions, Mr. Tinnin and his brothers started for the Salmon River mines, but the Indians proved to be so troublesome in that region that they concluded to stop at the Trinity River mines, remaining there from March, 1851, until the following March. The ensuing year Mr. Tinnin was successfully engaged in mining at French Gulch, in Shasta county.

Returning to Weaverville, Trinity county, Mr. Tinnin then embarked in the mercantile business with his brother, William W., who had loaned money on a tin-shop, which then came into his possession, the tinsmith not being able to pay his indebtedness. Taking charge of the business, they added a stock of hardware, stoves, paints and glass. Subsequently erecting a two-story brick building, 40x110 feet, they embarked in general mercantile business at Weaverville under the firm name of W. W. Tinnin & Co., and also established a bank, and bought all the gold dust brought into the place. In 1861, Mr. Tinnin erected a house in Weaverville, and in partnership with John W. Owens continued in mercantile business as head of the firm of Tinnin & Owens. In 1867 the junior partner of the firm died and Mr. Tinnin sold out his business. Removing then to San Francisco, Mr. Tinnin became a dealer in real estate, and in 1870 he entered the political arena in Trinity county, serving in the house of representatives for two terms and for one term being state senator. In 1879 he was a member of the constitutional convention, and came within one vote of being elected chairman, the vote standing seventy to seventy-one.

In 1880 Mr. Tinnin was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of his profession at Weaverville. In 1884 he was nominated state elector on the Democratic ticket, and in 1886 was appointed by President Cleveland surveyor of the Port of San Francisco, a position which he filled for four years and one month, during which time he did his best to enforce the Chinese restriction laws. In 1890 he opened a law office at No. 420 California street, San Francisco, but on account of a catarrhal trouble was advised by his physician to seek a warmer climate. Accordingly, in 1891, he located in Fresno, where he has since been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession. He is still interested in mining property, in company with C. J.

Beck owning the Minerette mines on the headwaters of the San Joaquin river. He is also referee in bankruptcy for Fresno county, having been appointed by the United States District Court.

In 1861, in Weaverville, Trinity county, Mr. Tinnin married Irene Lowden, who was born in Brown county, Ill. Her father, Spencer Lowden, a farmer by occupation, came to Trinity county, Cal., in 1856, joining his sons, William, who crossed the plains to the Pacific coast in 1849, and Matthew, who came here in 1852. Politically Mr. Tinnin is an uncompromising Democrat, and is always active in state conventions. Fraternally he is very prominent in the Masonic order. In 1854 he joined Trinity Lodge No. 27, F. & A. M., at Weaverville, which he served as master, and is now a member of Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. In 1855 he became a member of Shasta Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest, and is now a member of Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M. In 1885 and 1886 he was grand master of the Grand Lodge of California; in 1880 and 1881 he served as grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of California; and he is also a member, and ex-vice-president, of the Order of High Priesthood. Mrs. Tinnin is active in the social affairs of the city, and is now president of the Wednesday Club.

WILLIAM B. BANISTER. A model little farm is that of William B. Banister, a well-known vineyardist of Central Colony, his property of forty acres being located within four and a half miles of Fresno. Eighteen acres is devoted to the cultivation of grapes, running about five hundred vines to the acre, and turning out about twenty-three tons per year; three and a half acres are in orchard, one of his principal crops being figs, as he has thirty trees of this kind; and has also seventeen acres in alfalfa. This farm, which consisted originally of twenty acres, was purchased by Mr. Banister in 1876, shortly after his arrival in Fresno county, but he did not locate permanently upon it until two years later, since which time he has been engaged almost exclusively in ranching. A native of Massachusetts, he was born in Middlesex county August 1, 1855, a son of Seth W. Banister.

Seth W. Banister was likewise a native of the Bay state and was a Baptist minister. He married Fanny Cummings, also of Massachusetts, and died at the age of forty years. Being left an orphan at an early age, Mr. Banister experienced many hardships in his younger days, but these only served to bring out the strong points in his character. His young manhood was spent in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and he started out in the world for himself at the age of fifteen years. He learned the trade of boiler-maker, and when only twenty-one years old was second hand and had over two hundred men working under him in a factory in Rhode Island. Interested in the manifest advantages of the West, he came to California in 1876 and at once located in Fresno county. During the first two years in this county he engaged in teaming in the mountains, which was a remunerative employment, and in 1878 he located upon his farm, where he has since resided.

In this state Mr. Banister was united in marriage, in 1883, with Milly F. Bartlett, a native of Massachusetts, and the daughter of Charles L. Bartlett, who came to California in 1888. To Mr. and Mrs. Banister have been born two children, Zilpah, aged seventeen, and Albert W., aged thirteen. In politics Mr. Banister is a staunch Republican, and fraternally affiliates with the Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World.

JOHN H. SIMONSON. In financial and political circles John H. Simonson, of Merced, is an active and important factor. Public-spirited and progressive, he has served the county with efficiency and fidelity in various official positions, and is now carrying on a substantial business as head of the well-known firm of Simonson & Harrell, dealers in real estate, and insurance agents. A native of Germany, he was born November 6, 1850, near Hamburg, the same province in which the birth of his father, Jasper Simonson, also occurred.

Having served an apprenticeship to a cabinet-maker, Jasper Simonson followed his trade near Hamburg for a few years. Emigrating with his family to this country in 1857, he settled in Minnesota, buying land in New Ulm, where he was engaged in farming for a year. Removing to Marine Mills, Minn., in 1858, he followed his trade in that city until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Anna Maria Clausen, was born near Hamburg, Germany, and died in Minnesota. Of the six children born of their union, but two are living, John H., the youngest child, being the only one in California.

Obtaining his early education principally in the public schools of Marine Mills, Minn., John H. Simonson began life as a wage-earner at the age of thirteen years, becoming clerk in a general store. Later being promoted to the position of bookkeeper, he remained with the firm until 1876. Coming to Merced, Cal., in the fall of that year, he accepted a similar position in the mercantile house of Simon, Jacobs & Co., general merchants, and continued as bookkeeper for two and one-half years. In 1879 Mr. Simonson was the Republican nominee for county clerk, and being elected served for two years, from March, 1880, but on account of the new constitution, which went into effect in 1880, his term was extended until January, 1883. Being twice re-elected, he served for four years more, until January, 1887, giving satisfaction to all concerned. Subsequently embarking in the real estate and abstract business, Mr. Simonson compiled and completed a full set of abstract books. In 1890 he was nominated on the Republican ticket for county assessor for a term of four years, was elected, and at the expiration of his term was re-elected for another four years. In this position he served acceptably from January, 1891, until January, 1899, but in the fall campaign of 1898 was not a candidate for re-election. Resuming his former business, he has since been busily employed as an abstracter, and a dealer in real estate, as senior member of the firm of Simonson & Harrell, handling both city and country property. He is also engaged in the insurance business, representing several of the old-line insurance companies.

Mr. Simonson married, in Merced, Jessie B. Stoddard, who was born in Calaveras county, Cal., where her father, E. M. Stoddard, was an early settler, and they have one child, Stanley Simonson. Mr. Simonson is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and has done much to promote the good of this order. He was made a Mason at St. John's Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M., at Stillwater, Minn., where he is still a member; was demitted from Stillwater Chapter, and now belongs to Merced Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., in which he has served as high priest; at Sonora, Cal., united with Pacific Coast Commandery, No. 3, K. T., and now belongs to Fresno Commandery No. 20, K. T.; and is a member of Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also a member, and past chancellor, of the Knights of Pythias, and formerly belonged to the Uniform Rank, K. P. In his political views he is a Republican, and is a member of the Republican County Central Committee.

WILLIAM O. MILES. As the present incumbent of the county clerk's office and through previous business associations, William O. Miles has become well known to the people of Fresno county. He is a member of a pioneer family of Indiana, his grandfather, Nathan Miles, with two brothers, having settled in that state in an early day. During the excitement caused by the discovery of gold in California, W. J. Miles, a native of Indiana and father of William O., started across the plains with that host of emigrants whom the year 1849 brought to the coast.

The trip consumed six months and was made with ox teams. Many perils were faced and many hardships endured; but he was young and robust, as well as ambitious and brave, and all the difficulties of the journey failed to lessen his enthusiasm. In the mines of Eldorado county he gained his first experiences as a gold seeker. While living in California he married Adelia M. Hutchison, who was born in Illinois. Some years after his marriage he returned to Indiana with his wife and children. It was his intention to remain there only temporarily, and to return to the far west, but his death in 1871 wrecked all plans for the future. At that time he was about thirty-nine years of age. At one time he filled the office of justice of the peace, but at the expiration of his term he declined to serve longer.

Another emigrant of '49 was George Hutchison, the maternal grandfather of William O. Miles. Later he crossed the plains many times, his first trip back east being made for the purpose of bringing his family west with him. A son, W. J. Hutchison, and a daughter, Mrs. A. A. Schaeffer, still live in Fresno county. In the spring of 1871, after the death of her husband, in Indiana, Mrs. Miles came with her children to California. She is the mother of three children. The eldest, Walter, died at Centerville when fifteen years of age. The only daughter, Ida, acts as deputy county clerk of Fresno county, and she and her mother make their home with Mr. Miles in Fresno.

William O. Miles was born at Sullivan, Ind., April 7, 1870, but his earliest recollections are of Fresno county. After studying in the Fresno public schools he entered the San Jose Business College, from which he was graduated in August, 1888. On returning to Fresno he secured employment as cashier and bookkeeper with A. J. Wiener, a merchant. The next year he became deputy tax collector under A. D. Ewing. In 1891 he was appointed deputy to W. C. Guard, serving for a year. During this time he was also deputy county assessor.

After spending the year 1893 in San Jose Mr. Miles returned to Fresno and for six months was employed by T. J. Hammond, the wholesale seed merchant. For a similar period he was assistant bookkeeper and cashier for Kutner, Goldstein & Co. In January, 1895, he was engaged as bookkeeper by S. Evenger, wholesale and retail butcher, with whom he remained for five years. In the meantime, in 1898, he was elected public administrator of Fresno county, which position he filled from January of 1899 to January of 1903. Upon resigning his position with Mr. Evenger in 1900 he entered the Fresno National Bank as assistant cashier. From the beginning of the development of the oil fields he has been interested in this work, and in January, 1901, he resigned from the bank in order to devote himself to his interests in the Coalinga and Bakersfield districts, where he was associated with Messrs. Murdoch and Ingels in developing oil.

The active support Mr. Miles has always given the Democratic party, received recognition from that party in 1902, when he was nominated for county clerk. Although Fresno is a Republican county, he received a majority of one hundred and eighty-seven votes at the election. In January of 1903 he took the oath of office for four years and has since devoted all of his time to the duties of the position. A leading member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, he is a member of its board of trustees and board of stewards. He was made a Mason in Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M., and was raised to the chapter degree in Trigo Chapter No. 60, R. A. M., in which he is an office-holder. The Templar honors were conferred upon him in Fresno Commandery No. 29, K. T. In addition, he is identified with Lodge of Perfection No. 6, of Fresno, and Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World.

ISAAC B. HINES, M. D. Not alone through his private practice, but also through his connection with the Agnew hospital in Fresno, Dr. I. B. Hines has gained a wide reputation. The hospital was opened in March, 1903, and is situated at No. 634 I street. Its appliances are such as belong to the most modern buildings of the kind. A specialty is made of surgery and the equipment for the operating table is complete. In connection with the hospital Dr. Hines built and fitted up the Fresno Swimming Baths, where may be had Russian, Turkish, medicated and electro-chemical baths; also a swimming pool, 25x50 feet in dimensions.

The ancestry of Dr. Hines is traced to Virginia, whence William Hines removed to Tennessee in a very early day and there operated a mill and cleared a farm. Isaac Bright Hines, a son of William, was born at Gap Creek, Knox county, Tennessee, September 15, 1795, and through his active life engaged in the milling business and the manufacture of lumber. During the War of 1812 he served in the American army, the most important engagement in which he participated being the memorable battle of New Orleans under General Jackson. Archelaus D. C. Hines, son of this veteran, was born March 20, 1825, in Knox county, Tenn. He followed in his father's footsteps in the selection of an occupation, but, in addition to milling and manufacturing lumber, he also conducted farm pursuits. About 1892 he relinquished his business interests and came to California, since which time he has made Fresno his home. At this writing (1904) he is seventy-nine years of age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Presure Margaret Bowman, was born November 7, 1835, at Calhoun, Tenn., of German descent, and is still living. Her father, Rev. John N. Bowman, a native of Tennessee, followed farming as a means of livelihood, but gave his attention largely to ministerial work in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Alabama and Tennessee, and was one of those pioneer circuit riders who exerted so large an influence upon the early settlers of our country.

In the family of A. D. C. Hines there were six sons and three daughters all of whom except one son are still living. The surviving sons are as follows: I. B., of Fresno; John Newton, a merchant of Fresno; Francis Marion, a rancher of Fresno county; Samuel Bowman, who is connected with mercantile interests in Fresno; and A. Don, who received the degree of M. D. from the Boston University School of Medicine and is now engaged in practice at San Jose. The three sisters, Edith M., Mary and Alice M., also reside in California. Dr. I. B. Hines was born eight miles from Knoxville, in Knox county, Tenn., July 5, 1856. As a boy he attended the Knoxville schools and assisted in the lumber-mill and on the home farm. In 1881 he was graduated from the University of Tennessee with the degree of A. B., and the following year received the degree of B. S. For five years afterward he was employed as an observer in the weather bureau of the Engineering Corps of the United States army, being successively stationed at New York City, Sandy Hook, N. J., and Block Island, R. I. At the expiration of his time he received an honorable discharge.

During 1887 Dr. Hines began his medical education in the Boston University School of Medicine, from which he was graduated in 1890 with the degree of M. D. For some years after graduating he remained in Boston, and while there had charge of the infirmary connected with the Massachusetts General Homeopathic Hospital. December 18, 1894, he arrived in Fresno, on a visit to his parents, and being so favorably impressed with the country and its possibilities he decided to make California his future home. In 1897 he acted as surgeon for the Fresno Flume and Irrigating Company's mills at Shaver, Fresno county, since which time he has given his attention wholly to professional work in his home town, where he resides at No. 333 Blackstone avenue. He still retains membership in the Massachusetts Homeopathic Medical Association. Since coming to Fresno he has been a member of the Chamber of Commerce. In religion he is an adherent of the Baptist Church, while in politics he votes with the Democratic party. While stationed on Block Island he was made a Mason in Atlantic Lodge No. 31, F. & A. M., and later, in Boston, was admitted to Roxbury Lodge No. 211, I. O. O. F., with which he still holds membership. His fraternal connections also include membership in the Woodmen of the World.

LOUIS KAHN. Endowed with a strong personality, exceptional executive and financial ability, and an almost marvelous business instinct, Louis Kahn, of Oakdale, has been a dominant force in the upbuilding of Stanislaus county. During the quarter of a century that he has resided in Oakdale, he has been actively identified with its growth and prosperity, and a leader in the establishment and maintenance of beneficial projects. A native of Germany, he was born March 20, 1855, near Baden-Baden, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Daniel Kahn.

Born, bred and educated near Baden-Baden, Daniel Kahn belonged to one of the oldest and most respected families of southern Germany. He began life for himself as a merchant, but subsequently served in the Germany army as a soldier, taking an active part in the Revolution of 1848. Being forced to leave the Fatherland for a time, he came to America, remaining in New York until after the amnesty proclamation, when he returned to his native country, and was there engaged in mercantile pursuits until his death, while in manhood's prime. He married Fannie Hirschfelder, who was born in Hohenzollern, Germany, where her father, Jacob Hirschfelder, was a farmer and merchant. After the death of her husband, she came to California, and spent the remainder of her life in San Francisco. Of her family of two sons and four daughters, all are living with the exception of the second son, Jonas Kahn, who died in San Francisco, in 1903.

The oldest child of the parental household, Louis Kahn received excellent educational advantages, after completing the course in the public schools, being graduated from the Baden-Baden Gymnasium. Immigrating to the Pacific coast in 1871, he spent a short time in San Francisco, and then went to Austin, Nev., where he accepted the position of clerk in a large general store, and while thus employed became familiar with the English language. Going thence to Belmont, Nev., Mr. Kahn was engaged in business, as a partner of J. J. Koenigshofer until 1873, when the firm transferred its business to Helena, Mont., where Mr. Kahn had charge of its large store for four years. Closing out its Montana establishment in 1877, the firm opened a store in Oakland, Cal., and the junior member continued as manager of the business for three years. Severing his connection with the firm in 1880, Mr. Kahn located in Oakdale, Stanislaus county, as a member of the firm of Haslach & Kahn, opening a general store in this city, and one at Knights Ferry, putting in a complete stock of merchandise in each place. In 1881 the store at Knights Ferry was burned down, and the firm, instead of rebuilding, transferred all the business to Oakdale, and continued its management until 1887, when it was sold. Since that time, Mr. Kahn has been a promoter and supporter of many of the most extensive and important business enterprises that have been established in this section of the state, doing more, perhaps, than any other one man, to increase the growth and prosperity of town and county.

In January, 1888, Mr. Kahn was one of the organizers of the Bank of Oakdale, one of the leading financial institutions of the county, and is now the principal stockholder and its cashier, Thomas B. Dorsey being president, and Joseph H. Kahn assistant cashier. Subsequently, in partnership with Mr. Haslach, he organized the Haslach & Kahn Warehouse Company, which has since carried on an immense grain business, operating warehouses in Farmington, Cometa, Clyde, Burnett, Oakdale, Occidental, Paulsell, Warnersville, Claribel, Waterford, Hickman, Montpelier, Amsterdam, Merced, Athlone, Cressey, Ceres, Modesto, Salida, Escalon, Riverbank and Claus, all of which places are connected by a private telephone system. This company has its main office in Oakdale, with branch offices in Modesto, Merced, and Farmington.

In April, 1903, the Haslach & Kahn Company was legally incorporated, with Mr. Kahn as president, and his son, Joseph H. Kahn, as secretary, and has already established a very large business in loans, real estate, grain insurance and grain dealing, being widely and favorably known by its large operations in these lines throughout the San Joaquin valley. This enterprising company was the first to subdivide land in Stanislaus county, and was the first to obtain water for irrigating purposes in the eastern part of the county. Among Haslach & Kahn's additions to the town of Oakdale are two hundred and fifty acres of land, divided into five and ten acre tracts, all subject to irrigation, and devoted to the growing of oranges, fruits and alfalfa, and the Villa and Syndicate tracts, containing four hundred and fifty acres, divided into lots of one or more acres, all well irrigated, and adapted for raising alfalfa, fruit and berries. This company also laid out the Orange Blossom Colony tract of seven thousand acres, lying four miles east of the city. One thousand acres of it, laid out in small lots, is under irrigation, and devoted to the culture of oranges, berries and alfalfa. In January, 1904, Mr. Kahn bought out Mr. Haslacher's interest in the Haslacher & Kahn Company, and has since continued the business alone, having his principal office at Oakdale and a branch office at No. 315 California street, San Francisco. He is also president of the Oakdale Irrigation Company, of which he was one of the originators.

A man of unusual business aptitude and integrity, Mr. Kahn has accumulated large wealth, being the owner of numerous valuable grain farms, which he rents, and has good business and fine residential property in Oakdale. In financial and business circles, he holds a place of prominence and influence, belonging to the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco; to the State Bankers' Association, and to the American Bankers' Association. In the upbuilding of Stanislaus county he has been very active and conspicuous, having been the first to bring its superior advantages for business and residence to the public notice by advertising, and the first to have made and published a bird's-eye view of the city of Oakdale.

In Stockton Mr. Kahn married Cecilia Hoenigsberger, who was born in San Francisco, a daughter of Joseph Hoenigsberger, a pioneer merchant of that city, and of Knights Ferry. Mr. and Mrs. Kahn are the parents of three children, namely: Joseph H., educated at the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, assistant cashier of the Bank of Oakdale, and secretary of both the Haslacher & Kahn Company and of the Haslacher & Kahn Warehouse Company; Rheta L., a graduate of Mills College; and Bertha, attending Mills College. Fraternally Mr. Kahn is a member of Oakdale Lodge No. 275, F. & A. M.; of Modesto Chapter, R. A. M.; of Stockton Council; and is prominently identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the Lodge, Encampment and Canton, and in the latter organization was chief of equipment of the Pacific coast.

REV. AMOS FRANKLIN GILBERT. The career of Rev. Amos Franklin Gilbert is unique among the men who are living in and laboring for the welfare of the west, in that it demonstrates anew the possibility of harmonizing large business interests with self-sacrificing and noble work in the ministerial field. He is not a man of the past, whose deeds are seen through the haze of years, idealized by distance and strengthened by the telling of loving friends, but is a wideawake citizen coming and going in business circles of Oakdale, at the head of an extensive and successful lumbering business, while at the same time laboring for the spread of the gospel of good cheer, for the diffusion of Christian education, for the relief of the suffering and the uplifting of the lowly.

Mr. Gilbert inherits his strong and vitalizing tendencies from an English-Scotch ancestry, represented on both sides of his family among the early settlers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. He himself was born in Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, July 6, 1849, and is the only one of six survivors in a family of ten children to make his home in California. His oldest brother, Thomas, came to the coast in 1865, and died in San Francisco. His father and grandfather were both named John, and the latter came from England at an early day, settling in Nova Scotia after a short residence in Boston, Mass. He farmed for the balance of his life, attaining to the advanced age of ninety-two, while his wife Fannie lived to be eighty-nine years old. The second John lived in Nova Scotia from his sixth year, and farmed there until his death at the age of seventy-eight. He married Mary J. Simpson, a native of Keith, Scotland, and member of a time-honored family of the highlands. Captain Alexander Simpson, the father of Mrs. Gilbert, was a sea captain, an early arrival in New Brunswick, and a later settler in Nova Scotia. He died at the age of eighty-four. Mrs. Gilbert lived to be eighty-four, and is recalled by her children as a woman of lofty Christian character, and great strength of mind.

As a youth Amos Franklin Gilbert possessed strong religious convictions, and wanted only confidence to engage in missionary and evangelistic work at the outset of his career. The need of self-support becoming paramount when he was about seventeen, he applied himself to learning the ship carpenter's trade, and the planing mill business at Parrsboro, Nova Scotia, and with the proceeds of his labor was able to supplement his discouragingly meager education by a year at the high school at Amherst, Nova Scotia, and the same length of time at Sackville College, Mount Allison, Nova Scotia. In 1871 he went to Boston and found a promising field for his trade, and did so well that he branched out into contracting and building, following the same until coming to California in November, 1875. December 30, the same year, he was united in marriage with Annie J. Dodge, whom he had known in Nova Scotia, and who was born there in Annapolis county, a daughter of a planing mill operator, L. M. Dodge. Mr. Dodge had come to San Francisco some years before, and had continued his former business in the Pacific city. After working for a year in a planing mill in San Francisco, Mr. Gilbert removed to Stockton and engaged in building and contracting until 1882. He then located in Modesto, built the first planing mill in that town, and thereafter engaged in the lumber manufacturing business for fourteen years. In 1895 he settled in Oakdale, having purchased a lumber yard there in 1893, and which had been under the management of his nephew in the meantime. Taking hold of the business himself, he increased it to its present large proportions, and besides manufacturing all kinds of builders' materials, deals in lime, cement, brick, coal and wood. His enterprise has assumed the dignity of a paying and influential concern, based upon the rare business sagacity of a man whose reliability and integrity are unquestioned, and who embodies the highest principles of finance, and the most courteous and considerate regard for his increasingly important patronage. In the interests of lumber dealers through this part of the state, he helped to organize, and has since upheld with his support, the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association of central California, of which he is president at the present time.

It was while living in Modesto that Mr. Gilbert found the opening for religious work which his nature had long craved, and for which he was eminently fitted. Want of confidence in himself as a leader had hitherto prevented his stepping forth into the lime-light of public service, and but for the earnest solicitations of Rev. D. W. Calfee, whose entreaties extended over a year or more, he might never have been known as one of the most zealous and earnestly helpful Christian workers which this section has known. For ten years he had been superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he joined at the age of fifteen, and for the ministry of which he began to study when arrived at twenty years. Other things intervening, his ambition was left to smoulder or lose itself in lesser channels of usefulness, but for fifteen years he has uninterruptedly preached, often at great physical and general inconvenience. Often his congregation was assembled in some remote schoolhouse, where a Sunday-school was organized and started on its way, and a community of Christian activity turned into a channel of ever-widening influence. He has been known to drive fifty miles, and before returning preach in three different places, and his errands of mercy to the sick and afflicted are of a kind and extent which will probably be known only to himself and his Maker. He now preaches regularly at Orange Blossom, and has various other intermittent charges, besides still keeping up his work of organizing Sunday-schools. He is a trustee of the church at Oakdale and at Modesto, contributing generously toward their maintenance, as well as toward the upbuilding of various charitable and humanizing enterprises in the county. Moderate and cautious in all things, it is not surprising that he should feel keenly the evils of drink, and should persistently lend his influence to the Prohibition cause. As a speaker he is earnest and forceful, using his gifts of expression convincingly, and appealing to his hearers by the sanity and reasonableness of his teaching. His creed is simple, his belief in humanity unbounded, and his desire to help bounded only by his physical endurance and the necessary limitations of his moderate fortune. That his financial success is a strong argument of appeal is unquestioned, for more and more is a proper share of worldly goods recognized as the rightful heritage of the industrious and capable, as against the indigent and slothful. Mr. Gilbert owns property in Modesto as well as in Oakdale, and in 1904 completed his beautiful residence in the latter town, where his friends and associates bask in a refining and uplifting atmosphere. This noble teacher is a genial and whole-souled man, looking on the bright side of things, and believing in the optimism and good cheer of the world. In his children are reflected not only his strength and uprightness, but his ability and thriftiness. His oldest daughter, Laura, is a teacher who is at present attending the University of California; Eva is a graduate of that institution of learning, and as vice-principal of the Gilroy high school, is fulfilling her destiny as an unusually gifted educator; Irving, his father's assistant in the lumber business, is a graduate of the high school, and attended the University of California for two years; Lindley D. is a student at the high school; and Bernice and Mildred are school girls.

HON. ROBERT S. JOHNSON. Prominent among the pioneer settlers of California is Hon. Robert S. Johnson, of Fresno, the well-known proprietor of the Excelsior livery stables. Of pronounced business ability, he has been successful in mercantile pursuits, and as a breeder and trainer of standard-bred horses has acquired a wide reputation. He is a veteran of the Civil war, and has long been influential in public affairs, from 1886 until 1890, serving as a member of the state legislature. A native of England, he was born April 10, 1835, in Bedford, Bedfordshire, which was likewise the place of birth of his father, R. B. Johnson. His grandfather, William Johnson, or Johnston, as the name was then spelled, was born in Scotland, but as a political refugee fled to England, which was afterward his home. R. B. Johnson spent the earlier years of his life in his native country, living there until after his marriage, and the birth of his children, of whom Robert S., the subject of this sketch, is the only survivor. With his family he emigrated to America, settling first in Montreal, Canada, and then in Chicago, Ill. Subsequently coming to California, he spent the later years of his life in Stockton. His wife, whose maiden name was Ann Smith, was born in Hertfordshire, England, and died in Stockton, Cal.

Coming with his parents to this country when about seven years old, Robert S. Johnson received his early education in Montreal, Canada. In 1850 he accompanied his parents to Chicago, which was then in its infancy, there being but one brick building then standing on Lake street. Entering the employ of Frank Newhall, a wholesale fruit dealer, he gradually worked his way upward, in course of time becoming manager of the business. While thus employed, he became a charter member of the old Chicago Light Guard, and was also a member, and for a year chief engineer, of the old volunteer fire department. Going from Chicago to Racine, Wis., Mr. Johnson was engaged in the manufacture of hollow wooden-ware for a few months. During the Pike's Peak excitement of 1857, he started across the plains with an ox-team train, and prospected for awhile along the South Platte, but not finding pay dirt he returned as far as the Missouri river with oxen, thence to St. Louis by boat, and from there by rail to Racine. Starting for California by way of Panama a short time after, Mr. Johnson landed in San Francisco in September, 1858, and for a year thereafter was employed in a wholesale fruit house. In 1859 he embarked in the wholesale produce and fruit business in Stockton, and subsequently became a member, and first sergeant, of the Stockton Company California National Guard.

In 1861 he organized Company K, First California Volunteer Cavalry, of which he was commissioned captain by Governor Stanford, and by an order issued from the war department was afterward commissioned major of the regiment. Believing, however, that there were men more competent for the position than he, he returned the commission, and remained captain of his company. Going to Arizona, he fought the Apaches, the Kiowas and the Comanches, in that territory, New Mexico and California, and was with Kit Carson on many of his scouting expeditions. With his regiment he was engaged in battle with Gen. Sterling Price at Kansas City, and afterward returned to New Mexico, where he, with the noted scout, Kit Carson, was employed in fighting Indians until the close of the war. Being mustered out of service at Fort Union, N. M., Mr. Johnson returned to Stockton, where, at the time of his enlistment, in 1861, he was making $50 a day. During his service as a soldier, he was wounded in a hand-to-hand fight with an Indian, the red man's toma-hawk grazing his left temple, and coming within a quarter of an inch of killing him.

For several years after his return to Stockton, Mr. Johnson was employed as a commission merchant, and then embarked in the livery business, building up one of the largest and finest stables in the state. He paid much attention to raising thoroughbred horses, owning several that developed great speed for that day, being among the fastest trotters in California. Selling out in 1899, Mr. Johnson went to Honolulu, Hawaii, where he began contracting for concrete work. In this enterprise he was very successful, but being injured in an accident, and in addition taken ill, so that for four months he was unable to attend to his affairs, he sustained business losses. Under the direction of his physician, Mr. Johnson came back to California, locating in Fresno June 1, 1903, and there purchased the Excelsior stables, which are situated at No. 1234 I street. The main stable, a large brick building, 50x150 feet, is one of the finest in Fresno county, and is fully equipped in every department.

Mr. Johnson has always taken an intelligent interest in public matters, and while living in Stockton was for seven years a member of the City Council, a part of the time serving as president. He was a representative to the state legislature two terms, and for four years was one of the board of directors of the State Insane Asylum. He also belonged to the old volunteer fire department. Fraternally Mr. Johnson joined the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Honolulu; is a member of Rawlins Post, G. A. R., of Stockton; of California Commandery, Loyal Legion; and is past junior and past senior vice-commander of the Department of California. In Fresno he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. He is also a member of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Johnson has five children, namely: W. R., of Stockton who was colonel of the Sixth California Volunteer Infantry during the Spanish-American war; Charles R., of Bakersfield; Mrs. Eva L. Brown, of Fresno; Mrs. Ida M. Davis, of Alameda; and Roy R., of Stockton.

GEORGE W. WEAR. Nearly a third of a century has been passed in the community where Mr. Wear now makes his home, and in that time, as he so graphically describes in an article which appeared in the Daily Californian the last issue of the year 1903, many changes have taken place; each New Year's day finds some one of the old pioneers gone, sees some new improvement or invention which adds to the prosperity of the country,—a forward step which leaves still farther behind the primitive condition of the early days. But though these changes inevitably come, the memory of the pioneer, his courage, self sacrifice and devotion to the cause of the country which he made his own by a cheerful acceptance of the conditions, will outlive the passage of time and go on to brighten the beginning of many new years. Mr. Wear is himself a pioneer and the pioneer newspaper man of the community, and in the last twenty-eight years has been active and earnest in the development of all which has tended to bring about the present prosperity of the city and county, and the affection and esteem of all who know him is accorded him and his efforts. Born in Carroll county, Miss., February 28, 1852, he was the son of George W. Wear, Sr.

The elder Mr. Wear was a native of England, and when only a mere lad he came to the United States, and on attaining manhood married in North Carolina. Shortly afterward he went to Mississippi, and there taught music, having been finely educated in this line before crossing the ocean. Later he located permanently in Mississippi, and became a prominent man in the community, first conducting a hotel, after which he became a planter and the owner of many slaves. He became a wealthy man, owning much country and town property, and was deservedly numbered among the successful planters of that region. Though in no sense of the word a politician, he was very decided in his views, and during the Civil war served in the state troops of the Mississippi Home Guards. He died when about sixty years of age. His wife, formerly Julia Holt, was born, reared and educated in North Carolina, and her death occurred when about eighty years of age. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

George W. Wear was the fourth in a family of seven children, and received his education in private schools in Mississippi. When about fifteen years old he entered a printing office and learned the mechanical part of the work, and was soon afterward engaged as a printer, before he was twenty-one owning a paper which he himself established. Before leaving the state he owned three different papers, which he successfully conducted, and also engaged in farming for one year. In the winter of 1874 he sold out and came to California, and for a short time worked on the Express, Mirror and Star, in Los Angeles. In the spring of the same year he came to Kern county, and locating at Bakersfield, which was then only a small village, went to work upon the Californian. Two or three years later he purchased the Gazette, a weekly, and later closed out and discontinued the publication, after conducting it for twenty years. In the meantime he had purchased the ranch where he now makes his home, this consisting of eighty acres located three and a half miles west of Bakersfield. About half of this property is now devoted to the cultivation of grapes and various other fruits and has all improvements in the way of comfortable and substantial buildings and forms an ideal home for the man who correctly appreciates the dignity of the farmer's life.

In 1872, in Tennessee, Mr. Wear married Fannie Nash, a native of that state. They are the parents of three children, namely: Earl, who is employed upon the Echo in Bakersfield; Bessie, the wife of E. R. Putnam, a rancher in this district; and George, still at home. Politically Mr. Wear is a Democrat, and for many years was an important factor in local affairs, doing all in his power to advance the principles which he endorses. In 1889 he represented his district in the state legislature, ably supporting the cause of his constituents, and in Bakersfield he served on the school board for six years. He has since devoted the greater part of his energies to the cultivation of his ranch, and has practically withdrawn from public life, though he is serving as trustee in his district at the present time. One of the principal interests in the life of Mr. Wear at the present time is his articles which he writes for the various papers of Bakersfield, one appearing nearly every week. His writing is graphic, clear-cut and forcible, and in later days holds much interest for the younger generation for the reminiscent strain which calls up for them a picture of the past.

JAMES W. WARREN. Actively and industriously engaged in the prosecution of the independent and honorable calling upon which the life, strength and wealth of the nation largely depends, James W. Warren holds a substantial position among the esteemed and successful farmers of Ingomar, Merced county. A son of Asahel Warren, Jr., he was born July 20, 1834, in Windsor county, Vt., of thrifty New England ancestry. His paternal grandfather, Asahel Warren, Sr., was born and reared in Massachusetts, but removed to Vermont, settling on a farm in Windsor county, where he passed the remainder of his life. Asahel Warren, Jr., and his wife, whose maiden name was Rhoda Bailey, were both life-long residents of the Green Mountain state, living on a farm in Windsor county, where they reared five children, two boys and three girls.

The second child of the parental household, James W. Warren, in common with the children of the neighboring farmers, obtained his education in the district schools, and from his father acquired a practical knowledge of New England farming, which he subsequently followed for awhile amid the rocks of his native state. Following the march of civilization westward, he settled in Ogle county, Ill., in 1855. Four years later, in 1859, he started for Pike's Peak, taking the overland route. While crossing the plains he changed his plans, deciding to come to California. Locating first in Butte county, Mr. Warren turned his attention to any employment that he thought would prove profitable, working in the mines for a time, then making shakes, and finally becoming a freighter. He afterward drifted to Plumas county, then to Humboldt county, Nev., going from there to Sonoma county, Cal., and thence to Washoe county, Nev., where he worked for wages in a logging camp. Returning to California in 1869, Mr. Warren located on the west side of the San Joaquin valley, in Merced county. Buying one hundred and sixty acres of land, five and one-half miles southwest of Ingomar, and fourteen miles from Newman, he immediately began the improvement of his present homestead. He met with excellent success as a general farmer, and was also employed at carpentering and building for a number of years; his services as a skillful mechanic being in great demand throughout this part of the valley. He leases other land besides his own ranch, carrying on three hundred and eighty acres in all, raising as his principal crops wheat and barley, which invariably do well in this region.

In Modesto, Cal., Mr. Warren married Carrie Fink, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Etta May, wife of W. S. Wicks, of Fresno; James Frederick and Ida Matilda, living at home. A staunch Republican in his political views, Mr. Warren takes an intelligent interest in the public welfare, and for a number of years was school director in the Clay district.

HIRAM HUGHSON. The keen and far-seeing judgment which led Mr. Hughson to cast in his destiny with that of the far west in the early and untried days of adventure also led him to make investments in property, large tracts of which he purchased in the days when prices of realty were low. By this course of action he has become one of the extensive land owners of Stanislaus county, and is ranked among the successful men of the county. A native of Schoharie county, N. Y., he was born November 22, 1840, the son of Nicholas M. and the grandson of George Hughson. The latter was a very prominent man in his community, being an old-line Whig politically, and in the cause of his country having an arm blown off by a cannon ball in the Revolutionary war. Upon the return to peace in the colonies, or what was then our own United States, he was elected to the offices of county treasurer, constable and collector, respectively, being able to use his left hand in writing. By occupation he was a farmer, and died in New York when over seventy-five years old. Nicholas M. Hughson was born on Long Island, and as a farmer spent his life in Schoharie county, where he was numbered among the successful men of the community. Politically he was a Republican, and in his religious affiliations subscribed to the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Charlotte Duncan, born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and who came to the United States at the age of ten years. Her father, Charles S., was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, as well as a capable blacksmith and farmer, practicing the two occupations during the week and preaching on Sunday. He died at the age of eighty years, after a useful life in whatever community he had made his home, as a broad, noble character, a profound student and an earnest and progressive citizen making his presence felt among his fellow townsmen.

Of the six sons and four daughters born to his parents Hiram Hughson was the fifth in order of birth. He received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, after which he attended the Norwich Academy for a period of three years. Upon becoming dependent upon his own resources he engaged as a clerk in a general merchandise store at Elmira, N. Y., his employers being R. & E. Covell & Co., with whom he remained for nearly four years. He then became a partner with his brother, O. M. Hughson, in a general merchandise establishment at Norwich, remaining in this connection until 1857. He then emigrated to California, traveling by way of the Isthmus of Panama on the steamer Star of the West, and arriving in San Francisco on Christmas night. He remained in San Francisco for about a week, after which he went to Marysville and engaged as a clerk in the store of Kirby & Burns, continuing in that employment for a year and a half. In 1858 he entered the mines at Monte Christo, where he remained six months, afterward spending seven months at the mines on Fraser river, British Columbia. In the following year he worked his passage to San Francisco on the old Pacific steamer, not having met with financial returns as he had hoped to. On his arrival in the city he borrowed $20 from George Walton, a friend in Marysville, going to work for him on a ranch for the following six months. In 1860 he engaged with John Campbell in taking beef cattle to the mines, later engaging in the work for himself, continuing in the work for one year, when he had made $3,000. The following year he engaged in teaming over the mountains, receiving $100 per ton for freight between Sacramento and Virginia City. Within the period of two and a half years he had made $7,000, the business then becoming profitless through the building of the railway. Coming then to San Joaquin county, Mr. Hughson rented five hundred acres of land near Stockton, four miles southeast, upon which he engaged in raising grain for three years. In 1872 he bought five hundred acres located in the vicinity of the rented land, paying $25 per acre; farmed this property for fourteen years and then sold it for $50 per acre, the value having doubled in the passing years with the natural increase of land and that given to it by Mr. Hughson's progressive methods and improvements. In 1882 he moved his family to Stockton, after which he bought one thousand acres located eight miles east of Modesto, Stanislaus county, erecting thereon a substantial and comfortable home and making many improvements calculated to increase the value of his property. With the passing years he has invested heavily in real estate, now owning over seven thousand, five hundred acres of land, of which four thousand, three hundred and sixty are valued at $60 per acre, and the remainder at $25 per acre, all located in the irrigation district. No part of his land has ever been encumbered with a mortgage, a striking evidence of the business ability and thrift of the owner. In 1901 Mr. Hughson rented his land and located in Modesto, purchasing a fine property here, spending his days in retirement with the exception of such cares as are entailed by his vast landed interests. All of the success of Mr. Hughson has been achieved by his own exertions; through no royal road has he won his way to fortune. Like all pioneers, he suffered numberless hardships and discomforts before he had surrounded his family with the comforts of existence. One of the greatest misfortunes which came to him was the loss of his left arm, the spring on his mowing machine breaking and throwing him to the ground and against the sickle. Notwithstanding this, he continued to advance in success, and today occupies a position only won by those whose own efforts have brought them through trials and privations.

In Stockton Mr. Hughson was united in marriage with Luella R. Avery, of New York, who came to California with her father, Demas, also a native of that state, journeying from Iowa, in which state they had formerly settled. He engaged in mining upon his first arrival in the west, but later became a farmer, and so continued until his death. The following children were born to Mr. Hughson and his wife: Belle C., the wife of R. T. Hudleson, of Stanislaus county; Ore M., located on a ranch; George, also on a ranch; Mary M., the wife of J. H. Deal, of Stockton; Edna M., the wife of C. W. Craig, of San Jose; Minnie L., the wife of Harry Sturgell, a conductor on the Santa Fe railway, located in Berkeley; Hiram; Lavina; Olive, and Lester, the four last named being still at home with their parents. Politically Mr. Hughson is a Republican.

JOHN B. NEWPORT, president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, of Hanford, Kings county, has been a resident of California since 1874, and for a number of years has been intimately identified with the most important upbuilding forces of the county in which he resides. He was born in Warren county, Ohio, July 28, 1852, a son of Joseph C. and Elizabeth (Montgomery) Newport. His paternal grandfather, David Newport, a native of Scotland, immigrated to America in young manhood, locating in Pennsylvania, where he resided for many years. During the early years of the colonization of the Western Reserve, now the state of Ohio, he erected a cabin in sections, and started overland, with teams and wagons, for the then new and wild country. After a long and tedious journey he arrived in what is now Warren county, Ohio, where he found a heavily timbered country, with Indian trails as the only roads, and almost complete isolation from the rest of the white settlers. Setting up his primitive cabin, he cleared some land, sowed grain and planted such crops as he deemed essential to the maintenance of life, and then erected a more modern and commodious residence for himself and family. He prospered as the country yielded of its abundant natural resources, and as his sons attained young manhood, they put their shoulders to the wheel and rendered material assistance in the accumulation of a competency. He lived to be eighty-six years of age, and was recognized as a man of great influence among the pioneers of his community. With him from Pennsylvania came his son James, then a small boy, who served in the war of 1812, and afterward received a commission as captain in the Ohio state militia. The latter attained the age of seventy-six or seventy-seven years, and devoted his entire active life to agriculture. Joseph Corwin Newport, son of James and father of John B. Newport, was born on the farm in Warren county in 1816. He became widely known as a successful farmer and horticulturist, and accomplished much toward developing the pomological resources of Ohio. In young manhood he married Elizabeth Montgomery, a native of either Pennsylvania or New Jersey, who removed to Ohio with her parents in childhood. Her father, William Montgomery, was a native of Ireland, and when a boy immigrated to the United States, living for several years in Pennsylvania. Joseph C. Newport lived to be seventy-five years old, and before his death celebrated his golden wedding in the midst of many friends and great rejoicing, while on a visit to what is now Kings county, Cal. He is survived by his wife, who is now eighty-six years old, and who is still active and bright, and able to do her own work in her Warren county home.

At the age of nineteen John B. Newport left home and began to work on neighboring farms, for the first three months receiving his room and board in compensation for his services, but after that $20 a month, until he had enough to pay his way to California in 1874. In Sonoma county, this state, he rented a farm near Petaluma with his brother, W. J., and after harvesting a fifty-acre crop of potatoes went to San Francisco and became a fireman on the San Francisco & North Pacific (now the California Northwestern) Railroad. Later he was given charge of an engine, running the same until 1878, when he resigned the post. The summer of that year he helped his brother move to Kings county, arriving here December 8, 1878, and settling three and a half miles northwest of Hanford on one hundred and sixty acres of land. The cost of the land was $30 an acre, and they were obliged to run in debt for it, and also for the threshing machine which they operated throughout the county for several years. From the first they were successful with their crops, and the threshing machine soon paid for itself, so that both felt encouraged and hopeful of the future. In the meantime Mr. Newport had left much of the management of the farm to his brother, while he worked at the carpenter's trade during the winter time, returning to the farm in summer.

In 1881 J. B. Newport was united in marriage with Emma Tait, a native of Iowa. She died in 1889, leaving a son, Fred T., now twenty years of age, who has just completed his training at the Mt. Tamalpais Military Academy. In 1891 Mr. Newport married Louise Horlock, who was born in London, England. In 1890 he sold one hundred and sixty acres of his property, having in the meantime purchased an adjoining eighty acres. He received $200 an acre for this tract, a forty acre tract later brought him $260 an acre, and the balance $200. He continued to operate his ranch until 1900, and became known as one of the most substantial and successful ranchers of the county, being one of the first to engage in the cultivation of raisin grapes. A variety of high-grade stock contributed a handsome yearly income, and blooded horses constituted a source of constant satisfaction to their owner. It is needless to say that the ranches were improved according to the highest tenets of agricultural science, and represented the acme of independent and luxurious country life.

Mr. Newport's banking experiences began in 1887, when he helped to organize the first bank of Hanford. In 1891 he became one of the organizers of the Farmers & Merchants Bank, and has served as a director continuously since, and in July, 1902, was elected president of the board. He has been prominent in politics for many years, but although a staunch supporter of the Republican party has never been willing to accept offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen. When the county was divided in 1893 he came to the rescue with his influence and money. Many other enterprises have been rendered secure through his timely assistance, and the citizens who count upon the resources of this unrivaled region to furnish them homes and sustenance have reason to be grateful for his far-sightedness and public spirit. When the raisin growers were on the verge of collapse through inability to sell their products, he took an active part in organizing the Raisin Growers' Association, which secured good prices for their products, and practically saved the cause. He was active also in securing right of way through the county for the Santa Fe Railroad Company, giving of his time and money, and urging the advantage to settlers and shippers.

Yet another resource which has profited by the business ability of Mr. Newport is the oil in the Coalinga and Sunset districts. He is a stockholder in the Kern Sunset Oil & Development Company, which has the brightest of prospects, and whose property is now being developed. For five years he was the president of the Esperanza Oil & Gas Company, which spent $35,000 before oil was produced. The prospects at one time were so doubtful that Mr. Newport and his brother bought the shares of discontented members, thus holding a very large interest in the enterprise. When oil was finally discovered they felt fully repaid for their effort to allay hard feelings, the first well producing three hundred barrels of oil per day, and another five hundred barrels per day. They sold their interests at a gratifying advance above the purchase price.

For nearly a quarter of a century Mr. Newport has been an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has extended material assistance in the erection of three different houses of worship. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons and the Odd Fellows. He is a man of high moral principle, broad-minded, liberal and possessed of a high public spirit, exhibiting genuine concern when measures for the promotion of the welfare of the community are under consideration, and giving generously of his means toward the furtherance of all worthy and well-considered efforts to elevate the social, moral or industrial status of the whole people. His name is indissolubly linked with the progress and prosperity of Hanford and Kings county, and is entitled to a permanent place in the historical literature of the state of California.

FRED M. HART. The desire to do all things well, and the ability to concentrate upon a given subject until complete mastery thereof is obtained, are universally acknowledged to be stepping-stones to success in almost any line of activity. At the bottom of the endeavors of Fred M. Hart has lain this excellent view of life, and to its practical fulfillment is due his success as an apiarist, as a practical rancher and a promoter of the county's prosperity. He represents the second generation thus to contribute to the well-being of Kings county, and to his father, Charles C. Hart, was due credit for introducing bee culture in this county.

The Hart family is numbered among the California emigration of 1855. Charles C. Hart, the founder of the name on the Pacific coast, was born in the conservative rural district of central Connecticut, and being of ambitious tendencies set sail for Panama and San Francisco from New York in the spring of 1855. The departure to the west was not an occasion of great importance to the family circle, for in 1849 his brother, John H., had come to the coast, and sent back favorable accounts of the opportunities existing here for the ambitious and industrious young man. Charles C. Hart avoided mining and settled near Gilroy, Santa Clara county, where he engaged in bee culture and dairying until 1859, establishing a pleasant home for his wife, formerly Helen Payne, who was born in New York. Here their son, Fred M., was born.

In 1859 Charles C. Hart and his brother purchased half a section of land one mile east of Visalia, one-half of which was under fence, the largest fenced property in the San Joaquin valley at that time. The brothers had brought with them about a hundred colonies of bees, and in the spring of 1860 they were able to supply many ranchers desirous of embarking in the business, among them Dr. Cobb, to whom they delivered thirty-seven colonies for $3,700. The Hart brothers continued in partnership for two or three years, when Charles C. bought a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres three miles south of Visalia, half of which is still owned by his widow, and where he lived until 1866. He then removed to near Farmersville, Tulare county, and took up government land, where he also conducted general ranching and bee culture. In 1878 he turned his bees over to his son Fred M., whom he had thoroughly trained in the science of bee culture, and thereafter devoted his energies entirely to farming and stock-raising. In all he farmed about three thousand acres, owning one hundred and twenty acres below Visalia, one hundred and sixty acres on his homestead, and a section or more in partnership with his son, C. W. At the time of his death at the age of sixty-six his estate was valued at $35,000, all won through his persistent and untiring efforts as a pioneer rancher and apiarist. He was never active in politics, but was a staunch supporter of schools and churches, donating liberally to the latter, and to other worthy enterprises in his neighborhood. His ranch in Tulare county is still occupied by his widow, who is sixty-eight years old, and an active worker in the Baptist church.

Fred M. Hart was born in Gilroy, Santa Clara county, October 20, 1867. At the age of thirteen he left the home farm and went into camp to care for his father's stock, a lonely occupation at best, for the country was sparsely settled. When he took charge of his father's apiary in 1878 he had about one hundred and fifty colonies, and to these he added fifty colonies, and devoted his entire time to the study and care of his small charges. Moving into his present neighborhood, seven miles northeast of Hanford, in Kings county, in 1884, he bought five acres of land, and soon afterward purchased one hundred and sixty acres near Traver which he still owns. He combined farming and bee culture until 1899, when he purchased his present farm of sixty acres, and in all owns four hundred acres in Tulare county, including a two-hundred-and-forty-acre farm six miles from Visalia. Besides his home place of sixty acres in Kings county, he owns a twenty-acre fruit farm which he rents. He has seven hundred colonies of bees divided into ten separate apiaries in the northeastern part of the county, the precaution of small lots being taken because the pastures are so closely cropped by the stock. Mr. Hart has had remarkable success with his industry, and in addition to being one of the most scientific and well posted apiarists in the state, is one of the most extensive. His stock and fruit and general produce have helped to swell the dimensions of his ample fortune, and place him among the substantial and well-to-do men of Kings county.

February 17, 1889, Mr. Hart was united in marriage with Kizzie Smith, who was born and reared at Centerville, Iowa. Two sons and one daughter have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hart, Elmer D., Leora Miles, and David Payne. Mr. Hart is a broad-minded and public-spirited man, taking a keen interest in local Republican politics, and has filled a number of offices with credit to himself and the community. He is the friend of education and progress, and has interested himself in the establishment of a high standard of mental training as a member and trustee of the school board. Fraternally he is valued as a member of the Hanford Lodge No. 275, I. O. O. F., and the Encampment; is also identified with the Rebekahs, his wife belonging to the latter organization, and Hanford Parlor No. 37, N. S. G. W. Mr. Hart is a generous and large-hearted man, practical and possessing a fund of business sagacity. A valuable lesson is taught in his straightforward, industrious and manly life.

LEWIS J. CROW. Distinguished as an early pioneer of Stanislaus county, and as one of its most esteemed and honored residents, Lewis J. Crow stands prominent among the intelligent, enterprising and progressive men who have been influential in promoting the agricultural, industrial and social prosperity of this part of the state. His fine homestead and farm, containing nearly five hundred acres, situated partly in San Joaquin and partly in Stanislaus county, is one of the most valuable and attractive in the San Joaquin valley; in point of improvements and equipments ranking with the very best. Skilled in the use of rifle and gun, Mr. Crow is an expert marksman, and has acquired wide fame as a hunter, both he and his hounds enjoying the chase. A son of Walter Crow, he was born March 27, 1829, in Pike county, Mo., at Ashley, near Bowling Green, of old Virginia stock. His grandfather Crow served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Walter Crow was born and reared near Danville, Ky., being bred to agricultural pursuits. He took an active part in the Black Hawk war, after which he settled in Ashley, Pike county, Mo., where he carried on farming for a number of years. In 1849, accompanied by his son Lewis, he crossed the plains to California, coming here to investigate the conditions for stock-raising. Finding the conditions most favorable, he went back by way of Panama to Missouri, and the following year, 1850, again crossed the plains, bringing with him a large herd of cattle, in the driving of which he was assisted by his sons William, Benjamin, James and A. M. Arriving at the mouth of the Feather river in the fall of 1850, he was taken ill and died of mountain fever. His wife, whose maiden name was Susan Pritchett, was born in Kentucky (where her father, Abraham Pritchett, spent his entire life) and died in Missouri. Nine children were born of their marriage, namely: Isaac, a resident of Crows Landing, who came to California in 1865; William, who died near Ripon, San Joaquin county; James A., of Stockton; Benjamin H., of Crows Landing; John B., who died in Oakland, while his home was at Crows Landing; A. M., who died at Crows Landing; Lewis J., the special subject of this sketch; C. P., of San Jose; and Susan, wife of Capt. J. W. Smith, of Stockton.

Brought up on a Missouri farm, Lewis J. Crow obtained a limited common school education in Ashley, and in his boyhood days was initiated into the mysteries of farming, being made to plow corn barefooted when but eight years old. Determining to seek his fortune in the newly-discovered gold-fields of California, he came with his father across the plains in 1849, leaving Pike county in the spring, and coming with ox-teams via Fort Hall, down the Humboldt river, and along the Carson route to Placerville, arriving September 10. The father soon started on his return trip, but Lewis J. Crow began mining on the Yuba river, and remained in that locality until fall, 1850, when he went to meet his father and brothers, and assist in driving the five hundred cattle that they brought with them. At the mouth of the Feather river, as previously stated, the father died, and the brothers came to Stanislaus county, and spent the winter on the present site of Ripon. In the spring of 1851 they settled near Ripon, where they carried on an extensive and lucrative butchering and dairy business until 1864. In the meantime, in 1854, they entered land on the west side, becoming owners of a large tract, and having built warehouses there for convenience in shipping grain down the river, the town and railway station were both named in their honor, Crows Landing. Mr. Crow had a ranch of seven hundred acres eight miles west of Crows Landing on which he lived and labored several seasons. In 1863 he bought his present farm of four hundred and eighty-two acres, which is advantageously located on the Stanislaus river, about five miles from Oakdale, and at once began its improvements. His tasteful and substantial residence, and his large and convenient barns and outbuildings are located in Stanislaus county, but the major part of his ranch is within the limits of San Joaquin county. On the bottoms he has three hundred acres, all under the plow, with seventy-five acres devoted to the raising of alfalfa. In addition to general farming, he has been extensively engaged in stock growing, he and his brothers having been the largest mule raisers in the valley. Since 1900 he has rented his land, and lived retired.

In Stockton Mr. Crow married Mary E. Rose, who was born in Iowa and at the age of four years, in 1850, came with her parents to Napa, where she was reared and educated. Of the children born of this union six are living, namely: Thomas A., a farmer, living near Modesto; Frank, engaged in farming near Crows Landing; Herbert M., of Oakdale, proprietor of a creamery; Harry L., a resident of Oakland; Mrs.

Edith Epley, of Oakland; and Mrs. Ethel Leitch, of Oakdale. A daughter, Estella, married John Conant, and died February 13, 1896. In his political affiliations Mr. Crow is a Democrat. A man of unusual worth and integrity, his business dealings have ever been characterized by fairness and honesty, and he and his good wife are held in high respect throughout the community, where their hospitality and generosity are proverbial. Mrs. Crow is a faithful member of the Free Methodist Church of Oakdale.

JOHN W. KEEFER. A typical representative of the self-made men of our country, John W. Keefer has made rapid strides along the pathway of prosperity, and is now numbered among the business men of the city of Merced. Beginning his career with but little capital save that of courage, pluck and persistency of purpose, he has labored industriously, working as a wage-earner many years. By means of thrift and economy, he accumulated a sufficient sum of money to establish himself in business, and is now proprietor of a large and well-patronized livery, feed and sale stable, which he is managing with characteristic enterprise and success. He was born, October 8, 1855, in Exeter, Lower Canada, a son of Joseph Keefer.

Born and reared in Germany, Joseph Keefer immigrated when a young man to America, and first engaged in farming in Upper Canada, and afterward near Goderich, Ontario. Removing with his family to Nebraska in 1867, he located near Columbus, on the North Fork, where he carried on general farming the remainder of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Louisa Nolan, was born in Germany, and now resides in Idaho. Of the nine children born of their marriage, all grew to years of maturity, and eight are living, John, the subject of this brief personal notice, being the eldest child, and the only one on the coast.

Receiving limited educational advantages in his Canadian home, John W. Keefer began to work out as chore boy on a farm when but nine years old. Accompanying his parents to Nebraska when twelve years of age, he continued in his agricultural labors, assisting his father, or working for neighboring farmers in order to help support the family. Coming to California in 1875, Mr. Keefer was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Sacramento county for two and one-half years, and then went back to Nebraska, where he remained eighteen months. Returning then to the Pacific coast, he traveled through Washington and Oregon, and for nearly two years was a resident of San Diego county. He has since resided in Merced county, and for more than twenty years was engaged in general farming, having charge of a ranch of seven hundred or more acres, which he devoted principally to grain raising.

In 1899 Mr. Keefer established himself in the livery business on South Main street. Although he had but a small sum to start with, he put forth his best efforts and was very successful until burned out. Fortunately he at that time saved all of his stock and vehicles, his actual loss being but $75. He subsequently continued business in small quarters until his present stable was completed. This is a brick building, 60 x 130 feet, two stories in height, with stalls for fifty head of horses. He is popular as a liveryman, and has built up a remunerative business in this line of industry, being liberal and accommodating to his numerous patrons.

Mr. Keefer married, in Merced, Mary Collins, a native of Missouri, and into their household seven children have been born, namely: Albert, Annie, Ray, Charles, William, Leo and Elsie. Politically Mr. Keefer is a steadfast adherent of the Democratic party, and is now a member of the Merced board of school trustees. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the Catholic Church.

JOHN B. AVILA. A successful farmer and merchant, John B. Avila commands the respect and esteem of all who have witnessed his steady progress up the ladder of success since he located in Merced county in 1888. He had located in the state five years earlier, having emigrated from St. George, in the Azores Islands, where he was born March 19, 1865, settling first in Alameda county. There he followed ranching until he removed to Merced county, with the proceeds of his five years' work purchasing twenty acres of land located in the Buhach Colony. Here he engaged in farming with the same energy and ability which had characterized his first years in his adopted land, becoming one of the pioneer sweet potato growers in the county. This business he has found exceedingly profitable in the passing years, and now devotes ten acres exclusively to the cultivation of this tuber, the average yield being from one hundred to one hundred and fifty sacks to the acre. He ships his own products to various localities, the principal points being Denver, Colo., Washington and Oregon, disposing of as many as one hundred and forty-five carloads in one year. With his constantly increasing financial ability he has added to his ranch until he now owns forty acres of well developed land, ten acres of which is devoted to fruit, ten to sweet potatoes, and twenty to alfalfa. In addition to his ranching interests he conducts a general merchandise establishment in Merced, in partnership with I.

J. Pimentel, Jr., carrying a well assorted stock valued at $5,000. He resides upon his ranch, which is located five miles west and north of Merced.

Mr. Avila has been twice married, his first wife being Emilia Pacheco, by whom he had the following children: Delfina and Belmira. His second marriage united him with Puliscena Duarte, also a native of the Azores, and of this union was born a daughter, Maggie. In his political convictions Mr. Avila is a Republican, and though undesirous of official honors for himself has nevertheless taken an active interest in the advancement of his party's interests. In fraternal orders he is quite prominent, being a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Religiously he is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

FREDERICK BONTADELLI. Conspicuous among the most intelligent, influential and progressive dairymen of the San Joaquin valley is Frederick Bontadelli, who has a thorough knowledge of agriculture in its various branches, and stands high among the practical and successful farmers of this locality. His ranch, which is situated two miles southeast of Newman, is finely improved, his residence, which he erected in 1901, being one of the most attractive in the dairy country, while his conveniently arranged barns and outbuildings, and all of his machinery and equipments, are such as are required by a first-class modern agriculturist. A son of Peter Bontadelli, he was born November 11, 1857, in Personico, Canton of Ticino, Switzerland, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, and of his grandfather, Joseph Bontadelli, a lumber manufacturer and dealer.

A prominent and influential citizen of Personico, Peter Bontadelli spent his entire life in his native town, being actively engaged in business as a lumber and flour manufacturer, and as a general merchant. Of his union with Mary Filosi, the descendant of an old and honored family of the Canton of Ticino, fourteen children were born, eleven of whom grew to years of maturity, seven now living, five residing in California, namely: Emil, of Guadaloupe; Peter, of Watsonville; Philomena, of Salinas; Modesto, just now in Alaska; and Frederick, the subject of this sketch.

After his graduation from the Personico High School, Frederick Bontadelli, at the age of nineteen years, served for four months in a military company. He subsequently learned the cabinet-maker's trade, which he followed for a few years in connection with the mercantile business, remaining in his native land until 1879. Emigrating in that year to America, he arrived in San Francisco with ninety-three dollars in his pockets, his entire assets. With a courageous heart and willing hands, he started out to make his living in a new country, a stranger in a strange land. Having previously worked with a veterinary in his old home, Mr. Bontadelli felt somewhat familiar with the care of cattle and horses, and was soon working on a ranch. Subsequently locating in Gilroy, he worked on a ranch, and as a butter and cheese maker for five years. Removing thence to Monterey county, he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land near Salinas, and embarked in dairying, successfully managing not only his own dairy, but a dairy of one hundred and sixty cows belonging to a neighboring farmer.

Visiting the west side of the San Joaquin valley in 1896, Mr. Bontadelli quickly perceived its advantages as a dairy region, and tried to interest the people in the subject of raising alfalfa, for which the land was especially adapted. During the dry season of 1898, when Monterey county, especially, suffered with the excessive drought, he returned to this valley, bringing his family with him, and settled on the west side. For two years thereafter he rented land from C. C. Eastin, and then, in 1900, purchased eighty acres of unimproved land, and set about improving it. Fencing it, he subsequently dug a well seventy-one feet in depth, erected a windmill, and the following year built his attractive residence. He was very successful in the raising of alfalfa, and now rents fifty-six acres of adjoining land, on which he also raises the same crop, and is now carrying on dairying with marked success, keeping about one hundred cows, mostly Durhams. He likewise raises horses and cattle, having about one hundred and ninety head of stock, and keeps about three hundred hogs.

In Switzerland, Mr. Bontadelli married Mary Borcine, a native of the Canton of Ticino, and they have one child, namely: Frederick F. Bontadelli, a graduate of the Newman High School and now a student at the Santa Clara College. Politically Mr. Bontadelli is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Druids, and is serving as treasurer of his lodge. He is recognized as an authority on all questions connected with dairying, and is one of the directors of the New Era Creamery.

LUTHER M. SAY. From his earliest recollection Mr. Say has known no other home than California until he reached mature years. He was born in Venango county, Pa., December 3, 1873, being the fourth child born to James H. and Laura (Coates) Say, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Wisconsin. The father followed farming for a livelihood and in 1874 came to California with his family, locating for a time in Mendocino county. He subsequently settled in the vicinity of Parlier, in Fresno county, at an early day in the history of this county. His widow still lives on the old home place in this locality, a short distance from Luther M.

The recipient of a good education, gleaned from the common schools of California and from the three years' attendance at the Selma high school, Mr. Say started out to make his way in the world more thoroughly equipped than the average young man, so far as education is concerned. Like his father, he followed farming for a time, but in 1895 he went to San Francisco, and for four or five months was engaged as gripman on the street cars in that city. In 1896 he secured employment on the police force, and for a period of about five years he was on duty between Fourth and Sixth streets and northward with the Chinatown squad.

In 1900 he went to Alaska and for one year officiated as bookkeeper in the mines of his brother, W. H. Say. Returning home, he took possession of his place near Parlier, in 1901, having previously purchased the ranch in 1897. Mr. Say has one of the most productive farms in this part of Fresno county, owning eighty acres, thirty in vineyard, twenty-five in peach orchards, the balance in alfalfa. In 1903 he built a modern cottage which adds greatly to the appearance of the place, in addition to adding to the comfort of the family. By his marriage in San Francisco, he was united with Diantha L. Temper, who was born in Lake county, Cal. Their home is made happy by the presence of one son, Harry. Politically Mr. Say is an unswerving Republican, and socially he is allied with the Woodmen of the World and the Widow and Orphans' Aid Society for Policemen, of San Francisco. Mr. Say is rapidly attaining a high place in the estimation of his neighbors, as a conscientious, energetic young man, whose dealings with everyone are both upright and honorable.

MRS. DORA (JANTZEN) UNGER. It gives us much pleasure to place in this volume a brief biographical record of the life of Mrs. Dora J. Unger, widow of the late Frederick Unger, who for a score of years was actively identified with the development of the agricultural resources of that part of Fresno county lying near Selma. She is a most estimable woman, of superior character and endowments, and well deserves the respect and esteem of the community in which she has so long resided. A daughter of Herman Jantzen, she was born April 10, 1835, near Dorum, Hanover, Germany.

A lifelong resident of Hanover, Germany, Herman Jantzen followed the trade of baker during his earlier life, and was afterward employed as a tiller of the soil until his retirement from active pursuits. His wife, whose maiden name was Helen Schleier, died at a comparatively early age, leaving one son and one daughter, Dora J., the special subject of this sketch, being the youngest child.

Receiving a limited education in the common schools of her native town, Dora Jantzen remained at home until twenty-three years old. Having two half-brothers and a brother in the United States, in Philadelphia, and one in California, she determined to join them, and in August, 1858, landed in New York City. A short time later, accompanied by her brother, she came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco, where a half-brother was living, and with him made her home until her marriage in 1860 with Frederick Unger.

A native of Schanning, Brunswick, Germany, Frederick Unger grew to manhood in the Fatherland, obtaining his education in the public schools. Emigrating to the United States in 1854, he spent a few months in New York City, from there coming by way of the Nicaragua route to the Pacific coast. After working in the mines for some time, he settled near Santa Clara, where, in 1858, he purchased a small ranch on which he lived four years. Removing then to Centerville, he was engaged in farming in that locality for three years. In 1865 he bought land near Petaluma, living there until 1873, when he established himself as a farmer and dairyman at Bird's Landing, Solano county. In 1880 Mr. Unger rented land in Fresno county, near Selma, and two years later, in 1882, bought the homestead now owned and occupied by his widow and her family. From the one hundred and forty acres of land included in his purchase he developed a most productive ranch, having a finely-bearing vineyard of sixty acres; an orchard of forty acres planted to fruit trees of different kinds, while on fourteen acres he raised alfalfa. In the management of his farm he was very successful, his energetic industry and thrift being well rewarded. On November 8, 1903, Mr. Unger passed to the life beyond, leaving a large circle of friends who deeply deplore his loss. He was highly esteemed throughout the community as a man of sterling worth and integrity, and was an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Unger seven children were born, namely:

Charles Frederick, proprietor of a stationery store in Selma; Herman Theodore, living near Selma; Caroline, wife of John Seaton of Port Townsend, Wash.; William, residing near Selma; Angie, the wife of M. E. Browe of Selma; Dora, wife of John Anderson of Los Angeles, and G. A., of Selma. Mrs. Unger is a woman of good business qualifications, and is administratrix of the estate left by her late husband. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOHN H. HUTCHINSON. One of the most promising features of the commercial life of California is the fact that its climate, soil and business possibilities have attracted to its citizenship many of the educated and ambitious young men of the east. Coming from the older city of Cleveland to the younger but no less progressive city of Fresno, Mr. Hutchinson has thrown his energies and resourceful mind into his duties as secretary of the Fresno Consumers' Ice Company, and by supplementing the judicious management of the president, Calvin S. Hill, has contributed to the already encouraging success of this enterprise.

The Hutchinson family is of Scotch-Irish extraction, and its first representatives in America identified themselves with the province of Ontario. George H. Hutchinson, who was a native of Otterville, Ontario, removed to Cleveland, where he remained until death, meanwhile engaging in the lumber business. His wife, Mary E. Martin, was born and reared in Cleveland, whither her father, John Martin, had migrated in an early day. He was a native of the north of Ireland and a shipwright by trade. After settling in Cleveland he engaged in shipbuilding and conducted a yard until his death, which occurred at the age of forty-nine years. At this writing Mrs. George H. Hutchinson resides with their only child, John H., in Fresno.

In Cleveland, Ohio, where he was born February 17, 1871, John H. Hutchinson had the advantages offered by the excellent schools, supplementing which he also took a full course of study in Duquesne College, at Pittsburg, Pa., from which he was graduated in 1892, with the degree of B. S. Immediately after the completion of his college course he entered the office of the Curl-Hutchinson Lumber Company, his father being one of the members. For three years he continued with that firm, and then went to Niles, Ohio, as office manager for the Columbia Manufacturing Company. He filled the duties of this responsible position with rare judgment and tact for three years, and then resigned in order to return to Cleveland, where in 1899 he was chosen cashier of the Garry Iron & Steel Company. In addition to the office of cashier he filled the position of head bookkeeper, remaining with the company until April, 1903, when he resigned. The following month he came to Fresno and bought an interest in the Fresno Consumers' Ice Company, of which he has since been secretary and a director. While the period of his residence on the coast has been comparatively brief, he has become a staunch believer in the great west, an enthusiastic supporter of its industries and an admirer of its climate. Socially he is popular among his acquaintances, an active member of the Society of Hoo Hoo's, and a welcome guest into the most select circles of Fresno. Reared in the Episcopal faith, he has always been in sympathy with the work of that denomination and a contributor to its charities. Political affairs have never won him from business duties, yet he is interested in questions affecting the prosperity of state and nation, and gives his allegiance to the Republican party.

PETER P. HANSEN. Ever since he was old enough to step out and learn the miller's trade in far-off Denmark, the life of Peter P. Hansen has moved along in quiet, safe grooves, far from the fret and worry of large ambitions, and the trouble incident to useless and out-of-the-ordinary requirements. His life began on a small farm in the village of Scoby, in northern Denmark, where he was born March 13, 1866, and where his parents, Nis and Mary (Clausen) Hansen, are passing their declining years. His cradle was rocked by a mother who was the soul of industry and high principle, and who had besides five sons and two daughters, he being the sixth child. Industry and frugality reigned in the humble home, and little remained after the purchase of necessities for the schooling or advantages which the children craved. Peter P. improved whatever chances came to him, attending the public schools whenever able, and diligently performing his duties around the home place. After completing his trade he worked thereat for some months, and in the meantime planned to enlarge his horizon as soon as his means permitted.

At the age of eighteen Peter immigrated to America and located in Cleveland, Ohio, but instead of following the miller's trade, began to drive a street car for the city railroad company. This occupation netted fair returns to a lad accustomed to economize and save, and in 1888 he came to San Francisco and drove a street car team for the company of that city. In his next home in Los Banos, Merced county, he worked on the canal for Miller & Lux, becoming manager of a section of the canal, and remaining in that capacity for eight years. He was bright and faithful, and won the approval of his employers, hence his long retention in their service. His work on the canal proved profitable in the light of his continued thrift and patience, and he was able to purchase a farm of forty acres near Newman, Merced county, which he operated as a dairy until 1903. He then invested in his present home of sixty acres, which he has placed under alfalfa, and is devoting to a dairy of forty cows. His improvements are in accordance with the kind and extent of his operations, and it is his intention to increase both his possessions and his business. His house, barns and implements are sufficient for his needs, and neatness and order, the chief essentials of dairying, are the keynote of his success in that direction.

Mr. Hansen met and married Ida Werner, a native daughter of San Francisco, and who pre- sides over his country home with economy and good judgment. He is in sympathy with the Democratic party, and finds recreation and companionship in the lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. While Mr. Hansen is cautious and conservative, and less prone than many to accept innovations and advances, he is genial of manner and large of heart, and has won deserved and substantial success.

OLIVER D. McPHERSON. Among the foremost citizens of Colony Center, O. D. McPherson, the genial and popular proprietor of the Center Hotel, holds an honored place. Public-spirited, liberal and enterprising, he takes great interest in advancing the welfare of the community in which he resides, and is much esteemed as a man of worth. A son of Aaron McPherson, he was born, October 25, 1869, in Iowa Falls, Iowa, of Scotch ancestry. His Grandfather McPherson was for many years engaged in agricultural pursuits in Indiana, but spent his declining years in Iowa.

Born in Indiana, near Indianapolis, Aaron McPherson enlisted in an Indiana regiment soon after the breaking out of the Civil war, and served as a soldier during the greater part of the conflict. At the close of the war he settled at Iowa Falls, Iowa, where he improved a farm. In 1871 he removed with his family to Geneva, Neb., where he continued in farming and stock-raising for many years. Migrating still farther westward in 1894, he came to Merced county, locating in the Dos Palos Colony, where he purchased twenty acres of land, on which he made substantial improvements. He set out an orchard of choice fruit trees, and was employed successfully in fruit growing and dairying until his death, in 1903, at the age of sixty-two years. He was highly respected as a man, and was active in the Grand Army of the Republic, taking a keen interest in the organization. He married Elvina Jones, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, and now resides in Colony Center. Of their union eight children were born, seven of whom survive, O. D., the subject of this review, being the second child in order of birth.

Growing to manhood on a Nebraska farm, O. D. McPherson attended first the common schools, afterward entering the Geneva high school, where he completed the full course, obtaining his diploma. Engaging in business for himself at the age of twenty years, he ran a large broom factory in Geneva, Neb., until 1896, when he gave up the business, and came to California. Taking up his residence with the Dos Palos Colony, Mr. McPherson bought ten acres of land, built a residence, and engaged in the raising of fruit and alfalfa, also resuming his trade of making brooms. Material for his manufactures being scarce, Mr. McPherson, with true enterprise and thrift, rented about forty acres of land, and began the raising of broom corn, devoting his entire crop to broom making, a venture in which he was quite successful. In 1901 he built the Center Hotel, which has since been well patronized by the public, who speak of his management in very complimentary terms, finding him a most accommodating and pleasant host, well acquainted with his duties, and ever mindful of the comfort of his guests.

In Wayne county, Neb., Mr. McPherson married Dora Fox, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of Emmor Fox, who settled as a farmer in Geneva, Neb., and there brought up his family. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. McPherson, namely: Roy and Velma. Politically Mr. McPherson is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and the clerk of his lodge, and also a member of the Knights of the Maccabees.

THEODORE C. SCHMIDT. Energetic, industrious and capable, Theodore C. Schmidt, well known in Newman and vicinity as a skillful mechanic and as one of the foremost blacksmiths of the place, is carrying on an extensive and flourishing business. A native of Denmark, he was born November 17, 1863. His father, Peter Schmidt, a blacksmith by trade, was born in Denmark and is now living retired from active pursuits in Schleswig, Germany. His wife, whose maiden name was Maria Sorensen, died at the early age of thirty years. For his second wife he married a native of Denmark and she is the mother of four sons. Of the four sons and one daughter born of the first marriage, Theodore C., the special subject of this sketch, is the second child.

Having acquired a good common school education in his native town, Theodore C. Schmidt worked for a number of years in his father's smithy, serving an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. Emigrating to the United States in 1883, he came to California, locating first in Rio Vista, where he followed his trade for a year. Going then to San Joaquin county, he worked first in Lathrop and then in Linden. From 1885 until 1888 Mr. Schmidt was a resident of Salem, Ore., where he was employed in various kinds of labor. Returning then to California, he worked at his trade for a year in Dos Palos, Merced county, being in the employ of Miller & Lux. Coming to Newman in 1889, he continued at his trade, working the first two years in partnership with A. S. Jefsen, and the next two years in partnership with L. H. Kahrt. Buying out his partner, Mr. Kahrt, in 1894, Mr. Schmidt has since carried on a substantial business as a general blacksmith, having built up a large and lucrative patronage. By dint of hard labor and good management he has acquired considerable property, in addition to his other holdings being a half owner of a ranch of thirty-three acres, which he devotes to pasturing and the raising of alfalfa.

Mr. Schmidt married first, in Modesto, Cal., Anna Krogh, a native of New York. She died in 1899, leaving two children, namely: Howard and Theodore. Mr. Schmidt married second, in San Francisco, Mrs. Hansine Sorensen. In politics Mr. Schmidt is a zealous Republican, active in party ranks, and has represented his town as a delegate to county conventions. He is identified with two of the leading fraternal organizations of Newman, being a member and past officer of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

HENRY F. W. C. MEIER. Energetic, enterprising and industrious, Henry F. W. C. Meier is actively identified with the business interests of Newman as a manufacturer and bottler of soda water and soft drinks of all kinds. A native of Germany, he was born August 5, 1854, in Prussia, which was also the birthplace of his parents, Henry and Catherine Meier.

Having acquired a practical education in the elementary schools of his native country, Henry F. W. C. Meier emigrated, in 1871, to America, hoping in this land of plenty to secure greater opportunities for bettering his financial condition. Coming directly to California, he spent a year in Rocklin, Placer county, working for his brother-in-law, Henry Nicman. The following six years he was a resident of San Francisco. From there he went to Hill's Ferry, but being not very well satisfied with his prospects in that place, went to Sacramento, where he remained nearly two years. Returning to Hill's Ferry in 1880, Mr. Meier worked there eight years, when, in 1888, he settled in Newman, taking charge of the Newman Hotel. Giving up the hotel in 1896, he continued the saloon business until 1899, when he gave that up also. Since that time he has devoted much of his time and attention to the management of his bottling business, which he established in 1896, although for more than three years, from 1899 to 1903, he was in business in Tulare county, having charge of the Lindsay Hotel. He bottles soda waters and soft drinks of all kinds, having one of the largest plants of its kind in this section of the county, and has been exceedingly successful in its management, having built up a large and profitable business.

In Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Meier married Elizabeth Miller, a native of Hunsbach, Prussia, and of their union twelve children have been born, namely: Emil, of Lindsay, Cal.; Mrs. Lola Robin, of Eureka; Henry, of Newman, Cal.; Albert and Clarence, twins, of Newman, the latter proprietor of a confectionery store; Bertha, Minnie, Freddie, Lizzie, Eunice, deceased; Louie, and a child that died in infancy. Politically, Mr. Meier is an earnest adherent of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is a member and past officer of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and of the Knights of Pythias.

THOMAS FREEMAN NEWELL. The agricultural community of Selma has no more worthy representative than Thomas Freeman Newell, a farmer of experience and skill, who has met with success in his independent calling, and is now living retired from active pursuits. A son of Edward Newell, he was born August 1, 1843, in Cumberland county, Me. His grandfather, Enoch Newell, a native of Massachusetts, came from honored colonial stock, being descended from one of four brothers who emigrated from England to the old Bay State. When a young man he removed to Maine, and there spent his remaining years. A life-long resident of Cumberland county, Me., Edward Newell followed the trade of a ship-carpenter and joiner. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary W. Freeman, was born in Massachusetts, and died in Maine. Of their family of five boys and two girls, of whom one son and the two daughters are deceased, Thomas F., the subject of this biographical sketch is the youngest.

Reared and educated in his native state,

Thomas Freeman Newell remained at home until eighteen years of age, when, accompanied by a brother, he came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to the Pacific coast. Locating in Amador county, Cal., he was engaged in mining in Volcano for four years, and the ensuing year was a resident of Sonoma county. Visiting his old home and friends in 1867, he stayed in Maine eleven months. Returning to California in 1868, Mr. Newell bought land in San Mateo county, and was there prosperously employed in stock-raising, dairying and general farming for twenty years. In 1888 he settled in Fresno county, locating on the line of the Centerville and Kingsburg ditch, and buying one hundred acres of land lying one mile northeast of Selma. At the time of the purchase, six acres of the ranch was devoted to the raising of fruit. He has since improved the entire ranch, having now an orchard of forty acres and a vineyard of thirty-four acres, while the remainder of his land yields bountiful crops of alfalfa. Although he still lives on his ranch, he rents the land, receiving a good annual income.

In San Mateo county Mr. Newell married Alice M. Shields, a native of Illinois. She died on the home farm, in Selma, in 1895, leaving three children, namely: Mabel F., wife of Orland Dolson, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Marie Ross, living near Selma; and Lillian May, wife of Alexander McDonald, of San Francisco. Politically Mr. Newell is a steadfast Republican, but has never been an aspirant for official honors.

HENRY A. HANSEN. Among the representative business men of Colony Center, Dos Palos, is Henry A. Hansen, an enterprising and highly esteemed citizen, who is carrying on a large and successful business as a general merchant. A native of Illinois, he was born November 16, 1868, in LaSalle county, near Ottawa, a son of Hans Hansen. His Grandfather Hansen, a life-long resident of Norway, was a prosperous agriculturist, and the owner of the noted farm "Hjelmeland."

Hans Hansen was born on the parental farm, in Qvinherre, Norway, in 1835, and was there bred and educated. At the age of sixteen years, in 1851, he immigrated to America, and began life in this country as a farm laborer near Ottawa, Ill. In course of time he became owner of a good tract of land, from which he improved a farm, on which he lived a number of years. In 1874 he removed to Ford county, Ill., where he bought land, and continued in agricultural pursuits for nearly twenty years. Settling in Stanhope, Hamilton county, Iowa, in 1892, he is now carrying on a successful mercantile business in that place. He is a man of upright principles, a staunch Republican in politics, and a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. He married Anna Sorbe, who was born in Ronnes Island, Norway, where her father, Andreas Sorbe, spent his entire life. She came with her mother, and the other children, to America when a child of eight years. She died February 15, 1901, in Stanhope, Iowa, leaving three children, namely: Mrs. Johnson, of Iowa; Henry A., the special subject of this sketch; and J. E. a contractor in Marshalltown, Iowa.

Receiving a practical education in the public schools of Illinois, Henry A. Hansen began the battle of life for himself at the age of eighteen years, becoming a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Elliott, Ford county, Ill. Removing with his parents to Stanhope, Iowa, in 1892, he was there similarly employed for some time. Locating at Lorenz, Iowa, in 1900, Mr. Hansen was engaged in the grocery business for several months. Selling out in December, 1901, he came directly to Dos Palos, and five days after his arrival here purchased a half-interest in a mercantile business, and in partnership with C. A. Bibler established himself as a general merchant at Elgin Corners, becoming junior member of the firm of Bibler & Hansen. When the town moved to Colony Center, this enterprising firm erected a large store on the corner now occupied by John Kincaid, and there built up a good trade. In May, 1903, Mr. Hansen disposed of his interest in the firm, and four months later, in November, 1903, opened a new store, and has since been in business alone having won a lucrative patronage.

In Webster City, Iowa, Mr. Hansen married Grace Bibler, a native of Hamilton county, Iowa, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Verne and Keith. Politically Mr. Hansen is actively identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Polar Star Lodge No. 113; F. & A. M., of Legrand, Iowa; of Sigma Chapter, R. A. M., of Marshalltown, Iowa; and of the Modern Woodmen of America. Religiously he is a Lutheran.

REV. MICHAEL McNAMARA. Among the pioneers of California worthy of special mention in this work is Rev. Michael McNamara, who has had charge of St. Patrick's Church, in Merced, for upward of thirty years. A man of deep religious devotion, and of extreme earnestness of purpose, he has performed noble work in this section of the state, building up good congregations in different localities, and everywhere elevating the moral and religious status of his people. He is finely educated, familiar with the classics, a philosopher and a theologian and a noted student of history. He was born, March 19, 1837, in the parish of Croom, County Limerick, Ireland, being the second child in a family of ten children born of the union of Thomas and Nora (Joyce) McNamara, who were life-long residents of the parish of Croom, County Limerick, and respected members of the farming community.

Brought up in Limerick, Michael McNamara obtained his classical education partly in Killmallock, Charleville and in the Jesuit Seminary of Limerick, after which he studied theology at St. John's College, in Waterford, County Waterford, Ireland. In June, 1870, by the Bishop of Australia, he was ordained in the college for the diocese of San Francisco, and at once started for California. After spending a short time at St. Mary's Cathedral in San Francisco, Father McNamara began his missionary labors, going first to Mariposa to look after St. Joseph's Church and its people. He subsequently organized a parish on Bear creek, at present the city of Merced, where, in 1873, he was successful in establishing a Catholic Church. Since 1875 he has made his residence in Merced, but long continued to attend the church in Mariposa, and in other places. At Los Banos, he took up contributions for the building of the church there, which were afterward turned over to the Los Angeles and Monterey diocese. In his work along this western frontier, he endured all the hardships and privations of the early pioneers, traveling by stage over rough roads, walking long distances through the mountain districts, making his own pathway in many cases, and fording streams oftentimes; sleeping wherever night overtook him, be it in cabin, tent, or with no roof between him and the firmament on high. Father McNamara is connected with various church societies, and is an honorary member of the Young Men's Institute.

ARCHIBALD L. SILMAN. Among the most active, skillful and successful ranchmen of Dos Palos A. L. Silman, manager of Miller & Lux's Santa Rita ranch, holds an assured position. Of honored ancestry, he is a native son of Merced county, and a worthy representative of one of its most respected pioneer families. He was born on the Merced river, in Merced county, Cal., February 26, 1874, a son of William Silman. His grandfather Silman, a native of the east, spent the major portion of his life in Arkansas, where he was an early settler.

Born in Arkansas, William Silman was there reared and educated. In 1851, with two of his brothers, he came across the plains to the Pacific coast, and for a while worked with shovel and pick as a miner. He subsequently formed a partnership with Archibald James Stevenson, whose daughter he afterward married, and embarked in the stock business on the Merced river. In the valley he entered land, becoming owner of a ranch of two thousand acres, and in course of time accumulated much wealth in grain and stock-raising. He built a residence in the town of Merced, and with his partner erected the first water works of that locality. He was very prominent in town, county and state affairs, being one of the leading members of the Democratic party. He had the honor of being one of the first trustees of the city of Merced, and in 1892 served as presidential elector, casting his vote, in Sacramento, for Grover Cleveland. He died at his summer home, in Pacific Grove, in 1896. He married Charlotte Stevenson, who was born in Boone county, Mo., where her father, Archibald J. Stevenson, settled on removing from the east. Mr. Stevenson served in the Mexican war, after which, in 1847, he located in California, engaging in the cattle business in the Merced River and San Joaquin valleys, his headquarters being at Fremont's Ford, on the San Joaquin river. This ford was named in honor of one of his particular friends, Gen. J. C. Fremont. Mr. Stevenson was an extensive landholder, owning twenty thousand acres of land, and was one of the best-known cattle men of central California. His death, which occurred in 1882, was a loss to the community as well as to his family. He reared three children, two daughters and one son. His daughter Charlotte, Mrs. Silman, died in 1896, leaving one child, Archibald L.

After his graduation from the San Francisco Business College, in 1892, A. L. Silman was engaged in various capacities for five years. In 1897 he made a bold start in life, going first to Seattle, and from there, on the Rosalie, to Skagway, Alaska, thence over the Chilkoot pass to Dawson, where he was engaged in prospecting and mining for fourteen months, remaining until the fall of 1898, when he returned to Merced. In 1899 he took charge of the Inglesbe ranch, on the Merced river, retaining its management until 1902, when he resigned. The next two years Mr. Silman was grain buyer at Merced for Haslach & Kahan. Entering the employ of Miller & Lux in February, 1904, he was foreman on their Temple ranch for three months, but since that time has filled his present position as manager of the Santa Rita ranch, at Dos Palos. This ranch, containing several thousand acres, is one of the largest owned by the firm, and is especially devoted to the breeding and raising of fine horses. Mr. Silman owns a farm on the Merced river, having a ranch of seven hundred and twenty acres, finely located, about fifteen miles from the city of Merced, and well adapted for raising corn, being under irrigation. This estate he rents.

In Stockton, Cal., Mr. Silman married Marie Inglasbe, who was born in Merced county, the daughter of Daniel Eames Inglasbe, a large land owner and an extensive stockman. Politically Mr. Silman, true to the faith in which he was reared, is a strong Democrat. Fraternally he belongs to La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M., of Merced; to Merced Chapter, R. A. M.; and to Yosemite Parlor No. 24, N. S. G. W.

JOSEPH SPENCER SPARKS. A man of undoubted ability, industry and enterprise, the late Joseph Spencer Sparks was for many years intimately associated with the development and growth of the agricultural interests of Merced county, and contributed his full share towards its advancement and prosperity. Dependent entirely upon his own efforts, he applied himself diligently to his chosen work, and in course of time won a place of distinction among the most successful farmers and stock-raisers of his neighborhood, and a place of honor among the industrious and respected citizens of the community. A son of Madison Sparks, he was born, May 12, 1830, in Kentucky.

Born and reared in Virginia, Madison Sparks settled in Kentucky when a young man, and as a planter and a slaveholder there spent the remainder of his life, dying at the venerable age of eighty-two years. He married Winnie Thomas, who was born in Virginia, and died in Kentucky. Eight children blessed their union, seven sons and one daughter, Joseph Spencer being the third child in order of birth.

Having acquired a good common school education, Joseph Spencer Sparks remained in his native county until after attaining his majority. His enthusiasm having been aroused by the enthusiastic reports concerning the discovery of gold on the Pacific coast, he followed the tide of emigration westward, coming overland to California in 1852. Locating claims in Placer county, he was there engaged in mining for many years, sometimes being quite prosperous in his ventures and sometimes meeting with reverses. About 1867 he removed to Butte county, settling near Chico, where he was engaged in the lumber business for two or three years, filling contracts for hauling logs to the mills. Coming to the San Joaquin valley in 1869, Mr. Sparks purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land at Cottonwood, and the next year, in 1870, bought the ranch now owned and occupied by his widow. It contains three hundred and twenty acres of land and is pleasantly located near Ingomar, and but ten miles southwest of Newman. With characteristic courage and energy Mr. Sparks began his agricultural career, making practical improvements on his estate and placing the land in a high state of cultivation. In addition to general farming, he carried on a large business as a stock grower, and became noted as a breeder and raiser of valuable horses. He rented other land than his own, his operations being extensive and profitable, and was known as one of the most thorough-going and skilful ranchmen of this vicinity. As a man, a neighbor, and as a citizen, Mr. Sparks deservedly held high rank, and his death, which occurred at his late home, in 1892, was regretted as a public loss. In his political relations he was a steadfast Democrat, active in local affairs, and for several years rendered good service as school trustee. He was a man of strong religious convictions, and a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow.

In Chico, Butte county, Cal., Mr. Sparks married Melissa C. Eachus, who was born in Iowa, and came with her parents across the plains to California in 1865. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Sparks has managed the home ranch with marked ability, adding from year to year to the improvements already established, in 1901 having erected the commodious residence that now adorns the estate, besides adding one hundred and sixty acres to the home place. She raises large crops of grain and hay, and below the canal has twenty acres of alfalfa. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Sparks six children were born, namely: David William, deceased; Lucy May, living at home; Nellie Bird, deceased; Margaret Russell, a teacher in the public schools; George Madison, living at home; and Joseph Spencer, Jr., at home.

FRANZ BUCKREUS. The fact that Franz Buckreus has held the important position of superintendent of the Kern County Hospital for over twenty years is by no means the only evidence of his ability and faithfulness received by his fellow townsmen of Bakersfield. From the time of his arrival in Kern county in 1875 he has impressed his general worth upon those with whom he has been associated, proving himself a stable and energetic citizen, conscientious to an unusual degree, and having the knowledge of how best to further the interests of his fellow men. He is a native of Bavaria, and was born November 30, 1845. He received the practical home and educational advantages accorded the average youth of the Fatherland, supplemented by a course in surgery, for which he evidenced particular aptitude. When he arrived in New York City in July, 1871, he was twenty-six years old, and soon afterward found a position as steward in a New York hospital, later filling a similar office in the city of Brooklyn. In both places he was able to add to his knowledge of surgery. He also gained a general knowledge of hospital management, which was of inestimable value to him upon assuming his present large responsibility. Finding the work congenial, humane and satisfying, he resolved upon his future course of action, should opportunity come his way.

Arriving in Bakersfield in 1875, Mr. Buckreus turned his attention to operating a barber shop in the old Arlington hotel. The enterprise soon proved the best of its kind in the town, many personal characteristics of the manager contributing to his popularity and success. He was well informed, jovial, sympathetic and ready at repartee, besides being neat and temperate in his habits, high-minded and generous in his thoughts, and always ready to do a good turn for one in trouble. In connection with these days of early prosperity, he is glad to recall that some of his patrons are still his warmest friends and supporters. For eight years the little barber shop was a busy center of activity, and the proprietor, having the natural thrift and economy of his race, saved money.

Mr. Buckreus left his barber shop to assume the superintendency of the hospital in 1883, and two years later, in 1885, he was elected coroner and public administrator on the Democratic ticket. This responsibility he filled with satisfaction to all concerned until 1892, and in 1896 was re-elected, serving until January, 1903. It is doubtful if any occupant of the office has invested it with greater dignity and ability, his shrewdness, tact, general knowledge and unquestioned integrity, supplying the chief requisites of the responsibility. Mr. Buckreus is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is genial, practical and thorough in his management of the hospital, understanding well how to harmonize the various factions with which he has to contend.

FRANK L. GOULARTE. To Frank L. Goularte belongs the distinction of being one of the pioneer sweet potato raisers in the Atwater Colony, in Merced county, Cal. The entire acreage of his farm is utilized in raising this crop, and in addition he rents ten acres of adjacent land for the same purpose. So successful was he in this venture that many of his neighbors followed his example, and now thousands of acres are planted in sweet potatoes in the county, the soil being especially adapted to their culture, the general average being seventy-five sacks to the acre. Born in the Azores, Island of Pico, Portugal, in 1858, Mr. Goularte was reared on a farm and at the age of twenty left his home and crossed the ocean to the United States, pursuing his way across the continent to California.

In Monterey county he worked on a sheep ranch for four years and at the close of that time he went to Fresno county and began raising sheep on his own behalf, continuing with success for eight years. Removing to a new location in Madera county he followed similar work there, still doing a profitable business up to 1899, when he discontinued the stock business and purchased forty acres of land near Atwater, in Merced county. Upon this land he has since lived. He at once began the cultivation of sweet potatoes, having retained twenty acres of his original purchase. In Madera county he owns some valuable real estate, having twenty-two town lots in Madera, a number of them containing residences, and from the rent of these cottages a steady income is derived.

By his marriage, in California, Mr. Goularte was united with Miss Belle Mallo, a native of Mariposa county, and three children have been born to them, Anna, born in 1895; Marion, born in 1897, and Belle, born in 1901. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Goularte is a member of the I. D. E. S. and U. P. E. C. lodges. He is well known as a farmer of the best type, and one whose individuality and force of character have been felt even in the few short years of his residence in Merced county. In politics he is a Republican.

JASPER PARNELL. Among the native-born citizens of California who have spent their lives within its precincts aiding in every possible way its growth and development, whether relating to its agricultural, industrial or financial prosperity, is Jasper Parnell, one of the best known and most highly esteemed residents of Merced county, owning and occupying a ranch near Ingomar. Of pioneer ancestry, he was born November 14, 1853, in Calaveras county, a son of John Parnell.

A native of England, John Parnell grew to manhood in the British Isles, living there until 1846. Immigrating then to the United States, he settled first in Galena, Ill., as a steamboat engineer, but subsequently became a pioneer resident of Wisconsin. Crossing the plains with horse teams in 1850, he located in Calaveras county, Cal., where he followed mining and ranching for a number of years. In 1867 he located on the west side of Stanislaus county, near Grayson, where he took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land, from which he improved a good ranch. As a tiller of the soil he met with unbounded success, and from time to time bought more land, increasing his estate until he had one thousand acres of land. Far-sighted, capable and practical, he accumulated much wealth, and, on retiring from active pursuits, purchased a residence in Stockton, and also had a beautiful summer home at Pacific Grove, Monterey county, where his death occurred July 28, 1902. He was a man of unblemished character, deeply respected by all, and was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia Stevens, was born in Cornwall, England and died, January 2, 1903, in Stockton, Cal. She was laid to rest beside her husband, and on the monument that marks the place their son Jasper has had this epitaph carved, "They lived to enjoy this life, and by faith to enjoy Eternity." Of their happy union three boys and one girl were born, Jasper being the second child and the oldest son.

Having completed his early education in the common schools of Calaveras county, Jasper Parnell came with his parents to Stanislaus county, where he assisted his father in improving a homestead, becoming familiar at the same time with the various branches of farming. In 1887 Mr. Parnell bought his present ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, which is advantageously located in Merced county, near Ingomar, and about ten miles south of Newman. He has also other valuable real estate, owning a cattle ranch of four hundred and eighty acres in the mountains, and having a farm equally as large in Stanislaus county, not far from Grayson, where he raises large crops of wheat and barley. On his home farm he makes a specialty of growing alfalfa.

In Stockton, Cal., Mr. Parnell married Cassie Barney, a native of Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of three children, Stella, Harold and Cora. Mr. and Mrs. Parnell live on the home ranch the greater part of the year, although they spend their summers at their home in Pacific Grove, where they enjoy the invigorating sea breezes. Politically Mr. Parnell is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM T. ALLEN. As a successful rancher William T. Allen is doing much to advance the agricultural interests of the community about Bakersfield, his forty-acre ranch being located just seven miles west of that city. Empty-handed he came to Kern county less than ten years ago, and with indefatigable energy and perseverance has already established himself among the men whose efforts have counted in the battle of life. A native of Kenton county, Ky., he was born September 1, 1853, the representative of an old colonial family, and one in which the pioneer element had no little place. The grandfather, Hugh Allen, was a native of Virginia and was one of the first to cross the mountains into Kentucky, in time establishing himself as an extensive farmer and the owner of a large number of slaves in Woodford county, where he lived to an advanced age. He married Hannah Trumbull, who belonged to the family which numbered Governor Trumbull of Ohio among its members. Carey T. Allen, their son and the father of W. T. Allen, of this review, was born in Kentucky and spent his entire life in that state as a farmer, meeting with great success in all his operations, but losing his fortune in later life through security debts. He died at the age of fifty-six years. His wife, formerly Charlotte Cleveland, was born in Kentucky in 1818 and died in 1878, with the exception of a few years in Indiana, having spent her entire life in her native state. She was a member of the Baptist Church.

Of the ten children born to his parents William T. Allen was the sixth in order of birth. He remained at home on the farm until early manhood, when he married and entered into an independent life as a farmer and dairyman. In 1894 he came west to California, where he rented property for four or five years, when he purchased the forty acres which now constitutes his home, located on section 23, township 29, range 26, east, his postoffice being Rosedale. This has become a very valuable piece of property, the land being devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa and grapes, besides which he has a water franchise. In addition to managing his ranch he moves houses and makes considerable money in that way. December 20, 1881, he was united in marriage with his second cousin, Elizabeth Allen, who was born and reared in Kentucky, the daughter of James Trumbull and Louisa (Robertson) Allen. The father was born in Kentucky in 1828, and is now storekeeper and gauger for the government in Kentucky, being hale and hearty, though past seventy-five years. Politically he is a Republican. His wife was a native of New York, her parents being emigrants from Scotland, and he is still living at the age of seventy-two years. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Allen were born two children, namely: Hugh S., now a student in the State University at Berkeley, taking a course in mining engineering; and Louisa Robertson, who is attending the high school of Bakersfield. Politically Mr. Allen is a Democrat and in the interests of his party and the general public as well has served for many years as school trustee. Both himself and wife are members of the Congregational Church at Rosedale, and both take an active interest in the church and Sunday school. The life of Mr. Allen has been such as to call forth the esteem and respect of all with whom he has come in contact, all honoring him for his energy and perseverance and evident business ability, and for the unswerving integrity which has characterized all his dealings. He is often chosen to fill responsible posts as he well represents the best interests of the people.

CAPTAIN NORRIS H. DORSEY. The present postmaster of Delano has come into his rank through meritorious service on the battle-fields of the Civil war, and is honored for his patriotism, his even, temperate life, and his example as a painstaking, conscientious and high-minded pioneer. Mr. Dorsey was born in Schuyler county, Ill., July 25, 1835, and on the paternal side is of Irish ancestry, his immigrating forefather having settled in Maryland at a very early day. His grandfather, Azel Dorsey, removed from Maryland to Kentucky, and from the latter state to Schuyler county, Ill., in 1828, and died there at the age of seventy-eight years. He was a noncommissioned officer in the war of 1812. His son, G. G., the father of Captain Dorsey, was born in Kentucky, but reared on the Schuyler county farm, and from Illinois enlisted for service in the Black Hawk war in the same regiment with Abraham Lincoln. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Calvin and Sarah Hobart, who was born in Vermont and settled in Schuyler county with her parents in 1825. The conditions at that time were extremely crude, and her mother was the first white woman at the old military reserve. Her parents came from old New England families, and the father served in the war of 1812, while his father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Dorsey lived to be forty years old, and left six children, of whom Captain Dorsey was the oldest.

At the age of twenty Captain Dorsey left the Schuyler county farm and removed to Red Wing, Minn., where he attended the Hamlin University, supplementary to his common school and academic education received in Illinois. Eventually he engaged in educational work in Red Wing until the breaking out of the Civil war. He enlisted December 19, 1861, in Company A, Fifth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, as a private, going south with his regiment in the spring of 1862. He participated in many of the famous battles of the Civil war, including Corinth, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Nashville, Spanish Fort, Blakely and the Red River campaign. For meritorious service he was elevated to the rank of sergeant in the spring of 1862; to that of second lieutenant in November, 1862; to first lieutenant in the spring of 1863, and to captain in December, 1864.

Returning to Minnesota after the close of the war, Captain Dorsey engaged in farming about four years, and then purchased a mill at Winnebago City, which he operated until coming to California in 1886. Securing a government homestead adjoining the town of Delano, he has since made his home upon it, devoting it to general farm produce. April 1, 1901, he was appointed postmaster, a position maintained by him with distinct credit. He has otherwise served the interests of the Republican party, having served for many years as justice of the peace in Minnesota, and held minor offices in Kern county, this state. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Dorsey has been a hard working, painstaking man, and deserves all praise for the wise disposition he has made of the opportunities within his reach. He is quiet and unassuming, kindly in manner and judgment, and deeply interested in the welfare of the town of his adoption.

PETER BLADT. A skillful and successful agriculturist, thoroughly understanding the details of the different branches of farming, Peter Bladt is actively identified with the development and progression of the industrial interests of Merced county. Residing seven miles south of Newman, he is widely and favorably known as a true citizen in every respect, and has an excellent reputation as a straightforward and upright man. A native of Germany, he was born, January 17, 1854, in Schleswig-Holstein, where his parents, Peter and Elizabeth (Clausen) Bladt, spent their entire lives, being engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The youngest of a family consisting of three sons and five daughters, Peter Bladt received such educational advantages as were afforded in the common schools of his native land. As a boy he began working for wages on a farm, continuing to thus earn his living until 1872, when he emigrated to the United States, locating on an Illinois prairie farm, near Chicago, where he worked for a short time. In 1873 he came to California, and for awhile was employed on a ranch in the Salinas Valley. Coming to the San Joaquin Valley in 1876, Mr. Bladt secured work on a ranch at Crow's Landing, and there continued in his chosen occupation four years. Wise in his savings, and prudent in his expenditures, he had then accumulated sufficient money to warrant him in starting in business on his own account. Accordingly, in 1880, he rented eight hundred acres of land near Newman, and in the raising of wheat and grain was very successful. Investing the money he thus made in land, Mr. Bladt bought the ranch that he now owns and occupies. It lies about seven miles south of Newman, and contains two hundred and forty acres of land. In its care and cultivation he has been exceedingly prosperous, the land being as rich and fertile as can be found in this part of the county, and has all the buildings and machinery required by a first-class modern agriculturist. He also owns twenty-three acres of alfalfa land lying about three miles from Newman, and leases four hundred and eighty acres adjoining his home ranch, and this he devotes to the raising of wheat.

In Stanislaus county, Cal., Mr. Bladt married Katharin Peterson, who was born in Germany, and into the household thus established two children have been born, namely: Peter, Jr., a carpenter and builder, residing in San Francisco; Anna, at home. The mother of these children died in 1886 near Newman. On March 28, 1888, Mr. Bladt was married to Miss Anna Klemm, also a native of Germany, and a daughter of Frederich and Carolina Klemm, natives of Germany, where they still reside. The present Mrs. Bladt is the mother of three children: Rosa C., Stella H. and Fannie Bladt. Of these, Rosa C. is a student in the Heald's business college in San Francisco. In his political affiliations Mr. Bladt is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Democratic party.

CAPT. WILLIAM HENRY PAYSON. Life on the sea has its attractions for many and by selecting the life of a mariner, Captain Payson not only followed the bent of his ambition but emulated the example of his ancestors. Born October 2, 1836, in the town of Lincolnville, Me., and educated in the common schools of his native state, young Payson, at fourteen, went to sea as cook on a coast vessel. At seventeen he began to learn the art of shipbuilding under his father. Three years later he again took up a sea-faring life. For twenty-seven and one-half years he followed the sea, becoming master of a vessel at twenty-three, and during all this time he met with but one accident and lost but two and a half months' work. He engaged only on vessels on the Atlantic, and in 1883 he discontinued sea life, locating for a brief time in Camden, Me. In the fall of the same year (1883) he took passage for California, arriving November 9. Very soon after his arrival he proceeded to Fresno county, purchased twenty acres of unimproved land on California avenue, three and three-fourths miles from the city of Fresno, and at once engaged in viticulture. Many fine improvements were made on this place, and he had eighteen acres in vines. In March, 1904, he sold this place and purchased twenty acres adjoining, where he is principally engaged in raising alfalfa, and dairying.

The Payson family is of Scotch, English and German descent, and the great-grandfather of Captain Payson was a brave soldier in America's war for freedom. His son, Noyes Payson, was born in Maine and participated in the war of 1812, in which he was a captain. He died in 1850, at the age of seventy-two years. In tracing the ancestry one generation farther down, we come to the life history of the captain's father, Erastus Foote Payson, born October 8, 1803, in South Hope, Me. As a mechanic of no mean ability, he was successful as a shipbuilder during the active years of his life and had almost rounded out his four score years when cut off by death, in April, 1883. By his marriage he was united with Caroline Gilkey, who was born at Long Island, Me., December 17, 1811, a daughter of John Gilkey, a native of Massachusetts. Her father, who was a seaman, removed from the Bay State to Long Island, Me., and followed a sea-faring life until he was fifty years old, when he turned his attention to farm pursuits.

Being the fourth child in a family of nine children born to his parents, William H. Payson is one of only two survivors. His sister, Fidelia C., widow of the late F. C. Hastings, is a resident of Massachusetts. The beloved mother died in 1886, at the home of her daughter in South Framingham, Mass. The marriage of Captain Payson was solemnized June 17, 1866, in Connecticut, when he was united with Frances Caroline Gould, born March 31, 1839, in Camden, Me. They have reared three daughters, all residing in Fresno. They are Caroline E., wife of J. A. Webster; Adeline G.; and Lucy R., wife of F. W. Gregory. Fraternally, Captain Payson affiliates with but one secret society, holding a membership in St. Paul Lodge No. 82, F. & A. M., of Rockport, Me. In politics, he is independent in both local and national issues.

THEODORE ANDERSON. The thorough knowledge which Theodore Anderson possesses of the millwright's and machinist's trades admirably qualifies him to discharge the varied responsibilities of his present position as head miller for the Sperry Milling Company of Fresno. During the period of his connection with this company he has risen, by successive promotions, and in recognition of his mastery of the milling business, from a humble position to one of trust. He is of Swedish birth and ancestry and was born at Wadstena, on Lake Wetter, in the southern part of that country, December 12, 1868. He learned the millwright's trade under the painstaking instruction of his father, John Anderson, a machinist and millwright, who through much of his active life has engaged in the flour milling industry, but at this writing, and for some time past, has been interested in the stone business.

At the time of coming to America in 1888 Mr. Anderson had acquired the complete acquaintance with his trade which is the custom in the land of his birth. Every detail of millwrighting was carefully explained to him, in order that he might be fitted for reliable work in the occupation. For a few months after his arrival in the United States he worked in Massachusetts, but during the same year came to California, joining his uncle, Axel Carlson, in Fresno, where he has since made his home. At the time of his arrival he could find no position in a mill, so temporarily took up other work pending a vacancy that would furnish him a suitable opportunity to prove his skill as a millwright and machinist. After working for some years in planing mills and warehouses, in 1897 he was taken into the employ of the Sperry Flour Company, being at first given a very humble position, but rising step by step by force of industry and good workmanship. In July of 1903 he was placed in charge of the mill, and in November of the same year was appointed head miller of the Fresno mills, the largest in the San Joaquin valley, operated by electric power and having a capacity of three hundred and fifty barrels each twenty-four hours. In his native land he was trained in the Lutheran faith, and still adheres to the religion of his forefathers. Since coming to Fresno he has become a naturalized citizen of the United States, and a supporter of the Republican party, voting for its men and measures both in local and general elections. Movements for the benefit of the workmen receive his co-operation and support, particularly the Fraternal Brotherhood, of which he is an active member. His wife, whom he married in Fresno, bore the maiden name of Edna Johnson, and, like himself, is a native of Sweden.

CHRISTIAN BACHTOLD has been particularly interested in the culture of cereals in Fresno county for the past eighteen years, especially in the region of Selma, his home, having purchased in 1886 the Valley View flouring mills, which he improved, changed into a roller mill, and has operated ever since, giving it the name of the Selma flouring mill. This mill manufactures several choice brands of flour, and the output—seventy barrels per day of twenty-four hours—is shipped principally to the nearby markets. An expert miller of broad experience, Mr. Bachtold has made a life work of this business, which he learned in his native country, Switzerland, and after immigrating to America, he followed his trade in New York, San Francisco, Portland, and in other cities. Although he first came to California in 1874, it was not until twelve years later that he took up his residence in Fresno county, where he now ranks among her most prosperous and well-to-do business men.

Born January 20, 1853, in the canton of Schaffhausen, Switzerland, Mr. Bachtold is the second in a family of twelve children born to Casper and Verena (Myer) Bachtold, both of whom were also natives of the above named canton. Of their children, ten were sons and two daughters, and of these five sons and one daughter left their native land for a home in the United States. The father was a manufacturer of tools for the greater part of his life, but his declining years were spent in farm pursuits. Both he and his wife are now deceased, the latter having passed away in 1880, aged about fifty-six years, and the death of Mr. Bachtold occurring in August, 1903. He was a very successful man, financially and otherwise.

Educated in the common schools of Switzerland, Christian Bachtold, at the age of sixteen, became apprenticed at flour milling on the border line between Germany and Switzerland, at a place called Stulingen, in Baden. At eighteen he went to Geneva, and spent one year as miller in a large mill there, subsequently going to Germany and working in the same capacity until 1873 at Speirr, Bavaria.

In April, 1873, Mr. Bachtold started on his way to America, and the first year of his residence in this country was spent at his trade in Syracuse, N. Y., the trip to California being made in December of the following year. After spending one week in San Francisco he proceeded to Portland, Ore., and for three months followed milling in that city, but in May, 1875, returned to San Francisco. The following two years were spent as a miller in the employ of George P. McNear in his mills at Petaluma, but on New Year's day, 1878, Mr. Bachtold tendered his resignation in order to accept a more lucrative situation in Winnemucca, Nev., and there he followed milling until 1886.

In addition to his milling interests, Mr. Bachtold is largely interested in various other enterprises in this section, being an advocate of expansion. He is vice-president of the First National Bank of Selma, and vice-president and director of the Selma water works. He served as town trustee for eight years, being chosen to fill that office March 15, 1893, and for four years he officiated as chairman of the board. He is also interested in the oil development of the San Joaquin valley, being president of the Hico Oil Company, which has a number of paying wells at Coalinga. In fraternal circles Mr. Bachtold affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias of Selma. His political preferences are given to the Republican party, and he is among the most active politicians of his locality, having served upon various occasions as delegate to the county and state conventions. By his marriage in Selma, in 1888, he was united with Mrs. Libbie Hartman, a native of Indiana, and they have one child, John C., who is a student in the public school.

SAMUEL A. SMITH. Among the substantial and successful dairy farmers of Merced county is Samuel A. Smith, a well-known and highly respected resident of Los Banos, his ranch lying half a mile from the city limits. A pioneer settler, having the distinction of being the longest established resident of the west side, he has been very prominent in the upbuilding of this section of the county, having been especially active in advancing the educational and moral welfare of the community in which he resides. Laboring with zeal and earnest purpose in his efforts to improve his estate, he has acquired an excellent reputation as an intelligent and skillful agriculturist, and as a most capable and prosperous business man. A son of the late Lewis Smith, he was born, February 14, 1839, near Rock Island, Ill., where he lived until two years old. In 1841 he was taken by his parents to Winnebago county, Ill., where he obtained his early education, attending the district schools. In 1856 his parents became pioneers of Fayette county, Iowa, where he assisted his father in clearing a homestead.

Leaving home in 1862, Samuel A. Smith crossed the plains to California, hoping in this genial climate to easier obtain a living from the soil. After living a year in Yolo county, he removed to Solano county, where he was engaged in general farming for several seasons. Locating in Merced county, on the west side, in October, 1868, Mr. Smith pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land on section twenty-three, township ten, range ten, and has since resided there, the north line of his ranch being but one-half a mile from the present limits of Los Banos. He subsequently purchased an adjoining tract of one hundred and sixty acres, after which he added thirty-six acres of land lying near by, enlarging his estate to three hundred and fifty-six acres. A part of this land Mr. Smith has since disposed of, having divided one hundred and sixty acres of it among four of his sons, giving to each forty acres of land, on which the individual owners are raising alfalfa in large quantities. Mr. Smith has now one hundred and ninety-six acres of valuable land in his home ranch, the larger part of which he devotes to alfalfa, and is extensively engaged in dairying, keeping over two hundred head of stock, the business at the present time being under the management of his son, Charles P. Smith, of whom a sketch appears on another page of this work. He has made noteworthy improvements on his place, having the land all under irrigation, and furnished with a substantial set of farm buildings.

In Iowa, in 1860, Mr. Smith married Nancy Dollarhide, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of John Dollarhide, who came to California in pioneer days, settling on the Sacramento river. Mrs. Smith passed to the life beyond in 1879, leaving seven children, namely: Oscar, Jasper, Grant, Frank, Charles P., Alice and Amanthus. The sons are all successfully engaged in farming on the west side. Politically Mr. Smith is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and for many years rendered good service as justice of the peace. He was a member of the school board of the first district, and helped build the first schoolhouse on the west side. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a prominent and leading member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is now chairman of its board of trustees.

ANDREW P. JENSEN. Among the active and prosperous residents of Newman, no one is better known to the general public than Andrew P. Jensen, the genial and popular proprietor and landlord of the Farmers' Hotel. A man of energetic temperament, and good business ability, he has succeeded well in his undertakings, and is well deserving of the respect and confidence so universally accorded him. A son of James H. Jensen, he was born November 10, 1867, in Ringkjøbing, a seaport town of Denmark, located on the west coast of the peninsula of Jutland.

Also a native of Ringkjøbing, James H. Jensen has been a life-long resident of that place, being now a hale and hearty man of seventy years, residing on the home farm. He is a man of sterling worth, and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Elsie M. Petersen, was born, lived and died in Ringkjøbing. Of their seven children, three are living, Andrew P. being the only son. One daughter, Mrs. Paulsen, is also a resident of Newman.

Bred to agricultural pursuits, Andrew P. Jensen obtained his early education in the common schools, remaining at home until becoming of age. Emigrating to America, he located in Newman, Cal., May 29, 1889, and for six years worked on a ranch in this vicinity. Going to San Francisco in 1895, he learned the barber's trade, and subsequently opened a barber's shop in Newman, on Front street, where he carried on a successful business until 1900. Giving up his trade in that year, Mr. Jensen leased the Farmers' Hotel, and met with such success in its management that, in 1903, he purchased the entire hotel property, and is now its sole owner and manager. The house is conveniently arranged for regular or transient guests, and all are sure of finding a warm welcome and generous treatment at the hands of the accommodating host, whose highest aim is to please his patrons.

In Newman, Mr. Jensen married Amalia Jacobson, who was born on the Island of Moen, Denmark, and they have three children, namely: Elsie, Clarence M., deceased, and Clara. Fraternaly Mr. Jensen belongs to Newman Lodge, I. O. O. F., and to the Danish Lodge. Religiously, true to the faith in which he was reared, he is a Lutheran.

JASPER N. STUHR. To whatever country the Dane transfers his citizenship he brings the qualities of thrift, economy and perseverance that make his native land a power among larger and greater European countries. In the career of Mr. Stuhr in California these traits have been manifested and have made him an influential factor in the commercial growth of Stanislaus county. Varied as are his interests, he maintains a close oversight of all. In Newman, where he has his home and business headquarters, he represents twelve old-line insurance companies, including the Liverpool-London Globe, Home of New York and German-American. Since about 1892 he has acted in the capacity of notary public. As a member of the firm of Williams & Stuhr he negotiates important real estate transfers and handles the Acme colony tract, comprising seven hundred acres of alfalfa land, now laid out in twenty-acre lots. Through his instrumentality was organized the Realty Development Company of Newman and he now acts as president of this important organization, having for its object the growth and prosperity of this part of Stanislaus and Merced counties. To him also belongs the credit of having taken the initiative in the establishment of the first creamery in this vicinity, thereby making the dairy business profitable for farmers of the county.

A resident of California since 1872, Mr. Stuhr was born at Erteberg, on the island of Alsen, province of Schleswig, Denmark. His father, Joachim H., a native of the same island, and a merchant by occupation, served in the Schleswig-Holstein war of 1848-51, and was a sutler in the army in 1864. He lived to be eighty-four years of age, dying in 1901 at his island home. His wife, who had died there in 1888, bore the maiden name of Dorothea Iversen, and was a daughter of Nicholi Iversen, a farmer and member of a very ancient family of the island. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Stuhr was Christian Stuhr, of German ancestry, and for years engaged in the coasting trade as master of his own vessel. In the family of Joachim H. Stuhr there were eight children, three of whom are living. Jasper N. was born November 5, 1854, and received a grammar school education at Erteberg. When sixteen years of age he went to the island of Lyø, Denmark, where he secured work on a farm. Crossing the ocean to America in 1871, he proceeded direct to Chicago, and the next year came to California. After some four years of work in the lumber yard at Salinas, in 1876 he went to Hill's Ferry, Stanislaus county, where he followed farm pursuits. In 1877 he began to work on the old canal as a section foreman, remaining in the position until 1885. The next year he returned to Denmark and spent a year with old friends, coming back to the San Joaquin valley in 1887 and resuming work on the canal.

Shortly after the founding of the town of Newman Mr. Stuhr in 1888 opened the first lumber yard here, acting as manager for the San Joaquin Lumber Company. For four and one-half years he continued in the same position, retiring when the yard was sold to other parties. His next venture was as real estate agent, in which work he continues to the present time. Under the firm title of J. M. Lathrop & Co. he began in the business, later was alone, and since 1900 has had Mr. Williams as a partner. One of the enterprises which now engages his time is the supervision of fifteen hundred acres lying ten miles southwest of Newman, on which he and his partner are building a canal from the outside canal. Ever since coming to this locality he has been an indefatigable worker for the development of the valley by irrigation and improvement. Realizing the importance of a creamery, he organized the New Era, which was the first creamery started in this locality. While filling the office of secretary he assisted in building the structure utilized by the creamery company for its plant and situated two miles south of Newman. This industry was the nucleus of local creameries and established the dairy business upon a profitable basis for the first time in the history of the region. Later he organized and bought stock in the Acme creamery, three miles north of Newman, which company he served as secretary. At this writing the shipments from creameries in the vicinity of Newman amount to $1,000 per day. What this means to the stock raising and business interests of the neighborhood only those familiar with previous conditions can conceive. It has wrought a transformation in the dairy industry and has indirectly promoted other lines of activity. Without doubt no movement has been more productive of benefit to the people of Stanislaus county than the establishment of the creameries here.

The marriage of Mr. Stuhr took place in Salinas, and united him with Miss Annie Kathrine Iversen, a native of Schleswig, Denmark. They are the parents of four children, Christine Dorothea, Alfred J., Jasper N., and Ivy R. As a member of the county central committee and in other ways Mr. Stuhr has been an active worker in the interests of the Democratic party. He holds the office of secretary of the Newman Board of Trade, and is serving his third term as a member of the board of county horticultural commissioners. In his native land he was reared and confirmed in the Lutheran religion, to which he has always adhered. Fraternal he is identified with Dania Lodge, Woodmen of the World, and Hill's Ferry Lodge No. 236, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason, and which was transferred to Newman on the founding of this town. No citizen has been more interested than he in the promotion of the welfare of Newman. Through his able service for three years as postmaster, and in many other ways, he has aided the interests of the city and been a contributor to its material progress.

JAMES THOMAS DOWLE, M. D. Inspiring his fellowmen with confidence in his superior ability as a physician and surgeon, and winning the faith and esteem of his many patients, James Thomas Dowle, M. D., has built up an extensive and lucrative medical practice in Newman and vicinity, where he has been located since 1893. A son of J. T. Dowle, he was born June 21, 1864, in Kent county, England.

Having obtained a practical common school education, James Thomas Dowle came to California, taking up his residence in San Francisco in 1884. Deciding upon a professional career as the one most suited to his tastes, he entered the Cooper Medical College in 1887, and three years later, in 1890, was graduated from that institution with the degree of M. D. From 1891 until 1892 Dr. Dowle was an interne at the French Hospital in San Francisco, where he made good use of his professional knowledge, and acquired a valuable experience. In February, 1893, he located in Newman, where he has met with distinguished success in his chosen work, attaining a noteworthy position among the leading physicians of the city. In connection with his residence and office, the doctor has built a small sanitarium, which he is managing with great success, devoting to it much of his time and best effort.

Dr. Dowle married Louisa Dahl, who was born in Germany. The doctor cordially endorses the principles of the Republican party, but has never been an aspirant for public office. Fraternal he belongs to the Ancient Order of Free and Accepted Masons; to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; to the Woodmen of the World; and to the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

ADOLPH DOBRZENSKY. Numbered among the prosperous and respected residents of Newman is Adolph Dobrzensky who, as proprietor of the Vendome Stables, is actively identified with the industrial progress of this section of Stanislaus county. Like many others of California's most enterprising and successful business men, he is of foreign birth, and has brought from his native land those traits of industry, economy and thrift that are the dominant factors in advancing the welfare of our country, and in establishing the prosperity of its people. He was born March 13, 1857, in Posen, Germany, which was likewise the birthplace of both of his parents, Samuel and Minnie (Ries) Dobrzensky.

In 1876 Samuel Dobrzensky emigrated with his family to the United States, settling in San Francisco, where he first found employment in a gas manufactory, and was subsequently engaged for a number of years in teaming. After the death of his wife, he removed to Newman, and now makes his home with his son Adolph, the special subject of this sketch. Of the six children born of his marriage with Minnie Ries, three sons and one daughter are living.

Reared and educated in Germany, Adolph Dobrzensky learned the trade of a brass finisher in San Francisco, serving an apprenticeship in the Union Brass Foundry, in which he worked for eight years. Entering then the employ of James Stot & Co., proprietors of a brass foundry, he did special work for fifteen months, making all of the brass knobs for the Palace Hotel. Subsequently giving up his trade, Mr. Dobrzensky was for fourteen years engaged as a teamster in San Francisco, doing both light and heavy teaming. For two years thereafter he carried on a good business as a real estate dealer. Leaving that city on June 16, 1895, Mr. Dobrzensky located in Newman, where he has since been actively engaged in the livery business, being proprietor of the Vendome Stables, which are well stocked, and furnished with carriages and vehicles of all kinds.

In Livermore, Cal., Mr. Dobrzensky married Anna Levi, who was born in San Leandro, Alameda county, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Milton and Doris. In politics Mr. Dobrzensky is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He is very much interested in Masonry, belonging to Hill's Ferry Lodge No. 236, F. & A. M.; and to the Modesto Chapter No. 49, R. A. M.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S ACADEMY. Occupying almost one-half block on Mariposa and R streets lies the academy which, since its establishment, has been recognized as one of the leading educational institutions of Fresno. While its influence has been greatest among those of the Roman Catholic faith, yet it has received students of all denominations and the religious convictions of each has been sacredly respected. Under the capable yet kindly supervision of Sister Florian, superior of the academy for the Sisters of the Holy Cross, connected with the mother house at Notre Dame, Ind., and with the assistance of an efficient corps of instructors, thorough instruction is furnished in all branches of higher education as well as primary classes. The department of art, voice culture and instrumental music, offer advantages that are appreciated by many students. To aid those who may have their own livelihood to earn, stenography, typewriting and bookkeeping are taught, while for the benefit of those whose tastes turn to domestic affairs plain sewing, fancy work and lace work are taught by teachers of experience. To develop natural dignity and noble simplicity of character is the aim of the academy's system of education, and every teacher has this ideal placed before her pupils. Sister Florian and her assistants endeavor to implant in the heart of each student a love for truth and a devotion to duty that will enable them, whether called to high or inconspicuous spheres of life, to wield a helpful and abiding influence on their associates.

Sister Florian is a native of Watertown, Wis., where her parents were pioneers. She completed her education at Notre Dame, Ind., under the oversight of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, to which order her active life has been consecrated. In the fall of 1892 the first steps were taken toward the establishment of an academy at Fresno. During November of that year the Mother-General Augusta of Notre Dame, accompanied by Mother Praxadese, Sister Florian and Sister Elenore, visited Fresno and founded the academy, which was opened January 5, 1893.

At that time three other teachers were sent as assistants, Sisters Sylvia, Angelita and Lilliosa, none of whom is now connected with the school. As soon as the preliminary arrangements had been completed, the Mother-General returned to Notre Dame and left Sister Florian in charge. At the opening there were only fourteen pupils, but when the term closed, June 15, 1893, the number had been increased to forty. In 1897 property on N street was purchased, to which was moved the old high school building. On the evening of the completion of the remodeling of the structure, it burned to the ground. A building was then rented on N street, where the school remained until October, 1898, and was then moved to Mariposa street, this site having been purchased the preceding February. The residence was remodeled and converted into a building suitable for academy purposes and a new parochial school was built on the adjoining lots, the two institutions now having an attendance of one hundred and seventy-five pupils. While students are in attendance from all parts of the state, the majority of them come from the San Joaquin valley, the institution being best known through this region. Much of the success of the work is due to the faithful, intelligent and tactful labors of Sister Florian, who has abundantly justified the wisdom of the Mother-General in selecting her for this responsible position.

JAMES M. DAVIS. In Merced county, Cal., few men hold so important a position as James M. Davis, who since 1890 has been superintendent of the Buhach Plantation, which is without doubt one of the finest plantations in the San Joaquin valley. By his individual efforts Mr. Davis has been instrumental in making this place the pride of Merced county. A descendant of distinguished Virginia ancestors and born July 31, 1839, in Xenia, Ohio, he is the son of John and Catherine (House) Davis, both of whom were natives of Virginia. His father left that state when a young man for a home in Ohio, and was a pioneer settler in Xenia, Greene county. In 1848, accompanied by his family, he went farther west and settled in Missouri, where he again took up a mercantile life, which had been his occupation in the east. Here he became a prominent citizen and served as justice of the peace for a number of years prior to his death, which occurred at the advanced age of seventy-eight years.

Being but nine years old when his parents removed to Missouri, J. M. Davis was educated principally in the latter state and remained at the home place until 1859, in the meantime becoming a telegraph operator in Kansas City, Mo. During the excitement following the discovery of gold at Pike's Peak, he left home for that scene of activity, and afterward followed mining in Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Arizona. In 1869 Mr. Davis discontinued mining and came to California, where other occupations engrossed his attention. In Lake county he engaged in the saw-milling business for a time, and afterward built a saw-mill in Sonoma county, following that business for eleven years near Middletown.

In 1880 Mr. Davis turned his attention to agricultural pursuits and during that year he took the contract of planting the Olivina vineyard, in Alameda county. Two years later he planted the big vineyard at Folsom, one of the largest in the state, and from 1886 to '88 he had charge of various vineyards in Napa county. By this time, having gained a reputation as a successful vineyardist, he received a call to become superintendent of the Buhach Plantation, which he accepted, assuming the numerous duties of this position in 1890.

Mr. Davis has been twice married, his first marriage, in Idaho, in 1865, uniting him with Amerette Holly, who died in 1880, leaving three children to the care of her husband, namely: Katie, Amy and Walter. In 1882 Mr. Davis again married, being united with Susan Patterson, a native of California and a daughter of the late M. G. Patterson, who left North Carolina in 1846. He served under General Fremont during the Mexican war and was wounded. Mrs. Patterson survives her husband and resides with Mr. and Mrs. Davis. She is a native of Tennessee, and to her belongs the distinction of being the first white woman to live in Livermore, Alameda county, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have one son, Frank P., who is a student at St. Matthews Academy. Politically Mr. Davis is an unswerving Democrat. As superintendent of the Buhach ranch his position is one of importance, and in connection with a sketch of his life a brief description of this prominent ranch is herewith appended.

THE BUHACH PLANTATION. Generally conceded to be one of the finest and most productive as well as one of the most extensive ranches in the San Joaquin valley, this plantation is conveniently located on the main line of the Southern Pacific Railway, six miles west of Merced and one mile east of Atwater. It is owned by J. D. Peters, of Stockton, Cal., and comprises twelve hundred acres, one thousand acres being under irrigation. The entire place, which is well kept, is a delight to the eye, being completely surrounded by magnificent poplar and umbrella trees. Under the efficient management of J. M. Davis, who is assisted by J. F. Peters, the place furnishes employment for from thirty to one hundred and fifty men, according to the season. Seven hundred acres are in vineyards of both wine and table grapes, the latter varieties being shipped to the northern and eastern states. An extensive winery and distillery are located upon the plantation and a number of fine port wines and brandies are made. One hundred and fifty acres are devoted to raising sweet potatoes, so profitably grown throughout the Buhach Colony; fifty acres are in orchards and contain choice varieties of peaches, pears and plums; and eighty acres are in almonds.

But it is from the cultivation of pyrethrum, to which two hundred acres of this place is planted, that this plantation as well as the entire colony adjacent have come into prominence, for from this flower is made the famous Persian powder known as "Buhach," from which the plantation and colony derive their name. This flower in appearance resembles the chrysanthemum; the plants are placed in rows four feet apart and the plants eighteen inches apart in the rows. It is harvested with the old-fashioned sickle, the flowers stripped from the stems by iron fingers. After being thoroughly dried they are sent to Stockton, where the whole is ground into powder and put up in packages, being then sent for sale to all parts of the world. This powder is said to be deadly to insects, bugs, flies, etc., but is harmless to human beings and it commands a good price, the sales being enormous. Twenty-five tons of Buhach is raised on this plantation each year. The expert manner in which the whole place is managed reflects great credit on the untiring efforts of Mr. Davis.

ELMER JEWETT FARR. The family represented by Mr. Farr, a well-known contractor and builder of Fresno, was established in New England during the colonial period. Both of his grandfathers, James Farr (a blacksmith) and Chester Goodrich, were lifelong residents of Vermont, and his parents, L. B. and Clarissa (Goodrich) Farr, were natives of the same state, the former born in Rutland county, the latter near Middlebury. After having followed general farm pursuits for some years in Vermont and New York, about 1863 L. B. Farr settled in Marshall county, Iowa, and took up a tract of wild land eight miles from Marshalltown, where in the course of time, by untiring industry, he transformed a half section of wild acreage into a finely improved farm. While he still conducts farm pursuits, he now makes his home in Cherokee county, Iowa. His entire family, consisting of wife and six children, are still living. Of the children Elmer J., who was next to the youngest, is the only one on the Pacific coast.

He was born near Stockholm, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., April 27, 1862, and in infancy was taken to Iowa, where his earliest recollections are of the home farm with its frontier surroundings.

When eighteen years of age Mr. Farr began to work at the carpenter's trade in Grinnell, Iowa, and after a year was made foreman of work in Aurelia, Iowa. Another year found him in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and Sioux City, Iowa, in which latter place he took up the work of a contractor and builder, which he has successfully followed for many years. Prior to this he was foreman on the Minnehaha county court house at Sioux Falls, also as contractor erected Banker Bailey's residence. Among his contracts in Iowa were the Lindholm Block, and residences of Thomas Green and A. C. Stephens in Sioux City. Coming to California in the fall of 1895, he spent the winter in Stockton and during the spring of 1896 settled in Fresno, where he was first employed by the Santa Fe Railroad Company as division foreman in charge of the round-house, carworks and engines. This position he filled until 1899, and then resigned in order to start in the building business, his first work in that capacity being as foreman for F. J. Stone. In 1902 he took up contracting and building. Among the buildings which he has had in charge are the residence on Butler avenue owned by Fred Dow, William Kennedy's house, and the remodeling of the residence owned by Thomas Patterson.

While living in Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. Farr married Carrie Hamsher, who was born in Wisconsin. They, with their two children, Forest and Vida, reside at No. 519 L street. The family are identified with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In matters political Mr. Farr has always given his support to the Republican party, but his interest in such matters is wholly that of a private citizen, not an office-seeker. In addition to being a member of the Woodmen of the World he has fraternal relations with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, into which he was initiated at Sioux Falls, but is now a member and past noble grand of Central California Lodge No. 343, at Fresno.

EDWARD H. HOFFMAN. Closely allied with the industrial and business interests of Los Banos is Edward H. Hoffman, the pioneer plumber and tinsmith of this section of Merced county. He is a man of practical energy and judgment, taking an active part in advancing the welfare of the community in which he resides, and of which he is an esteemed member. A native-born Californian, his birth occurred March 14, 1864, in Alamo, Contra Costa county, a son of H. Hoffman. A brief account of his parents and immediate ancestors may be found on another page of this volume, in connection with the sketch of James J. Sweeney.

After completing his early studies in the public schools of Alamo, Mr. Hoffman learned the blacksmith trade with William Snyder, at Dutch Corner. Going then to Stockton, he worked for a year in the sash and blind factory of White & Thomas, after which he returned home and the succeeding year engaged in the cattle business on the Aqua Frea ranch. Not content with that occupation, he went to San Francisco, where he entered the employ of J. T. Farrell, with whom he served an apprenticeship of three years at the plumber's and tinsmith's trade. Thoroughly equipped for the business in which he was to enter, Mr. Hoffman went directly to Los Banos to establish himself as a plumber and tinsmith, being the first of his trade to locate here. Erecting his present establishment in June, 1890, he has since resided here, and in the time that has elapsed has built up an extensive and lucrative business. He is agent for the Pacific Pump and Windmill Company of San Francisco, and in this line of industry, also, does a great deal of work, his business extending up and down the west side of the valley.

In his political views Mr. Hoffman is a zealous advocate of the principles of the Democratic party. Fraternally he belongs to Los Banos Lodge No. 312, F. & A. M. He was a charter member of Santa Rita Parlor, N. S. G. W., belonging to it until it disbanded.

MRS. ETTA MOORE SOPER has long been known in Merced county in the realms of education, art, and dairying. In the former capacity in particular her name is associated with continuous effort to maintain a high standard, and probably no other woman in the county has exerted a broader or more practical influence toward this end. Before her marriage Mrs. Soper was Etta Moore; she was born in Potsdam, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and reared in Washington county, Vt., whither her parents removed when she was a child. Her father, Samuel Moore, was born in England. Mrs. Soper's father died when she was a child, as did also her mother, whose maiden name was Pray, and who was of Scotch-Irish descent. She was the mother of six children, four of whom are living, the oldest son, Truman, having died at Alexander, Va., as a member of a Vermont regiment.

Mrs. Soper was educated in the public schools and at Godard Seminary, at Barre, Vt., working her way through the latter institution by teaching, which she began at the age of fifteen. Continuing to teach in Washington county, Vt., until 1885, she then came to Merced county and taught in the school at old Central Point for a year, since then teaching in different schools in the county for eight years. Having always a predilection for country life, she became the owner of a thirty-eight-acre ranch in 1892, and has in the meantime converted its bare and wild aspect into one of beauty and usefulness. Her residence, barns and general buildings, her orchard and garden, bespeak the care and painstaking methods which characterize her life, and more especially her courage in the face of discouraging obstacles. In 1899 her house was burned to the ground, and her library, paintings, and treasures, became things of the past. Her land is all under alfalfa, and she is engaged in dairying. Mrs. Soper is gifted in art, having a comprehensive knowledge of the work and methods of the principal masters whose genius has embellished the world, and she is apt in expressing in oils and crayons both animals and landscapes. She is a member of the Universalist Church. Her farm is located a mile and a half southeast of Los Banos. Mrs. Soper's intellectual qualities have not eliminated the traits most desirable and lovable in women. She is popular with her friends, numbering them among the best people in the county.

FRANK J. BURLEIGH. Descended from an old Massachusetts family of English extraction, Frank J. Burleigh of Fresno was born at Hill, N. H., February 25, 1848, being a son of J. M. and Harriet N. (Privier) Burleigh, also natives of New Hampshire. His maternal grandfather, Joseph Privier, for years carried on a farm in New Hampshire, but finally removed to Illinois, and died at Buda, Bureau county. In the days when agitation was keen concerning the fate of Kansas as a free or slave state, J. M. Burleigh in 1854 went to that region for the purpose of giving his support to the anti-slavery side. Settling at Lawrence, he opened the old Free State hotel, the first inn kept there, his guests being entertained in a rude but comfortable sod building, with a thatched roof. In 1855 he removed to Deep creek, Wabauensee county, where he entered land and improved a farm. After ten years on that place he changed his place of residence to Manhattan, and later engaged in stock-raising and farming on the head of Timber creek, in the northwestern part of Riley county. During the period before the Civil war he was a leading abolitionist of his section. Politically a Republican, he served as postmaster and as justice of the peace while living in Kansas. During 1874 he came to California and bought property in Fresno, where he made his home until he died at seventy-two years of age. In relation

he was connected with the Christian Church. His wife, who is now (1904) seventy-nine years of age, makes her home with members of her family in Fresno county. Of her six children four are living, all in Fresno county, namely: Frank J.; Frederick L., a stockman and vineyardist; Howard E., who owns stock and vineyard interests, and at this writing holds the office of county supervisor; and Mrs. Sarah McNeil.

When six years of age Frank J. Burleigh was taken to Kansas by his parents. The state being then a frontier region, he had no advantages of an educational or social nature, and the knowledge he has acquired represents his unaided exertions. In 1868 he enlisted in Company M, Nineteenth Kansas Cavalry, with Captain Moody and Colonel Moore, and after having been mustered into service at Topeka was sent in pursuit of the Cheyenne Indians, taking part in the battle against them on the Washita river. Supplies were exhausted while the regiment was at the front, far from the commissary headquarters or from any town where relief could be secured. For fourteen days the twelve hundred soldiers subsisted on wild berries and the meat from one buffalo. A train with supplies was sent to their relief at Wichita, but failed to reach them, so that three days' government rations was all the provisions they had for twenty-one days. After six months of service the regiment was mustered out in the spring of 1869, at Port Hayes, Kans. On this expedition General Custer was in command of the Nineteenth, as well as the old Seventh United States Cavalry.

During 1867-68 Mr. Burleigh was employed in the building of the Kansas Pacific railroad through the frontier regions of Kansas. In 1872 he married Mary A. Harris, a resident of Riley county, Kans., and a native of England, being a daughter of John Harris. The latter brought his family to America when his daughter was five months old and settled in Illinois, but later went to Kansas, and from there to California, his death occurring in Fresno. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Burleigh are Charles M. and Harriet, the wife of Walter C. Penn of Fresno. Charles M. is a graduate of the Fresno Business College and now engaged with his father in the stock and grain business. Two years after his marriage Mr. Burleigh sold his stock ranch in Kansas and came to California. For a time he was with Donahue & Glass, who owned what was one of the first lumber mills in Fresno county, near Pine Ridge. While working there he always made Fresno his home. In 1879 he embarked in the warehouse and lumber business on H street, between Tulare and Kern, and continued

there until selling out in 1885. In 1889 he built a warehouse 60x250 feet, on G street, and the following year erected a brick building adjoining, 60x150, for the storage of raisins and fruits. The old warehouse has been utilized for grain and barley, and has a capacity of ten thousand tons. In addition, a large business is conducted in the buying and shipping of cattle, sheep and hogs, some of the latter having been sent to Honolulu. The Fresno Meat Company, incorporated in 1903, consists of himself and son as stockholders and directors. Besides the varied business interests which he manages he superintends his orchard of twenty acres one mile north of the city, as well as other valuable property which he owns in Fresno. Though not a partisan, he is a staunch Republican, and always supports the party in whose faith he was reared. Through his membership in the Chamber of Commerce he has given his influence to movements of benefit to Fresno, whose rise to a position as a recognized center of a great fruit growing industry is a source of profound satisfaction to him as well as to all progressive citizens. In fraternal matters he is connected with and a charter member and one of the organizers of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

ANDREAS OTTO. Unusual interest attaches to the name of Andreas Otto, for it was he who built the first mill in the United States for the manufacture of sugar, and, although many attempts had previously been made, he was the first successfully to manufacture sugar from the beet. His knowledge of the refining and making of sugar was gained in Germany, where for seventeen and one-half years he engaged in the business near Magdeburg on the river Elbe. He was born near that city May 6, 1825, being a son of Peter and Maria Sophia Otto, natives of Germany, where the former was interested in general farming and the stock business. At the age of eighteen Andreas Otto entered a sugar-mill near his home for the purpose of learning the business, which he studied in every department, finally becoming foreman and superintendent of the plant. At the time of the revolution of 1848 he entered the German army and for three years served as a soldier, returning to the mill at the expiration of his service.

On coming to the United States in 1867 Mr. Otto settled at Fond du Lac, Wis., where he lived in a block house and built a crude mill, which was the first of its kind in the country. Sixteen acres of his land was under sugar beets, which he used in the manufacture of sugar. People ridiculed his enthusiasm on the subject of sugar beets, and declared his mill would be a failure. One old man, in particular, scoffed at the idea of making sugar out of beets. After the season's crop was harvested he manufactured some sugar. When the old man came he was shown the product, and on tasting found it excellent. Not knowing it was beet sugar, he asked where it had been purchased. His surprise was great on being assured that it was a product of beets. At first he was incredulous, but finally was convinced that he had tasted genuine beet sugar. The success of the mill became known elsewhere. Papers contained glowing accounts of the manufacturer's success in the new industry. As a consequence he received letters of inquiry from all parts of the United States asking for information concerning his methods of making sugar.

Upon the solicitation of people in California who were interested in the manufacture of sugar, Mr. Otto was induced to come west in 1870. Messrs. Flint, Dyer, Hutchinson and others formed a company and built at Alvarado the first mill in California. For five years Mr. Otto had charge of this plant. At the expiration of that time it was removed to Santa Cruz and rebuilt on a larger scale, with a capacity of fifty tons of beets per day. As manager he remained in Santa Cruz for five years, but during the entire time there was constant dissension among the stockholders, which finally resulted in the disintegration of the corporation. In 1880 Mr. Otto was engaged by Claus Spreckels to go to the Sandwich Islands, where he built a sugar mill at Paahau, and engaged in the manufacture of sugar from cane. The mill had a large capacity, and was successfully operated. During the period of his residence there, in 1882, he invented and patented a machine for saving the sugar from the waste scum that had been turned into the ocean previously. By reason of this new machinery the mill was enabled to turn out more sugar from the same amount of cane than any other mill on the island. He also built tanks to hold the syrup so the sugar that theretofore had been wasted would become crystallized and saved. His patent covered only ten years, and therefore brought him little financial profit, but he has the satisfaction of knowing that it is now in universal use to the benefit of all sugar refiners.

After six years on the Sandwich Islands, Mr. Otto returned to California. In 1882 he had purchased eighty acres on what is now East avenue, four and one-half miles from Fresno, and in 1886 he settled on the place, which has since been his home. All of the improvements now noticeable here are the result of his energy and careful oversight. It was his ambition to make of the property one of the most valuable in all of this section, and in this hope he has not been disappointed. The residence that he erected is a comfortable and attractive abode. Orchards and vineyard have been set out, and through an excellent system of irrigation have been made to bear abundant harvests. A special feature of the estate is the dairy industry, for the management of which he has a steam pumping and cooling plant. Of recent years he has rented the place to his son, Ewald R. Otto, who is profitably conducting the dairy business. While living in Germany Mr. Otto married Miss Elizabeth Elise Wienbeck, a native of the same province as himself. They became the parents of eight children, five of whom are living, namely: Emil F., who is connected with the packing house in Fresno; Emma, wife of George Noble, of Visalia; Bertha, who married Thomas Givens; Rosa, Mrs. George W. Cartwright; and Ewald R., who rents the home place.

FAUSTINO M. NORIEGA. Among the men who have made possible the enormous sheep raising business in Kern county, none stands higher in the public regard than F. M. Noriega, for many years a trusted employe of Miller & Lux, extensive sheep and cattle ranchers, and since identified with the buying and selling of sheep and the purchasing and improving of country and town property. It is doubtful if any man in Kern county is a better judge of the animals who contribute so generously to the making of western fortunes, for during his active life he has purchased many herds of sheep, often paying as high as $30,000 a herd. He has made a practical study of the habits and conditions under which sheep are best cared for, and the fact that he is a pioneer in this line of industry, and has watched with keen interest its development up to the present time, gives special weight to his judgment and opinion.

As his name implies, Mr. Noriega is a Spaniard, and was born in Santander, Spain, February 15, 1856. At the age of fifteen he left his parents' home and became errand boy in a near-by city, but when tired of this work came to California in 1872, his choice of location being influenced by the fact that his god-father, Vincent Noriega, lived in Tulare county. The journey here was an event to the untraveled boy, and consumed many weeks, for he immigrated first to New York, and from there came to the coast by way of the Isthmus of Panama, reaching San Francisco October 4, 1872. His first experience of importance was not calculated to impress him favorably with his adopted country, for upon stepping off the train at Oakland he broke his ankle. Recovering, he was taken by friends to Visalia, where he worked with his cousin at sheep herding, and in time managed to save enough money to take up land on his own responsibility. He became identified with the Kern County Land Company as a sheep driver in 1879, later being advanced to the position of foreman for the same company. In 1882 he began to work for Miller & Lux, and was foreman of the ranch until 1893. During that time his operations as buyer and seller were conducted on a large scale, and he had from thirty to forty men under his charge. That his services were satisfactory in the extreme is evident from the fact that he remained in the same employ for eleven years.

In December, 1893, Mr. Noriega came to Kern and erected the Ivoria hotel, for which he was obliged to borrow $3,500, and which he himself operated successfully until leasing the same in 1901. He has also erected the new brick Hotel Pyrenees costing $9,000, and besides, is the owner of other houses and property in the town. His interest in sheep is in no way abated, for he is half owner of a herd of eight thousand, which in winter are grazed in this county, but are driven to Nevada for the summer season.

February 14, 1893, Mr. Noriega married Louise Inda, a native of France, and the mother of three children: Martha Lena, Julia and Christian. Through all of his varied experiences Mr. Noriega has preserved a genial temperament, and has never lost track of the innate courtesy and consideration of his race. He is high minded in the extreme, and a public-spirited citizen to whom his townsmen look for support in all efforts at general municipal improvement.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER MOOREHEAD. For more than forty years a citizen of the glorious state of California, Mr. Moorehead, during his long and eventful life covering a space of seventy-one years, has followed diversified occupations, but the main occupation in which the greater part of his hopes have been centered is agricultural pursuits, with kindred branches; this line of work still claims his attention on his beautiful home place five miles west of Crows Landing. Here he has a fine ranch of two hundred and six acres of choice land, devoted to general farm pursuits, but principally to raising wheat and barley. In addition to this he owns two hundred and forty acres near his homestead.

Born January 10, 1833, in Greenbrier county, West Va., Samuel A. Moorehead is a son of John Moorehead. His education commenced in his native state and was continued in Iowa, whither his parents had removed with the family in 1850. They located on a farm in Louisa county and in this vicinity Mr. Moorehead began farm pursuits on his own behalf. In 1863 he was induced to start for California, crossing the plains behind horse-teams and stopping for a short time at Carson City. In December of the same year he reached Marysville, Cal., remaining there also but a short time. In January, the year following, he began teaming to and from the mines hauling freight. This occupation, although somewhat hazardous, was a paying business and he followed it up to the time of his marriage, in 1868, afterward working in a sawmill.

It was in the fall of 1869 that Mr. Moorehead took one hundred and sixty acres of land among the foothills in the San Joaquin valley. This land is located near the present home of Mr. Moorehead, along Crow creek, in Stanislaus county and here for years Mr. Moorehead followed ranching pursuits. By a subsequent purchase, eighty acres of additional land were added and Mr. Moorehead still owns this fine ranch, which now contains two hundred and forty acres. In 1889 he removed to his home place, which he purchased at that time and upon it he has lived ever since. His land is very productive, but with the aid of his combination harvester, he is enabled to handle the harvest easily.

April 8, 1868, in Placerville, Cal., Mr. Moorehead married Alice Morgan, who was born in Ireland, but who accompanied a brother to New York and afterward to California. Of the six children born of this union, three are deceased. They are Alexander, Etta and Walter. Those living are Rena, now Mrs. Charley Carver; Lee, who resides at the home site; and Fannie, now Mrs. Gilbert Ostrum, a resident of Knights Ferry, Cal. A Democrat in his political views, Mr. Moorehead has been useful to his party in many ways, and he has served many years as school director, being largely interested in the educational affairs of his locality. Fraternally he is a Mason, joining the order in Truckee, this state.

GEORGE FEAVER. A well-known and successful fruit-grower and vineyardist of Fresno county, George Feaver is located on his eighty-acre ranch in the Fowler district, eight and a half miles southeast of the city of Fresno. A native of England, he was born in 1838, and there remained for many years, earning his livelihood among the more or less hampering conditions of a thickly peopled country. He was forty-seven years old when he decided upon emigration to the western world, in 1883 crossing the ocean and seeking a new home for his family. California was his destination, and on his arrival here he settled in Fresno county, in Washington colony purchasing land upon which he remained for three years. He then moved to the Fowler district, and in 1902 he removed to his present location and is now devoting his energies to the cultivation of raisin grapes and fruit of various kinds. Though having nearly reached the biblical allotment of years he is still active and energetic, and takes a keen interest in the supervision of his affairs.

Mr. Feaver married Ellen Andrews, a native of Wells, England, and they are the parents of ten children, namely: George, who is the superintendent of the Scott vineyard; Ethel, who married F. L. Bennetts; May, who married Charles Bennetts; Ernest; Lillian; Claude; Cecil; Morris; John; and Helen. In his political convictions Mr. Feaver is an adherent of the principles of the Republican party.

HENRY L. KUNS. One of the most prominent, enterprising and thrifty agriculturists of the San Joaquin valley is Henry L. Kuns, a man of strict integrity and high moral character, and one of the most respected and valued citizens of Merced county. In his agricultural work he displays excellent ability and skill, his farm, lying near Ingomar, being in a good state of cultivation and well improved. A son of David Kuns, he was born, November 19, 1847, in Cass county, Ind. His grandfather, John Kuns, was born and reared in Pennsylvania, but when a young man removed to Ohio, and later to Carroll county, Ind., from there going to Illinois, where he spent his closing years. In his religious faith he was a Dunkard, having inherited his beliefs from his ancestors, who were among the pioneers of that denomination in the United States.

A native of Ohio, David Kuns was born in Dayton, in 1820, on a farm, and when six years of age accompanied his parents to their new home in Carroll county, Ind. Until after his marriage he continued a resident of that state, living in Cass county until 1853. In that year he migrated to Illinois. Coming to California in 1890, he is now living retired from active pursuits in Los Angeles. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Lamb, was born in Virginia, the descendant of a family of prominence, her birth having occurred in 1828.

The only child of his parents, Henry L. Kuns received the rudiments of his education in the common schools of Illinois, after which he was graduated from the Monticello, Ill., high school, and for two years continued his studies at Wash College, in Crawfordsville, Ind. Under his father's careful training he acquired a good knowledge of the science of agriculture while still young, and was subsequently employed in various branches of industry in Illinois, having been an engineer, a merchant, a nurseryman, a grocer and grain dealer and for three years a farmer. Migrating to California in 1878, Mr. Kuns purchased land in Gilroy, and for several years carried on a substantial business in general farming, his large orchard and nursery also bringing in good returns. In 1892 Mr. Kuns assumed possession of the large ranch of five thousand acres which he had previously purchased in Merced county, lying near Ingomar, and ten miles south of Newman. Here he has continued his agricultural labors with characteristic success, making noteworthy improvements on the place, among them a large pumping plant, furnished with water from wells. He has fourteen hundred acres under canal and three hundred acres in alfalfa, a profitable crop, which he increases each year, while the remainder of his grain land is devoted to wheat. In his orchard of sixty acres, the only one in the vicinity, he raises almonds, apples, peaches, prunes and pears, all of which yield well in this climate.

Mr. Kuns married, in Ohio, Marv Pearce, a native of that state, and they have five children, namely: Henry A., a civil engineer; Margaret, wife of W. Williams, of Lordsburg; Lena, wife of John Nenn; David, living at home; and Ora, at home. Politically Mr. Kuns is an active worker in the Prohibition party, and has served as a delegate to the national conventions. Religiously he is a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

INGVART TEILMAN. A prominent place is accorded Ingvarth Teilman, a civil engineer of Fresno, in the business activity of this place, which has felt in no small degree the influence of his splendid ability. The city of Fresno is indebted to Mr. Teilman for its sewer system, which he laid out and surveyed under the difficulties which would necessarily confront the engineer in a place so nearly level as this. The plan which he drew up and submitted was adopted on account of having a gravity out-fall sewer, while all others were designed for the use of pumps, he having discovered a gentle slope from Fresno southwesterly in the surveying of canals and ditches. He superintended the construction of the sewers, and since 1901 has served as city engineer, his work being an important feature in the future of Fresno from both a commercial and sanitary standpoint.

A native of Ribe, Denmark, Ingvarth Teilman was born February 15, 1860, the youngest in a family of seven children, of whom five are now living, one sister, Mrs. S. M. Toft, being located near Fresno. His father, Hans N. Teilman, was also a native of that place, and the descendant of an old and honored family. He engaged as a farmer for many years, his death occurring at an advanced age. His wife, formerly Anna Nielsen, was born in the same place, where she also died. They were members of the Lutheran Church. When fourteen years old Ingvarth Teilman was apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade, working for three years, when he was employed as a journeyman in Germany. Deciding to seek the more abundant opportunities of the western world, he came to California in 1879, and November 9 of the same year located in Fresno. He followed farm work until he learned the English language and then engaged in the prosecution of his trade. He entered the employ of the Madera Planing mill, as carpenter, where he met with an accident which caused the loss of his left hand. Forced to seek some other means of livelihood, he followed the advice of friends and took a business course in the Pacific Business College of San Francisco. While there the professor in charge of mathematics noticed his talent for this science and induced him to take up surveying. He accordingly entered Van der Naillen's School of Engineering, from which institution he was graduated in 1885, after which he returned to Fresno and entered upon his new line of work. Since that time he has met with marked success, advancing steadily to the front rank of his profession. He has laid out the greater portion of the additions of Fresno and has also served various companies and corporations of this city, among them the Fresno Canal and Irrigation Company, of which he is chief engineer, also serving in the same capacity for the Consolidated Canal Company, having charge of construction works of about four hundred miles of main canals and miles in distributing ditches in the two systems. He was also chief engineer for the Madera Canal and Irrigation Company, for which he constructed a reservoir system, and the Madera Sugar Pine Company, for the latter laying out the new lumber flume fifty-four miles in length, from the mills in the mountains to the plant in Madera, and also their logging railroad which carries logs about twenty miles. In 1902 he became associated with Chris P. Jensen, a civil and hydraulic engineer of Fresno. Since 1901 he has served as city engineer. In addition to these interests Mr. Teilman also owns two vineyards in the vicinity of Fresno, in the success of which he is very much interested and gives a portion of his time to them. He is a man of energy, talent and ability, and has turned his attention to various lines in the course of his career, making each object more or less a success. After his accident he secured an artificial hand, but it had a leather cuff and the lacing produced such heat and pressure as to cause a shrinkage of the arm. He ingeniously planned one on his own ideas, and later had it manufactured in aluminum, which has served him successfully for many years, and he finds that it cannot be improved upon.

Mr. Teilman's beautiful home, which he built at No. 470 Neilsen avenue, is presided over by his wife, formerly Anna K. Holm, a native of the vicinity of Ribe, Denmark, and whom he married in Fresno. They are the parents of four children, namely: Ingvar H., Maren, Dora and Henry. Since 1883 Mr. Teilman has been associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past officer, and is also a past officer of the Encampment. He is an active member of the Danish Brotherhood of America and was its representative to the national convention. He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. Politically he is a Republican. He is a charter member of the Lutheran Church (Danish), and during the erection of the building was chairman of the board of trustees.

HIRAM NEWTON RUCKER, M. D. Devoted to the practice of his profession, Hiram Newton Rucker, M. D., of Merced, well deserves the reputation which he enjoys of being one of the most skillful physicians of the San Joaquin valley. His superior knowledge and medical experience have rendered him especially proficient in his chosen work, and gained for him the confidence and respect of a wide community. He is a popular and highly esteemed citizen, and one of the influential and prominent members of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has been, and is, an active worker, being Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of California. A native of Missouri, he was born September 6, 1844, in Arrow Rock, Saline county, a son of William T. Rucker. On the paternal side he is of French descent, the immigrant ancestor having come from France to the United States, settling in Virginia, where the doctor's grandfather was born, and where the family for several generations was known by its French surname, Roquier. On the maternal side they are of German ancestry.

Born and bred in Virginia, William T. Rucker left his ancestral home in early manhood, migrating to Missouri, where he acted as agent for old Dr. Sappington, and later was manager of his estate. In 1852, he, with others, organized a large party and started across the plains with ox-teams for California, arriving here after a trip of five months. Locating in Santa Clara county, he bought a pueblo grant of two hundred and twenty-five acres, paying $1,500 for the tract, but subsequently had to buy the land a second time in order to get a title, paying thirty dollars an acre for it. After being engaged for some time in general farming and stock-raising, he sold off his estate in small lots, and removed to Santa Clara, where he lived retired until his death, at the age of threescore and ten years. He married Verinda S. Taylor, who was born in Madison county, Va., and died in Santa Clara, Cal., at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. Of their union twelve children were born, namely: Joseph E., died in San Jose in 1890; Mary L., married Benjamin Campbell, of Campbell, Santa Clara county; John S., died in Gilroy, Cal.; James T., died in infancy; William D., of San Jose; Robert T., a farmer, living near San Jose; Hiram N., the subject of this sketch; Zachariah T., of Santa Rosa, Cal.; Nancy C., wife of J. P. Finley, of Portland, Ore.; George F., of Lompoc, Cal.; Mrs. Maggie E. Clark, of Campbell, Cal.; Benjamin W., real-estate dealer in San Jose.

Leaving Missouri with his parents when seven years old, Hiram Newton Rucker was crossing the Sierras when the eighth anniversary of his birth occurred. His early education was obtained in the district schools of Santa Clara county; he then continued his studies for three and one-half years at the University of the Pacific, and then studied medicine with Dr. A. B. Caldwell, of Santa Clara, and, subsequently entering the medical department of the University of California, he was graduated with the first class from there, with the degree of M. D., in 1870. The following five years Dr. Rucker practiced medicine in Plainsberg, Merced county, where he met with excellent success. Removing then to Merced, he continued his professional labors for thirteen years, acquiring knowledge, skill and fame. In the meantime, in 1884, he was appointed by Governor Stoneman a director of the State Insane Asylum at Stockton, and four years later, in 1888, he was elected superintendent of that state institution by its board of trustees. Taking charge of the asylum in November, 1888, he retained it until November, 1892, when he resumed the practice of his profession in Oakland. During the winter of 1885 and 1886, the doctor took a post-graduate medical and surgical course in New York City. In 1901 he left Oakland and took up his residence once more in Merced, where he has built up an extensive and remunerative general practice of medicine and surgery, being one of the foremost physicians and surgeons of Merced county. He is considered an expert on insanity and is frequently called as a witness in cases of insanity.

In San Francisco, Dr. Rucker married Emma F. Abbott, who was born in Lawrence, Mass., and they have one child, Ella Robin. The doctor is a sound Democrat in his political affiliations, and served as chairman of the Democratic county central committee. For several years he served as county coroner of Merced county, for five years was a member of the Oakland pension board, and for two years was president of the Oakland board of health. Dr. Rucker is a member and past master of La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M.; was elected junior grand warden in 1883 and '84; in 1885 was elected senior grand warden; was deputy grand master in 1886; was grand master of the Grand Lodge in 1887; is a member and past high priest of Merced Chapter No. 12, R. A. M.; was made a Knight Templar in Pacific Commandery No. 3, of Sonora, and now belongs to Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; to Stockton Council, R. & S. M., and is a demitted member of Scottish Rite Lodge of Masons, of Oakland. The doctor also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, being a charter member of Merced Lodge No. 74. He has been a member of the State Medical Society since 1876 and of the American Medical Association since 1893; is a member and vice president of the Merced County Medical Society and a member of the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society. He is a Methodist in religious belief.

In September, 1904, Dr. Rucker received a call from the trustees of the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, located at Decoto, Alameda county, to assume the duties of superintendent of that institution, which he accepted, and took charge November 1st.

THOMAS JACKSON SIMPSON. One of Fresno county's native sons, Mr. Simpson is a son of John G. Simpson, a pioneer of California, who came here from Missouri, the state of his nativity, in 1850, the long journey being made via the southern route. Mr. Simpson was accompanied by ex-Governor Edwards, of Missouri. The winter of 1850-51 was spent in New Mexico, the trip being renewed in the spring. Arriving at Stockton, Mr. Simpson there worked at teaming until 1855, when he removed to Millerton and engaged in the livery business until 1858, when he sold out and started a stock business in partnership with J. N. Musick. This association was continued until 1865, at which time the firm dissolved partnership and Mr. Simpson continued in the stock business alone until his death. In 1856 he was in the Indian campaign in Tulare county, and in every way took an active part in the pioneer work of the state. His death, at the early age of forty-seven years, was much regretted by all. He was one of the first stockmen to locate on Dry creek, and was one of the early supervisors of that county. He purchased land at what is now Academy, and before his death accumulated nearly six thousand acres. He was one of the builders of the Academy on Dry creek, being a director of the company. This school was for years one of the best in the state. In fraternal relations he was a member of the Odd Fellows and in politics was a staunch Democrat.

His wife bore the maiden name of Sarah M. Baley. She was a native of Missouri and a daughter of W. Wright Baley, a brother of Judge Gillam, who came to California in 1849. Mr. Baley crossed the plains and settled at Visalia, where he was for some years engaged in teaming between the latter place and Stockton. He died at his home on Dry creek. His wife died at her home near Academy.

To Mr. and Mrs. Simpson were born seven children, as follows: Mary K., who married Henry Hazelton and has since died; William, who was drowned in the canal near Sanger while bathing; Thomas J., our subject; Marvin, John G. and George P., all living at Academy; Lizzie, the wife of John Fly, a stockman living at Academy.

Thomas J. Simpson was born July 13, 1866. His early life was spent on the farm, while his education was received in the academy at Academy. When but eleven years of age his father died and from that time until he left home he took an active part in the work of the farm. At the age of twenty he started out to make his own way in the world, beginning as a sheep rancher on rented land fourteen miles from Fresno. In 1886 he bought five hundred head of sheep from John Baley's partner, the partnership thus formed continuing for two years, when Mr. Baley sold out to William R. Simpson. In 1889 T. J. Simpson disposed of his interest in the business to his brother, William R., they owning at the time five thousand head of sheep. Soon after selling, Mr. Simpson became interested in the cattle business and a little later established his brand, "P. L.," which is known all through the cattle country. He has nine hundred acres of land on Dry creek, below Academy, which is all fenced and improved. Here he is engaged in an extensive grain business, although the place is rented, making it possible for Mr. Simpson to devote his entire time to his cattle interests. His range is located in the Sierras, about eighteen miles east of his ranch, where he and his brother own valuable range land.

In Academy Mr. Simpson married Miss Eleanor Ann Perry, a native daughter of Fresno county. Her father, Peter Perry, settled here and engaged in farming on Kings river. To Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have been born the following children: Edwin R., Ina May, Thomas Russell, Hugh, Annie Laurie, Mary Elizabeth and Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Mr. Simpson being a member of the official board. In politics he is a Democrat, but has never cared to enter the arena of public life, but at all times has been found ready and willing to perform the duties devolving upon him as a citizen. His success in life is the result of his own efforts, and while he is still a young man, he is considered one of the substantial residents of the county and is very popular with all his associates.

LAYTON J. HANSBERGER. California, with its beautiful landscapes, its lakes and streams, its picturesque mountains, its progressive towns and cities, its farms with the fertile soil, its wonderful prosperity and its abundance of fruit and flowers, makes a habitation fit for a king, and no history would be complete unless due mention were made of the pioneers who assisted in settling this great state, and in this Virginia furnished her quota, among them Mr. Hansberger, who first stepped on California soil October 6, 1878, and for a quarter of a century has been identified with the agricultural interests in the vicinity of Selma, Fresno county. In 1902 Mr. Hansberger retired from his farm, taking up his residence in Selma, and at once engaging in the real estate and insurance business. The first year he was associated with T. L. Jones, but he now carries on an extensive business under the name of the Hansberger Land Company, buying and renting land and doing a general insurance business.

Mr. Hansberger was born March 2, 1850, in the vicinity of Fredericksburg, Va., and is one of six children born to L. J. and Martha (French) Hansberger, natives of the same state. The father, a native of Rockingham, Va., was a Methodist Episcopal minister and his demise took place in a parsonage near Appomattox Court-House. He was survived some years by his widow, who died in her sixty-fifth year at Sedalia, Mo. Of their children, three were sons and three were daughters, and they are as follows: W. F., a mail contractor, residing at Sedalia, Mo.; Henry, residing near Yuma, Ariz.; Layton J.; Mrs. Louise Guerant, also a resident of Sedalia; Mrs. Alice Fretwell, residing at Danville, Va.; and Mrs. G. S. Hewitt, of Fresno county.

The mental training of Mr. Hansberger was received in private subscription schools, which he attended during the Civil war, and when of sufficient age he engaged in farm pursuits in his native state, raising tobacco, principally. His people were southerners, and at this time lived near Cartersville, but in 1867 Layton J., in company with his brother Henry, went west to Sedalia, Mo., and followed farm pursuits there, renting land. Upon the death of their father, they returned to Virginia and stayed there for eighteen months, but in the fall of 1870 they returned to Sedalia, which was their home for several years. About 1878 Mr. Hansberger came to California, purchasing a quarter section of land three miles south of Selma, which he still owns. He lived upon this place and carried on agricultural pursuits until 1902; since then he has lived in Selma.

The home ties of Mr. Hansberger date back to November 18, 1877, when he was united in marriage with Miss Nannie Stone, formerly of Missouri. Three children came to bless this union. They are: Alma, now Mrs. Morris Yost, residing near Selma; Celeste, who was a high school student in Selma, class of 1904; and Nannie, also a high school student. The mother of these children passed to the great beyond in 1889, and October 26, 1890, Mr. Hansberger married for his second wife Mrs. Julia B. Reed, a native of Missouri, and she has one daughter, Ruth Reed, who is also a high school student.

In 1899 Mr. Hansberger was one of the organizers of the Selma Co-operative Dairy Association, of which he is now serving as president. Fraternally he is prominently connected with a number of secret societies, among them Selma Lodge No. 155, K. of P.; Valleyview Lodge No. 208, A. O. U. W., and Justice Council No. 322, Fraternal Aid, of which his wife and daughters are members. In his political convictions he is termed an Independent Democrat and has served as school director many times, being also twice elected director for the High School of Selma.

FRED A. BENNETT. Distinguished for his executive and business ability and judgment, Fred A. Bennett is one of the best known men of Merced county, and as manager of the Dos Palos Colony Rochdale Association is one of the prominent men in Dos Palos. Energetic, progressive and practical in his methods, he has been the leading spirit in the promotion of the affairs of the colony, and as manager of the co-operative establishment, founded and located through his enterprise and keen foresight, has built up one of the most extensive and important mercantile trades of central California. Inheriting in an eminent degree the sterling qualities of his Puritan ancestors, he is a man of unquestioned integrity, upright in all of his dealings, above reproach or suspicion, his word at all times being as good as his bond. A son of F. C. Bennett, he was born, September 13, 1863, in New Marlboro, Berkshire county, Mass., the descendant of a colonial family of prominence. He comes from Revolutionary stock, his great-grandfather on the paternal side having served as Washington's bodyguard during the great struggle for independence.

A native of Connecticut, F. C. Bennett was there reared to agricultural pursuits. Subsequently settling in New Marlboro, Mass., he was there employed for a number of years as millwright and carpenter. Removing with his family to Nebraska in 1874, he purchased land in Fairmont, Fillmore county, where he still resides, being now retired from the activities of business, a venerable and highly respected man of seventy-five years. He is connected with the Masons. He married Phoebe Ann Hadsell, who was born in Massachusetts, where her father, Moses Hadsell, was a life-long farmer, and in 1902 this happy couple celebrated their golden wedding. On this auspicious occasion all of their eleven children, with the exception of the youngest child, who was unavoidably detained, were present, and with the many friends and acquaintances assembled assisted in making the event one to be remembered most pleasantly.

The sixth child in order of birth of the parental household, Fred A. Bennett spent the first twelve years of his life among the picturesque hills of the Berkshire mountains, laying a good foundation for his future education in the common schools of the old Bay state. Removing with his parents to Nebraska in 1874, he was subsequently brought up on the farm in Fairmont, attending the district school for a few years. He afterward continued his studies at the University of Nebraska, in Lincoln, completing his school life at the Lincoln Business College. Locating then in Fairmont, Mr. Bennett was for five years there engaged in the hardware business as a member of the firm of Gary, Bennett & Co. Disposing of his interest in the firm in 1894, he came to Merced county, Cal., locating in the Dos Palos Colony, where he carried on farming for two years. Starting the co-operative store in 1896, he managed it with eminent success, the business growing so large within the ensuing three years that Mr. Bennett, in 1899, found it expedient to incorporate the Dos Palos Colony Rochdale Association, of which he has since been manager. Not liking the first location of the store, he selected its present site in 1897, which has proved a very advantageous one, being now in the center of a farming community with an estimated population of two thousand people. Under the supervision of Mr. Bennett a very large and lucrative trade in general merchandise has been built up, this co-operative store dealing in dry goods, clothing, furs, boots and shoes, furniture, hardware and queensware, and handling large quantities of lumber, having extensive lumber yards. The main building is 30x60 feet, containing two floors stocked with goods, while the hardware department and the warerooms are each 16x60 feet. In connection with his mercantile business Mr. Bennett has charge of the association's large creamery and ice plant, manufacturing butter for the city and Rochdale markets, and making ice for the same, and maintaining a cold-storage plant.

In Shickley, Neb., Mr. Bennett married Retta Baker, who was born in Missouri, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Chester, Mabel, Gladys and Alfred. Politically Mr. Bennett is a Socialist; fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he is banker, and of the Fraternal Aid; religiously he is a member and a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

MICHAEL KAVANAGH. Two miles southeast of Fresno is the fifty-six-acre ranch of Michael Kavanagh, well improved and as practically managed as the most fastidious horticulturist could desire. Thirty-two acres are in grapes, five acres in orchard, and the balance is seeded to alfalfa. In 1900 the successful owner of the property completed what is one of the finest rural residences in the vicinity, a white structure two stories in height and containing eleven rooms. The property has more than realized the financial expectations of this genial and popular horticulturist, who sees the bright side of everything and appreciates the luxuries made possible by his wise disposal of the advantages which have come to him.

Mr. Kavanagh comes of a family known in Queens county, Ireland, for generations. His father, Michael Kavanagh, was a native of that part of the country, and he himself was born there June 26, 1851, while his mother, formerly Mary Howard, came from County Tipperary. The elder Michael was a man of ambition and ability, and for years was agent for a very large estate in Ireland, which responsibility passed to his son, Daniel, at the time of the older man's death at the age of fifty-two years. The younger Michael was reared on a farm and remained at home until coming to America in 1869. During the winter of 1869-'70 he attended school in New York City, and for the seven following years engaged in farming in Livingston county, N. Y. Upon arriving in California in 1876, he located on a farm in Yolo county. In 1877 he made a trip to Texas, in quest of a more desirable place of residence. Returning to Yolo county in 1878, he farmed there until 1884, and then came to Fresno county, and in 1885 purchased his present ranch. In 1890 he married Nora Martin, a native of Livonia, N. Y., and a daughter of James and Margaret (Lindsley) Martin. Of the union there have been born three children, Martin Howard, Marguerite Louise and Genevieve. In 1899 the family enlarged their horizon by taking a trip east, a jaunt which furnished pleasant relaxation. Mr. Kavanagh is a Democrat, but locally votes for the man best qualified for the office. He is identified with the Knights of Columbus and is a member of the Catholic Church. Twice he has served as a member of the school board, and materially aided in establishing the present high standard of instruction. He is highly respected in his neighborhood, representing as he does the highest type of the Irish-American citizen.

SEROPIAN BROTHERS. Notwithstanding the misfortunes that have befallen the Armenian race through persecution in their own land, comparatively few of that nationality have sought homes in other countries. Representatives of the Seropian family were not only the first Armenians to settle in California, but among the first to come to the United States as well. The two brothers, John and George, are now at the head of a large fruit business in Fresno, which they incorporated April 22, 1902, under the name of Seropian Brothers, and re-incorporated two years later as Seropian Brothers Company. Under their direct oversight and capable management has been built up one of the largest packing houses in California. The work is systematically divided, the younger brother having the management of the sales and finances, while the elder brother takes charge of the buying, also of the management of the packing house. The firm maintains a branch house in Chicago, and possesses every facility for the efficient and profitable conduct of a large and responsible industry.

The two brothers are natives of Marsovan, Armenia, George having been born in 1868, and John in 1870. Their father, a prosperous merchant, held a position of influence in his community, and was one of the leading members of the Congregational Church there. He was married twice, by his first union having five sons and three daughters, of whom one daughter now resides in Fresno county, and two sons died here. Two sons were born of his second marriage, John and George, and a daughter, who is now deceased. Two sons of the first marriage settled in Massachusetts about 1870 and founded the family in America. During the summer of 1880 the two younger sons joined them at Worcester, Mass., and in 1881 came with them to California, where they attended the Fresno public schools. Without any assistance they worked their own way, being for a time employed on farms in the Central Colony. For six years George continued in the employ of Mr. Babcock, receiving wages in the summer, but working for his board in the winter and attending school. At first the older brothers carried on a fruit business where the Grand Central hotel now stands, but the loss of the building and stock by fire left them without capital to begin again at once. A vineyard of twenty acres was then rented, which John and George cultivated so assiduously that the appearance of the property was greatly improved and the owner sold it at a fair profit. Later they turned their attention to the fruit business, at first selling from a wagon, and then opening a store on I street near Mariposa. As the trade increased a stock of groceries was added, and in time they became proprietors of a large store on Mariposa street.

On disposing of the business the brothers began to improve a tract of land which they had previously purchased in Fresno colony, and improved it with thirty acres of raisins and other fruits. However, the sale of fruit possessed for them greater fascination than the growing of the same, and they soon returned to the fruit and produce business, and also managed a retail grocery, which was conducted on J street, under the name of Seropian Brothers. Somewhat later they moved near Fresno street on J, where they had a frontage of seventy-five feet. One side of the building was utilized for the receiving of the fruit, and the other side contained the packing department. So successful were their undertakings that they felt justified in discontinuing the grocery trade and devoting themselves wholly to fruit packing, in which they engaged on J street for four years. In 1898 they built a commodious packing house, fitted with every accommodation for their business, but were met with misfortune at the very outset by the destruction of the building in a fire, with only partial insurance. With an energy characteristic of their whole business career, they at once began to rebuild, and the new structure was completed in sixty days, a portion of it being three stories in height, and the whole 275x100 feet in dimensions, with facilities for shipment via the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads. Their specialty is seeded raisins and figs, and they pride themselves on having been the pioneers in the shipment of figs, also of pound packages or bricks of California figs. Indeed, they deserve great credit for their work in introducing the figs of the state to the markets of the world, and creating a demand for what is now one of the profitable products of California. By means of machinery they have a capacity for seeding five cars of raisins per day, also of packing ten cars a day. The Honey Brand is their specialty in figs, while in raisins their leading brands are Seropian Best, Mount Whitney and Lotus. Shipments are made to every part of the United States, as well as to Germany, France, Holland and England. In addition to their principal packing house at Fresno, they operate similar establishments at Watsonville, Healdsburg, San Francisco, Lemoore and Tulare. Both brothers have made several trips through the eastern states and become personally acquainted with the trade, and are members of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and the California Raisin Growers' Association. In political views they are staunch Republicans and loyal supporters of the government of their adopted country. John is married, his wife having been Miss Hazel Malikian, of Fresno.

When it is remembered that the brothers came to California unfamiliar with the English language and with American customs, strangers in a strange land, and far removed from any of their own race, their courage and resolute spirit are worthy of the highest admiration. Amid surroundings that might have discouraged many, they pushed resolutely forward, working as opportunities offered, and constantly adding to their store of learning and experience. By degrees, without extraneous aid, they have built up a business that would reflect credit upon the ability of any of our native-born citizens. They have gained prominence and influence in their adopted city and throughout the entire San Joaquin valley.

JOSIAH WINTER DAVIS. A man of more than average ability and energy, Josiah Winter Davis holds a position of prominence among the foremost citizens of Portersville. He is distinguished as a participant in the Civil war, and his subsequent career as a business man has been successful and noteworthy. A son of William Davis, he was born August 7, 1841, in St. Joseph county, Ind., near South Bend.

A native of New York state, William Davis was well educated, and for a few years was pastor of the United Brethren Church near Elkhart, Ind. Going from there to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1852, he opened a general merchandise store, but subsequently returned to Indiana. For a short time he resided near South Bend, but in 1860 was appointed president of Western College in Iowa, and for twelve years was connected with that institution as its head official. On resigning the position he removed to Lisbon, near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he resided until his death, in 1881, at the age of sixty-seven years. He married Charlotte M. Miller, who was born in Butler county, Ohio, and died in 1883 in Iowa. Four sons and three daughters blessed their union, of these Josiah Winter being the second child in order of birth and the oldest one now living.

After leaving the public schools of Indiana, Josiah W. Davis took an academic course at Seven Mile, receiving a diploma, and subsequently entered the Pittsburg University at Pittsburg, Pa. During his fourth year in that institution the Civil war broke out, and all of his patriotic spirit was aroused. At once enlisting in Company I, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he went to the front as drummer, and later was made a member of the regimental band. At the battle of Shiloh he was wounded. Subsequently Mr. Davis was detailed as chief clerk in division headquarters at Cairo, Ill., and had charge of all the traffic up and down the river. In 1864 he was promoted to the office of assistant quartermaster, with rank of captain, and stationed at Memphis, Tenn. He was afterwards sent to Washington, D. C., but was again ordered to Memphis, where he received all stores from the regiments located there. Going thence to New Orleans, he took charge of the stores of the different regiments, being mustered out of service at the close of the war.

Having received his honorable discharge from the army, Mr. Davis went to Detroit, Mich., and for twenty-five years was connected with a tobacco firm as bookkeeper and cashier. In 1886, as an employe of John J. Bagley & Co., he came to California, taking charge of the firm's branch office, which was located at No. 109 Front street, San Francisco. Retiring from mercantile pursuits in 1889, Mr. Davis located in Portersville, and in this vicinity made wise investments in land, and is now the owner of fourteen hundred acres, all of which he devotes to general farming. He is actively identified with several of the leading enterprises of Portersville, and is well known in business circles. In 1901 he assisted in organizing the A. I. De Laney Hardware Company, of which he is vice president, and he also assisted in the organization of the Rosedale Water Company, of which he is a stockholder, one of the directors and a vice president. He was also one of the organizers of the California State Board of Trade, and is one of its most active members.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Davis married Victoria E. Van Auken, who was born in New York. She died in early womanhood, in Detroit, Mich., leaving one child, William W. Davis, accountant in the money order department of the Wells Fargo Express Company in New York City. Fraternaly Mr. Davis stands high in Masonic circles. He joined the order in Detroit in 1862, but demitted, and is now a member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M., of Portersville; of Portersville Chapter No. 85, R. A. M.; of Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T.; and of Portersville Chapter O. E. S. He is a staunch Republican in politics, and in 1894 was a candidate for the assembly, but was defeated at the polls. October 1, 1904, he was nominated by the Republicans for the same office. For twelve years he was school trustee in the Burton district, rendering good service.

CHRIST H. KROGH. The farm owned and occupied by Mr. Krogh is situated three and one-half miles from Newman and lies in Merced county, with the exception of one-eighth of an acre across the line in Stanislaus county. The nucleus of this property was acquired by him about 1885, when he purchased eighty acres and embarked in the raising of grain. Investigations made in the following years convinced him that alfalfa could be made a profitable crop and by 1896 he had the entire tract under that product, which flourishes so luxuriantly that five crops can be cut in the course of a year. An orchard with fruit sufficient for family use and a residence erected in 1896 add to the value of the homestead, while other improvements made as opportunity affords prove the owner to be a man of progressive spirit.

Near the town of Sudeborg in Schleswig-Holstein, on the sea-girt island of Alsen, one of the possessions of Denmark, Mr. Krogh was born June 13, 1852, and is one of nine children, seven still living, of whom three crossed the ocean to America. A younger brother, Hans H., resides four miles southwest of Newman, where he has a valuable alfalfa farm. The father, Peter, was a son of Jorgen Krogh, a baker by occupation, and he himself not only worked as a baker, but also followed the butcher's trade and also operated his own farm. He is still living on the old homestead, where in 1901 he enjoyed a visit from his son, Christ H., who returned for a brief sojourn among old friends and the associations of youth. The mother, Catherine Maria Moller, was a daughter of Jens Moller, by occupation a farmer. She died in the fall of 1871.

The farm which is still the family homestead was the home of Mr. Krogh's youth and there he worked diligently to assist in the support of the family. At fifteen years of age he left school and in 1870 crossed to the mainland of Denmark, where he remained six months. During 1871 he came to America and during the summer season worked as a farm-hand near Chatsworth, Livingston county, Ill. From there he came to California in 1873 and at Hill's Ferry secured employment on the Noxon ranch, remaining in the same position for a long period. In 1877, with Noxon's teams, he ran a grading machine and helped to construct the canal on both the east and west sides in the San Joaquin valley. Later, after severing the partnership with David Noxon, he assisted in constructing the Stevenson canal on the east side, for which purpose he had teams there for more than a year. About 1878 he became a partner of his former employer and as such superintended a large ranch largely under cultivation to grain. Until about 1880 he also managed a ranch of six hundred and forty acres which he had purchased. A few years later, about 1885, he bought eighty acres of his present property, which is one of the finest alfalfa farms in this region. Dairy interests have engaged his attention and he now has a herd of thirty-five milch cows, also other cattle, aggregating one hundred head in all. For the cultivation of the land he keeps sixteen head of horses, these being used not only on the home place, but also on a rented farm of five hundred acres, which he has in wheat. When the project of starting a creamery was first formulated he became enthusiastically active in the measure, and in 1896 was one of the organizers of the New Era creamery, the first of the creamery plants established in the county and the foundation of the dairy industry that has proved perhaps the most important factor in the progress of the farming community. In 1896 he moved to his present home and began to improve it.

In Stockton Mr. Krogh was united in marriage with Mrs. Jensina (Hurlock) Hermanson, a native of Schleswig. Mrs. Krogh is the mother of five children, three of whom are now living, namely: Mrs. Catherine Hill, who lives upon a dairy farm in Merced county; Andrew and Wilbur.

By her previous marriage Mrs. Krogh had two children. The daughter, Mrs. Annie Schmidt, who died in Newman, and the son, Henry Krogh, who is manager of all of the Newman warehouses. On different occasions Mr. Krogh has been chosen to serve on grand and petit juries and he has also been a delegate of the Democratic party to county conventions. Since coming to California he has associated himself with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Newman and is further connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

NATHANIEL P. DUNCAN, M. D. To Nathaniel P. Duncan, M. D., belongs the distinction of being the oldest physician in Hanford, Kings county, in point of years of service in the medical profession. Dr. Duncan was born in Pittsburg, Pa., January 9, 1849, a son of Robert C., and grandson of Thomas Duncan, whose father, a native of Scotland, came to the United States about the time of the Revolutionary war and first located in Louisiana, where he operated a plantation for a number of years. He subsequently removed to Pennsylvania, but soon afterward died in Pittsburg, while still a comparatively young man, from yellow fever.

Robert C. Duncan was born in Louisiana, and was an infant when his parents removed to Pennsylvania. He was reared and educated in the latter state, and engaged in merchandising in Beaver Falls and Pittsburg. He died in the latter city at the age of about seventy years. He married Nancy Patterson, a native of Pennsylvania, who still resides in that state at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Her father, Nathaniel Patterson, was at one time a civil engineer in Pittsburg.

The boyhood and youth of Dr. Nathaniel P. Duncan were spent in Pittsburg and vicinity, where he received the benefit of a common-school education. He subsequently attended Beaver Academy, and at the age of eighteen years, having decided upon a career in medicine, began the study of that science under the direction of Dr. Stanton of New Brighton, Pa., a cousin of Edwin Stanton, secretary of war during Lincoln's administration. He afterward took a course in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and in 1871 was graduated from Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City. He at once opened an office at Enon Valley, Pa., but after spending two years in that locality he decided that a better field for practice could be found in the newer western country. Coming to California, he visited various towns, finally locating, in 1876, at Lemoore, Kings county, where for eight years he was engaged in general practice. In 1884 he established himself in Hanford, where he has since built up a reputation which is a just reward for his humane and self-sacrificing efforts. During the years of his residence here he has become thoroughly identified with the town's best interests in various ways. He has given evidence of his faith in the stability of Kings county by the purchase of twenty-four hundred acres of grazing land near the mouth of Tule river, which is devoted to the raising of Durham cattle. He is a Republican in politics, but has steadfastly refused to become a candidate for public office, preferring to concentrate his time and capabilities upon his profession. He is a member of the California State Medical Society and the San Joaquin County Medical Society. Fraternally he is identified with Hanford Lodge, K. P. In 1903 he took a prominent part in the organization of the Hanford National Bank, of which he has since been president. At Lemoore, Cal., in 1877, he was united in marriage with Mary Cramer, a native of Calaveras county, Cal.

Personally Dr. Duncan possesses those qualities which tend to endear a man closely to those who know him. Though he has always devoted himself closely to his scientific labors, in which he has been accorded a rare measure of success, he has not been unmindful of the general welfare of the community, but has always exhibited a keen interest in those movements having for an end the advancement of the material well-being of the people. Public-spirited, progressive, liberal-minded and unselfish, he has come to be regarded as one of the best type of representative citizen, who is entitled to more than passing recognition in the annals of the state of California.

DANIEL P. SHIPPEY. With the exception of five years Daniel P. Shippey has been a resident of Visalia, Tulare county, since 1872, and by the many sterling traits which distinguish his character, he has won the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has come in business or social contact. As a farmer and carpenter he has spent the greater part of his life here, but in 1902 he became interested in the milling business, purchasing the Hubbs Planing Mill, now known as A. B. Shippey & Co., his two sons, A. R. and A. B. Shippey being equal partners in the concern and the practical managers.

A native of Pomeroy, Ohio, where he was born December 27, 1836, Daniel P. Shippey was taken to Illinois when three years old, his father then locating in McDonough county near Macomb. In 1842 he went to Missouri, where he was reared to young manhood by J. H. Dice, a farmer of Cedar county. He received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, after which he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter, being located in St. Clair county, Mo. At the breaking out of the Civil war he left his personal pursuits and in April, 1861, enlisted from that county in the first company of Loyal Home Guards. In December of that year he joined the first battalion of Yates Sharpshooters, comprising five hundred and forty men, and equipped for service by the war governor of Illinois, being a part of Company A, Sixty-fourth Illinois Regiment. His enlistment was for three years, and he served until January 15, 1864. He afterward re-enlisted for three years more, out of which time he was allowed thirty days as furlough, and went to Ottawa, Ill. There his regiment was re-organized with recruits from other companies and called the Sixty-fourth Illinois, comprising nine hundred and sixty men, rank and file. At the close of the war, when mustered out in Chicago, it numbered only one hundred and fifty, Mr. Shippey being one of nine of the original company in which he enlisted. During the time that he served he was in seventeen important battles, including those about Atlanta, the March to the Sea, through the Carolinas, the capture of General Johnston, and the march to Richmond. He was in the Grand Review in Washington, and received his honorable discharge in Louisville, July 15, 1865. Mr. Shippey entered the army as a private, and in the course of time received the promotion to the position of corporal, then sergeant, up to the first duty sergeant, and won much commendation for personal bravery.

After being mustered out of service in Chicago, Ill., Mr. Shippey returned to his home in Missouri and engaged in farming and the prosecution of his trade until the fall of 1872. In that year he came to California and located in Visalia, where he followed the same occupation until 1881. Removing then to Umatilla county, Ore., he engaged in a general merchandise business in Willow Station until July 4, 1886, when he returned to Visalia and once more followed his trade and general farming operations. Since 1900 he has withdrawn entirely from the latter occupation. In 1902 he purchased the Hubbs Planing Mill, which, with his two sons, he now conducts, and also owns other city property, among which is his residence and five lots on South Court street.

The marriage of Mr. Shippey united him with Amanda Melvina Hurt, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of four sons and four daughters. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a member and the quartermaster of Gen. George Wright Post, No. 111, G. A. R., of Visalia. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

JUDGE C. S. COTHRAN. Prominent among the progressive farmers of Merced county that have contributed their full share in bringing about the present fine condition of the country is Judge C. S. Cothran, a well-known and highly esteemed citizen of Los Banos, and the proprietor of two well-kept dairy ranches. He is the son of the late Henry Cothran, a pioneer of the coast, and was born, May 18, 1860, in Tomales, Marin county, Cal. His grandfather, for many years a resident of Illinois, was killed during the Civil war.

A native of Indiana, Henry Cothran spent his earlier years in that state, afterward living in Illinois. Deciding to enter upon a professional career, he was graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College, but did not at once begin the practice of medicine. He made a trip across the plains to California in search of a favorable location, and being pleased with the country and climate returned to Illinois for his wife, coming back with her by way of the Isthmus of Panama early in 1860. After living a short time in Tomales, he settled at Grand Island, Colusa county, where he was for awhile successfully engaged in farming. Removing from there to the Green valley, he continued in agricultural pursuits at Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, for two years. Deciding then to resume his profession, he settled as a physician in Hollister, San Benito county, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. His health failing, however, he again took up farming, buying land near Hollister, and was thus engaged until his death, at the age of fifty-two years. He was a man of great integrity, greatly beloved and respected. In politics he was a strong Republican, and in religion was a member of the Christian Church. He was active in fraternal circles, being a Mason. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Pope, was born in old Virginia, and is now a resident of San Jose. Eight children were born of their union, C. S., the special subject of this sketch, being the firstborn.

His parents returning to Illinois in 1863, C. S. Cothran lived with them in Duquoin, Perry county, until six years old. Coming back to California with them in 1866, he acquired his rudimentary education in the public schools of Hollister, completing his studies at the University of the Pacific, in San Jose, attending that institution a year. He was afterward engaged in farming in San Benito county until 1886, when he located on the west side of Merced county, where, on the Uriah Wood ranch of six hundred acres he carried on a successful business at grain raising for a number of years. In 1902 Judge Cothran removed to his present home estate, where he has one hundred and fifty acres; of this ranch sixty-one acres are planted to alfalfa. The judge has also a valuable grain ranch in the foothills. On his home farm he has made improvements, having a comfortable residence, and substantial farm buildings. In addition to carrying on general farming with such marked success, Judge Cothran has a well-established and profitable dairy business. In 1894 he was elected justice of the peace, and has since served with eminent satisfaction in this office, having been re-elected in 1896 and 1900, the district over which he presides includes township No. 3.

Judge Cothran married, in Los Banos, Hettie Bibby, who was born in Napa, Cal., a daughter of Nicholas Bibby, a prominent pioneer, and ex-supervisor. A brief sketch of Mr. Bibby may be found elsewhere in this volume. Judge and Mrs. Cothran are the parents of four children, namely: Robert, Ethel, Charles and Alvin. Fraternally Judge Cothran is a member and Council Commander of Blue Gum Camp No. 491,

W. of W.; a member of the Fraternal Aid and Women of Woodcraft. Politically he is one of the leading Democrats of this part of Merced county, and an ex-member of the Democratic county committee.

EDWARD M. DEWEY. Born in 1829, Edward M. Dewey became one of the old residents of the San Joaquin valley, a pioneer whose life has lain along the hard lines of the beginners of a statehood, a citizen whose efforts have materially assisted in the development of this section of the country. His life has been made up of varied experiences. Reared to the life of a farmer until eighteen years of age he afterward served as an apprentice in the United States Coast Survey; as a pedagogue; as a bank clerk in Washington, D. C.; then as newspaper man, and an engraver. Lastly, he threw in his lot with the pioneers of the extreme west, taking his place among the early settlers of Tulare county, Cal., where as a journalist he labored zealously for the development of all resources which might make of the state what time has since proven it to be.

In 1861 Mr. Dewey came to California by way of Panama. In Downieville the year following he began the publication of the Mountain Messenger, in partnership with G. A. Vaughn purchasing it from A. T. Dewey, a brother of the former. Before the railroad had been built into Tulare county Mr. Dewey came to Visalia from Gilroy, Santa Clara county, in 1871. Several years later, however, the railroad was built and improvements followed. When he first came to the county there was not even a hut to mark the now flourishing city of Tulare, the county seat being at Millerton, at the foothills on the east bank of the San Joaquin river, which was then crossed only by ferries. Bakersfield was hardly known, the county seat of Kern being at Havilah, a mining town in the mountains near Upper Kern river, about forty miles above Bakersfield, which was then only a supply headquarters for miners and stockmen, though it had one newspaper called the California. When Mr. Dewey resumed charge of the Delta its political standing was changed from Republican to Independent. The positive status of the then existing parties by vote was about four Democrats to one Republican.

The inhabitants of the several counties in the Upper San Joaquin were very largely from the southwestern border slave states, and this was emphasized in the travels of Mr. Dewey throughout the country, as he would find in nearly all the homes, whether white or colored, pictures of President Jefferson Davis, of the Southern Confederacy, General Lee, Beauregard, and others of the southern leaders. The sentiments of the southern people were strongly Confederate, but they were found to be the most kindly and hospitable people among whom Mr. Dewey had ever traveled.

The native Indians, at that time, were rapidly disappearing. There was little farming or fencing. Lumber was scarce and hardly within reach in price. The fencing was principally of crooked fences made of split oaks, and the first houses were made of whip-sawed oak and home-made brick or adobe. Most all of the valuable stock or grazing lands still belonged to the government, and were offered at $1.25 per acre, and were a free range for thousands of horses, hogs, sheep and cattle. Most all of the first settlers were large owners of herds of stock, but butter and potatoes were luxuries and were brought in by freighting teams; later Chinamen began to plant gardens and supply the settlers with vegetables. There was only one bearing orange and one bearing olive tree in Visalia, though there were several bearing lemon and orange trees on Tule river and in that vicinity.

The uncultivated plains of Tulare county in a good rainy season in the spring time were covered with verdure and flowers; fields of blue, red, white and golden hues; all of one color by hundreds of acres. It was a wonderful view, grand beyond description, though the flowers had little fragrance. There were countless numbers of ground squirrels and jack rabbits, as well as all kinds of wild domestic animals, belonging to stockmen who only gathered their herds once a year, usually by a general rodeo, when the young stock was branded by the owners with a hot iron to prove ownership when it should be gathered in after years, to be sold and driven away. At these rodeos there would be gathered and camped hundreds of horsemen in the employ of different brand owners. It was considered a time of great interest. Hundreds of settlers would be there also to find their stock which had unintentionally (of course) been gathered up by the big stockmen; and they found them, too, all too often. Many of these big stockmen owned only a quarter section of land upon which they had a large corral or two, a few cottonwood trees, perhaps a live spring instead of a well; and a few dogs; the free government range constituting the rest of their possessions. Lumber to fence with in those days was out of the question; hardly enough could be had for houses, barns and the fencing of small cultivated fields. Most of the fencing done was with oaken split rails, crooked fence fashion. At the first organization of the county and town the jail was a sort of log corral, made of whip-sawed oak planks, covered with hand sawed oak shakes, and in the jail prisoners were chained to stumps. There it was that William Gouverneur Maurice, United States marshal of the district, with the aid of another man as lawless as himself, caused a man named Deputy, with a knife at his throat, to sign away $50,000 worth of property of which the Visalia mill property was said to be a part. Mr. Maurice shot and killed the first publisher of the Delta in a drunken row on the Mill creek bridge near the court house.

Naturally, the rapid incoming of emigration and the taking up of public lands foreshadowed the downfall of the free range stock industry, by which many of the old settlers were growing rich; and they let their herds range over the growing crops of settlers to their destruction, threatening starvation to the settlers and their small herds. The attention of Mr. Dewey was early called to this state of affairs, and his paper became an advocate for the enactment of a state law requiring the owners of stock herds to fence or herd them off their neighbors, the settlers. There was no lumber for farmers to fence with, and the free range around them they considered naturally belonged to them and not to the predatory owners of wild stock who had little or no range of their own. The proposed law was known as a "no-fence" or "herd-law," meaning that stockmen should be obliged to herd their flocks and that farmers should not be expected to fence against others' stock, as had been the practice.

Quite a bitterness of feeling had arisen between the two factions, and the stockmen had begun calling the settlers "sand-lappers," in derision, from the manner of horse and cattle lapping up the dry feed off the plains in summer, and in return the stockmen, from being horsemen and wearing leggings were nicknamed "hair-leggers." Preparatory to the oncoming election the new settlers, sand-lappers, about half and half politically, decided to vote together for Republican candidates pledged to the herd-law, and Tipton Lindsey, of Visalia, and a Mr. Canfield, of Bakersfield, were nominated for the senate and assembly; both popular men, and both were elected. They secured the passage of a herd-law, but it proved unconstitutional when tested in the courts and there was great rejoicing on the side of the stockmen. But they were speedily made sad by the enactment of a "higher law" by the settlers of Woodville, who, one moonlight night, slaughtered a whole herd of trespassing cattle. Stockmen rode into the slaughter field from several counties and they left, saying to themselves that the settlers had now enacted a law that could not be declared unconstitutional in any court of their jurisdiction.

Soon after Mr. Dewey's arrival in Visalia a meeting of prominent citizens was held to discuss the question as to whether or not it was ad-visible to yield to what was said to be a demand from the Southern Pacific Railroad magnates to make a donation of $100,000 to induce them to build to Visalia or to let the road pass the city by a more southern survey. The most prominent attorneys pledged their reputations that the road had to come to Visalia; the bonds called for it and the government charter would require it, and it must come. But they, the best citizens, thought it might be well to appoint a committee to go out a few miles west on the survey and get the farmers to give a bond for a deed for a dollar to give the right of way through their land, to have their farms cut in two for the benefit of Visalia land owners. The committee was appointed, but no money was raised for the committee to pay the farmers for the bond for right of way through their land. Therefore nothing was done toward helping the great corporation to follow the law, the charter, or the legal opinions of the lawyers.

FREDERICK V. DEWEY, editor and proprietor of the Daily Journal of Hanford, inherits his journalistic ability from his father, Edward M. Dewey. The latter was for several years engaged in publishing newspapers in Massachusetts, but when his son was a lad of four years, left his home in Massachusetts and settled in Downieville, Cal., as publisher of a newspaper. Three years later he went to San Francisco, where he engaged in the real estate business. In 1870 he went to Visalia, Tulare county, in the latter place owning and managing the Visalia Delta.

While living in Visalia, Frederick V. Dewey attended the public schools there, which furnished him with an excellent educational basis, upon which he later builded by attendance at the Visalia Normal School and Heald's Business College at San Francisco. To attempt to state definitely when Mr. Dewey first displayed a predilection for newspaper work would be well-nigh impossible, as his associations and surroundings throughout early life when not in school were type and printer's ink. His adaptability for the work was such that when only seventeen years old he was enabled to take a man's position on a newspaper as compositor, and a few years later went to San Francisco, where he held cases on the California Magazine, the Bulletin and the Call. Thereafter his time was divided between San Francisco and Visalia for several years, or until he became foreman of the Visalia Delta. In the meantime, in 1882, he came to Hanford and conducted the Mussel Slough branch of the Visalia Delta, having charge of the same for about eight months.

After serving as foreman of the Visalia Delta for several years he was for a short time an employe of the state printing office, going from there to Traver, Tulare county, where, as editor and proprietor of the Traver Advocate, he wielded a trenchant pen for about six years. Upon disposing of the latter paper in 1891 Mr. Dewey came once more to Hanford, and the same year established the Weekly Journal, its first issue appearing April 14, 1891. Such was the success of the paper that five years later Mr. Dewey was warranted in making it a semi-weekly journal, the first issue of this paper appearing March 21, 1896. Still greater success was in store for Mr. Dewey, for May 1, 1898, he was enabled to give to the reading public the first issue of the Daily Journal, continuing also the publication of the Semi-Weekly Journal, which papers have constantly grown in circulation and popularity until they rank among the leading Democratic newspapers of the interior of the state.

Mr. Dewey is an easterner by birth, having been born in Massachusetts November 14, 1860. His marriage in 1881 united him with Martha E. McBee, a native of Visalia, Cal., and they became the parents of four children, one of whom, Walter, died in infancy; Harry McBee died when in his fourteenth year; Irene W. is the wife of Robert McCourt, a merchant of Hanford; and Frederick V., Jr., is a student in the Hanford high school. Mr. Dewey is a Democrat in political sentiment, and a staunch defender of party principles. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of the Macca-

JOSEPH BROWN. Born in White county, Tenn., March 14, 1858, Mr. Brown is a son of Samuel Brown, whose sketch will be found in that of Samuel T. Brown, on another page of this work.

Joseph Brown was reared on his father's farm and by attending school during the winter months obtained a fair common-school education. In 1876, in company with his brother William, he went to Texas, where he followed farming near Dallas for nine months. At the end of that time he returned to his native state and was employed on the old farm for a few months, later taking full charge. Here he carried on general farming and stock-raising until 1897, when he disposed of his interests in Tennessee and came to California. Locating in Fresno county, he leased his present place of residence and has since been engaged in farming and stock-raising, although a large portion of the five hundred and twenty acres are devoted to the raising of grain. While he still rents this place, Mr. Brown has purchased three hundred and thirty-two acres on section 31, four and one-half miles west of Clovis, which he also farms in connection with his place of residence.

In White county, Tenn., Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Miss Mattie England, a native of Arkansas, and to them have been born the following children: Ollie (now the wife of Jared Moore, of Clovis), May, William, Harland, Samuel T., Fina, George Henry and Joseph, all of whom are living at home. Mr. Brown has never taken a very prominent part in politics. He thinks it best to cast aside party lines in local elections, but in national issues he votes for the Democratic candidates. In fraternal relations he is associated with the Woodmen of the World.

MILLS ELEY. Prominent among the representative stockmen of Fresno county, Mills Eley is engaged in this work in the vicinity of Pulaski, while he makes his home in Fresno at No. 925 O street. He was born in Talladega, Ala., in 1858, a son of Merritt Eley. The elder man was a native of Madison county, Ala., where his father, Mills Eley, had removed from his home in Virginia, which had been established there many generations earlier by English ancestors. Mills Eley had proven a patriot in time of need, taking part under General Jackson in the war of 1812. He died early in life, his family of children being reared on the paternal homestead. As a boy Merritt Eley went to Talladega county, where he engaged as a planter in manhood. During the Civil war he served in an Alabama regiment. He died in March, 1870, at the early age of forty-six years. Religiously he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he acted as ruling elder. In January, 1854, he was united in marriage with Sophronia Blasingame, a native of Marshall county, Ala., and a daughter of Jesse Blasingame. He was a native of the Carolinas. He located as a planter in Marshall county, Ala., where he married Mary Walker, whose parents were from South Carolina. Mrs. Eley brought her family to California in 1876, and entered land in the vicinity of Fresno, where she engaged in the stock business. She is the mother of nine children, seven of whom are still living.

Mills Eley, the subject of this sketch, was reared on the paternal farm in Alabama until 1876, in which year he accompanied his mother to California, his education being received in the common schools of his native state. On his mother's property he engaged in stock-raising, and in 1878 entered into the business for himself. He located first on Kings river, where he remained one year, thence going to Academy, where he began the sheep business, his range at that time being in what is now Madera county. He entered land and also homesteaded a farm eight miles east of Borden, where he made all improvements and gave intelligent effort to the success of his enterprise. Later he sold out and located his home in Fresno, while he still conducts the sheep business on his ranch northwest of Pulaski, which, since 1903, has been a partnership affair, A. H. and L. A. Blasingame being interested with him. They have over twenty thousand acres of pasture land for their sheep, which number from ten to fifteen thousand head of a good grade of mutton stock. This enterprise has been one of the most successful in Fresno county, and has named Mr. Eley among the representative stockmen of the section. For many years he has been a member of the National Sheep Breeders' Association, and fraternally was made a Mason in Fresno Lodge No. 247, and is also a member of Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M. Politically he is a Democrat and an ex-member of the county central committee.

PETER DROGE. A successful fruit dealer of Fresno, Cal., Peter Droge is named among the prominent business men of this city. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in San Francisco, September 2, 1872.

Peter Droge was reared in San Francisco, receiving his education in the public schools and Heald's Business College, graduating from the latter institution in 1887. His first business employment was with George Wallcon, of San Francisco, with whom he remained as bookkeeper for three years. Following this he came to Fresno and entered the employ of the Seropian Bros. as manager of their fruit business, remaining so occupied until he went into business for himself. He met with success in his work, and in the spring of 1902 established a packing plant, which was incorporated in July of the same year, under the name of the Droge Fruit Company, with a capitalization of $25,000. Mr. Droge became its first president, his brother its treasurer, and Charles A. Paulden vice-president and secretary. The company then built a packing house on the Southern Pacific Railroad, with a capacity of five thousand tons, modern in every way and operated by steam power. In November, 1904, this plant was destroyed by fire, when the company purchased the Porter Brothers' plant, fitting it up for the business with double the capacity. This plant is also located on the Southern Pacific Railroad, with an office at No. 1823 Tulare street. They handle all kinds of fruit, buying from Modesto to Bakersfield. They are the largest packers of California figs in the state, handling one-third of the product of this section, having made a specialty of this fruit at the beginning of the business. Mr. Droge's business is an important factor in the development and progress of Fresno and he is accounted one of the enterprising and resourceful business men and one who can always be depended upon to give his best efforts toward the upbuilding of the community in every possible way.

CHARLES A. KIMBLE. Prominent among the men who have come to Kings county with assets consisting of physical strength and mental alertness, and who have had the sagacity to perceive and the boldness to push to a successful issue a large and paying opportunity, mention is due Charles A. Kimble, one of the most extensive stock raisers and most prominent and wealthy pioneers of Kings county. Traveling south over well kept country roads four miles from Hanford one comes to the model stock farm, from which no improvement suggested by latter day enterprise has been omitted, and where grow to maturity some of the finest sheep and Clydesdale horses on the Pacific coast. Mr. Kimble came to Kings county in 1889, bought a half interest in a one hundred and sixty acre ranch, managed the same for some time, and then purchased it all for his present home. In addition he rented large tracts of land for his sheep-raising industry in 1895 and at the present time has eight thousand head of American Merino and Rambouillet sheep, twelve hundred of which are the famous Rambouillet bucks. At the head of his herd of Clydesdales is the well-known stallion whose registered name is Yathin Stamp, the winner of many premiums, and whose graceful and splendid proportions have been the admiration of many hundreds gathered at the district and agricultural fairs. Yet another source in the stock line is a high grade of hogs, of which Mr. Kimble sold four hundred and forty-two head at one time, averaging two hundred and twenty-six pounds. He receives good prices for his Clydesdales and ships them all through the west and as far east as Chicago, Ill. Having insufficient feed for his stock Mr. Kimble bought, in 1901, three hundred and twenty acres of land eight miles south of Hanford, and in 1903 added to it two hundred and forty acres of land, both farms being under alfalfa. He also rents three hundred and twenty acres adjoining his home farm, which contributes further to the alfalfa output. He is one of the best judges of fine stock in the San Joaquin valley, and his advice and counsel are sought and appreciated on occasions involving the prestige of Kings county as a stock producing center. He is a director in the Kings county Agricultural Association, an institution which has proved of great benefit to stock and produce raisers throughout the county.

When Mr. Kimble started out on his own responsibility at the age of twenty-one, he had a thorough knowledge of farming and an aptitude for making it a paying proposition. Until then he had lived on the home farm in Ontario county, N. Y., where his birth occurred November 2, 1865, and where his father, Chillian Kimble, still makes his home. Having posted himself regarding the various chances for advancement open to the ambitious youth on the coast, he went to Phoenix, Ariz., near which city he worked on a farm for a year. Not liking the prospects in Arizona, he came to California with hopes of better success, and in Woodland worked at the carpenter's trade for two years, removing to his present farm in 1880. He was obliged to go partially in debt for his land, but industry soon enabled him to rise above this handicap, and his way has been comparatively clear of hindrances since getting a start. His family consists of his wife, formerly Bertha Dewey, a native of California, and four children: Florence, Elmer, Nellie and Alice. Mr. Kimble's intelligent grasp of the needs and possibilities of this county has made him an important factor in many of its outside enterprises, especially in connection with the development of water. He is the representative of Kings and Tulare counties in the St. John's River Association, and the president of the Lake Side Ditch Company. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and of the Hanford Lodge No. 194, K. of P. Mr. Kimble is a solid, substantial and practical man, a generous contributor to worthy causes, and a supporter of education and progress. As a stock-raiser no one has excelled and few approached his standard, and as he is a comparatively young man, his career is surrounded with every indication of extended future usefulness.

WILLIAM H. GARDNER. A prominent wheat grower of the Upper Kings river country, William H. Gardner is widely known throughout this section of Fresno county. He was born in Orleans county, Vt., November 24, 1838, a son of Roswell Gardner, of Massachusetts, who located first in Canada and later crossed the line into Vermont, where he made his home for many years. He came to California on a visit to his son in 1879, and died that year at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, formerly Eliza Hussey, a native of Maine, died in Newport, Vt. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom ten attained maturity, five sons and five daughters, while three sons and one daughter are now living. William H. Gardner was the oldest of this large family of children, receiving his education in the common schools of both Canada and Vermont, while he was trained to the practical duties of a farmer's son. Deciding to try his fortunes in the remote west, he came to California in 1866 by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and upon his safe arrival located near Santa Clara and engaged in grain farming. For sixteen years he remained in that locality, when he came to Fresno county, purchasing a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, where he engaged in grain farming. He has since added by purchase until he now owns three hundred and twenty acres in the home place, forty acres near by, and four hundred and eighty acres west of Fresno, near Huron. He has also a stock ranch of six hundred and forty acres in the mountains, where he raises horses and cattle. The greater part of his land is devoted to the cultivation of wheat, in which he has met with a gratifying success.

In Santa Clara, Cal., Mr. Gardner was united in marriage with Inogene Riker, a native of New York, and they are the parents of two sons, Harry P., a rancher, and Frederick J., a blacksmith at Sanger. Politically Mr. Gardner is a Democrat and in the interests of this party held the office of school director while a resident of Santa Clara county.

LUCIUS POWERS. The Powers orchard and vineyard, of which Lucius Powers is general manager, holds rank among the most carefully improved and most thoroughly cultivated fruit farms in the Centerville district of Fresno county. The property, which adjoins Centerville on the west, comprises an aggregate of three hundred and seventy acres, subdivided as follows: one hundred and fifty acres in raisin grapes; twenty acres in Emperor grapes; eleven acres in oranges; ten acres in apples; six acres in figs of the White Adriatic variety; ten acres in Calmerna figs; two acres in peaches; twenty acres in alfalfa, and the balance in hay and grain which furnish feed for the stock carried on the place.

Ever since the stirring days of 1849 the Powers family has been identified with California history. The founder of the family on the coast was Aaron H. Powers, a native of New Hampshire, but from early childhood a resident of Boston, Mass., having accompanied his parents to that city. At the time of the discovery of gold in California he took passage on a sailing vessel and after a long voyage by way of the Horn landed at the Golden Gate, whence he proceeded to the mines of the north. Eventually he became engaged in business in Sacramento, where he continued for twenty years. Upon retiring from commercial life in 1887 he purchased two hundred and fifty acres west of Centerville in Fresno county and soon afterward planted one hundred acres of the tract in fruits of various kinds, also laid out a large vineyard. Of recent years he has given the management of the place into the hands of his son, Lucius, but still maintains a close supervision of the property and by wise counsel and keen judgment is proving a helpful factor in the highest development of the land. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Emma Louisa Sweasey, was born in London, England, and died in California.

Of six sons and three daughters comprising the family of Aaron H. Powers the gentleman whose name introduces this article was next to the youngest. As a boy he received common-school advantages in his home town of Sacramento, where he was born January 11, 1872. After having taken a course in a business college in San Francisco he started out for himself, and ever since has been associated with the fruit ranch in Fresno county, where still he makes his home. An incident of his youth indicates his progressive, enterprising disposition. In 1880, when seventeen years of age, he established the Kings River News, a four-page sheet, which was 6x8 inches in size, and was published every other week. The people of the community around Centerville, which had no publication of its own, appreciated his efforts to give them the news of current interest, and their support encouraged him to increase the paper to eight pages, but after he had published it for two years other matters required his attention and he discontinued the little publication.

By his marriage to Miss Abbie Vian, who was born at Colusa, this state, Mr. Powers has three children, Lucius, Jr., Mary Louisa and Martha Kate. In political belief a Republican, he has been active in local affairs of the party, and for some years has served as a member of the county central committee. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the kindred organization of Rebekahs at Centerville. Both he and his father, who continues to make the ranch his home, take an intelligent interest in matters for the benefit of the county and especially give encouragement to movements for the development of the fruit interests of this locality, believing that the land can be made more profitable by following horticulture and viticulture than by continuing in general farming or stock-raising.

JACOB VOGEL. Prominent in financial circles in the San Joaquin valley, Jacob Vogel has given his best efforts toward the development of the best interests of this section. He is a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in Hesse-Cassel, November 27, 1839, his father, Baltasar Vogel, being born in the same locality, where he engaged as a farmer and merchant until his death in the fall of 1848. In that same year he participated in the revolution, being a member of the Revolutionary party. In religion he was a Lutheran and was a strong moral citizen and one who gave his efforts to advance the welfare of the community in which he made his home. His wife, formerly Christine Hoffman, was a native of Germany, where she also died. Of the five children born of their union only two are living, a son and daughter. A son, John, went to England and engaged as a baker until his death, and the other son, Ludwig, remained on the old home place, where his death occurred.

Reared on the home farm in Hesse-Cassel, Jacob Vogel attended the public schools until he was fourteen years old, when he was confirmed. He was then apprenticed to learn the shoemaker's trade, remaining so occupied for three years, when in 1857 he came to America. His passage was made on a slow steamer, the voyage occupying three weeks, and after his safe arrival in New York City he went on to Chicago, Ill., where he found himself with but $1 left of his savings. He remained in that city but four months, when he went to Bloomington, same state, and for three months worked in the employ of a mason as he was unable to follow his trade. He received $1 per day as his remuneration for his three months' work, after which he found work at his trade until the breaking out of the Civil war. He had taken a keen and intelligent interest in the question of the day, and in 1858 had heard Lincoln and Douglas debate five times in different cities in Illinois. He did not at first enlist for service, but in the spring of 1862 he was a volunteer among three hundred, a company raised in one night to go to Springfield to guard prisoners. In the July following he enlisted in Company A, Ninety-fourth Illinois Regiment Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Bloomington, after which the regiment was sent to service in Missouri and Arkansas, where, December 7, 1862, at the battle of Prairie Grove, the regiment suffered great loss. Following they participated in the siege of Vicksburg, after which they were sent to the relief of Port Hudson, and thence to New Orleans. In that city the greater part of the regiment was incapacitated through fever, and four months later the Thirteenth Army Corps was organized and all that was left of the regiment became a part of the same. They were then sent to Brownsville, Tex., on the Rio Grande, one of the most trying and difficult expeditions during his long service, their only food being salt pork. Scurvy broke out in the regiment and the suffering was intense. Later they went to Mobile bay, taking part in the battles of Fort Morgan and Fort Gaines, and also doing garrison duty. In the taking of the fort at Mobile this corps was active, and immediately afterwards came the news of the assassination of Lincoln. The anger of the troops was something terrible in its magnitude, and but for the previous surrender of the fort the southern soldiers would have suffered at the hands of the enraged sympathizers. In Mobile the troops remained for a time, after which they were sent to Galveston, Tex., where Mr. Vogel was honorably discharged and mustered out of service in July, 1865. During his long service he was wounded once in the right hand at the battle of Vicksburg. Returning to Bloomington, Ill., Mr. Vogel engaged at his trade for some time, did some traveling throughout the west, as far west as Omaha, and later returned. His employer suggested to him the idea of starting a store and shop, and accordingly he located in Clinton, Dewitt county, Ill., where he established his business. He met with success and very shortly his business assumed lucrative proportions, and in a very short time he found it necessary to make two trips a year to the eastern factories, where he purchased his goods. During this time he purchased and improved property in Illinois, owning a farm of four hundred and eighty acres. In 1886 he came to California as delegate to the National G. A. R. Encampment at San Francisco, and while in the state visited various localities. Charmed with the climate, and the business possibilities of the state, upon his return to Illinois he at once sold out his business and returning to California invested in lands, real estate and stock in the vicinity of Fresno, Fresno county. He built a handsome residence on Q street, and later on purchased a forty-acre vineyard in the vicinity of the city, which, however, he has since sold. He also improved four hundred acres on Kearney avenue, devoted principally to alfalfa, and where he conducts a large dairy, and owns as well various other lands throughout Fresno county. In 1900 he located his home in Fruitvale, at the corner of Fruitvale avenue and Bellevue street, but still retains a prominent place in the business activity of Fresno, to which city he goes each month to look after his interests, being director and vice-president of the First National Bank of Fresno; president of the Fresno Street Improvement Company; and owns three-quarters of a brick block at the corner of I and Fresno streets. He is also a stockholder in the People's Savings Bank of Fresno and the Fresno Abstract & Title Company, as well as the First National Bank of Selma, the Bank of Dinuba and the First National Bank of Madera, while he also owns three store rooms in Sanger. Mr. Vogel has brought about his noteworthy success by a close application to his business, without which even ability cannot bring a man desired results. With nothing but his ability and powers of application, he has risen from a position of dependence to one of competency and affluence, at the same time winning for himself a place high in the esteem and confidence of all who know him either in a business or social way.

In Bloomington, Ill., Mr. Vogel was united in marriage with Eliza Ludolph, a native of Kur-Hessen, and the daughter of Martin Ludolph, who located as a farmer in Indiana, where his death occurred. They became the parents of six children, namely: Amelia, the wife of A. Hall of Fresno; Lulu, the wife of Harry Aldrich of Fresno; Olivia, the wife of Charles McCordle; Herbert E., in charge of the dairy at Fresno; Welby, at home; and Burnel, at home. Fraturnally Mr. Vogel is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Encampment. He is a member of Appomattox Post, G. A. R., of Oakland, and is a past commander of Atlanta Post, of Clinton, Ill. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, while his wife belongs to the Christian Church. Politically he is a strong Republican in national issues, but locally gives his support to the men whom he considers best qualified to discharge public duties. Mr. Vogel has proven himself one of the most helpful upbuilders of the San Joaquin valley—a man of strong moral influence and unusual business ability, and a citizen whose best efforts have been given to advance the interests of the community in which he has made his home, as well as the general public which holds his allegiance.

DAVID R. GRIFFITH. Representative of the enterprise and spirit of progress which have distinguished the commercial, industrial and agricultural life of Tulare county, David R. Griffith is entitled to the position accorded him by the liberal and public spirited citizens of this section. A member of the firm of Griffith & Owen, proprietors of the Rocky Point Granite Works, he is giving his best efforts toward the success of this enterprise, as well as interesting himself generally in all movements calculated to advance the public welfare. Born near Carnarvon, Wales, December 12, 1851, he is the only one out of a large family to seek a home in America. His father, Robert Griffith, was also a native of the same place, and the representative of a very old Welsh family. He was employed in the slate quarries in that locality, where his father had followed farming for a livelihood. His wife, formerly Mary Jones, was also a native of the same locality, where both herself and husband died. They became the parents of eleven chil-

Until he was seventeen years old David R. Griffith remained in Wales, attending the National school in boyhood, and when old enough assuming a place in the slate quarries. In the spring of 1869 he came to New York state and found employment in the slate quarries at Middle Granville. From there he went to Quincy, Mass., in 1872, and became an apprentice to learn the work of granite cutter and maker of building stone. In 1875 he returned to Wales and for the ensuing seven years found employment again in the slate quarries in Llanberis. From 1876 to 1882 Mr. Griffith was secretary and one of the assistant leaders of the Eryri Choral Union, one of the leading choirs of North Wales during this period. The choir, which consisted of one hundred and fifty picked voices, competed for prizes every year and during this time won about $5,000 in prizes. The most noted competition was the one at Berkenhead in 1878, where two of the best choirs of South Wales and two of the best choirs from North Wales and one from Liverpool entered the contest for a prize of $1,000, which was won easily by the one to which Mr. Griffith belonged. During this time he was also a leader of another choir of one hundred voices that was successful in competitions. He also wrote many pieces of poetry that became popular, namely: The Soldier Brave, Choral March, music by Dr. Joseph Parry, Gwenfron, music by R. S. Hughes. Other pieces were set to music by American composers. He was special correspondent to the Carnarvon Herald during the same years and he made his home at Llanberis, where he was known entirely by his Bardic name Granvillefab. The Eryri Choral Union was the first choir in North Wales to give an opera in costume, as the churches of that location, at that time, were much opposed to operatic singing. Mr. Griffith was the one who induced the members to undertake the matter. The expense of one entertainment was over $1,000 (a neat sum at that time in North Wales), the costumes being obtained from London. The opera Blodwen, by Dr. Joseph Parry, the first Welsh opera ever written, was produced and was a grand success, over six thousand people attending it, being held at the Pavilion Carnarvon. For years he led the singing in one of the largest churches in Llanberis and devoted one night each week in teaching the children to sing, using the Tonic Sol Fa method. In 1888 he was the leader of a male choir in San Francisco. He taught a music class in Exeter, his home, during the winters of 1889-90, and also led the singing in the church there. His services were always given gratis and were appreciated by those who were benefited.

Deciding to locate again in the United States Mr. Griffith went to Austin, Tex., and engaged in the granite business, helping to cut the granite for the state capitol. After one year in that location he came to California, worked in San Francisco for nine months, then found employment at Penryn, Placer county, for three months, when he returned to Texas. In June, the following year (1887), making a six months' trip to Wales. In September, 1887, he located in Denver, Colo., where he remained until the spring of 1888, when he once more came to California and located in San Francisco in the prosecution of his trade. He removed to Tulare county in 1889 and leased and opened a granite quarry on Rocky Hill, being associated with D. G. Hughes and R. H. Owen, the former eventually disposing of his interests to the other partners. Mr. Griffith and Mr. Owen have remained connected ever since, five years afterward giving up their lease and purchasing ten acres for a quarry on the north side of Rocky Hill, four miles east of Exeter, and opened new quarries. The quarry is admirably located for a profitable conduct of the business, a spur from the Electric Railroad soon to be built to enable them to ship by the carload. They have built derricks, sheds and shops, all thoroughly equipped, and are soon to have electric power with which to operate. In Exeter they have also built a polishing shop, where they make cut stone and monumental work, all by electricity. Their product is shipped all over California, the excellence of their work, and the despatch with which orders are executed, bringing them a large and lucrative custom. In addition to his business interests Mr. Griffith owns two hundred acres adjoining the quarry, one-half interest in sixty acres on the west side of Rocky Hill (one and a half miles from Exeter), and also owns seventeen acres adjoining, of which ten acres are in a bearing orange grove, where he is now building a residence. Mr. Griffith is prominent locally, being a director of the Exeter Water & Irrigation Company, which canal runs near his property, and is president of the Exeter Citrus Fruit Association, a packing and shipping concern, of which he was one of the organizers.

In Wales Mr. Griffith was united in marriage with Ellen Thomas, a native of that country, where she also died. She left one child, a daughter, Blodwen, who is now in Wales, a teacher in the public schools at Llanrug. In Grass Valley, Cal., Mr. Griffith was afterward married to Emma Bagley, who was born in Rough and Ready, the daughter of a pioneer miner from Maine. Mr. Griffith is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and politically is a staunch Republican, now serving as a member of the county central committee. He belongs to the Exeter Board of Trade and is active in all public movements. Fraternally he belongs to Exeter Lodge No. 308, I. O. O. F., of Exeter, of which he is past grand, and is also a member of Damascus Encampment No. 44, Canton Visalia No. 24, and Orange Blossom Rebekah Lodge No. 265, of which Mrs. Griffith is also a member.

G. W. WEBSTER was born in Chatham county, N. C., a son of Micajah Webster, who was one of a family of fifteen children, twelve sons and three daughters. When his son G. W. was a child Micajah Webster went to Indiana, and there he carried on farming the remainder of his life, dying in that state, as did also his wife, Mrs. Jane B. (Colburn) Webster.

When twenty years old G. W. Webster went to Missouri, where he followed the brickmaker's trade. In Andrew county, that state, in September, 1844, he married Miss Jane C. Smith, a daughter of John P. and Elizabeth (Crittenden) Smith. In 1852, with his wife and three children, Mary E., Sarah E. and John M., Mr. Webster crossed the plains with ox-teams, the journey occupying six months. Two of Mr. Webster's uncles, Hiram and Nathan Smith, who were also in the party, died of cholera. Mr. Webster first settled in San Ramon valley, Contra Costa county, going from there to Vacaville, where he died June 1, 1872. After coming to California six other children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Webster, as follows: Mrs. Martha J. Potter, Mrs. Eliza Dunn, Mrs. Nellie Trevisse, Morris S., Mrs. Abigail Shipp and Mrs. Josie Potter. In 1890 the family came to Fresno county.

DR. CHESTER ROWELL, of Fresno, was born in Woodsville, N. H., October 7, 1844, the son of Jonathan and Cynthia (Abbott) Rowell. In 1849 his parents, with their eight sons, removed to Stouts Grove, near Bloomington, Ill., where his father died the next year. With the other younger children he lived with his mother on an Illinois pioneer farm, until the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861, when, with four other brothers, he entered the Union army, taking part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the Siege of Vicksburg and most of the battles and campaigns of the Army of the Tennessee, from 1861 to 1864.

After the war Mr. Rowell attended Lombard College, Galesburg, Ill., for a time, and then went to Chicago, where he attended a business college and took up the study of medicine in private. In 1866 he came across the plains of California and settled in San Francisco. He studied medicine with his cousin, Dr. Isaac Rowell, and in the medical department of the University of the Pacific, now Cooper Medical College, where he graduated in 1870. During this time he spent one year in Oregon, where he taught school. He began the practice of medicine in San Francisco, but in 1874 came to Fresno, and has continued the practice of his profession in this city and vicinity ever since. In 1876 Dr. Rowell established the Fresno Republican as a small weekly paper. It remained under his control for three years, and was then transferred to others. After many vicissitudes the same paper, grown to a promising daily, came, in 1891, into the possession of the present Fresno Republican Publishing Company, of which Dr. Rowell is president and principal stockholder. The paper has now become one of the leading influences and best newspaper properties in California. Dr. Rowell was elected as a Republican to the state senate in 1879, at a time when the county was almost solidly Democratic and was the first Republican ever elected to office in Fresno county. He served as senator until 1883, and was again elected to the same office in 1898 and 1902, and is therefore just completing his twelfth year of service as a senator. He was appointed a regent of the University of California in January, 1891, and has been fourteen years in that office. His present term will expire March 10, 1910. Dr. Rowell was appointed a member of the State Board of Health in 1880, and was a presidential elector in 1884. He was a delegate to the National Republican convention in 1900 and was one of the sub-committee of nine which framed the national platform of that year. He has been a delegate to many state and other Republican conventions and has always been active in politics. During the legislative dead-lock of 1900, Dr. Rowell voted continuously for Thomas R. Bard, who was finally elected senator at the called session of the following year.

In 1872 Dr. Rowell was married to Mrs. Nellie Rowell, widow of his former preceptor, her death occurring in 1884. In 1887 and 1888 Dr. Rowell made an extended tour of the world, visiting Japan, China, India, Egypt and all the countries in Europe. He has taken other less extensive trips at intervals, and has always been an enthusiastic traveler, taking an active and well-informed interest in the affairs of other countries as well as his own. He is a man of public spirit, whole-souled and generous, and is honored by all who know him, either in a social or political way.

ROBERT E. LEE GOOD. The most extensive merchant in Clovis, Fresno county, Robert E. Lee Good is active in the upbuilding of the best interests of this place. He was born at St. Albans, W. Va., April 19, 1868, the fourth in a family of twelve children, of whom ten are now living. His father, Thomas Good, was a son of Henry Good, both natives of Virginia, in which state the latter died. They were descended from an English family of prominence and occupied a position of importance in the development of the Old Dominion. Thomas Good removed to St. Albans, W. Va., improving a farm on the Great Kanawha river until his retirement, now making his home in that city at the age of seventy-six years. His wife, formerly Louisa Smith, was a native of West Virginia and the descendant of an old Virginia family. She died in the old home in 1886.

The childhood of Robert E. Lee Good was spent on the paternal farms, while he received his education in the common schools. He remained at home until 1886, when he came to California, and in Fresno county engaged in the cultivation of a vineyard in the employ of M. F. Tarpey. He remained in that connection for ten years, six of which he acted as superintendent of the vineyard. In 1896 he entered upon a commercial career on the corner of Fourth and Front streets, where he has since been located. He bought these lots, which were then nothing but a wheat field, and put up a small building 24x36 feet, and established a general merchandise business. In 1900 he built a new store, 75x110 feet, built of brick, with a large warehouse 50x150 feet, with a capacity of forty thousand sacks. He carries a full line of dry goods, clothing, hardware, groceries, all kinds of produce and dried fruits, and has built up an extensive and lucrative trade. He is also interested in farming, conducting twelve hundred acres planted to wheat and barley, running five six-horse teams in the operation of the work. He has met with success and is esteemed as well for the qualities which have distinguished his citizenship.

Near Clovis Mr. Good was united in marriage with Amy Clay, a native of Merced county, Cal., and the daughter of John A. Clay, an early settler. They became the parents of two children, George and Helen. Fraternally Mr. Good is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the former of Fresno and the latter of Clovis. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and is ex-member of the county central committee.

LEWIS WILLS GIBSON. A prominent man in local affairs in Clovis, Fresno county. Lewis Wills Gibson is active as a merchant of this place. A native of Springfield, Mo., he was born December 27, 1857, a son of W. B., and grandson of George M. Gibson, both natives of Tennessee, and early settlers of Greene county, Mo., where both died. W. B. Gibson, although of southern birth, was a strong advocate of the Union, and during the war served as a member of the state militia. Susanna Wills, a native of Virginia and the daughter of Lewis Wills, an early settler of Greene county, Mo., became the wife of W. B. Gibson, whom she survives, now making her home in that state. She was the mother of seven children, of whom Lewis Wills was the eldest. He was brought up on the paternal farm in Missouri, receiving his education in the district schools and Henderson Academy. In young manhood he followed farming and stock-raising in the vicinity of Springfield, Mo., remaining so occupied until 1886. In that year he came to California, and in Tulare county pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres, and later homesteaded the same, improving a quarter section of land and cultivating grain until 1897. In the same year he located in Tipton, Tulare county, and engaged in a mercantile enterprise for one year, when he came to Clovis and established the business which was then known as the firm of Hutchinson & Gibson. Three years later he and T. J. Mitchell bought his partner out and the firm was known as Gibson & Mitchell. A year later he bought his partner out and has since continued alone, now carrying on a large general merchandise business.

In Greene county, Mo., Mr. Gibson was united in marriage with Miss E. A. Kerr, a native of that place, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Ernest, who died at the age of twelve years; Clyde, a student in the business college of Fresno; Fred, Floyd and Susie. Fraternally Mr. Gibson was made a Mason in Sanger, Fresno county, and is also identified with the Woodmen of the World. He is a Republican politically, and is a member of the county central committee, and of the school board here.

HANS AHRENSBERG. A successful manufacturer, Hans Ahrensberg has done much for the industrial development and prestige of Fresno. He is a native of Schlesvig, Germany, born at Barsmark, near Apenrade, July 19, 1865, the youngest in a family of eleven children, of whom seven are living. His father, Hans Christian Ahrensberg, was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, and in manhood learned the blacksmith's trade, combining this with farming pursuits in Barsmark, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-six years. He was the representative of a very old and prominent family of Copenhagen. His wife, formerly Maria Christine Hansen, died in Barsmark at the age of seventy-five years.

They were devout members of the Lutheran Church.

Reared in Barsmark, Hans Ahrensberg received his education in the common schools of that place. Upon leaving school he entered the blacksmith shop of his brother, where he served an apprenticeship of two years. At the age of seventeen years he immigrated to America and came at once to California, locating first at Soledad, where he followed his trade for one year; thence to Salinas for eighteen months in the same work; and in April, 1885, he located in Fresno. He engaged in the prosecution of his trade for four years, when he established a blacksmith business on L street under the firm name of Jacobsen & Ahrensberg. Upon the death of the former two and a half years later Mr. Ahrensberg continued for a like period alone, when he took in as a partner L. Lauritzen, the firm name being H. Ahrensberg & Co., their business first on K street and later on Fresno and H streets. He established an agricultural implement factory, which was conducted successfully for eight years, when it was incorporated under the style of H. Ahrensberg Company, with Mr. Ahrensberg as president. Eight months later he sold out his interests and in 1904 established his present business on I and Mono streets, building a shop 50x75 feet in dimensions, two stories in height, where he carries on general blacksmithing and horseshoeing. He has also built a comfortable residence at No. 1245 R street.

In Salinas, Cal., Mr. Ahrensberg was united in marriage with Elvine C. Nielsen, a native of Schlesvig. Fraternaly Mr. Ahrensberg is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand and ex-representative; the Encampment, of which he is past chief Patriarch and ex-representative, and is a charter member of Fresno Canton No. 30, of which he has served as treasurer since its organization, in 1900. He is a member of the Rebekahs and a charter member of the Dania Society of California and past grand president. In national politics he is a staunch Republican.

FREDERICK C. SHUMARD. During the past thirty years many men have migrated from the east, settled in Fresno county, and by perseverance and industry have accumulated and become the owners of handsome property. To accomplish this they have been saving, and yet with all their economy they have instituted and promoted numerous public improvements. Such men as Mr. Shumard have made Fresno one of the leading counties in the state. Born in Clermont county, Ohio, August 11, 1845, Frederick C. Shumard is a son of Jacob and Mary (Cline) Shumard. The father was born, reared, lived and died in Ohio. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company K, Seventy-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, being in the service from 1862 until 1865. His marriage resulted in the birth of seven children, four boys and three girls.

Frederick C. Shumard obtained a common school education and remained at home working on his father's farm until 1868, when he came to California. Locating at Hollister, he engaged in the lumber business and was also interested in farming until 1876. In the fall of that year he took up his residence near Liberty, Fresno county, where he followed stock-raising five years. He then sold his interests there and bought his present place of one hundred and twenty acres, twelve and one-half miles west of Laton. Here he is carrying on a stock and dairy business, his efforts being well rewarded.

While living at Hollister he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Ann Hill. She is a native of Ohio and a daughter of Jonas Hill. This union has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Lenora Pearl, wife of J. W. Downing, of Elkhorn; Ernest C., who is attending a dental college in San Francisco; Albert M., deceased; George R.; Sarah Edna married F. I. Sherrill of Riverdale, and Gladys at home. Politically, Mr. Shumard firmly believes in the principles of the Prohibition party, and is an active supporter of that party. Starting in life without money or influence, he has persevered and to-day Fresno county counts him one of its substantial citizens.

JOSEPH J. STREET. A noticeable fact in the population of California is that the southern element is represented in almost equal degree with the northern, for the climate and opportunities of the coast region have proved as attractive for families south of Mason's and Dixon's line as for the people from the colder climate of the north. Among the men of Fresno county who trace their lineage to southern progenitors, mention belongs to Joseph J. Street, who is a southerner by birth and ancestry. Born in White county, Tenn., December 6, 1846, he was only three years of age when his father, hoping to better their financial condition, removed the family to Arkansas. As the years passed by, however, Richard Street found his prospects less bright than at first, for in addition to financial troubles, the war cloud was beginning to hang heavy over the land. In 1860 he decided to make another move, and this time he crossed the plains with ox-teams and settled in California. After two years on the Kings river, in the fall of 1862 he bought a tract of land near Visalia and took up ranch pursuits. Probably prosperity would have rewarded his arduous exertions had his life been spared, but he died within a year after settling on the ranch from whose purchase he had hoped so much. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Patience Randolph, was born in Tennessee and died in Tulare county, Cal.

In the parental family there were three daughters and five sons who attained mature years, one of these being Joseph J. Street, now of Fresno county. As a boy he had practically no advantages for an education. Poverty reared an impassable barrier between him and the schooling he earnestly coveted. Toil was his portion from childhood and the future held little promise in the Arkansas environment. When the decision was made to seek a home in California he gladly agreed to the proposition and accompanied his parents across the plains, settling on a ranch in Tulare county. In the fall of 1877 he came to the upper Kings river and rented a ranch three miles east of Centerville. In October, 1901, he secured his present homestead sixteen miles east of Sanger, where he not only conducts ranch pursuits, but also carries on a stage station. The ranch is situated on the Sequoia mill road, a highway in more frequent use by travelers than some of the other roads in the eastern part of Fresno county. In addition to this property he owns a cattle ranch and also leases a considerable acreage. His wife, formerly Mrs. Almira Hutchinson, is the owner of a ranch of two hundred and forty acres in Clark's valley, their aggregate possessions representing a considerable amount. In politics he has been a staunch Democrat ever since casting his first ballot. Though not an office seeker, he accepted the positions of road master and school director at the solicitation of the people of his district, and these offices he filled with care and praiseworthy diligence.

PHILIP W. HASTIE. An extensive farmer, Philip W. Hastie is located on a ranch of one hundred acres three miles south of Fowler, Fresno county, which was originally a portion of a four hundred acre tract which he has sold off in small tracts, the whole being known as the Iowa Colony. He was born in Warren county, Iowa, December 21, 1851, a son of Andrew Hastie, who emigrated from his birthplace near Edinburgh, Scotland, to the United States and located in Ohio, near Columbus. He engaged as a railway contractor, some of the first construction throughout that locality being his work. He went to Iowa in 1850 and located in Warren county, where he engaged in farming. He is now retired from the active cares of life and makes his home in Carlisle, Iowa. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Whittecar, a native of Ohio, died in 1868. They were the parents of four sons and two daughters, of whom Philip W. Hastie was the oldest. He was reared in Iowa and educated in the common schools, making his home in that state until 1873. Coming to California in that year, he spent the two years following in various parts of the state, in Monterey, Lake Tahoe country, etc. He returned to Iowa in 1876 and engaged in farming on his father's place. In the fall of 1882 he once more located in California and on Christmas day of that year accepted the position of superintendent and foreman of the Iowa and California Fruit Company, located two miles northwest of Fowler, Fresno county, and consisting of three hundred and twenty acres. This he conducted successfully for two years, when, in 1884, he engaged in farming independently on rented land. Later he purchased land, and in the fall of 1885 he bought his present place. This consisted at that time of four hundred acres three miles south of Fowler and was nothing but a bare and desolate plain. He engaged in farming and later colonized the tract which was known as the Iowa Colony, having left but one hundred acres of the original purchase. In the meantime he colonized section 26, and the west half of section 27, north half of section 21, north half of section 33, and east half of section 29, and is now engaged in the sale of section 22, all in the vicinity of Fowler. On the Santa Fe Railroad south of Oleander he also colonized eleven hundred acres known as the Bowles tract. In the midst of his other interests during the past sixteen years he has carried on a thrashing machine business, he himself renting four thousand acres devoted to grain. In the wheat panic of 1893 he lost quite a fortune, which, however, he partially regained in 1895, after which he quit the business. He then engaged in the cultivation of fruit and helped in the placing of irrigation ditches. He still retains an interest in real estate operations and is active in all public movements of the community, where he is an influential member. He is a Republican politically and during the election of McKinley as president he gave his best efforts toward his support, being at that time chairman of the Republican committee. He is a member of the Pioneer Club of Fresno county.

JOB MALSBARY. A pioneer of California and one of the oldest residents of Fresno county, Mr. Malsbary is not only a most respected citizen of the State, but is one of the most successful farmers of Fresno county. Coming to the state in 1853, he has been an eye-witness to the remarkable growth and development of California, and in this work of progress he has ably performed his part. A native of Clermont county, Ohio, he was born June 11, 1833. His father, Isaac Malsbary, was born in New Jersey, later taking up his residence in Clermont county, Ohio, where he lived until his death. His wife bore the maiden name of Isabelle Hall, and by her marriage became the mother of six children, four sons and two daughters. She died in Ohio August 8, 1849.

While in Ohio, and after the death of his mother, Mr. Malsbary worked for $8 per month until he accumulated sufficient means to purchase a ticket to San Francisco, which cost him $130, steerage passage. After a very stormy voyage he arrived in San Francisco February 16, 1853. From there he went to the mines near Placerville, remaining until 1858, then entered the University of the Pacific, where he was a student for two years. He subsequently engaged in farming on rented land near San Jose, until 1874, when he removed to San Benito county, locating near Hollister, where he purchased three hundred acres of wheat land. There he carried on a successful business until 1885, when he located in Fresno county, near Riverdale. Here he bought his present place of two hundred and forty acres and has since been engaged in the stock and dairy business.

In June, 1859, when twenty-six years of age, Mr. Malsbary was united in marriage with Henrietta Shaw, a native of Lake County, Ill. This union has been an unusually happy and congenial one, and has been blessed by the birth of five children, as follows: Albert J.; Sanford, deceased; Amey, now Mrs. F. R. Green; Cora, deceased, and Otis.

A staunch supporter of the principles advocated by the Prohibition party, Mr. Malsbary has taken an active interest in local affairs. Through the exercise of economy and industry, he has accumulated a handsome property and is classed among Fresno county's most successful farmers. Both he and his estimable wife have a circle of friends that is co-extensive with their circle of acquaintances.

CRISS WELDON TREMPER. Everyone knows more or less about the great mining excitement at Nome, Alaska, but in Mr. Tremper we find a man who was one of the very first to stake a claim in that famous country, and was the original discoverer of what is known as "Glacier Hill." For four years he was one of the foremost mining men of Nome, his efforts being rewarded with splendid success. Since returning to California he has become extensively interested in the fruit and cattle business, and while he has lived in Fresno county but a short time, his force of character and business ability have gained for him a position in the business world that is assured, opening up a future that appears very bright. The soul of honor and a royal good fellow he has already gained a large circle of friends that is constantly increasing.

A native son of the Golden West, Mr. Tremper was born in Lake county, Cal., May 23, 1867, a son of L. B. and Matilda (Slater) Tremper. L. B. Tremper was a native of New York state. When a boy his parents removed to Crown Point, Ind., where he learned the blacksmith's and machinist's trade. In 1848 he crossed the plains to California, thus being one of the first to blaze a trail across the barren deserts and trackless forests. Locating in the mines of northern California, he remained there until 1854, when he was severely injured and made a cripple for life. On recovering he went to Napa county for a time, subsequently locating in Lake county, where he followed his trade. He is now living in Lower Lake county at the age of eighty years, and in spite of his crippled condition is hale and hearty. His wife was born in Springfield, Ill., and became the mother of ten children.

Criss W. Tremper was the third child. His father gave him the benefits of a good schooling, his studies in the lower grades being supplemented by a course of study in an academy under Prof. William H. Adamson. On reaching his majority he went to the mines, and from that time until his removal to Fresno county he followed mining. In 1888 he went to Utah and for ten years thereafter worked in the mines of Idaho, Wyoming, Montana, Colorado, New Mexico and California. In 1898, the year of the great Klondike excitement, he went to that frozen country and for two years was employed as a salesman by the Alaska Exploration Company. At the time of the discovery of gold on the beach at Nome in 1900 Mr. Tremper resigned his position and went to that section. Being an experienced miner he soon saw the possibilities of the country, and a little later discovered "Glacier Hill," one of the richest mines at Nome. Realizing that it would take many thousands of dollars to develop the property, he formed a partnership with J. T. Price, and together they spent about $64,000, all of which was used in litigation in the courts, they being mixed up in seven lawsuits, but in each case the court rendered a decision in their favor. Glacier Hill proved very rich, and for four years yielded up its hidden gold, nearly $2,000,000 being taken out in that time. Mr. Tremper was identified with much of the pioneer work at Nome, being the first man to dig a ditch, which was named the Price-Tremper Ditch. This connected Glacier creek and the Nome river.

In 1904, tiring of the life in that faraway country, Mr. Tremper disposed of his water rights and other interests and came to Fresno county, locating on his present place, four miles north-east of Kingsburg. Here he purchased one hundred and sixty acres, most of which is devoted to grapes and other fruits. In Lake county he has extensive interests, being the owner of the Tremper Hog Ranch, composed of twelve hundred and eighty acres. It will thus be seen that his interests are very extensive. His success in life has been little short of marvelous, as he started out without a dollar, all his possessions being the result of his own individual efforts.

In Calaveras county Mr. Tremper was united in marriage with Miss Eva Edna Tupper, and to them have been born one child, Criss W., Jr. In fraternal relations Mr. Tremper is a member of the Odd Fellows, having united with the Arctic Brotherhood of Alaska, he being the third man to join, and is a life member. A Republican in politics, he is deeply interested in the welfare of his party, but his life has been too busy for any active participation in public affairs.

CHESTER H. ROWELL, editor of the Fresno Republican, was born in Bloomington, Ill., November 1, 1867, the eldest son of Jonathan H. and Maria (Woods) Rowell. In boyhood he attended the public and high schools of his native city and the Illinois State Normal University, after which, in the fall of 1885, he entered the University of Michigan. He graduated in 1888 with the degree of Ph. B. and remained one year more for graduate study. The following three years Mr. Rowell spent in Washington, D. C., two years as clerk to the committee on elections of the House of Representatives, of which his father was chairman, and the other year in private literary work. While in Washington he compiled a Digest of the contested election cases in the Fifty-first Congress, which was published by order of Congress, and gathered most of the material for his volume on the election cases in all the congresses, which was subsequently published. Mr. Rowell then went to Europe, where he spent two years in study and travel. He was enrolled as a student in the Universities of Halle and Berlin, Germany, and also studied in Rome and Paris. He traveled on foot across Germany, Switzerland and Italy, and made another foot-tour in Bohemia.

Returning to America Mr. Rowell engaged in teaching. He taught in Baxter College (now defunct), Kans.; in Racine College, Wis.; the Fresno (Cal.) high school and in the University of Illinois. In the university he had charge of the work in Scientific German, and in the other institutions taught languages and mathematics. In 1898 Mr. Rowell returned to Fresno, where he had formerly been a teacher in the high school, and assumed the editorial management of the Fresno Morning Republican, in which work he has been engaged ever since. He spent the winter of 1900-01 in Washington. In 1901 he was Republican candidate for mayor of Fresno, but was defeated by the incumbent, L. O. Stephens. He served for several years as trustee of the Fresno Free Public Library and secured from Andrew Carnegie the gift of $30,000 for the construction of the present library building. He is now a member of the school board.

Mr. Rowell was married in Chicago, August 1, 1897, to Myrtle M. Lingle. They have had two children, Chester H., born July 4, 1898, and died January 22, 1900, and Cora W., born May 4, 1900. Besides newspaper articles, lectures, and contributions to scientific and other periodicals, Mr. Rowell is the compiler of the volume of the reports of the contested election cases in the Fifty-first Congress above mentioned and is the author of "A Historical and Legal Digest of All the Contested Election Cases on the House of Representatives of the United States, from the First to the Fifty-first Congress—1789—1901," published by order of Congress at the Government printing office in 1901. Mr. Rowell is a man of ability and culture, a scholar of thorough training, and has given special attention to the study of languages. He is also a successful business man, and has taken an active interest in public, and especially municipal, affairs. He is held in high esteem by all who know him, either personally or through the medium of his pen.

JOHN RANKINE. When the California Wine Association desired to select a thoroughly qualified and experienced man to place in charge of an important undertaking, they chose John Rankine and by this act showed the high confidence reposed in his knowledge of viticulture. As manager and superintendent of the Wahtoke vineyard for the Great Western Vineyards Company, he occupies a position of trust and responsibility. The tracts of the company lie seven miles north of Reedley, with mail service furnished by Rural Route No. 2 from Sanger. Approaching the grounds at a distance one is impressed with the beauty of the place. The neat white buildings present an attractive contrast to the wealth of vines, and when the visitor learns that all of these results have been accomplished within a very brief period he is impressed anew with the energy of the manager.

A native of Scotland, Mr. Rankine was born in Lanarkshire, June 17, 1870, being a son of John and Agnes (Hall) Rankine, natives of the same locality. The father followed farm pursuits in Scotland until death and since then the mother has continued at the old home place. They were the parents of five sons and five daughters, John being the eldest of the family. In addition to the advantages offered by common schools, he was sent to school in Glasgow and thus acquired an excellent education. Immediately after coming to the United States in 1802 he settled in California and secured employment as a laborer in the Carmelita vineyard in Fresno county. During 1900 and until 1902 he was in the employ of Mr. Forsythe, having charge of a vineyard and packing house, and, having attracted the attention of the company he is now with, received an offer of a responsible position in their employ. In 1903 he superintended the planting of fifteen hundred acres forming the Wahtoke vineyard. It is said by judges that no vineyard in the entire state is planted or conducted upon more modern plans than this, and already the owners are beginning to reap the results that usually come to industry and intelligence.

The duties of his position leave Mr. Rankine little leisure for participation in local matters, in which, indeed, he takes no part except such as may be represented by the casting of a Republican ballot at elections. In fraternal relations he is an enthusiastic Mason and a believer in the high principles for which the order stands. Besides belonging to the Blue lodge at Reedley, he is identified with Chapter No. 114, R. A. M., and Commandery No. 3, K. T., Scotland. Since coming to Fresno county he has established a home of his own, his wife being Effie Holmes, a native of Iowa. In his work as an expert with grapes he has found in his wife an able assistant as well as a practical helpmate, and they and their daughter, Agnes, have a comfortable home at the Wahtoke vineyard.

THOMAS B. MCKELVY. Although the above-named gentleman has been a resident of California only a few years, he has from the first taken a leading part in public affairs, and in addition to improving a fine fruit and stock ranch near Clovis, he is prominently identified with several business enterprises in which he is the moving spirit. In the early spring of 1901 he organized the Clovis Improvement Company, of which he is still manager. During the past four years this company has developed over one thousand acres in the vicinity of Clovis to vineyard, orchard and alfalfa. At the present time Mr. McKelvy has under his management about two thousand acres of fruit, stock and grain lands; he is manager of the T. B. McKelvy & Co. real estate firm of Fresno and president of the Clovis Land Company of Clovis. He is one of the resident managers of the Clovis Fruit Company, which he organized in St. Paul, Minn., in November, 1904.

Mr. McKelvy was born in western Tennessee in 1858. His father, Elijah McKelvy, joined the Union army soon after the opening of the Civil war and conflicting reports came back from time to time of his being taken prisoner. During the war the mother and child became separated and the three never met again. Mr. McKelvy says that the story of his childhood is similar to hundreds of others whose homes were destroyed by the cruel war and to this day he abhors wars of all kinds and declares that they have no excuse for existence among civilized nations. During the war he went with friends through the states of Arkansas, Missouri and Illinois, and in 1867 went with a colony to northern Minnesota, which was then in part claimed by the Indians. For the first four or five years in this new country there were no schools of any account, so that he was about fifteen years old when he first had the privilege of attending a country school. The following three winters he managed to get into the village school of Alexandria and at the age of nineteen secured a teacher's certificate and taught his first term of school in Douglas county, Minn. He afterwards took a course in the State Normal School and followed educational work in the state of Minnesota for about twenty years. He held the office of county superintendent of schools for eight years in Dakota county, Minn. After retiring from educational work he became general manager for the School Education Company, wholesale dealers in school books and supplies and publishers of School Education, the teachers' state journal. In addition to his educational work, Mr. McKelvy has always kept in close touch with the business world, spending his vacations as traveling salesman, bookkeeper, clerk, manager of harvesting crews on large farms, etc. For several years before leaving Minnesota he owned and operated a large farm, also had a half interest in an agricultural implement house.

In 1883 Mr. McKelvy was united in marriage to Miss Mary W. Weichselbaum and to them have been born eight children: Thomas M., Marie J., Anna S., Rowena M., John G., Pearl, Warren H. and Gladys. Little Rowena died at the age of four; the other seven are all at home.

In politics Mr. McKelvy is a staunch Republican and for many years has been active in political matters, but since coming to California he has been too busy looking after his personal affairs and the building up of the country at Clovis to take much part in the politics of his new home. As will be seen by this short review, Mr. McKelvy has made his own way in the world since his early childhood. He had not seen the face of a relative from about the age of three years until two years ago, when, upon a visit to the old home of his childhood, he found a number of relatives who gave him a royal welcome. He visited the grave of his father, who is buried in Bollinger county, Mo., but was unable, at that time, to locate the burying place of his mother.

Mr. McKelvy has spent most of his life on the frontier, which gives him very valuable practical experience for the work he is now engaged in. He is personally acquainted in most of the middle west and western states. He has made the best of many opportunities, been persevering and industrious, and as a result has accumulated a handsome property. Both he and his most estimable wife and their large family of children are highly respected and have a host of friends who join in wishing them continued prosperity.

ARTHUR WEHRMANN. Notwithstanding a few experiences of a somewhat discouraging nature, the business career of Mr. Wehrmann has been successful and he now occupies a position among the capable and resourceful business men of Madera. He is of German birth and ancestry, a native of Halla, Saxon, and a son of Louis and Louise Wehrmann, both of whom spent their entire lives in that province. The father was a harness-maker by trade and served in the German army until he was retired. In a family of six children, four of whom are living, Arthur, the youngest of all, was born January 5, 1865. His boyhood years were uneventfully passed in Halla, where he had such educational advantages as the common schools afforded. At fourteen years of age he was taken from school and apprenticed to a baker, with whom he served for three years. At the expiration of his time he set sail for America, arriving in San Francisco, August 12, 1882. Three days later he secured work at his trade in that city and continued employed there until 1890, when he removed to Fresno. It had been his ambition to own a store and his savings were carefully hoarded with that object in view, but his first experience was not encouraging. The bakery and coffee house that he conducted for six months in Fresno proved an unfortunate venture, although he paid every dollar of his indebtedness even at considerable loss to himself. After closing out his business he worked for a baker in the same town.

On coming to Madera in 1893 Mr. Wehrmann bought out Stohl's bakery, which he enlarged and successfully conducted. As the years passed by he established a reputation as a baker and commanded a large trade. Desiring to enlarge the business by the addition of a stock of groceries, in 1899 he formed a partnership with Mr. Meicke and built a new store, to which in 1903 another new building was added, making the total capacity 50x150 feet. A full assortment is kept of staple groceries, queensware, house furnishing goods, etc. The bakery has a capacity of four hundred loaves per day and its equipment is modern and complete. To this department Mr. Wehrmann gives much of his time and thought, his partner superintending the grocery department. The two are energetic, pushing business men, and deserve a large measure of success.

Of the brothers and sisters of Mr. Wehrmann, one sister, Eliza, has never left Germany, but the others came to America. Max lives in Chicago, where he is engaged in the furniture business, and Clara, Mrs. Lehmann, is also a resident of Chicago. Two brothers, Oscar and Ernest, came to California; the former died in San Francisco and the latter in Fresno. While making his home in Fresno Mr. Wehrmann married Miss Bertha Baden, a native of Germany, and by this union there are two daughters, Erna and Marguerite. The family are identified with the Lutheran Church and believers in its doctrines. Though not prominent in politics nor desirous of holding office, Mr. Wehrmann always supports the Democratic party and is a staunch believer in its principles. Local movements of a beneficial nature receive his support and co-operation, and notably the Madera Board of Trade, which has done much to promote the growth of the city. In his fraternal relations he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Madera.

FRANK S. SMITH, a dairyman of the Los Banos district, and former editor of the Los Banos Enterprise, was born on the old Smith place, near where he now lives, September 11, 1872, and has since allied his energy with the most substantial upbuilding of Merced county. Mr. Smith's father, Samuel A. Smith, of whom extended mention is made elsewhere in this work, was born in Illinois and came to the coast in the early '50s, crossing the plains with ox teams, and engaging in mining in Solano county. In 1866 he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land in the west side of Merced county, which is now within half a mile of the town of Los Banos, and to which he has added, and now has two hundred acres. Owing to the fertility of this property, he has derived a gratifying income from alfalfa and stock, and of late years has leased it to his youngest son, Charles. Since practically the beginning of his success in life Mr. Smith has been a widower, for his wife, formerly Nancy Dollarhide, a native also of Illinois, died in 1878, leaving to his care and guidance five sons and two daughters, all of whom are living. These are Oscar, Jasper, Grant, Frank, Charles, Alice and Amanthus.

The common school education of Frank S. Smith was supplemented by a course at the Stockton Business College, after graduating from which he returned to the home farm for a year. He next engaged in the general merchandise business in Los Banos for four years, after which he began to improve his present place, locating thereon in 1898. The first to cultivate the soil and build in this district, he has since raised alfalfa to a considerable extent, and now has a dairy of twenty-five cows, and other stock to the number of thirty. Mr. Smith has signaled his appreciation of the comforts and conveniences of life by erecting a modern and thoroughly up-to-date country residence, presided over by the wife whom he married in Los Banos, and whose girlhood name was Effie Abbott, born in Merced county, and the daughter of an early California pioneer. Mr. Smith for a year edited the Los Banos Enterprise, at the end of that time returning to his farm with added regard for the peace and satisfaction of modern agricultural life. He is a Democrat in national politics, and fraternally is connected with the Woodmen of the World. As one of the younger and more energetic and resourceful of the dairymen and stock-raisers of the vicinity of Los Banos, Mr. Smith occupies a position of honor, not only because he is a native son, but because he is honorable and public-spirited, broad minded and resourceful, and in his intercourse with friends and business men is tactful, considerate, and genial.

ROBERT KELLEY MADSEN. Occupying a position of prominence and influence among the extensive fruit growers of Fresno county, Robert Kelley Madsen has done as much as any one man to have the orchard and fruit productions of this section of California placed advantageously upon the markets of the world. Largely through his influence, in 1900, the Growers' Winery and Distillery Company, of which he is president, was organized, and also, in 1902, the Parlier Pickling House Association, of which he is president, was formed. With this association, he also established, in 1903, a co-operative seeding plant, and he is now organizing the Fresno Canning Association, which will be of great practical benefit to all raisers of fruits in this locality. He was born April 4, 1860, in Denmark, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Jorgen Madsen.

A man of versatile talents, Jorgen Madsen learned the trade of a painter when young, but subsequently followed the sea for awhile, crossing the Atlantic in 1849, and visiting the West Indies, Mexico and California. Remaining on the Pacific coast for a time, he was engaged in the bakery business in San Francisco. Returning to Denmark in 1856, he is now living there retired from active pursuits, being seventy-two years old. Of his union with Conradina Riddle, of Denmark, one son and one daughter were born, the son, Robert Kelley, being the eldest child.

Completing his common school education at the age of fourteen years, Robert Kelley Madsen served as cabin boy on board ship for six months. Going then to Aarhus, Denmark, he attended a school of navigation for thirteen months, at the end of which time he passed the examinations for all the ranks from mate to captain. Shipping then before the mast as a common seaman, he visited all the important ports of the globe, arriving in San Francisco in 1877. The ensuing six months, Mr. Madsen was here employed in coasting, and was afterwards employed on shore, in a warehouse, for two years. Going then with a ship load of barley to New York City, he was on the water one hundred and thirty-eight days before reaching that port. Returning to his old home in 1880, Mr. Madsen learned how to manufacture compressed yeast and whiskey, and the following year came again to San Francisco. The ensuing six months he was yeast maker for the Partrero Compressed Yeast Company, and was then employed for a year with the National Vinegar Works, on Fourth street. Entering then the newly-organized compressed yeast department of the Bay View Distillery Company, he remained there eight months, and then returned to the works of the National Vinegar Company, with which he was connected for a year and a half. From 1884 until 1889, with the exception of four months spent in Denmark in 1887, Mr. Madsen was an employe of the Fraike & Lewis Vinegar and Pickle Manufacturing Company, in Oakland, Cal. When, in 1880, the company dissolved partnership, Mr. Madsen went with Mr. Lewis to San Francisco, where he was employed in the manufacture of vinegar and pickles for seven years.

Locating in Fresno county in 1896, Mr. Madsen purchased eighty acres of land, lying three and one-half miles west of Parlier, and has since devoted his entire attention to the care of his private interests. He has a vineyard of twenty acres, and a magnificent orchard of fifty-four acres, in which he has six thousand peach trees. As a fruit grower he has been very successful, finding a ready market for all of his products. He ships large quantities of raisins from his vineyard, his special brands being known as River

Bend, El Toro, El Fresno, Sunrise, Sunset and IXL.

In Denmark Mr. Madsen married Annie Fleck, a native of that country, and into their household ten children have been born, namely: Georgia; Carl; Anna; Helga; Halven, deceased; Robert Kelley, Jr.; a child that died in infancy; Ellen, deceased; Henrietta, and Harold. In politics Mr. Madsen invariably supports the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member of the Dania, of San Francisco; of the Danish Brotherhood, of Fresno; and of Fresno Lodge No. 439, B. P. O. E.

FREDERICK BACHLE. Well worthy of note among the most enterprising and successful business men of Los Banos is Frederick Bachle, the oldest established and most extensive contractor of this section of Merced county. He owns a snug little ranch adjoining the village, and on this he resides, having made substantial improvements which render it attractive and valuable. Coming here when the city was in its infancy, he has taken much pleasure in watching its rapid growth, in its upbuilding and advancement being a potent force. A native of Switzerland, he was born March 24, 1846, in the canton of Aargau, which was also the place of birth of both of his parents, John and Annie (Hoch) Bachle. He is the youngest of a family of three children, and the only one in America.

Brought up in Aargau, Frederick Bachle obtained a practical education in the common branches of study, and at the age of fifteen years began learning the miller's trade, at which he worked until 1867. In that year, following in the wake of those of his countrymen who had crossed the Atlantic and had sent home cheering reports of their improved condition in the New World, he resolved to come to America. After a tedious voyage, he landed in New York City, and from there proceeded immediately to Toledo, Ohio, where he worked at the carpenter's trade for nearly ten years. Migrating to California in 1876, Mr. Bachle located in San Jose, where he worked at his trade a year. In 1877 he began contracting and building on his own account, and in the following four years erected some of the finest residences of that city. Removing to the west side of Merced county in 1881, he settled at old Los Banos, and there, and at Central Point, was employed as a wagon manufacturer for two years. Going to Fresno in 1883, Mr. Bachle resumed work as a contractor, and in that capacity built many of the largest and most imposing dwelling houses and business establishments of that locality, remaining there eighteen months. The ensuing year he was engaged in building in Redding, from there going to San Diego, where, during the time that the boom was on, he carried on a very profitable contracting business. Returning to Merced county in 1890, Mr. Bachle located at New Los Banos, which was then just started, and has since been the leading contractor and builder of this vicinity. Many of the handsomest and most substantial residences and public buildings have been erected under his supervision, and are a standing monument to his ability and skill. Among those of importance may be mentioned Dr. Wade's residence, two large schoolhouses, and the Odd Fellows' Hall. In addition to his contracting, Mr. Bachle pays considerable attention to his ranch, having twenty-two acres of alfalfa, and in his dairy of twenty cows, which is up-to-date in every respect, and is furnished with a separator, he has a good business, renting it for a goodly sum.

Mr. Bachle was married twice. By his first marriage he had one son, Frederick Bachle, Jr., a carpenter by trade, who was accidentally killed in a railroad accident in Nevada. Fraternally Mr. Bachle belongs to Los Banos Lodge No. 312, F. & A. M.

SAMUEL A. WILLIAMS. It is doubtful if any rancher in the vicinity of Bakersfield is more fittingly heir to the title of self-made man than Samuel A. Williams, owner of a thrifty ranch of sixty acres in the Greenfield school district, eight miles southeast of the town, and which is valued at $7,000. Located on the Kern Island canal, every foot of the ranch can be irrigated, and the improvements are many, all of them having been made by the industrious owner who is utilizing them in his alfalfa and hog raising enterprise.

Samuel A. Williams has the satisfaction of knowing that every cent he has in the world represents so much honest toil and practical good judgment, for his youth knew little diversion, few educational advantages, and no influence to help him on his way. He was born in Ross county, Ohio, December 15, 1854. His father, Jonathan B. Williams, was an early settler of the Buckeye state, having come from his native Vermont. He died in Ohio at the age of forty-nine. After his death his wife with her sons and daughters, returned to Vermont and continued to live there for the balance of her life. Samuel A., older than his brothers and sisters, was nine years of age when his father died, and he manfully put his shoulder to the wheel and bolstered up the slender fortunes of the family with his earnest toil. Securing employment on various farms in the neighborhood, he remained in Vermont until his sixteenth year, when he removed to Connecticut. He worked for his board and clothes for a time, and later on sent all of his earnings to the dear ones at home. By the time he had attained his majority his responsibility lifted somewhat, and in 1875 he married Margaret O'Brien, a native of Connecticut, and of which union five children were born: May, who died at the age of nineteen; William A., who is employed in Bakersfield; Frederick S., an employe in the Coalinga oil fields; Elmer, at home; and Ray E., an infant.

For some time after his marriage Mr. Williams continued to work by the day and month, and in 1883 came to Bakersfield, where he was employed by the Kern County Land Company, remaining with the company for eight years and seven months, during that time looking after their canals. Upon the death of the manager of the company he resigned his position, and with his earnings purchased his present farm, now one of the best in the district. Mr. Williams is a Democrat who leaves to others the trouble of office seeking and holding. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. He is honorable in all of his dealings, public spirited and generous, and a model of kindness and consideration in his family and towards his friends.

M. C. PURCELL, more familiarly known as "Mike," throughout Kern county, of which he is a pioneer, is a well known figure in stock circles in the community, as by investments in this line he has made several fortunes since locating here. As a sheep and cattle raiser he holds a place in the front ranks among stockmen in the county, and since going out of business for himself he has held the position of manager of the Rosedale Ranch for the Kern County Land Company, located in the neighborhood of Bakersfield. A native of Philadelphia, Pa., he was born December 25, 1842, a son of Patrick Purcell. The latter was born and reared in Ireland, and in manhood married there, after which he came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania. He there became connected with the famous Molly Maguires in the capacity of captain, and was finally compelled to leave the country, coming to California during the gold excitement in 1849. His first employment here was in the mines near Mariposa, where he met with fair success, after which he went to Napa and bought a farm upon which he spent the remainder of his life, living to an advanced age. His wife, Julia, also a native of Ireland, died in Philadelphia at the age of seventy-three years.

Until he was thirteen years of age M. C. Purcell remained at home in Philadelphia, after which he became dependent on his own resources, going as far west as Missouri and Kansas, being employed in the two states until 1858. He then came overland to California by ox team, himself owning an interest in the team, and on arriving in the west located at what was then Kernville, this county, where he worked in the mines for a time. The following year he rented a ranch and engaged in stock-raising, dealing principally in cattle and sheep. In 1864, during the dry year, he took twelve hundred head of cattle to Nevada, after which he sold out and returned to Linns Valley, where he owned a ranch, and once more engaged in the cattle business, continuing until 1870. In 1872 he bought a thousand head of sheep and ran them on range for five years, the greater part of them dying in the dry year—1877—which meant to him the loss of the proceeds of his year's work. He then accepted the position of foreman of a large sheep ranch owned by Solomon Jewett, with whom he remained for three years, when he again purchased a ranch, this consisting of one hundred and sixty acres located three miles north of Bakersfield, stocking it with a thousand head of sheep, which he went in debt to purchase. He remained so engaged until 1894, when he sold his lot of twenty-five hundred head and went to work for the Kern County Land Company as foreman of the sheep department at Santa Media. After two years he took charge of the Jackson ranch, which handled from twenty to thirty thousand sheep, buying, selling, raising, etc., and after three years he was changed to his present ranch, where he has from ten thousand to twenty thousand sheep and cattle, and also has charge of several thousand acres of land. Mr. Purcell was married to Ellen Glass, who was born in Los Angeles and died in Kern county, June 15, 1891, the mother of six children, five of whom are now living. His second marriage united him with Mrs. Weston, a native of Arkansas, and they are the parents of four children. Politically Mr. Purcell is a Democrat, but has never cared for official recognition, as he has had little time in his busy life for public affairs. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, being a member of the Uniformed Rank, and also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

EDWARD SIMPSON. Possessing an unlimited amount of energy, push and ability, Ed Simpson, as he is familiarly known to a host of friends and well-wishers, is one of the most active, promising and popular young business men of Newman, and enjoys to a high degree the esteem and confidence of the community. Of English descent, he was born in Central City, Gilpin county, Colo., a son of Thomas Simpson. His Grandfather Simpson, a life long resident of England, assisted as a stone mason in building one or more large aqueducts, and under the employ of Robert Stephenson, was foreman in the construction of the first railroad built in his native country.

Born and reared in Westmoreland county, England, Thomas Simpson learned the trade of a stone mason from his father. Immigrating to the United States, he followed his trade in Galena, Ill., for a few years. Crossing the plains to Pike's Peak in 1859, he located at Central City, where he worked for a while, but was afterward engaged in contract work, building stamp mills at Blackhawk, Central City, Gold Hill, Sunshine, and in other localities. He subsequently engaged in mining on his own account, after which he was city marshal of Central City for two terms, and then assistant marshal until failing health compelled him to return to Denver, Colo., where he resided until his death, in December, 1886. He was a most loyal and faithful Republican. He married Sarah Snow, who was born in Devonshire, England, and came to this country with her father, Robert Snow, a brewer, who settled in Galena, Ill., where he was employed in lead mining until his death. She survived her husband many years, dying in Newman, Cal., in 1902. Of the children born of their union, three sons and two daughters grew to years of maturity, and with the exception of one daughter, are still living.

Living in Central City, Colo., until eleven years of age, Ed Simpson there acquired the rudiments of his education. On going to Denver, he attended school for a few terms, and was afterward employed as a messenger boy in that city. Coming to California in 1887, he lived at Hills Ferry two years, in 1889 settling in Newman, where he has since resided. Entering the employ of J. C. Green in 1889, Mr. Simpson learned the trade of a plumber, and in 1893 started in the plumbing business on his own account, and as a contractor, plumber and tinner has met with great success.

Mr. Simpson is an important and influential member of several fraternal organizations, belonging to Newman Lodge No. 139, K. of P., of which he is a past officer, and to the Uniformed Rank, and is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In politics he is actively identified with the Republican party, and in its ranks no truer or more intelligent supporter of its principles can be found. He is an ex-member of the Republican county central committee, and for two years belonged to its executive board.

LOUIE ELFERS. Many desirable personal characteristics are contributing to the success of Louie Elfers, one of the largest and foremost wheat and barley growers of the vicinity of Crow's Landing. Although still a young man, having been born not far from where he now lives January 11, 1873, he is substantially connected with the agricultural prestige of his locality, owning a farm of three hundred and twenty acres four miles north of the Landing and renting two thousand acres which he devotes exclusively to wheat and barley. Mr. Elfers' family is too well known to require more than passing mention, more especially as his father, Archibald, a native of Germany and a pioneer of 1849, is written of at length in the sketch of John H. Elfers. Not only was Louie Elfers born with a liking for the soil and its possibilities, but his well trained and ambitious mind is ever seeking for new and more practical means of accomplishing his end, and of contributing yet further to the comfort and all-around welfare of those who comprise his household.

Bright, genial and tactful, Mr. Elfers carries out in a well-knit and finely proportioned physique the harmony of his thought and action, viewing life sanely and practically, and always with a thought of its brighter side. His farm is well equipped and well managed, a model of neatness, thrift and promise. The machinery which enables him to harvest his crops is the latest and best, and his house and barns leave little to be desired from the standpoint of comfort and utility. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket in national affairs, giving his support to the best man in local offices. He is popular and influential in his community, and one of its ablest, most enterprising native sons.

H. R. SCHELL. A prominent rancher and wine man of Stanislaus county, located about two miles from Knights Ferry, is H. R. Schell, a gentleman who well merits the esteem in which he is universally held. A native of Lyon Falls, N. Y., he was born June 3, 1845, a son of Adam Schell, who was the descendant of a German family which immigrated to the Mohawk Valley, N. Y., from Baden-Baden during the eighteenth century. Adam Schell became a mechanic and followed this occupation throughout his entire life. He attained the ripe age of ninety years. His wife was in maidenhood Charlotte S. Harris, also a native of New York state.

Reared to young manhood in his native state, H. R. Schell knew no other home for many years. The descendant of patriots, he enlisted, in August, 1861, in Battery H, First New York Light Infantry, and following this served throughout the entire war, participating in many and severe engagements, enduring hardships and privations, but coming safe through it all with never a wound or a sick spell. He was honorably discharged in Elmira, N. Y., in June, 1865, after which he returned to his New York home. In 1867 he decided to emigrate to the more remote west, and accordingly took passage to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, after crossing which he embarked on the Golden City, under the command of Captain Lappage. After landing in the state he came at once to the county where he has since been located, at that time joining an uncle, Abraham Schell, who is now deceased. He came to California in 1849, and became a prominent lawyer of Stanislaus county. Soon after his arrival in the county, H. R. Schell located upon his present ranch and engaged in the wine business. His property is located twelve miles northeast of Oakdale, on the Knights Ferry and Stockton road, and consists of three thousand acres of land, a part of which, however, is in Calaveras county. He has seventy acres devoted to a vineyard, and thirty acres in fruit, which includes oranges, lemons, peaches, apples, etc., and has as well three hundred head of cattle. Besides many miles of wire fence he has eight miles of stone fence. His property is well improved, a beautiful two-story frame house and well kept grounds adding to its value. His production of wine during the year amounts to thirty thousand gallons, while he turns out four thousand gallons of brandy. For twenty-five years he has found a market for his wines, both dry and sweet, in New York City.

In California, in 1873, Mr Schell was united in marriage to Clara Church, who was born in New York state, and they are the parents of eight children, namely: Artie C., Pearl, Violet, A. Edison, Lucile, Charlotte, Roman and Charles E. In his political convictions Mr. Schell is a staunch Republican, but though active in his efforts to promote the principles he endorses, he is not desirous of official recognition. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

ROBERT WILLIAM MUSGRAVE, M. D.

The fact that Dr. Musgrave came to Hanford, Kings county, long before it could boast the proud name of city gives him undisputed claim to the title pioneer. When he first set foot within its present confines but one physician had preceded him hither. Dr. Musgrave at once saw before him the possibilities of a growing town, and forthwith established an office which has witnessed a growing practice from that day to the present time. Not content to serve his own interests alone, he worked unremittingly for the betterment and upbuilding of the infant town, and as secretary of the Hanford Improvement Company his influence was far-reaching.

A native of California, Dr. Musgrave was born in Grass Valley, Nevada county, December 9, 1858, a son of Richard M. The grandfather, who was a native of Scotland, as an employe of the English government, had charge of surveying the harbor of Waterford, Ireland. It was while the family were residing in the latter place that the birth of Richard M. occurred, and there also he spent his early youth. Brought up within sight of the placid ocean his inborn love for the water led him to adopt a sea-faring life, and when still a young boy entered the English navy. Working his way up gradually he finally became captain of an English merchantman, which landed in the harbor of San Francisco in 1855. This trip proved to be his last nautical experience, for he afterward became interested in the mines of California, and finally became superintendent of the Gold Hill Mill and Mining Company, and still later having an interest in the Idaho mines. His vigorous out-door life had given him a robust constitution, and the news of his death in Grass Valley, in 1878, after an illness of only three days, was a severe shock to all who had known him. His ocean voyages had taken him into all the principal seaports of the world, and at the time of his death he was a comparatively young man, being only fifty-five years old. His wife, in maidenhood Margaret Wilson, was born in the north of Ireland of Scotch parents, who allied themselves with the Orangemen in sentiment and belief. Her father, Robert W. Wilson, served as a soldier in the English army, and when quite advanced in years came to the United States, locating in Philadelphia, Pa., where his death occurred at the age of eighty years. The mother of Dr. Musgrave, with her two sisters, came to San Francisco from Philadelphia about 1855, being accompanied on the journey by Bishop Kipp. Mrs. Musgrave died in Oakland in 1901, when in her sixty-seventh year. She was a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. The parental family comprised five children, two of whom died young. Those living are: Robert William, Mary E., the wife of W. J. Tuck, of Oakland, Cal., and Margaret Wilson, the widow of George W. Payne.

Dr. Musgrave attended the public schools of Grass Valley, graduating therefrom in 1873. In 1875 he entered the University of California and was duly graduated from that institution in 1879. Among his classmates was G. C. Pardee, who afterward became governor of the state. After his graduation Dr. Musgrave taught school at Brentwood, Cal., for a time, and later was temporarily engaged in mining, surveying and railroading in Nevada, but finally returned to teaching, becoming principal of a school in Contra Costa county, Cal. The last two years of this time he had been reading medicine and he subsequently entered the California Medical College at San Francisco, graduating therefrom in April, 1884. He came at once to Hanford, and has had no cause to regret his choice, as he has established a lucrative practice and stands high in the estimation of his fellow citizens.

The marriage of Dr. Musgrave occurred January 15, 1900, and united his fortunes with those of Sue A. Barrett, who was born in Michigan. They have become the parents of three children, Margery M., Dorothy and Donald Robert. Politically Dr. Musgrave is a staunch Republican, and has taken an active part in promoting the party's welfare. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a member and past master of Hanford Lodge No. 279, and Hanford Chapter No. 74, R. A. M., in which he has served as treasurer. He is president of Hanford Parlor, N. S. G. W., and is a charter member of the local lodge of the Woodmen of the World. The family find their religious home in the Episcopal Church.

NICHOLAS BIBBY. Distinguished as one of the early pioneers of California, and as a prominent farmer and stockman of Merced county, Nicholas Bibby is pleasantly located in the town of Volta, on the Bibby road, which was named in his honor. Coming to this locality in 1852, he purchased his present fine farm, which was then an unimproved tract of land, giving but scant promise of becoming the fertile and valuable estate into which he has transformed it, making it one of the best stock ranches in this section of the state. A son of John Bibby, he was born May 18, 1833, in Troy, Rensselaer county, N. Y. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Bibby, a native of Wales, came to this country as a soldier in the British Army during the Revolutionary war. At the second battle of Saratoga, when Burgoyne surrendered, he was captured, and after being paroled joined the American army, in which he served as drum major until the close of the war. He subsequently settled in New York City, where he spent his remaining years.

John Bibby was a lifelong resident of New York state. Learning the trade of a blacksmith when young, he located in Troy, N. Y., where he followed his chosen occupation until his death, while yet in manhood's prime, in 1835. He married Mehitabel Lindopt, a daughter of Enoch Lindopt. She survived him but six months, dying when her son Nicholas, the subject of this sketch, was but three and one-half years of age. She bore her husband four children, three sons and one daughter. One son, Enoch Bibby, came to California in pioneer days, and was accidentally drowned when fording the Big Blue, while out on a trip with his brother Nicholas.

Left an orphan when a mere child, Nicholas Bibby lived in western New York until fourteen years old, obtaining his elementary education in the public schools. Going then to Twin Lakes, Wis., he completed his studies in the village academy, after which he served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. Returning to New York state, he followed his trade at Adirondack Furnace for awhile, and then, with the adventurous spirit of youth, drifted westward to Missouri. A few days later Mr. Bibby joined a party just starting across the plains for California, entering the employ of Dr. Cunningham, the captain, who gave him $19 a month and his board while on the journey, a period of six months. Arriving in Sacramento, he bade good-bye to his comrades, and in parting with the crowd that came through with him Mr. Bibby treated each one, paying $1 a drink, a sum that took all of his money, leaving him penniless. Going then to Nevada county, he went to work in a blacksmith shop for $8 per day, and was also engaged in mining to some extent.

At the end of two years Mr. Bibby located in Northern California, where he established himself in the dairy business, which proved profitable, milk selling at $1 per gallon, and butter at $1.50 per pound. His partner, Mr. Klegghorn, being taken ill, Mr. Bibby gave him $400 with which to take a trip to Honolulu. Mr. Klegghorn settled there permanently, and became a citizen of much importance. He finally married the king's daughter, was appointed governor of one of the islands, and one of his children was the Princess Emma. After Mr. Klegghorn's departure to the Hawaiian Islands, Mr. Bibby embarked in the cattle business in the Sacramento valley, and after his marriage located on a farm in Solano county. Subsequently removing to Napa county, he purchased land, and engaged in general farming until the Berryessa grant was sold, after which he opened a blacksmith's shop in Monticello. Disposing of his land in Napa county in the spring of 1869, Mr. Bibby came to Merced county, first taking up government land on Los Banos Creek, later buying a ranch near Central Point, where he followed his trade in connection with farming. Remaining there but a short time, he sold out that property and bought seven hundred acres of land in Volta, where he has improved a valuable estate. Paying especial attention to the raising of stock he has been very successful in his undertakings, and is numbered among the foremost agriculturists of this section of the county. His ranch now comprises five hundred and sixty acres of land, eighty acres of which he devotes to alfalfa, a prolific and good-paying crop.

In Solano county, Cal., Mr. Bibby married Mary Robinson, who was born near Troy, Mo., and came across the plains to the Pacific coast in 1857, with her cousin, Frank Perkins. Of their union the following children have been born, namely: Annie M., wife of M. F. Lundy, of Newman; Enoch, a carpenter and farmer in Volta; John, carrying on the home farm, and also his own ranch, which adjoins the home estate; W. R., engaged in carpentering and farming in Newman; Edward, of Los Banos; Hettie, wife of Judge C. S. Cothran, of Los Banos; Minnie died at the age of seven months; Ida, wife of D. V. Brown, of Dos Palos; Samuel, a farmer and dairyman, living near Los Banos; Nicholas, Jr., a carpenter and farmer, of Los Banos; and George died at the age of sixteen years. Politically Mr. Bibby is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and is an ex-member of the county central committee. He was the first supervisor appointed by the Governor of the state, and served for two terms in that capacity. He was elected justice of the peace, but did not qualify for the office. Fraternally he belonged to Hills Ferry Lodge, F. & A. M., but demitted, and is now a member of Los Banos Lodge; he is also a member of Merced Chapter, R. A. M.; of the Knights of Pythias; and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In religion he is an Episcopalian.

JOHAN BRAUN. In the foothills of Stanislaus county, ten miles southwest of Newman, lies the large farm owned and cultivated by the prosperous German-American citizen, Johan Braun. Among the many people of his nationality who have found independence and a competency in the new world, he is one who has no reason to regret the decision which has made him a citizen of the United States, for under the conditions prevailing in his native land opportunities for advancement were meager. As he came to this portion of California when land was cheap, he has reaped the benefit accruing from the increased value of property as well as the benefits resulting from the careful cultivation of the soil.

Pomerania, Germany, is Mr. Braun's native province, and he was born near Colberg, October 3, 1859, being a son of Christleib and Auguste (Beling) Braun, natives of the same province, and both residents there throughout their entire lives. In religion they were devout Lutherans. Of their ten children only five attained mature years, namely: William, who engages in farm pursuits three miles north of Newman, Stanislaus county; Wilhelmina, who is married and lives in Wisconsin; Carl, who conducts a hotel in Stockton, Cal.; Johan; and Bertha, who makes her home in Wisconsin. During the boyhood years of Johann Braun he gained a thorough knowledge of agriculture as conducted in Germany. His father being a painstaking, industrious farmer, taught him the principles of the occupation, and at the same time trained him in habits of energy, perseverance and economy, important factors in his subsequent success.

At fourteen years of age he left school and thereafter gave his entire attention to farm work for some years. Following the custom of his country, at twenty-one years of age he entered the army. For three years he served as a member of Company Three, Twenty-first Regiment, stationed during the entire time at Bromberg in the province of Posen. On the expiration of his term of service he was honorably discharged.

After having spent eighteen months in Berlin, in 1885 Johan Braun came to the United States with his brother Carl. His first location in California was in the foothills on the west side of Stanislaus county, where he secured employment on Webster's ranch. In 1888 he resigned that position and with his brother, Carl, began to raise grain on seven hundred acres of rented land. The two continued together for a number of years. Meanwhile, in 1891, they bought forty acres of the Page tract, three miles north of Newman. After four years Carl sold his interest to another brother, William, and since then the latter has been in partnership with Johan in the cultivation of the land. To the original purchase of forty acres they have added twenty acres, making a total of sixty acres under the ditch. By reason of the irrigation facilities alfalfa has proved a profitable crop, and is utilized for the pasturage of the seventy-five head of milch cows comprising the dairy. Another improvement in the property is an orchard of three acres which the brothers have planted. This farm is the home of William, while Johan, as previously stated, has his home ten miles from Newman, where he operates six hundred and forty acres of grain and pasture land. In the many labors devolving upon him he has had the counsel and assistance of his capable wife, whom he married in Nevada and who was Bertha Braun, a native of Pomerania. Together they have labored to improve their home place and educate their four children, Hedvig, William, Herbert and Anna, whom they are training in the Lutheran faith and in habits of industry and the highest principles of honor.

JOHN CERINI. Born in Switzerland, January 20, 1854, Mr. Cerini is a son of Peter and Mary Ann (Posy) Cerini. The father was a native of the same country and in 1855 immigrated to Australia, locating on Jim's Creek, where he engaged in mining until his death in 1866. To Mr. and Mrs. Cerini were born nine children, four sons and five daughters.

John Cerini was the youngest child in his father's family. His education was obtained in the public schools of his native country. When a young man he started out to make his own way, securing employment on farms in the neighborhood, continuing working for others until 1869, when he came to the United States. Soon after his arrival in New York he decided to make his home in the west and accordingly shipped on a vessel bound for the Isthmus of Panama, making the journey in remarkably short time. His first employment in California was in Alameda county, where he built a board fence. Later he resided in Marin county for a short time, subsequently going to Sonoma county, where he purchased a small ranch, which he has added to from time to time until he now owns two ranches in that county, four hundred acres in each. In 1886 he took up his residence in Fresno county, buying a portion of his present ranch, but since then he has purchased additional land until he now owns three thousand acres. This place is located twenty-one miles southwest of Fresno and here Mr. Cerini is carrying on an extensive stock and dairy business. In his dairy he has one hundred and twenty-five cows, using the milk for the manufacture of cheese, which he disposes of in the Fresno markets. In addition to his dairy cows he has about eight hundred head of fat cattle.

While living in Sonoma county Mr. Cerini was united in marriage with Miss Frances Calzascia, who is also a native of Switzerland. To this union have been born seven children. Mr. Cerini is a Democrat and takes an active interest in the welfare of his party. In the past he has been a delegate to both county and state conventions, while at home he is a leader in public affairs, being at all times willing to give of his time and means to further the interests of the county. Aside from his own personal business interests he is prominently identified with several ventures, including the Millrace Ditch Company, of which he is president and the largest stockholder. He was also one of the founders and promoters of the Mussel Slough Association and is now serving as its president.

CHARLES THOMAS TULLOCH. Of the native sons of Stanislaus county none have devoted their lives to its upbuilding with greater earnestness, greater regard for its future, or more sincere pride in its standing among the substantial communities of the west than Charles Thomas Tulloch, president of the Stanislaus Milling and Power Company, and manager of the Stanislaus Water Company. Behind his energy and resourcefulness, his integrity and public spirit Mr. Tulloch has the example of a Scotch ancestry, steeped in the lore, the conservatism, the simple living and regard for truth, which distinguished the descendants of Robert of Bruce. The family theater of activity was shifted from Scotland to Virginia by the paternal grandfather, who became an expert miller in his native land, and after his marriage with Miss Whitelaw, crossed the sea and thenceforth plied his trade in the Old Dominion. He possessed the true Scotch grit and perseverance, and in time had six or seven mills along the James river, humming their way into the confidence of the business community, and netting their sagacious owner a handsome income. The milling business was so profitable that he naturally trained his children in the same occupation, his son, David Whitelaw, the father of Charles Thomas, taking to it with kindly persistence, and reflecting credit upon the ambition and teaching of his sire. David Whitelaw was born in 1813, and eventually succeeded to the business of his miller father, succeeding also to his Presbyterian sternness, and his little sympathy with the pomps and vanities of life. In time he removed to Kentucky, where he married Sarah White, daughter of John White, and three children were born to him in the Bourbon state. In 1850 he shared the spirit of unrest which visited the land because of the apparently easy fortunes being made in the far west, and, accompanied by his wife, children, father-in-law White, and brother James, removed to Hannibal, Mo., in 1851, the following winter making extensive preparation for emigration to the coast. The journey was accomplished without serious accident or incident of any kind, Mr. White separating from the rest and locating in Madera county, where he engaged in the stock business until shortly before his death, which occurred near Buchanan mine, and James Tulloch engaging in mining in different parts of the state until his death in Angel's Camp about six years ago. David Whitelaw Tulloch spent three years in Stockton, freighting between there and the mines, and in 1855 located in Knight's Ferry, where he engaged in mining for several years. His income, however, was not sufficiently encouraging or his future of enough promise, to warrant a life devotion to winning wealth from the mines, and the occupation of his younger days seemed of all others that in which he could place the most confidence and reap the largest reward. Accordingly, he purchased the mill at Knight's Ferry and operated it until 1875, in which year he left it in charge of his son and removed to Fresno, where he became interested in the stock business. In 1883 he returned to the old mill, managed it with the vigor and enthusiasm of old, and continued to delight in its noise and output until shortly before his death in November, 1897. As became a southern gentleman in whom the tenets of the plantation were firmly grounded, he was a staunch Democrat, his zeal extending only to his own personal vote, and what assistance it was in his power to render his office-seeking friends. He was a Master Mason, and a Presbyterian. His wife died in Fresno in 1882, having reared two of her children, of whom John W., the elder, is a rancher three miles south of Oakdale.

The educational training of Charles Thomas Tulloch terminated at his fifteenth year, and was acquired in the public schools and at Santa Clara College. He arrived in Fresno in 1873, in time to see the first house erected and the first railroad train pull into the then small hamlet. From boyhood up he had worked around his father's mill, but near Fresno he engaged in the sheep business, later following the miller's trade in Fresno, Tulare and Kern counties for a period of eleven years. In 1884 he returned to Knight's Ferry and helped his father run the mill, and in 1895 incorporated the Stanislaus Milling and Power Company, of which he has since been manager and president. In 1896 the company started a lighting plant, furnishing light to Knight's Ferry and Oakdale, and in 1899 the greater facilities and superiority of location offered in Oakdale, resulted in the removal of the mill to that town, and the installation of the full roller process machinery, run by electric power generated by the company. The capacity of the mill at present is one hundred and fifty barrels per day, and the leading brand of "Stanislaus" reaches markets throughout the state, being especially popular in the mining camps of Mariposa, Calaveras, Stanislaus, Merced and Madera counties.

The Stanislaus Water Company was organized in June, 1899, when the company bought the old Stanislaus and San Joaquin Ditch Company's canal, extending from a point six miles from Stanislaus to within six miles of Lathrop. The new company enlarged the canal, and from an outlet seven miles from French Camp carried it seven miles to Slough, put in masonry for spillways, and set in motion an enterprise of far greater capacity and utility. At present there is contemplated further enlargement of the plant to a capacity of six hundred feet of water per second, when it will be possible to irrigate fifty thousand acres of valuable land. Before the completion of the ditch the land along its proposed course sold for $15 per acre, and at present the same property, unimproved, brings at least $75 an acre. Under the able management of Mr. Tulloch the company has prospered, and taken on the dignity of a necessary and upbuilding enterprise.

Mr. Tulloch joins to his business qualifications a predilection for public affairs. His interest and support are easily enlisted in charitable and other undertakings, as well as in the lighter side of social diversions. For many years he has been an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and has twice been master of Summit Lodge No.

112, of Knights Ferry. He is a member of the Royal Arch Masons of Modesto, and of the Pacific Lodge No. 3, K. T., of Sonora, and the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. In Fresno, this state, he was united in marriage with Anna Nielsen, a native of Jamestown, Tuolumne county, and of which union four children have been born: David, with the Stanislaus Milling and Power Company of Modesto; John, with the Stanislaus Water Company; Neil, a student who will graduate at the Santa Clara College in the class of 1905; and Lila, who is attending the Sacred Heart Convent of Oakland, and will graduate in 1905. Commencing life in comparative obscurity, laboring in an humble capacity with steady industry, practicing economy and sobriety, Mr. Tulloch has prospered in his affairs. He has seen several communities grow with great rapidity, and has profited beyond the fortune of the majority in the value which a growing community confers upon fortunate location. His life thus far has been marked by probity, enterprise, and industry, and his character has been enriched by those high qualities of generosity and kindness which have won him business popularity and influence, and the sincere regard of a large circle of friends.

JOHN J. RICHARDSON. The representatives of the Richardson family in California are pioneers of the state and men who have experienced the trials and privations of a new country. The head of the family is Thomas Richardson, who came to the state first during the excitement of the gold discovery, returning afterward to his eastern home, when he brought his wife and children across the plains. A son of Robert Richardson, a native of Virginia, he was born in Burton county, Ky., September 18, 1818, whither his parents had removed. When only three months old his home was changed to Pike county, Mo., where his father located on a farm, shortly afterward locating in Pike county, Ill., where the same occupation was followed. Thomas Richardson was reared upon a farm and trained to the practical duties which have since occupied his attention with the exception of a very few years. In 1846, on seeking independent operations, he located in the state of Iowa, where he remained until 1850. In that year he crossed the plains to California, traveling by means of ox teams, and after spending one year in the mines he returned home by way of the Isthmus of Panama. The following year he again crossed the plains, bringing his family to California, locating in what is now Stanislaus county, being the second man to locate on the south bank of the Stanislaus river. He took up land which proved to be a Spanish grant, and he therefore had to purchase the ranch which he had improved. This consists of five hundred acres devoted to grain and fifty acres of bottom land, which is planted to orchard fruits and a vineyard. Since his location here October 7, 1852, he has brought the land to a high state of cultivation and made many improvements which have placed his ranch among the most productive and attractive in Stanislaus county. He is still active in the pursuit of his agricultural duties, and as well takes a deep interest in public affairs, in the interests of the Democratic party, of which he is a staunch adherent, having served for some time as justice of the peace. Fraternally he is quite prominent, being a charter member of the Masonic lodge at Knights Ferry, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the Odd Fellows. In Illinois he married Lucinda J. Wagoner, who is now deceased. Their two living children are John J., the subject of this review, and Ephraim.

John J. Richardson was born in Pike county, Ill., January 15, 1849, and was a child of only three years when he crossed the plains with his parents to the state which he has since made his home. He was reared to young manhood on his father's ranch in this county, interspersing home duties with an attendance of the public schools. He remained at home until he was twenty-three years of age, when he entered upon independent operations in the agricultural line at various places in Stanislaus county. He is now located near Oakdale, this county, and engaged in a successful prosecution of his chosen occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson are the parents of four children, namely: Fannie, Thomas E., Ora Lee and Emmet William. In his political preferment Mr. Richardson is a Republican.

CYPRIEN PUCHEU. Many of the most successful ranchmen of sunny California are of foreign birth and breeding, and have brought from their early homes beyond the seas those habits of industry, honesty and thrift that have made them valued and respected citizens of their adopted country. Prominent among this number is Cyprien Pucheu, of Mendota, Fresno county, who is carrying on a prosperous business as a sheep raiser and dealer. A native of France, he was born January 13, 1869, in the village of Barcus, Department of Basses-Pyrenees, being the eldest of a family of eleven children, of whom but two, himself and his brother Pierre, who is in his employ, are in America. His parents, Pierre and Engroce (Cibery) Pucheu, still live on the home farm in Barcus.

Receiving but limited educational advantages, Cyprien Pucheu began helping his father when small, being well trained in farming and stock-raising while young. Before attaining his majority, he immigrated to America, arriving in San Francisco in October, 1889, his sole capital being his strong hands, willing heart and courageous spirit. Coming directly to the west side of the San Joaquin valley, he worked for nearly three years for Domingo Gastombide, in the meantime acquiring a practical knowledge of the stock business as carried on in this country. In 1893 Mr. Pucheu started in the sheep business on his own account in Esmeralda county, Nev. He was quite successful until his health failed, when he had to go to a hospital, where he was confined for one hundred and fifty-four days. Returning then to California, he located in Fresno county, building a residence in Mendota, and has since continued in the stock business, having a range about seven miles south of the town, and keeping on an average from twenty-five hundred to four thousand sheep.

Mr. Pucheu married, in San Francisco, Mary H. Pon, who was born in Basses-Pyrenees, France, and they have one child, Julia. In politics Mr. Pucheu is an adherent of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member and a trustee of the Knights of Pythias, and belongs to the French Mutual Benevolent Association of San Francisco. Religiously he is a Catholic.

A. D. SWEET. The business interests represented by the firm of S. Sweet & Co., of which A. D. Sweet is vice-president, are not only of a most extensive nature, but also have brought an added commercial prestige to Visalia. Through a gradual enlargement of stock, the business has developed into a department store of a size unsurpassed by any establishment in the city, four rooms being occupied with a total frontage of one hundred feet and a depth of one hundred and twenty-five feet. In addition to the stock found on the first floor, the second floor also presents an array of goods representing every department of general merchandise. A large retail business is supplemented by a growing wholesale trade that extends throughout the entire San Joaquin valley.

At the family home in San Francisco A. D. Sweet was born July 24, 1876, being a son of Solomon and Annie E. (Phillips) Sweet, natives respectively of Germany and New York City. After having completed the course of study in the San Francisco public schools he matriculated in the University of California, where he took the complete literary course, graduating in 1898 with the degree of Ph. B. Immediately after his graduation he was admitted to the firm of which his father remained the president until death and which, with an office in San Francisco and a large establishment in Visalia, is thoroughly equipped for the prosecution of a successful business. In many respects the son has inherited traits that brought prosperity to his father, having the same wise judgment, the same keen discrimination and the same resourceful spirit.

The marriage of A. D. Sweet united him with Miss Carrie Weathers, who was born and reared in Visalia, her father, J. B. Weathers, being a well known citizen of this place. The Visalia Board of Trade numbers Mr. Sweet among its members, and in other ways he endeavors to promote the business prosperity of his home city. His wife is identified with the Parlor of Native Daughters at Visalia, and he is a member of Visalia Parlor No. 19, Native Sons, both being leaders in the work of their respective organizations. In addition, he also takes a warm interest in Masonry and is a member of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M. Though not a partisan in political views, he is a staunch Republican and always votes the straight ticket in local and general elections.

JAMES CRAWFORD. Self-made in the best sense implied by the term, James Crawford holds to-day a high position in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. He came west in the pioneer days of the state with nothing to presage future success save an unlimited supply of courage and energy and a manhood which could admit no defeat. To his credit it may also be said that he has never allowed his efforts toward a personal success to crowd from his life that interest in public affairs, that helpfulness to his fellowmen, which makes for the moral growth and upbuilding of a community, retaining amid all hardships, deprivations and labors the integrity which to-day makes his word as good as his bond among all who know him. A brief resumé of his life is herewith given—interesting reading to the younger generation as well as to those who have worked with him toward a common end—the upbuilding of a western statehood.

A native of Guernsey county, Ohio, James Crawford was the eldest in the family of four daughters and two sons, of whom all but one daughter are now living. His father, Robert Crawford, was a native of Scotland, from which country he immigrated to the United States and located in Ohio, where he became a pioneer farmer. From the age of ten years he was dependent upon his own resources and early developed the traits of self-reliance necessary to a success. After his location in America he made a trip to the West Indies, eventually returning to Ohio, where he farmed and also engaged in the tannery business at Malta. His death occurred in Ohio. His wife, formerly Rebecca Willis, a native of Guernsey county, Ohio, survives him, making her home in Malta, Morgan county, that state. James Crawford was reared in Ohio on the paternal farm until he was eight years old, when he accompanied his parents to Malta. He received scant schooling while at home in Ohio, but was not satisfied, and after his trip to California, made during the war by the Panama route, he attended school in Marysville, Cal. After his arrival in the state Mr. Crawford went first to Penryn, from San Francisco, where he remained from May until January, when he began placer mining on Dutch Ravine, where, in six weeks and three days he cleared $385.20. One year after his arrival in the state he went to Quincy, Plumas county, and prospected and mined, and at the end of four more years he had $4,000. He then bought a mine at Newcastle, which venture proved a lamentable failure, as he not only lost all he had saved, but found himself $300 in debt. He then found employment at $2 per day for one month, and after that at $4. working steadily at this until he had paid off his debt. He then found work at various things in the vicinity of Rio Vista, Solano county, until, with a partner, he became interested in gathering the cotton from the cat-tails on the Sacramento river, using a scow in the process and averaging one hundred pounds a day. This was sold in San Francisco at eight cents per pound and used in the making of mattresses and upholstery. As they had something like five tons they made considerable money. December 5, 1873, Mr. Crawford came to Visalia, Tulare county, attracted to this section by the discovery of gold at Mineral King, where he helped in the building of the trail, from the beginning to the completion. He located claims and followed mining for two years, when he returned to Visalia and began stock-raising, running hogs on the lake. In 1878 he entered the employ of Wiley Coughran, with whom he remained two years. Mr. Coughran then removed to Santa Rosa and Mr. Crawford assumed the entire management of the ranch, acting as superintendent for twenty-four years. With the exception of ten months he has held this position continuously for that time, during the ten months being located in the east, New Mexico and Texas, and near Oroville, Butte county, Cal., acting as superintendent of the Pleasant Valley ranch. This last position he resigned at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Coughran to return to Tulare county in the same capacity. Of one thousand acres in the ranch one hundred and forty are devoted to alfalfa, while the greater part of his attention is given to the raising of hogs, horses and cattle. He also has charge of Mr. Coughran's other interests in the county, and has thoroughly demonstrated the ability and trustworthiness which have always distinguished his character.

Mrs. Crawford was in maidenhood Cora H. Adams, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of D. M. Adams, of Maine, now a resident of Visalia. He served for four years in the Civil war as a member of an Illinois regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford are the parents of five children, namely: Cora Rebecca, Lena L., James Milton, Wiley W. and Esther. Fraternaly Mr. Crawford was made an Odd Fellow in Four Creeks, and his wife is a member of the Rebekehahs. Politically he is a true-blue Republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Grant in 1868. In the educational interests of the community he has served as school trustee for several terms.

LAWRENCE BULGER. In the business rush and hurry of the present day the question of the transportation of men and merchandise has to be met, and the chief means established throughout the length and breadth of our continent is by means of railways. That travel on these may be safe and a high rate of speed maintained, railway men are exerting strenuous effort, employing skilled workmen only in the construction and management of these roads. Prominent among the official employes of the Southern Pacific Railway Company is Lawrence Bulger, roadmaster of the Merced District of its Western Division. Gifted with great mechanical ingenuity and ability, he industriously cultivated his natural talents, becoming skilled in the use of tools, and was first a house carpenter, later a bridge builder, and now occupies a position of trust among the practical and experienced railway men of this state. A son of Thomas Bulger, he was born in Malone, St. Lawrence county, N. Y. His grandfather, John Bulger, born in the north of Ireland, immigrated to the United States, and improved a farm in St. Lawrence county, N. Y.

Born on the parental homestead in New York, Thomas Bulger succeeded to the free and independent occupation of his ancestors, becoming a prosperous farmer in Malone, N. Y., where he resided, an esteemed and respected citizen, until his death, about 1889. He married Mary McCabe, who was born, lived and died in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., being the daughter of Lawrence McCabe, a farmer in Malone. She was of Scotch descent, and of Revolutionary stock, her grandfather McCabe having served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. She bore her husband seven children, Lawrence, the subject of this sketch, being the fourth child in order of birth. One other son, Hugh Bulger, of Oakland, is an employe of the Southern Pacific Railway Company as foreman of bridges and buildings.

After completing his early education in the district schools of his native town, Lawrence Bulger served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, beginning at the age of fifteen years. Migrating to California in 1878, he followed his trade in Martinez for a year, and then entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, which had at that time extended its road to a point about twenty-five miles south of Tucson, toward El Paso. As a carpenter he assisted in building the bridges and erecting the buildings along the line to Texas, continuing in this capacity for three years. Going to Oakland in 1882, Mr. Bulger was a bridge and building carpenter for the company for another year. Being then promoted to the position of foreman of the bridge and building department, he remained thus employed until 1895, with headquarters in Oakland. Proving himself able and trustworthy as foreman, the company appointed him assistant superintendent of the bridge and building department of the Western Division of the road, and four years later, in 1899, made him roadmaster of the Merced District of the Western Division of the road, with headquarters at Merced. At first Mr. Bulger had charge of two hundred and sixteen miles of the railway, but since the reconstruction of its divisions his district now embraces but one hundred and sixty-eight miles, that extending from Lathrop to Muscatel, from Merced to Oakdale on the Stockton branch, and that from Berendo to Raymond on the Yosemite branch. In his district are sixteen sections, with two extra gangs of workmen. Under the management of Mr. Bulger, during the summer of 1903, new steel rails were laid between Lathrop and Fresno, the fifty-pound steel being replaced by eighty-pound steel, and in addition sixty thousand new ties were put in. As roadmaster Mr. Bulger displays great ability, his efficiency being recognized by both his employers and his employes. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Woodmen of the World.

MARCUS LAFAYETTE MORRIS. Conspicuous among the most extensive and progressive agriculturists of Stanislaus county is Marcus Lafayette Morris, familiarly known by his friends and associates as Captain Morris. Owning and occupying a valuable ranch, which is located about one and one-half miles east of Crows Landing, he is carrying on general farming and dairying with most satisfactory results, finding his chosen occupation congenial as well as profitable. Coming from substantial Virginian stock, he was born January 6, 1840, in Lincoln county, Mo., a son of Charles R. Morris. His father, a native of Virginia, married Elizabeth Mason, who was also born and reared in the Old Dominion state, and they soon removed to Lincoln county, Mo., becoming pioneer farmers of that place, and there both spent the remainder of their lives.

One of a family of twelve children, Marcus Lafayette Morris obtained his early education in the district schools of Missouri, and while on the home farm he became thoroughly versed in the various branches of agriculture. Beginning life for himself as a dealer in stock, he lived in Lincoln county until 1863, when he removed to Pike county, Mo., where he continued trading in stock, and also in buying and selling leaf tobacco for a year. Crossing the plains with a mule-team train in 1864, he brought a large drove of cattle to California, arriving in the Humboldt valley after a journey of sixty-five days. From 1865 until 1868 he resided in Stockton. Coming from there to Stanislaus county he bought his present farm of seven hundred acres, all of which is subject to irrigation from the canal, and has since been very successfully employed in agricultural pursuits. Captain Morris makes a specialty of raising alfalfa, and is one of the largest dairymen in this section of the San Joaquin valley. He keeps one hundred and seventy-five cows of a superior grade, and in his well-equipped factory, which has a capacity of two hundred pounds per day, he manufactures American cheese, which he sells to the Pacific coast markets, receiving the highest price quoted. From 1872 until 1892 he was engaged in the wholesale and retail butchering business in Oakland, killing and selling sheep and cattle, making a specialty of sheep.

In Stockton, Cal., Captain Morris married Virginia Crow, a native of Missouri, and into their household three children have been born, namely: Walter and Roy, living at home; and Archer, of San Francisco. Politically the Captain is a steadfast Democrat and a staunch supporter of its principles.

JOHN C. MOORE. It is asserted by many competent to know that, in matters pertaining to values of property in Fresno, no man is better posted than Mr. Moore, senior member of the real estate firm of Moore & Cate, with office at No. 1050 J street. The firm of which he is a member has carried through to a successful consummation some of the most important deals in the city and county of Fresno and has established a record as noteworthy as it is gratifying. In addition to their real estate business they represent twelve old-line insurance companies for fire protection, also the Equitable Life Insurance Company and the National Surety Bond Company. Another feature of the business is the making of loans.

Referring to the ancestral history of Mr.

Moore, it may be stated that he is a descendant of Virginian progenitors, who were represented in the early wars of our country. His grandfather, John Moore, a native of old Virginia, and a soldier in the war of 1812, removed to Tennessee and settled upon a plantation. The father, Calvin Moore, was born and reared in Tennessee and carried on a plantation there up to the time of the Civil war. Being a Union man, he assisted the Union forces by engaging in scouting. After the war came to an end he removed to Sailor Springs, Clay county, Ill., and there conducted farm pursuits until his death. In religion he was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics voted with the Republicans. His wife, Catherine Jenkins, was born in Tennessee and died in Illinois; her father, William Jenkins, was a Virginian by birth and went from that state to Tennessee.

In the Moore family there were originally twelve children and of these three sons and four daughters are now living, John C. being one of the youngest. He was born in Hawkins county, Tenn., March 31, 1861. When a boy he attended public school in Illinois and aided in the cultivation of the home farm. March 19, 1883, he arrived in Los Angeles, and for five months was employed in a store at Orange, receiving $16 per month. On account of poor health he left there and went into the mountain regions around Bear valley, where he worked in lumber mills. After his return to Los Angeles he suffered a severe attack of typhoid fever. On regaining his strength he came to the San Joaquin valley. His long illness and inability to work had reduced his savings until he had only $30 when he arrived in Fresno in April, 1884. For three years he worked on farms, after which he and J. F. Hall bought eighty acres at Selma and planted the same in an orchard and vineyard. Eight months later he sold his half of the property at a profit of $1,000. He then turned his attention to trading in lands near Selma and at the expiration of three years had accumulated about $10,000. With this capital he embarked in the agricultural implement business at Selma, where he built up a large trade and continued until October of 1895. Meantime he had assisted in incorporating the city of Selma and served as its first city clerk. He was also connected with the Fowler Switch Company and the Emigrant Ditch Company as secretary and manager. During the panic of 1893-94 he suffered the fate of most of the heavy property holders and lost the accumulations of years of labor, but he paid one hundred cents on every dollar of his indebtedness and thus retained the excellent business credit he had built up. In October of 1895 he came to Fresno, where he has since engaged in the real estate, insurance and money brokerage business, having been successively the partner of T. C. White, G. J. Nees and J. Wilbur Cate.

The marriage of Mr. Moore occurred in Selma and united him with Miss Mattie Goodman, a teacher in the schools there and a native of Vermont. They have two living children, Calvin and Ruth, and lost one son, Alfred, in boyhood. Mrs. Moore is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Fraternally Mr. Moore is connected with the Woodmen of the World. For years he has been an active worker in the Republican party and a member of Republican clubs, besides which he has served as secretary of the county central committee. In April of 1899 the Republicans elected him city trustee from the first ward and he continued in the office until the new charter went into effect in 1901, when he declined to become a candidate for re-election. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and a charter member of the Fresno Real Estate Exchange, in which he is now a director.

BURR BROTHERS. Tulare county owes much to the young men who have taken up their residence within its boundaries and are making this one of the greatest counties in the state. Progressive and industrious, the young men are the ones to build up new industries. In this work special mention must be made of the Burr Brothers, who have done much for Tulare county. Always alert to adopt new ideas, they have met with success in their business ventures and are now looked upon as two of the most substantial young business men in the county.

John Burr, Jr., and Charles Felton Burr are sons of John Burr, Sr., a native of Aberdeen, Scotland. He came to California in 1873, and being a landscape gardener by trade, he soon secured a position with ex-Senator Charles Felton, with whom he continued for ten years. In 1883 he located at Goshen and started a forty-acre vineyard. This he conducted for three years, when he sold out and removed to the San Fernando valley, where he set out orange, lemon and olive trees, now owning ninety acres, twenty-one miles north of Los Angeles. His ranch is known as the "Morning Side Ranch" and is one of the finest places in Los Angeles county. From the first he took an active interest in political matters and has served one term as sheriff of Los Angeles county. Filling this office gave him a wide acquaintance, and wherever known he has scores of warm personal friends, who respect him for the position he has gained in this state. Mr. Burr married Miss Annie Philpott, who was born in England. By this union three children have been born: John and Charles, who will be mentioned later, and William, who is living at home, assisting his father in the work of the ranch.

John Burr, Jr., was born in San Mateo county, this state, on March 10, 1874. His early life was spent in the county of his nativity and on the removal of his parents to Los Angeles county he accompanied them. His common school education was supplemented by a course in a Los Angeles business college, from which he was graduated in 1893. From a boy he took an active interest in horticulture and devoted all his spare time to the work on his father's ranch. In 1898, in company with his brother Charles, he came to Lindsay, and together they purchased one hundred and thirty acres four miles north of the town. Improvements were at once begun and soon ninety acres were set out with navel oranges, while the balance was placed under excellent cultivation and in the spring of 1905 the whole will be set out in oranges. The entire ranch is on the hillside and above the frost. This makes it possible to produce an excellent quality of fruit and much earlier than the ranches in the lowlands. While Mr. Burr has been very busy looking after his own interests he is interested in the Exeter Water and Irrigation Company, of which he is one of the directors. He was one of the organizers of the Lindsay Orange Growers' Association and is now one of the directors. He is also connected with the Rochdale Association.

While still living in Los Angeles county Mr. Burr was united in marriage with Miss Hallie Cresap, a native of Iowa. She died in January, 1903, leaving one child, Annie, who is also deceased, dying at the age of seven months. Mr. Burr's second marriage took place in Lindsay and united him with Miss Grace Foster, who is a native daughter of California, having been born in Salinas. In politics Mr. Burr is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He has little time for the social side of life, yet he and his most estimable wife are very popular, and the best homes in this section of the county are always open for their reception.

Charles F. Burr is also a native of California, having been born at Menlo Park, San Mateo county, May 6, 1876. His education was received in the schools of Los Angeles county, later taking a course in the Los Angeles Business college. Coming to Lindsay with his brother in 1898, he has since been actively associated with him in business. The two brothers have worked together in every sense of the word and as a result "Sunny Slope" is one of the finest ranches in the county.

In Los Angeles county Mr. Burr married Miss Elsie L. Hoyt and now has two children: Charles Felton, Jr., and an infant unnamed. Mr. and Mrs. Burr have made scores of friends since taking up their residence in Tulare county, all of whom are deeply interested in the welfare of their new acquaintances. Like his brother, Mr. Burr is a director in the Rochdale Company, and is interested in the Lindsay Improvement Company, the Lindsay Orange Growers' Association and the Exeter Water and Irrigation Company. A staunch Republican, he takes an active interest in the welfare of the party, and while he has never had the time nor inclination to seek office he endorses those he thinks should be elected and will work for their successful candidacy.

ADDISON L. WISEMAN. One of the more important factors in the advancement of the industrial and horticultural interests of Tulare county is Addison L. Wiseman, who as an orchardist and vineyardist is carrying on a most prosperous and successful business, his ranch being about two miles south of Reedley. He is a man of great energy and activity, a natural mechanic, and in addition to his horticultural labors has done notable work as a carpenter and contractor. He is a man of fine physique, strong and athletic, with an unlimited amount of grit and pluck. On one occasion, while working in the North woods, his left hand was nearly severed by the accidental blow of an ax in the hands of a fellow-workman. Mr. Wiseman was then eighty-six and one-half miles from the nearest railway station. His comrade stopped the flow of blood by tying a rawhide around the wrist, and then the sufferer started on foot through the snow for medical aid, walking thirty-two miles the first day, thirty-five miles the second, completing the remaining distance by the following noon, and then taking the train for the city and hospital. This little incident shows the mettle of the man, who is as honest and brave as he is fearless. A son of Samuel Wiseman, he was born December 21, 1863, near Gallipolis, Ohio, of pioneer ancestry, his grandfather, Isaac Wiseman, having settled in Ohio in 1837.

Born in Virginia in 1833, Samuel Wiseman was brought up and educated in Ohio, near Gallipolis, being reared to agricultural pursuits. During the Civil war, in 1864, he served for four months in an Ohio regiment. Migrating to Michigan in 1869, he located near Howard City, Montcalm county, and was there employed in farming until 1891, when he came to Tulare county, and has since resided with his only child, Addison L. He married Elizabeth Wright, who was born in Ohio, where her father, Moses Wright, settled on leaving Virginia, his native state. She died in Ohio, very soon after the birth of her son.

But six years of age when he accompanied his father to Michigan, Addison L. Wiseman obtained his education in the district schools of Montcalm county. When a small boy he began working on the river as a log driver, and at the age of fifteen was such an expert as a log driver that he received $3 a day at the work, riding the head log and acting as jam cracker, employment that he enjoyed thoroughly. Going to Wisconsin, he was similarly employed on the headwaters of the Tomahawk, in one of the first mills erected in that locality. Leaving there in July, 1884, Mr. Wiseman went to Seattle, Wash., in search of a favorable business opportunity, but that was a season of depression, and he came down into Butte county, Cal., and for three years was engaged in farming near Gridley. Locating in Tulare county in 1887, he worked for three years as warehouseman, first in Traver, then at Reedley, and later in Dinuba he was a piler, after the first season receiving $3.50 a day.

In 1890 Mr. Wiseman bought his present ranch of twenty acres, lying two miles south of Reedley, and at once began its improvement, having now a highly productive orchard of twelve acres, the remainder being vineyard and alfalfa land. Making good use of his native mechanical talent and ability, he has since erected a good residence and substantial buildings on his place, and built houses for many of his neighbors, all of which are a credit to his skill and industry, as well as an ornament to the community. He has likewise filled contracts for setting out orchards and vineyards, in this line meeting with great success. Thrifty and capable, he has accumulated considerable wealth, owning other valuable property aside from his home estate.

In Fresno, Cal., Mr. Wiseman married Nellie McClanahan, who was born in Butte county, and they have one child, Alta Echo. Mrs. Wiseman died in 1894, her death being a loss to the community as well as to her family and to the Methodist Church, of which she was a member. In politics Mr. Wiseman is Independent. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, belonging to lodge and circle; is a member of the Fraternal Aid, and president of the Court of Honor; and is a member and past chief ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters.

LOUIS H. PFITZER. A thorough master of the machinist's trade, which he is following at the present time in Los Banos, Louis H. Pfitzer is also known as one of the successful dairymen and land owners of Merced county, his ranch of one hundred acres four miles southwest of town, rented out since the fall of 1904, being one of the valuable and paying properties of a section which has proved a veritable dairyman's paradise. Mr. Pfitzer's name correctly indicates his nationality, and his father, Anthony, was born near Stuttgart, Germany, coming to America as a young man to avoid the limitations by which he was surrounded at home, and making a name for himself in Merced county and other parts of the state of California. The elder Pfitzer located a farm three miles from Volta, where the majority of his children were born, among them Louis H., whose natal day was September 7, 1878.

The machinist of Las Baños was educated in the public schools, in the Santa Cruz high-school, which he entered at the age of fourteen, and at the Santa Cruz Business College, from which he was graduated in 1897. Upon determining to become a máster machinist he selected the best possible place on the coast to learn his trade, the Union Iron Works, where he served an apprenticeship of four years. Objecting to the confinement incident to this kind of work, he followed farming for a couple of years, and in February, 1903, located on his present farm, which was then wild and bare land, giving little promise of its present prosperity. The fall after making his purchase the outside canal was extended, and he prepared the land for alfalfa, in 1904 the water being sufficient to grow five crops. This he utilized for dairying, having one hundred milch cows, but although successful in the management of his property, he preferred his trade, and so rented his land to responsible parties.

At Newman, Mr. Pfitzer married Edith Eachus, daughter of Major W. P. Eachus, a farmer near Newman, and of this union Lois Bertrand has been born. Mr. Pfitzer is a staunch advocate of Republicanism, but has never seen his way clear to actively participate in local political undertakings. He is an obliging, high-minded, and agreeable gentleman, doing well whatever task confronts him, and believing always that the best is none too good to strive for.

HERMANN A. KRICKE. A man of ability and sterling integrity, and an important factor in developing and advancing the dairying and farming interests of Stanislaus county, Hermann A. Kricke is especially deserving of particular mention in a work of this character. He is a native of this county, and was born on the homestead where he now resides, one-half mile east of Crows Landing, on March 1, 1874, a son of the late Charles Kricke.

Born in Germany, Charles Kricke was reared and educated in his native country, and there married Anna Schickor. Immigrating with his wife to the United States in 1864, he was a resident of Sheboygan county, Wis., for five years. Coming to Crows Landing, Cal., in 1869, he rented the two hundred and forty acres of land now included in the home ranch, and in addition to carrying on general farming he assisted in building the canal, continuing thus employed until his death, while yet in the prime of life, in 1877. His widow, an energetic and accomplished business woman, subsequently bought the farm on which they had been living, and still resides on it, it being now managed by her son, Hermann A., the subject of this sketch.

The youngest child of the parental household, which consisted of two sons and four daughters, Hermann A. Kricke has spent his entire life on the home ranch, of which he now has the sole charge. In his chosen vocation he has been exceedingly prosperous, his practical and systematic methods, excellent judgment and wise management being conducive to success. He has established a large and remunerative dairy business, and has one hundred and thirty acres of land in alfalfa, the remainder of the farm being devoted to the raising of grain.

In Stockton, Cal., Mr. Kricke married Mabel McClintock, who was born in DeKalb county, Mo., and they are the parents of two children, namely: Velma and Virginia. In politics Mr. Kricke is a staunch Democrat, and in religion he is true to the faith in which he was reared, belonging to the Lutheran Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

CLARENCE J. BERRY, of Selma, was born June 23, 1867, in Mendocino county. Coming to Fresno county with his parents in 1874, he received such educational advantages as were afforded by the district schools. At the age of twelve years he began working with his father on the home farm, in the River Bend district, and also assisted him in operating a threshing machine throughout this section of the county, remaining at home until after attaining his majority. During the great excitement that followed the first discovery of gold in Alaska, Mr. Berry was among the first to go to that region, arriving at Dawson, on the Yukon river, in 1894. Locating fifty miles further down the river, at Forty Mile Creek, he bought several claims, but they proved to be worthless. In the fall of 1895 he returned to California and the following spring March 15, 1896, was married. Subsequently he made another trip to Alaska. After prospecting a few months near Forty Mile Creek he went into the Klondike district, locating on Eldorado Creek, and later bought eight adjoining claims on the side hills, besides owning claim No. 5 on the Bonanza creek, and a half interest in claim No. 42 in the Hunker district. He likewise owned for awhile a third interest in a claim on Damon creek, but this he sold at an advantage. From 1897 until 1902 he made frequent trips between California and Alaska, and has still heavy interests in various placer mines of the Klondike region.

Investing his money freely in California lands, Mr. Berry has a large cattle and stock ranch lying north of Grants; owns a farm of six thousand acres south of Selma, in Fresno county, where he raises alfalfa and salt grass, and keeps two thousand head of cattle; in Stockton he owns twelve hundred acres of garden land, known as the Wakefield ranch, which he leases; and has one thousand acres of oil land in Kern county. Mr Berry has other interests of great importance, being a director of the Eldorado Oil Company, incorporated with a capital of $100,000; and also a director of Our Own Oil Company, which has twelve wells in operation, with a capacity of two thousand barrels daily. He likewise owns valuable city property in Selma, owning seven store buildings on Front street. In 1900 and 1901 the Berry Improvement Company, of which he is president, was incorporated, with a paid up capital of $100,000, the Berry family being the stockholders of the company. Mr. Berry was also one of the organizers and is the president of the Farmers' National Bank, which has a paid up capital of $50,000.

In Selma Mr. Berry married Ethel D. Bush, a native of California. Politically he is an adherent of the Democratic party, and fraternally he is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

WILLIAM RUDY. Five miles southeast of Fresno is located the farm which belongs to William Rudy, a well known and successful agriculturist of this county. Of the eighty acres in his ranch, fifty are devoted to the culture of grapes, both raisin and wine grapes, while the remainder is given over to an orchard and general farming. A native of Ohio, Mr. Rudy was born in Muskingum county, December 25, 1840. He was the son of Rudolph Rudy, who was born in Germany and reared in Pennsylvania, afterward removing to Muskingum county, Ohio, where his death occurred. He was a farmer by occupation throughout his entire life. His wife was formerly Mary Dean, also a native of Pennsylvania.

Until attaining the age of nineteen years William Rudy remained upon the paternal farm, after which he went to Illinois and located in Sangamon county, where he made his home for the period of twelve years. He then removed to Nemaha county, Kans., where he engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1880. Locating at that date in Missouri, he made that state his home until 1884, when he came to California. Upon his first trip to the state he spent but a short time, when he returned to his old home in Illinois, three years later again coming to the west. Settling in Fresno county, he has since made this locality his home, giving his attention to his ranch of eighty acres. In Illinois he was united in marriage with Susan M. Fairbanks, a native of Ohio, and of this union were born the following children: William F., J. J., Henry V., and Alice, now Mrs. Rhinehart. In his political preference Mr. Rudy is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, his first vote having been cast for Abraham Lincoln.

HANS J. SCHMIDT. A man of unlimited energy, industry and activity, Hans J. Schmidt, living about eight miles southwest of Newman, holds high rank among the skillful and prosperous farmers of Stanislaus county. Hard-working and persevering, possessing shrewd common sense, and thinking for himself, he has met with success as a tiller of the soil and has gained the respect and confidence of the community. He was born across the Atlantic ocean, his birth having occurred June 21, 1853, in Denmark, where his parents, George M. and Mary (Elholm) Schmidt, were life long residents, the father having been employed as a stone mason.

The second child in a family consisting of two boys and two girls, Hans J. Schmidt was reared and educated in his native land, attending the public schools, and being trained to farming pursuits. At the age of seventeen years he bade good-by to his parents, friends and neighbors, and, filled with the high ambitions of youth, immigrated to America, arriving in New York City in 1870. Proceeding directly to Livingston county, Ill., he worked as a farm hand in Chatsworth for two years, Migrating still farther westward in 1872, he came to California, locating first in San Francisco, and a week later going to Livermore valley, where he operated a threshing machine for a time. Subsequently coming to the San Joaquin valley, Mr. Schmidt was so impressed with its agricultural advantages and possibilities that he made up his mind to settle here permanently. He has since rented land in this vicinity, having had under his management tracts containing from three hundred to two thousand acres of land, and as a general farmer has met with well-deserved success. He has now eleven hundred acres of land under his care, located on the Garsos creek, eight miles southwest of Newman, and is extensively engaged in raising wheat and barley. He has also a nice chicken ranch, furnished with an incubator, and as a poultry raiser has acquired fame, raising about eight hundred chickens each season.

In Modesto, Cal., Mr. Schmidt married Catharina Mary Peterson, a native of Schleswig, Germany, and they are the parents of four children, namely: George W., living near home; John, also residing in this vicinity; Irene, wife of Hans Jensen, of San Francisco; and Chester W. Politically Mr. Schmidt is a loyal adherent of the Republican party, and for several years served as school trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Newman Lodge, F. & A. M.; to Newman Chapter, E. O. S.; to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and to Dania Lodge, Danish Society. True to the religious faith in which he was reared, he belongs to the Lutheran Church.

JAMES M. DAGGS. With the progress of Kings county, Cal., Mr. Daggs has been intimately associated for many years, having contributed materially to the development of its resources and the growth of its industries ever since he came here in 1884. From that year until 1903 he carried on a general ranching and stock business, but in the latter year he went east for the purpose of purchasing high grade stock and returned with twelve Shorthorn cattle, bulls, Poland-China hogs, one Millard thoroughbred trotting stallion and a fine jack, and has since engaged in raising only thoroughbred stock. To Mr. Daggs is due credit for the fine fair grounds which since 1901 have added to the attractiveness of Hanford. He himself raised the money and built the track of the Central California Fair Grounds, of which he has been a director and president ever since its organization, and has spent time and money unstintingly to promote its success.

Mr. Daggs was born in Scotland county, Mo., June 26, 1848, a son of George W., a native of Virginia, and a grandson of Ruel Daggs, a native of Maryland, who went from there to Virginia and still later, in 1833, to Missouri. In Clark county, where the balance of his life was spent, he followed farming and stock-raising until his death, when eighty-four years of age. It was in the latter state that his son, George W., grew to mature years. He followed the calling to which he had been reared, and with the assistance of five slaves carried on his farm, with good results, in addition to which he conducted a merchandise business. In the spring of 1864 he sold out his interests in Missouri and came to California overland, bringing with him a large band of horses. With this as a nucleus he started in the stock business on the Lower Kings river, but two or three years later transferred his interests to the Mussel slough district, the land upon which he then located being the same upon which his son now lives. At the time he located here the land was entirely unimproved, but in course of time it took on the appearance of a well-ordered ranch, and was his home until his death, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, who was a native of West Virginia, died on the Kings county farm at the age of sixty years, leaving five children, as follows: James M.; Sarah, who married Anderson Kelly and resides in Hanford; Letha, Mrs. Stephens, who is now a widow; Cora, and Mattie, Mrs. Miller, who is also a widow and now residing in San Francisco.

James M. Daggs spent the first sixteen years of his life in Scotland county, Mo., and attended school at Memphis, that state. When the family removed to California, in 1864, he was sixteen years old and remained at home until 1872, when he returned east and was united in marriage with Miss Annie Kerns, who was born in Hancock county, Ill., and who died in 1880, leaving three children. Peter B. is engaged with his father in the stock business; Clinton is at home, and Birdie is the wife of Robert Logan and resides in San Francisco.

In addition to raising high-grade cattle, Mr. Daggs conducts a butcher shop and owns two hundred and thirty acres, devoted to the raising of alfalfa and grain. Politically he is a Democrat in national affairs, and in local elections votes for the man best fitted for the position, regardless of party affiliation.

CLAUS J. MARTENS. The progress of any community is dependent upon the efforts of its citizens. In estimating the advancement made by Tulare county within the past few decades, due credit should be given the brothers, Claus J. and John Martens, for their persevering and successful labors in the development of the stock industry, one of the most important occupations followed by the people of this part of California. The brothers were pioneers of Tulare county and sons of John Jacob Martens, their family history appearing in the sketch of John Martens, presented elsewhere in this volume. Claus J. was born at Heide, Holstein, Germany, February 6, 1846, and was second among six children now living. At the age of fifteen years he left school and was confirmed in the Lutheran Church, after which he aided on the home farm until twenty years of age, also served for four years as an apprentice to the trade of a cabinet-maker.

Coming to America in 1866 Claus J. Martens spent nine months in Chicago, where he followed the carpenter's trade and kindred occupations. In May, 1867, he came to California and secured work on a farm near San Francisco, but later in the same year gave his attention to building a residence and barns on a large ranch near Tracy. On his return to San Francisco he resumed work at his trade in that city. In the fall of 1871 he went to the southern part of the state and entered land near San Diego, but found he could accomplish little owing to lack of moisture in the soil. Abandoning the place in the spring of 1872, he came to Tulare county and took up land nine miles southwest of Tulare, but gave his attention principally to carpentering. He aided in building the Tulare depot, the first store and the first residence in town, and continued in the same occupation for three years, after which he embarked in the sheep business on his ranch. In 1883 he disposed of his sheep and also sold one thousand acres of land near Pixley, after which he spent a year in San Francisco. Returning to Germany in 1888 he remained at his old home in Heide for three years. Since his return to the United States in 1891 he has made Tulare his home. For some years he again conducted an extensive sheep business on his range near Tipton, Tulare county, and in addition he now owns a stock farm of three hundred and twenty acres near Woodville, which he rents. Besides the three years' sojourn in Holstein he has made a second trip to the old home and has also traveled much through our country, thus gaining a wide and cosmopolitan experience that makes him an interesting companion. Since coming to America he has been a supporter of Republican principles and here, as in the old home, has adhered to the Lutheran religion. While in San Francisco he married Miss Margareta Lorenz, who was born in Holstein, Germany, and died in California. Four daughters survive her, namely: Kate, who is a student in the University of California; Clara, Freda and Elsie, who are attending school in San Francisco.

WILLIAM G. H. BROWN. Though comparatively a new comer to Stanislaus county, William G. H. Brown has lived long enough in his present neighborhood to impress his worth upon it and to take his place among its representative German-American agriculturists. Born in the agricultural province of Pomerania, Northern Prussia, Germany, November 30, 1849, he is the oldest of three sons and two daughters, all of whom were reared on a farm too small to permit of many advantages penetrating its well tilled borders. His parents, C. H. and Augusta (Beling) Brown, were natives also of Pomerania, where they spent their entire lives.

In his youth William G. H. Brown attended the common schools. He had ample assets in grit and determination and physical strength, and as soon as success came his way he proceeded with German thrift to establish a home of his own, pursuing the while the occupation of farming and stock-raising. His wife was formerly Amelia De Genre, a native also of Pomerania. Of their children two have left the family roof, these being the second and third oldest daughters, Mrs. Bertha Brown and Mrs. Minnie Hanson. Those remaining are: Annie, August, Ferdinand, William, Lena, Ewalt, Emma and Otto. In 1892 Mr. Brown disposed of his land and boarded a northern liner for the United States, coming at once to California, where he purchased sixty acres of alfalfa land three and a half miles west of Newman. To the improvements on his land at the time he has added greatly and now has an orchard of three acres, the balance of his land being devoted to general farming and stock-raising. The family are members of the German Lutheran Church.

CHRISTOPHER C. ARKLE. The Arkle family is of English origin, Charles C. Arkle immigrating from Newcastle-upon-Tyne to America, where he located in Cadiz, Ohio, and engaged as a shoe merchant. Later he removed to Preston, Minn., where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Mary Hilliard, was a native of the Isle of Wight, her death occurring in Ohio. They were the parents of four children, all of whom are living, next to the youngest being Christopher C. Arkle, a highly esteemed and successful business man of Portersville, Tulare county.

Christopher C. Arkle was born in Cadiz, Ohio, May 19, 1847, and was reared in the vicinity of that place, receiving his education in the district schools. When twelve years old he learned the shoemaker's trade and continued at this work until he was seventeen. In May, 1864, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Seventieth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in at Bellaire, Ohio, serving in the Army of the Shenandoah, and taking part in the Battle of Winchester, and others of that year, being mustered out of service September 15, 1864, in Columbus. In 1865 he went to Missouri, locating in Warrensburg, in the fall of the same year going to Preston, Minn., where he followed his trade. After a period of seven years he came as far west as Wadsworth, Nev., and engaged in the manufacture of shoes, finally going to Benton, Mono county, Cal., where he spent one year. Returning to Nevada he made that state his home until 1876, when he located in Visalia, Tulare county, and followed the manufacture of shoes for the ensuing five years, when he located in Fresno. For seven years he met with success in that city, when he went to Seattle, Wash., and spent one year, engaged as a shoe merchant, when he returned to Visalia and followed the same occupation until 1896. For a time he conducted a shoe store at Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, about eighteen months later—in August, 1808—coming to Portersville and opening the shoe business, which he has since conducted with much profit. His establishment, known as the Citrus Shoe Store, is the largest in the place and his wide patronage has brought him good financial returns. He has also a ten-acre orchard of bearing navel oranges, adjoining Plano, set out in 1809, and to the care and cultivation of which he gives considerable time and attention.

In Visalia Mr. Arkle was united in marriage with Caroline Majors, a native of Visalia, and the daughter of Columbus P. Majors, a pioneer farmer of that city. They have one daughter, Ethel. Mr. Arkle gives his support to the Christian Church, of which his wife is a member. In his political convictions he is a Socialist. A practical and broad-minded citizen, he is always interested in all that adds to the material welfare of the city and takes an active part in public affairs, being a member of the Board of Trade here as well as giving his support to various other public works.

A. L. SAYRE. The genealogy of the Sayre family is traced to England, where many generations of honored ancestors lived and labored. The first of the name to cross the ocean to the new world was Thomas Sayre, a native of Paddington, Bedfordshire. From the little that family history and tradition record of this original immigrant he was undoubtedly a man fond of adventure, undaunted by the perils of pioneer existence, and the possessor of business ability which found its culmination in the accumulating of considerable means. As early as 1636 his name appears on the town records of Lynn, Mass. In 1640 he removed to South Hampton, Long Island, and there erected a substantial residence which has withstood the storms of more than two and one-half centuries and still stands on the spot where originally built. Later generations removed to New Jersey and still others identified themselves with the Quaker colony of Pennsylvania.

A. L. Sayre, Sr., was born on the homestead near Morristown, N. J., a son of Ebenezer Sayre, a thrifty farmer. Supplementing exceptional native ability by such educational advantages as the times and locality afforded, he grew to manhood fitted for responsibilities in the business world. Solely through his unaided exertions he rose to a position of prominence among the business men of New York City of 1844, where he established himself as a fruit merchant and where in time he became a leading importer and jobber of foreign fruits. After a successful career covering thirty years, failing health, resulting from the nervous strain incident to great responsibilities, caused him to retire from the fruit business. About the same time a visit to California in the interest of his health brought to his keen and far-seeing mind a realization of the vast opportunities afforded by the fertile soil and fair climate of the far west. Embracing this exceptional opportunity for investment, he purchased eight hundred and four acres one mile southeast of Madera, forming what is now known as the Sierra Rancho. Afterward he divided his time between New York City and California until his death, which occurred on his ranch in 1887. His wife, Mrs. Julia W. (Harris) Sayre, now a resident of Fresno, was born in Sing Sing, N. Y., a daughter of William H. Harris. Her grandfather, Harris, of New York, fought under Washington during the Revolutionary war, and endured all the vicissitudes of the memorable winter at Valley Forge.

The younger of the two children of A. L. and Julia W. Sayre, the subject of this narrative, was born at the family residence in Thirty-fifth street, New York City. His education was obtained principally in the military academy at Stanford, Conn., after which he was engaged as a buyer for a New York house for eight years. Upon the death of his father he came to California to take charge of the Sierra Rancho, which he has since successfully superintended. The eight hundred and four acres which at the time of purchase were in the primeval condition of nature, have been brought under cultivation and transformed into one of the most complete ranches in the entire state. In 1881 twenty-five acres were set out in raisin grapes, and three years later two hundred acres were planted to the same product, this being the first attempt made to raise raisins in the community. The venture proved successful and this portion of the ranch is still under raisins. In addition there is an orchard of deciduous fruits. The balance of the farm is in cereals and alfalfa. The dairy business is one of the important industries conducted on the ranch. In the fine herd of Friesian-Holstein cattle there are about three hundred milk cows. To add to the convenience of the work Mr. Sayre has erected a creamery, operated by steam power and fitted with modern machinery. The product is disposed of principally in Fresno and other parts of the San Joaquin valley. The value of the ranch has been increased by irrigation, the entire tract being under ditch, besides which he has put in a pumping plant that has no superior in the state. Realizing the importance of a packing house in Madera, in 1894 he erected a building fitted with modern appliances, and of this he has since been the manager.

When an organization was effected of raisin growers under the title of the California Raisin Growers' Association, in April, 1898, Mr. Sayre gave his co-operation to the plan, believing it would prove helpful to all persons engaged in that industry. His prominence in the organization and the fact that he was a pioneer and successful raisin grower led to his selection as manager of the association during the first year of its existence and he was further a member of the first board of directors. During the second and third years he acted as manager of the inspection and stock department. In 1901 he was not a director, but the next year was again elected to the board, also in 1903. During 1902 he was elected secretary of the association, and this responsible position he now fills. Those most intimately connected with the association state that its success is largely due to Mr. Sayre's careful, intelligent and wise oversight. Much time and thought have been given by him to the organization, and all has been done gratuitously, with the sole object of benefiting those who are aiding in the development of this important industry.

While necessarily spending much time in Madera, Mr. Sayre since 1898 has made Fresno his home, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Sequoia Club of this city. His political views are in harmony with Republican principles, while in religion he is a contributor to and attendant of the Presbyterian Church, with which his wife is identified. In Madera he married Miss Etta M. Hensley, daughter of John M. Hensley. Born in Tulare county, Mrs. Sayre has spent her entire life in California and is a graduate of the State Normal School at San Jose, and a lady of the highest culture and artistic tastes. Mr. and Mrs. Sayre have two sons, Logan and Donald.

EMANUEL ROGERS. The life work of Emanuel Rogers is being carried on a long way from the Azore Islands, where he was born September 18, 1859. Equipped with the best educational training possible, he came to California with an uncle, reaching Alameda county September 1, 1874. Physically he was strong and rugged, and the farm work, which seemed the only available means of livelihood at the time, seemed less arduous to him than it would to a less hardy youth. Through working by the day and month for land owners in different parts of the county he accumulated what appeared a small fortune, and in August, 1885, leased his present farm of thirteen hundred acres. Near by, five miles south of Grayson, he has purchased eighty acres of land, upon which he makes his home, and which he devotes to general farming. He has the latest in agricultural implements, including a combined harvester, and his house, barns and general improvements show the tendency of a progressive and enlightened agriculturist.

Mr. Rogers is surrounded by a family which shares his desire to succeed, and which supports him in every worthy effort. In Alameda county he married Mary Marshall, a native of the county, and his two sons and one daughter, Frank, Daniel and Emily, give promise of realizing his expectations for them. It is the intention of their parents to give them every advantage within their power. Mr. Rogers is social in his tendencies, and is a popular and long standing member of the Knights of the Maccabees. Politically he is a Democrat in national politics, and locally votes for what he considers the best man.

WILLIAM C. KENNEDY. A native son of the state, William C. Kennedy was born at the corner of Twenty-third and Howard streets, San Francisco, June 16, 1870. His father, Edward Kennedy, was born in Troy, N. Y., where he engaged in manhood as a merchant tailor. Deciding to seek the more abundant opportunities of the remote west, he crossed the plains in 1849, traveling by ox-teams on the long and tedious journey. Upon his safe arrival in San Francisco he engaged as a merchant tailor in that city for a good many years, early in the '80s coming to Fresno, and in 1884 purchased a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, where he improved a vineyard. He became a prominent citizen of Fresno, becoming a director of the First National Bank, of Fresno, and later its vice-president. In 1892 he suffered a severe sunstroke, after which he returned to San Francisco, where he is now residing. He still has extensive interests in both Fresno and San Francisco. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party and gives his best efforts to advance the interests of that party. His wife, formerly Judith Colby, of New Hampshire, is also living, at the age of sixty-eight years. She came of an old and honored family of the Granite state, prominent in colonial history. Two of her brothers lost their lives in the Civil war. They are the parents of two children, Nellie, of San Francisco, and William C., of this review.

William C. Kennedy was reared in San Francisco, to the age of sixteen years, where he attended the public schools, and later became a student in Heald's Business College. Coming to Fresno in 1886 he worked with his father in the vineyard until 1892, in which year he took charge of the work and successfully conducted its interests until 1902, when he leased the property. In the meantime he improved a ranch of six hundred and forty acres belonging to his father and located near Rolinda, twelve miles west of Fresno. Water for irrigation was brought from the Houghton ditch and Fresno canal. The land is planted to alfalfa, the interests of the ranch being devoted to a fine dairy of Holstein-Friesian cattle, owned by Mr. Kennedy in conjunction with A. D. Owens. They use every modern method in conducting their work, having a separator operated by steam, and every possible convenience. Mr. Kennedy is also engaged in the raising of cattle, and looks after his father's interests in Fresno. In 1901 he built a fine residence at No. 64 Fortcamp avenue, where he now makes his home, presided over by his wife, formerly Elizabeth Davison, whom he married in Fresno. She is a native of Placerville and the daughter of M. C. Davison, of this city, a pioneer of the state, as well as a veteran of the Civil war, serving in a California regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy have one daughter, Vera. Politically Mr. Kennedy is a Republican, and fraternally is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

GEORGE THOMING. The fertile grain raising region around Crow's Landing has among its developers many native sons of the state, men who appreciate its substantial business opportunities, and who furnish an example of unrivaled industry in pursuing their chosen vocation. Of these, none are held in higher esteem than George Thoming, since 1903 the occupant of a ranch of sixteen hundred acres four and a half miles west of the Landing. In his veins Mr. Thoming has the blood of a hardy German ancestry, one trained to industry, and moderate and conservative in its tendencies. His father and mother, Theirs and Lena (Massoff) Thoming, came to the United States from Germany in 1860, soon after their marriage, bringing with them little of this world's goods, but riches galore in the way of intrepid determination and practical common sense. Theirs Thoming had been reared on a farm and took kindly to that occupation, and after locating near San Francisco engaged in potato growing with gratifying success. In time removing to San Joaquin county, he located near Vernalis, where he at present resides, a prosperous general farmer, secure in the possession of a finely improved and paying property. Besides George, who is the eldest son and second child, there were two sons and two daughters in his family, all trained to be useful men and women by their well-beloved but now deceased mother.

Like his brothers and sisters, George Thoming had the average advantages of the boy born into the unsettled west, but of these he made the most, developing that strength of character and determination which have aided him in many a discouraging bout with fate. After leaving the home farm he engaged in independent farming near Vernalis, San Joaquin county, on fourteen hundred acres of land, and in 1903 came to his present leased land, comprising sixteen hundred acres. His farm equipment is complete and modern, and includes a combined harvester of great value and excellent make. During the harvest time he employs many hands, and his waving fields of golden grain, shimmering in the sunlight, are a sight calculated to make a man feel at peace with himself and the world in general. In keeping with his success, his breadth of mind and public spirit, Mr. Thoming entertains justifiable pride in local affairs, promoting the cause of good government on the part of his Republican colleagues, and interesting himself in establishing a high standard of school instruction. Fraternally he is a welcome member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. The wife of Mr. Thoming, formerly Flora Russell, is a native daughter of California, and owes her birth and education to Stockton. The family circle is brightened by two interesting children, Thelma and Russell. Mr. Thoming is a practical agriculturist, disposing of his land to the best possible advantage, and carrying his operations to the standpoint of an exact science. He is a genial and popular man, always ready to do a favor, and inclined to look on the cheerful and helpful side of life in general.

WILLIAM LUDOLF HEINE. One of the enterprising towns of Fresno county is Reedley, which by its location on the Kings river and by the fertility of the surrounding soil affords an excellent illustration of the resources of Fresno county, made profitable and possible by the abundance of water for irrigation. East of the town lie large tracts where wheat growing is a specialty, and among the most extensive wheat-raisers of the locality is William L. Heine, who resides seven miles northeast of Reedley, where he owns thirty-eight hundred acres. Of German birth and parentage, Mr. Heine was born in Holstein May 21, 1854, and is a son of Ferdinand and Bertha (Stein) Heine, also natives of Germany. His father, who was born and reared in the city of Hamburg, came to the United States in 1870 and after one year in Wisconsin removed west to the coast, settling in Solano county, Cal., where he made a specialty of wheat farming. After a time he removed to the adjoining county of Yolo and there he died in 1877. Since his demise Mrs. Heine has made her home in San Francisco.

In a family including five sons and three daughters, William Ludolf Heine was the eldest. As a boy he was given fair advantages and received his education principally in private schools. When sixteen years of age he accompanied the family to the United States and a year later settled in California, where he assisted his father in growing wheat in Solano county. From 1873 to 1887 he made his home in Yolo county, where he carried on grain farming. During the latter year he first came to Fresno county, but it was not until 1888 that he permanently settled at the place he still owns. To his original purchase of six hundred acres he has added from time to time until at this writing he owns six sections of wheat land (most of which is in one body), but of this he uses some for pasture land, and sows about twenty-four hundred acres to wheat. In stock he has made a specialty of sheep and now has twenty-five hundred head in his flock.

In addition to his large tracts in Fresno county Mr. Heine is the owner of property in Oakland. Since becoming a citizen of the United States he has made a careful study of our national affairs and has given his allegiance to the Republican party. In fraternal connections he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the blue lodge of Masons at Reedley.

DENVER S. CHURCH. The genealogy of this well-known attorney of Fresno is traced back to the east, where several generations of the family lived and labored. Joshua Church, a native of Pennsylvania, grew to manhood in that state, married, and settled upon a farm there, but later removed to Chautauqua county, N. Y. At the time of the removal to New York his son, E. J., who was born in western Pennsylvania, was a lad in years, and he aided in bringing the new farm under cultivation. In 1852 he crossed the plains with ox-teams to California, in company with Millard Church, who afterward returned east and died there; also an older brother, M. J. Church, who is remembered as the founder of the irrigation system in Fresno county. Settling at Diamond Spring, E. J. Church engaged in mining, but not finding the occupation profitable, he removed to Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, where he followed the blacksmith's trade. After a very short time he removed to Folsom City, Sacramento county, where in addition to blacksmithing he also devoted considerable attention to the stock business. A later location was in the vicinity of St. Helena, Napa county, where he took up general farming in connection with stock-raising. For a long period he continued there, but finally advancing years made further manual labor unwise, and he thereupon retired, coming to Fresno about 1898. In this city he now makes his home.

The marriage of E. J. Church united him with Catherine Rutan, who was born in Illinois and during the early '50s crossed the plains with her father, Samuel Rutan, settling on a farm near Woodbridge. By her marriage four sons and one daughter were born, of whom the following survive: Millard D., a merchant in Fresno; L. H. Church, M. D., who is a well-known physician of Grand Junction, Colo.; and Denver S., the youngest of the family, who was four years of age when he lost his mother by death. He was born at Folsom City, Cal., December 11, 1864, and received his education primarily in St. Helena, after which he was a student in Healdsburg College, completing the regular course of study in that institution. In 1877 he first came to Fresno, joining an uncle, M. J. Church, whom he helped to carry the chain that surveyed the boundaries of the Temperance Colony. After settling permanently in Fresno during 1887 he engaged in the study of law and in 1893 was admitted to the bar, since which time he has conducted a general practice. At this writing he acts as attorney for the public administrator. From January, 1899, to January, 1903, he served as deputy district attorney under O. L. Everts. The Democratic party has always received his allegiance and he is one of its leading members in his home city. Various societies number him among their members, among these being the County Bar Association, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Fresno Parlor No. 25, N. S. G. W., and the Woodmen of the World. Sharing with him the esteem of the community is his wife, whom he married in Reno, Nev., and who was Miss Louise Derrick, a native of that city, her parents having been pioneers of the Carson valley. In their family are three children, Earl, Fern and an infant unnamed. Through his accurate knowledge of the law Mr. Church has won a position of deserved prominence among the practitioners of Fresno and his high standing may be attributed to his unaided efforts, for he had no assistance except such as could be given by his own determination, intelligence and resourceful mind.

A. T. YEARGIN. In the prosperous farming and fruit raising section surrounding Fresno, the name of A. T. Yeargin stands for progress and success, and for active participation with all that has to do with the general upbuilding of the community. In Lawrence county, S. C., where he was born near Lawrence, December 20, 1852, the family name was identified with all that was fine and patriotic, and with the terrible tragedy which often rewards the valor of bearers of the standard. Out of a family of ten children born to his parents, Wiley and Nancy (Morgan) Yeargin, five sons exchanged the coarse farm clothes for the habiliments of war, and when peace had been declared at the expense of the defeat of the Confederacy, but one returned to tell of his sufferings in tent and camp and on the march. Wiley Yeargin was born in South Carolina, and died in Cherokee county, Ala., in 1865, his wife, also a native of South Carolina, surviving him until 1870.

A. T. Yeargin was two years old when his parents removed to Cherokee county, Ala., and he was there educated in the country schools, and developed a strong constitution while working in the fields. In 1870 he came to California by rail, locating first near Centerville, on Kings river, where he found work on a farm by the month. He then turned his attention to independent farming and stock-raising on rented land, and in 1889 sold his equipment and came to his present farm with D. J. McConnell, and purchased eighty acres of land, three and a half miles southeast of Fresno. The partners planted general crops, and set out a vineyard of twenty acres, later on setting out fifteen acres more in vineyard. In 1894 Ben Cakly succeeded Mr. McConnell in the ownership of half the property, and in 1901 the land was divided evenly, each partner caring for his own property and crops. Mr. Yeargin has forty acres, of which twenty-seven are under Muscatel grapes, five acres under general fruit trees, and the balance is devoted to general farming. He has made many fine improvements on his land, and has one of the most productive and well-cared for properties in this section.

While living in Centerville, Cal., Mr. Yeargin married Mattie Spears, born in Cherokee county, Ala., and who came to Centerville, Fresno county, with her parents in 1870. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Yeargin, Dela and Max, both living at home. Mr. Yeargin is prominent fraternally, and identified with the Manzanita Camp No. 160, W. O. W. He is a Democrat in politics, and has filled the office of school trustee in Page district with characteristic thoroughness. His religious convictions are with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Fresno.

C. C. EASTIN. Two miles west of Newman lies the farm owned and occupied by Mr. Eastin, one of the progressive farmers and dairymen of Stanislaus county. During the long period of his residence in the county he has acquired large landed tracts, and at the same time has gained and retained a position among the honored citizens and upright men. As early as 1874 he purchased the place he still owns, consisting originally of four hundred and eighty acres, and here he became interested in grain farming and raising mules. By subsequent purchases of adjacent property he has acquired the title to two thousand acres, of which four hundred are under ditch and in alfalfa. With J. B. Crow as a partner, he purchased fifteen hundred acres of the Wilson ranch, and this he laid out in tracts of forty acres or larger, all under ditch and utilized for dairy purposes.

The Eastin family is of Scotch ancestry and was founded in America by John Eastin, who immigrated from Scotland to Kentucky and settled on a farm. During the Revolutionary war he served his adopted country with zeal and fidelity as an enlisted soldier. His son, James T., was born near Madisonville, Hopkins county, Ky., and from there removed to Pike county, Mo., where he conducted agricultural pursuits upon an extensive scale. With the patriotic instincts characteristic of the family, he was a loyal American, proving his fidelity by brave service in the war of 1812. Politically he was a believer in Whig principles. He attained a great age, passing away about the time of the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861. By his marriage to Theodosia South, a native of Kentucky, he was connected with an old Virginian family of English extraction. Her father was a planter in Kentucky, and during the war of 1812 held the rank of general. Mrs. Theodosia Eastin came to California in later life and spent her last days in the home of her son, C. C., dying here at ninety-six years of age. In her family were eight sons and four daughters. The family traits of bravery and patriotic spirit showed themselves among her children; four of her sons volunteered in the army during the Civil war and two fell while fighting for the principles which they espoused. Four sons came to California during the mining days of 1849 and 1850. Of these Brutus died in Orestimba; Octavius is engaged in farm pursuits near Merced; Oscar returned to Missouri and there died; and James is living in Madera county, where he carries on a farm.

Near Bowling Green, Pike county, Mo., C. C. Eastin was born February 22, 1840. During boyhood days he was a pupil in district schools and had the further advantage of a four years' course in Watson Seminary. In early manhood chance led him into the study of medicine, which he carried on under Dr. South in 1858. Later he matriculated in Pope's Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1861 with the degree of M. D. During the period of his residence in St. Louis he cast his vote for Bell and Everett and later in his home county cast a ballot against secession. When Missouri seceded he was driven into the southern army, and during the four years of the war he served in a regiment of artillery, and was present at the siege of Vicksburg, later accompanying Gen. Joseph Johnston in the Georgia campaign and through North Carolina. The last service that he gave was under General Hood. At the close of the war he settled in Mississippi, where he took up the raising of grain and stock. During 1868 he became a pioneer of the San Joaquin valley in California, where his first business venture was the purchase of one thousand head of sheep that he pastured on the Orestimba. In 1870 he removed to Tulare Lake, Fresno county, where he remained for four years, engaging in the cattle and sheep business, and then settled upon the property near Newman that has been the scene of his subsequent activities. The dairy industry has been his principal business, and he now has a dairy of sixty cows. As a farmer and dairyman he is progressive, quick to adopt improved methods and accurate in attention to every detail.

The marriage of Mr. Eastin, in Madison county, Miss., united him with Miss Emma Compton, who was born there of North Carolina parentage. Eight children were born of their union, namely: Cassius J., who conducts a farm in Merced county; Martha P., who resides with her parents; E. E., a merchant in Los Angeles; Lucius O., who is engaged in farming at the old homestead; Viola, at home; Marion Grover, who is engaged in the dairy business; Claude and Walter, at home. Mr. Eastin has always been interested in movements for the religious, educational and moral upbuilding of his community, and has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church of Newman. Politically an active Democrat, he served as a member of the county central committee of the party several different terms, and for four years held the office of supervisor. During his service on the school board, covering a period of eighteen years, he assisted in the building up of the schools and did much to promote the standard of education. Indeed, in every worthy movement looking to the future prosperity of Stanislaus county he has been deeply interested and has contributed of his time and means to plans of such a nature.

CASSIUS C. CROW. In Mr Crow we have an example of that class of citizens who were pioneer settlers in the San Joaquin valley in California, for his home has been in this section from his early boyhood days. Born in Pike county, Mo., July 18, 1860, at the tender age of five years he accompanied his parents across the great plains to a home in Stanislaus county, Cal., where his father located on a large farm and carried on ranching pursuits extensively. Here it was that Cassius C. was educated in the common schools, and when of a suitable age he began assisting his father in farm pursuits on the home ranch, which is located in the western part of the county. He has seen the country change from a vast plain to one of the finest alfalfa and dairy farming communities on the Pacific slope and to-day he is the proud possessor of one of the finest dairy farms in that section of the county. His farm contains two hundred and twenty acres of fine land under the West Side Irrigation Ditch. It is very productive, being well located along the Orestimba creek, near the junction of the latter with the San Joaquin river. It is a part of the original farm settled upon by his father, and the magnificent tall trees which it contains were planted by that beloved parent.

In addition to carrying on general farm pursuits Mr. Crow also has a cheese factory located on his place, which, at the present time, he leases out. His pretty cottage residence is just three and one-half miles east of Crow's Landing and is among the most attractive spots in his neighborhood. By his marriage he was united with Cora C. Cressey, who was born in San Jose, Cal. Mrs. Crow has exceptional literary talent, having attained quite a good deal of prominence as a story writer. Their only child, Paul, a native son of California, takes great pleasure in assisting on the ranch, deriving enjoyment from the pursuit. Politically Mr. Crow is an ardent Democrat, and aside from his ranching pursuits he has been interested in a number of enterprises of worth, among them the Crow Oil Company, of which he was one of the incorporators and is now serving as director. This company was incorporated with a capital stock of $300,000, with eighteen hundred acres in the Sunset belt, but is not active at this writing.

HENRY D. BOLLIN. An enterprising merchant of Reedley, Henry D. Bollin is engaged in a general mercantile business in this place, in the conduct of which he is meeting with success. He was born in Cooper county, Mo., October 16, 1865, a son of A. Lewis Bollin. The latter, who was a native of Prussia, Germany, emigrated to the United States and located in Cooper county, Mo., where he engaged as a farmer and blacksmith. He removed to Kansas in 1867 and at Kickapoo engaged as a blacksmith. Two years later he returned to Missouri and followed his trade until his death, which occurred in 1872, at the age of fifty-five years. His wife, formerly Minnie Miller, was also born in Germany. She came to California in 1889 and died here in 1895. They were the parents of three daughters and six sons, of whom Henry D. Bollin was the fourth in order of birth.

The education of Henry D. Bollin was received in the common schools of Missouri, where he remained until 1889. In that year he came to California with his mother and engaged in farming at Traver, Tulare county, where he remained until 1897, in which year he located in Reedley. He secured employment as clerk for two years, and following this he engaged in a general merchandise business under the firm name of Stout & Bollin for a like period. Purchasing the entire interest at the end of that time, Mr. Bollin continued the enterprise for one year, when (March, 1902) he started a general merchandise business under the firm name of Bollin, Mathews & Co. They carried on business until they were burned out by the memorable fire which devastated the entire town. Their loss was covered by insurance, however, and following the fire Mr. Bollin engaged in a general merchandise business which he has since conducted successfully. He has also been instrumental in the business enterprises of Reedley, with his brother organizing the Reedley Hotel & Store Company, and assisting in the erection of a brick block.

In Missouri Mr. Bollin was united in marriage with Alvina Bank, a native of Monitor county, that state, and they are the parents of the following children: Leonard, Harry, Maggie, Dora and Lucy. Fraternally Mr. Bollin is associated with the Woodmen of the World, the Women of Woodcraft, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, all of Reedley. He was formerly a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he had passed all the chairs, and twice attended the meetings of the Grand Lodge. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

HUGH A. BLODGET. As showing what may be accomplished by a normal, healthy and ambitious mind which marks out a career for itself and resolutely goes to work to make its dream of success a reality, the case of Hugh A. Blodget, vice-president and general manager of the California Consolidated Oil Fields Company, and ex-president of the Kern Valley Bank, affords a lesson strong in human interest, and vital in its ring of encouragement. The story is not embellished with meteoric rise, indulgent early fortune, out of the ordinary gifts, or get-rich-quick opportunities. Its strength and assurance lie in the fact that it can be emulated by the right sort of man, possessing the right sort of intentions. Mr. Blodget's underlying mental and physical vigor comes from good ancestors and from the fact that he is a son of the soil, having been born on a farm in Chautauqua county, N. Y., October 23, 1855. His father, William O. Blodget, was also born in Chautauqua county, and was reared on a farm which extended over into Pennsylvania, and which had been settled by his father, Orba Blodget, when the property was owned by the Holland Land Company. The grandfather was born in Massachusetts, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was accidentally killed in middle life. William O. Blodget graduated from farming into the mercantile business, which he left at the outbreak of the Civil war to raise a company, and was raised to the rank of lieutenant in the service. He was a member of the Reynolds Division at the battle of Gettysburg, and was wounded in front of the historic stone wall, from the effects of which wound he contracted consumption, and died at the age of forty-one. Additional pathos was added to his untimely death by the decease of his wife, three days before. Mrs. Blodget was formerly Esther A. Spencer, a native of Warren county, Pa., and besides Hugh A., the second of her three children, there is Ella, wife of C. F. Lake, of Boulder, Colo., and Spencer L., a resident of Bakersfield.

Ten years old at the time of his parents' death, Hugh A. Blodget lived with his maternal grandmother until his seventeenth year, working on the farm. He received his preliminary education in the public school, after which he took a course at the Jamestown Collegiate Institute. In December, 1872, he arrived in Windsor, Sonoma county, Cal., with a depleted exchequer, but abiding confidence in a future of large accomplishment. For a couple of years he alternated clerking in a store with harvesting on a ranch, and in January, 1875, arrived in Bakersfield and found employment on a nearby ranch for two or three months. He then became clerk for the county recorder for a couple of years, and so faithfully attended to business that he was able to secure a position as book-keeper in the Kern Valley Bank. His faith in himself was communicated to his superiors through ways best known to practical and discerning business men, and he was promoted to the cashiership in the bank in 1884, and in 1902 became president of the institution. Pressure of outside business interfered with the latter responsibility to such an extent that in 1903 he resigned from the bank, and was then able to devote his entire energy to the development of oil in this section, of which he was one of the first and most energetic promoters.

Mr. Blodget became interested in oil in the Sunset region in 1890, and that year, with Solomon Jewett and Charles Barnard, put down the first wells drilled in the district. The project not proving successful, Mr. Barnard withdrew from the field, leaving Mr. Blodget and Mr. Jewett to conduct further experiments. It was not until 1897 that their efforts were rewarded with success, but so sure were they of the practically exhaustless supply, that in the spring of 1903 Mr. Blodget and C. M. Beall organized what is now the California Consolidated Oil Fields Company of Bakersfield and Kern County, which company controls seven thousand acres in the Sunset District and containing at present forty-seven oil-producing wells. Mr. Blodget has done more to encourage the oil business in the section than any one other individual, giving it the support of his clear judgment, and ample facilities for ascertaining facts. His reputation for substantiality and reliability count for much in an enterprise more or less speculative, and invest it with an assurance peculiarly gratifying to cautious minds.

The energy and public spirit of Mr. Blodget have invaded many avenues of improvement in Bakersfield, and since his arrival at a time when the town consisted of an aggregation of huts, he has had a share in the enterprises most emphatically developing and lasting, including the water works, lighting plant, street transportation, and the Southern hotel. That he believes in the future of the city is evident from his many investments in its desirable real estate, including his own well appointed home. Mr. Blodget married Miss A. L. Park, a native of Wisconsin, and who came to California in 1878. Three children have been born of the union: Haselton P., a student in San Francisco; and Ruth and Anna L., at home. Mr. Blodget is a staunch Republican, but has never been willing to accept office. One of his greatest services to the town has been in connection with education, not only as president of the board of education, but through individual effort whenever opportunity has arisen requiring his support and co-operation. He is fraternally connected with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Blodget's many fine traits of character have won him hosts of friends in Bakersfield and throughout the entire county, and his name stands for all that is progressive and substantial.

JOHN BIBBY. Actively identified with the agricultural interests of Merced county is John Bibby, who owns a valuable ranch of fifty acres in Volta, and in addition to managing that also carries on the farm belonging to his father, Nicholas Bibby, Sr., of whom a brief biographical sketch may be found on another page of this volume. He is a man of energy and integrity, well informed, with a mind broadened by observation and travel, and is deservedly esteemed throughout the community in which he resides. In his industrial operations he has met with excellent success, his well-cultivated and well-improved land yielding good annual crops. Of Welsh ancestry on the paternal side, he was born in Solano county, Cal., and there spent the first seven years of his life.

Coming to Merced county in the days of his boyhood, John Bibby received such educational advantages as were afforded by the district school. He subsequently obtained a wide and varied knowledge of places, men and events by traveling, visiting Arizona, Oregon, Nevada, Wyoming and the Hawaiian Islands. When ready to settle permanently in life, Mr. Bibby selected the independent occupation to which he was reared, and assuming possession of his present ranch of fifty acres on the Bibby road at once began its improvement. In addition to this he has, since 1901, engaged in stock-raising on the parental homestead, which adjoins his own estate, and in the care of both farms has been exceedingly prosperous, his skill and systematic methods bringing him much success.

Taking an intelligent interest in local affairs, Mr. Bibby is a staunch Democrat, and uniformly casts his vote with that party. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN ARTHUR BENHAM, manager of the Sanitary House Cleaning Company, of Fresno, Cal., was born at Flushing, Mich., November 20, 1859, the eldest in a family of three sons and two daughters, all of whom but one daughter are now living. His father, John C. Benham, was a native of Ontario, where he engaged in lumbering and farming, and was then employed for eight years as manager of the Crapo ranch. He made his home in Flushing, Mich., where his death occurred in 1904 at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife, formerly Sarah Glidden, was a native of New York. She survives her husband and makes her home in Flushing. Reared in his native town until attaining his majority, John Arthur Benham received his education in the public schools of that place and at Flint. In 1881 he went to Stevens' Point, Wis., where he engaged for sixteen years in business. Deciding to locate in the remote west, he came to California in 1897, and remained for a time in Oakland, in the same year coming to Fresno, where he brought out the first slot machine, engaging in that business until 1901. He then became associated with Fulton G. Berry as partner in the Grand Central Bar and Billiard Room, remaining so occupied for fifteen months. Forced to withdraw from the business on account of rheumatism, he then entered into partnership with Lester Funge, with whom he built the Grand Theater, which was opened in May, 1903. In October of the same year he sold out, and in the following December located on his ranch near Conejo. He remained in that location until December, 1904, engaged in the dairy business, which he still conducts. He returned to Fresno and became a stockholder on the organization of the Sanitary House Cleaning Company, and also its manager, having fortunately become free from the disease which had troubled him. This company uses the Lotz vacuum and compressed air machine in their process of cleaning, and are already doing an extensive business, being agents for the entire San Joaquin valley. Mr. Benham owns a comfortable residence at No. 821 O street, which is presided over by his wife, formerly Ella Van Riper, a native of New York state, whom he married in Port Huron, Mich. They are the parents of three children, Irene, Arthur and Lawrence. Politically Mr. Benham is a Republican and fraternally is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

W. N. ROHRER. The success which W. N. Rohrer has achieved since locating in Fresno county has placed him indisputably among the prominent and representative citizens of this section. A business man of remarkable acumen and unerring judgment, combined with a quickness of decision, he has steadily advanced to an important position among the commercial and industrial interests of the county, to whose upbuilding he has devoted his best efforts since locating here less than twenty years ago. His most important achievement has been the development of the Mount Campbell Orange Tract, one of the finest pieces of property in this section of the state. This consists of about nine thousand acres of land lying at the southern base of Mount Campbell, directly east of Fresno, six miles from Reedley and nine miles from Sanger, and is from forty to eighty feet higher than the fertile fields adjacent in the Kings river bottom, thus being above the line of severe frost, while the mountain protects it from the northern winds. The location commands a fine view of the Sierra mountains, as well as vast stretches of orchards and vineyards to the south and westward. Excellent drinking water is obtained at a depth of sixty to eighty feet, while the large Alta canal furnishes an abundant supply of water for irrigation purposes.

In Juniata county, Pa., W. N. Rohrer was born, the son of the Hon. Abraham Rohrer, a native of the same locality. The family flourished originally in the state of Maryland, whence the grandfather removed to Pennsylvania and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Abraham Rohrer was reared in Pennsylvania and in young manhood followed the example of his father. During the Civil War, although a staunch Democrat in his political convictions, he was still intensely loyal to the Union and served as a recruiting officer. He was known all over the state by the cognomen of "Honest Abe," and during his service as a member of the state legislature, to which he was twice elected, he ably upheld the high opinion which was universally accorded him. He died in 1888, at the age of sixty years. In his religious life he was a devoted member of the United Brethren Church, in the ministry of which he served for many years. His wife was in maidenhood Mary Pannebaker, who was also born in Pennsylvania the descendant of an old and honored family. Mrs. Rohrer survives her husband and still makes her home in Pennsylvania.

Of the seven children born to his parents W. N. Rohrer was the fourth, and the only one now located in California. He was reared to manhood in his native state, engaging alternately in study at the district school and the farm duties which were a part of his daily life. His first efforts along an independent line were as school teacher, in which he met with the success which has always characterized his work. When a boy he decided to come west and accordingly located in Durango, Colo., in 1876, a pioneer in that district. He engaged in the abstract and real estate business there until 1887, when he continued his journey west and settled in Fresno, with whose best interests he has since been identified. Real estate has occupied a large share of his attention since locating here. In 1899 he conceived the idea which has resulted in the formation of the Mount Campbell Orange tract, upon which he has expended many thousands of dollars, and an incalculable amount of time and thought. He has thoroughly advertised this section all over the United States as well as in many foreign countries. He has spared no effort to make a success of his enterprise and thus far he has been rewarded by most gratifying returns, while the future holds out promise of still greater achievements in his endeavors to build up and develop the resources of the country.

In Colorado Mr. Rohrer was united in marriage with Lucinda Mitchell, a native of Missouri, and to them were born three children. Mr. Rohrer is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and in religious affairs is identified with the Unitarian Church.

SAMUEL PRATT. Prominent among the well-to-do and prosperous agriculturists of Stanislaus county is Samuel Pratt, an extensive land owner and stock raiser, and a business man of unquestioned ability and integrity. Self-supporting from his boyhood days, he has been in very truth the architect of his own fortunes, attaining his present assured position in the industrial world by persevering toil, good judgment and keen foresight. His home ranch, lying six miles southeast of Oakdale, is one of the best in its appointments and improvements of any in the locality, giving to the passer-by visible evidence of the thrift and wise management of its proprietor. A son of Samuel and Priscilla (Denford) Pratt, he was born April 6, 1854, in Devonshire, England, where he received a very limited education.

Leaving his native land when ten years old, Samuel Pratt came alone to the United States, and for two years thereafter lived with friends in Brown county, Kans. In 1869 he migrated to California, and in June, 1873, took up his residence in Stanislaus county. For about six years Mr. Pratt worked as a farm laborer in the vicinity of Oakdale and Modesto, and with characteristic economy and prudence saved the larger part of his wages. Buying land near Modesto in 1879, he carried on farming for several years, as a grain raiser meeting with satisfactory pecuniary results. In 1895 he bought his present home ranch of eight hundred and eighty acres, and has since been actively and profitably employed in general farming, raising hay, grain and stock, keeping on an average five hundred head of cattle. He has other real estate of value, owning three thousand acres of land in Stanislaus county. Public-spirited and progressive, he has ever evinced a warm interest in local advancement and improvements, and heartily endorses all enterprises calculated to benefit the town or county. Politically he supports the Republican party.

Mr. Pratt has been married twice. He married first, in California, Elizabeth Cobb, who died in early womanhood, leaving two children, Edwin W. and Charles S. His second wife was formerly Jennie Sage.

JAMES MONROE BOND. In the medical, as in other professions, if a man would rise he must work, and he will ever find plenty of room at the top. In Dr. Bond we recognize one who is bound to win, as he has taken his place in Kings county, Cal., as one who has come to stay, and is quietly engaged in attending to the stream of practice that is converging in his direction. Although during his early manhood days he followed ranching pursuits mainly, he finally determined to enter the medical profession, having a great deal of natural ability in that direction and having practiced to some extent before taking a special preparation. It was not until about 1890 that he entered the California Eclectic Medical College in San Francisco, and after his graduation from this institution in 1893, he practiced one year in the same city. Returning to Kings county the following year, Dr. Bond opened an office in Hanford and engaged as general practitioner. Shortly afterward, however, he started a sanitarium, and here for five years he worked with earnestness and vim in building up his practice. In 1903 he purchased the place upon which his sanitarium is now located. This place contained five acres of ground, and is well located within the city limits and just outside the residence portion of Hanford, where everything is quiet and peaceful. The extensive grounds are laid out in beautiful lawns, well-kept and beautified in every conceivable way by ornamental flowers, trees and shrubbery. The Sanitarium proper is a large and commodious two-story building, which furnishes accommodations for fifteen patients, in addition to the family living rooms. The building is well fitted with the latest medical appliances and surgical instruments, as the doctor is well informed on the latest discoveries applying to medicine and to surgery, and adopts the most improved methods of healing in treating different cases.

The birth of Dr. Bond took place near Knoxville, in Marion county, Ia., November 17, 1847, and he is one of four children born to William B. and Hannah (Hayes) Bond, the latter an Ohio lady, died in the Blue Mountains, while the family were en route to Oregon, in 1853. William B. Bond descended from a worthy English family who left England in the sixteenth century and settled in Virginia, which was also his birthplace. The progenitor of the family in America was one John Bond, the great-grandfather of William B. Bond. His son, Solomon, was a native of Virginia and served in the Revolutionary war and his son, the father of William B., was a Baptist minister and married a Virginia lady. Reared in his native state, where in his early manhood he followed farm pursuits, the father of Dr. Bond left his eastern home and traveling westward, he settled for a time in Illinois, proceeding on to Iowa in 1846. Here he took up government land in this section, which was new and undeveloped, and he was engaged in tilling the soil here until 1853. Selling out, he crossed overland to Oregon, and having lost his beloved companion on the way, he was left with the care of four small children. He took up a claim near Harrisburg, in Linn county, and lived there for twelve years, and in 1865 located permanently in Benton county, where he died shortly afterward, being forty-nine years old at the time of his death.

The boyhood days of Dr. Bond were spent upon his father's farm, and he attended public school until about twelve years of age, receiving but a limited education. He followed farm pursuits until about the close of the war and after the death of his father, when only nineteen years old, he married and continued to farm in that section a couple of years afterward. It was in 1868 that he first stepped on California soil and at that date he took up a homestead claim at Crows Landing, in Stanislaus county, and here at times he followed farm pursuits during the next few years. In 1874 he purchased a government claim in Kings county, three miles southeast of Lemoore, but did not occupy this place as a home until the spring of 1877. He followed ranching and stock-raising here until 1889 and about that time he determined upon a medical career and taking a complete medical course, he has devoted his life to this profession ever since.

By his marriage, November 11, 1866, in Oregon, Dr. Bond linked his fortunes with those of Miss Sarah T. Storr, a lady whose parents moved to Oregon in 1847, and it was in that state that she was born. Mrs. Bond is both amiable and accomplished and is in every way a fitting companion for the doctor. They have reared a family of eleven children, of whom they are justly proud, many of them filling positions of trust in a professional way and all prominent in the communities in which they reside. They are enumerated as follows: Emma, wife of R. A. Wheeler, of Healdsburg, Cal.; William F., a resident of Hanford; James E., a minister of the Seventh Day Adventists' Church, stationed at Phoenix, Ariz.; Elmer C., a rising young physician conducting a sanitarium in the same city; Frank Storr and Walter Guy, who are Seventh Day Adventist missionaries, now laboring in Spain; Edith, a successful teacher at Phoenix, Ariz.; and Jessie May, Charles Lester, Harry Cecil and Mildred G., who are still at home with their parents. As may be inferred, both the doctor and his wife are enthusiastic Seventh Day Adventists and have reared their family in the same belief. In his political views, the doctor is a Republican, but he has had neither time nor inclination for aspirations in the field of political favor, as he places his profession emphatically before every other interest. Outside of work in his sanitarium, he has a large patronage extending far into the surrounding country, and it may be said of him that he has made a record equaled or excelled by few. A deep and logical thinker, well-read, with good judgment and keen, trustworthy common sense, he has in addition a strong ambition and a high standard of professional excellence. These attributes are bound to bring the permanent rewards of a successful career, and he can truly be said to be the "architect of his own fortune."

WILLIAM NATHANIEL HARRIS. A prominent citizen of Laton, Fresno county, Cal., William Nathaniel Harris is representative of the developing forces of this section. He was born in Burlington, Vt., January 27, 1862, the son of William L., of Middleboro, Vt., and the grandson of Nathaniel, of New York state. The elder man owned a marble quarry in Middleboro, Vt., where he also engaged as a dentist, becoming a popular and prominent citizen of the community. His death occurred there after a long and useful life. William L. Harris also became a dentist and located in Burlington, Vt., where he engaged at his profession until his removal to Chicago, Ill. Later he returned to Burlington, thence located in Washington, D. C., where he filled the office of deputy assistant commissioner of pensions for three years. On account of impaired health he came to California and in Santa Barbara engaged in stock raising until his death, which occurred in 1870, at the comparatively early age of forty-two years. He served in the Civil war, enlisting in 1861 for three months as captain of his company in the Seventh Vermont Regiment. He was a strong man, of fine physique and splendid constitution, but was severely wounded and compelled to stay four months in the hospital. He rejoined the regiment earlier than he should have done, so eager was he to be in active service again, and consequently lost his health. He was sent to New Orleans in charge of a prison ship, where, after one and a half years' service, he was honorably discharged. His wife, formerly Sarah A. Hoyt, was a native of Rochester, N. Y., and died in San Francisco at the age of sixty-one years. Of their three children two died in infancy, William Nathaniel being the youngest.

William N. Harris attended the common schools of Vermont and later of Washington, D. C. He accompanied his parents to Santa Barbara, Cal., where he finished his education, in 1879 entering the Berkeley Gymnasium, having previously completed the high school course. He later entered the class of 1884 as a special student in chemistry and civil engineering in the University of California, having spent the year previous in Boston, where he took a course in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, studying engraving under Victor L. Chandler. After his return to California and the years spent in the University of California he took up book illustrating and engraving, after which he was employed in the art department of the San Francisco Chronicle for two years. Deciding to take up a commercial life he entered the insurance business with the George Easton company, of San Francisco, and in 1893 engaged with Easton, Eldridge & Co. in real estate operations, his principal work being colonizing. He was afterward associated with other companies. In 1897 he came to Fresno, where he acted as the agent for the Canadian & American Mortgage and Trust Co. and the United Trust (limited), for the period of three years. During this time he colonized three large tracts in Fresno county and took an active part in the growth and development of the country. In 1890 he became associated with Nears & Saunders, and handled the larger part of their business. He represented Kings county at the Louisiana Purchase Exposit-tion and is a staunch supporter of the best interests of California.

In Los Angeles Mr. Harris was united in marriage with Fleeta W. Cummings, a native of Illinois, whose death occurred in San Francisco. Fraternaly Mr. Harris is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and is a member of the Sequoia Club. He is a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce and the San Joaquin Valley Commercial Association. He is actively identified with the work of St. James Episcopal Church, of Fresno, where he has held the position of choir master for the past three years. Politically he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. Mr. Harris was the originator of lecturing and stereopticon views in California, and has given lectures throughout various parts of the states, as well as in the middle west and Pennsylvania. It is his plan to go to the Lewis and Clark Exposition with his views and lectures and anticipates his usual success.

DAVID STEWART JONES. Numbered among the successful young men of Fresno county is David Stewart Jones, who is located at Lane's Bridge, and engaged in an extensive cultivation of grain. He was the third in a family of seven children, his birth occurring in Trimble, Dyer county, Tenn., July 27, 1871. His father, Ezra Jones, crossed the plains in the '60s and in California married Mary Lewis, of Arkansas, who had crossed the plains to this state in the '50s. They returned to Tennessee, where Mr. Jones engaged as a farmer and merchant until his death. Until he was thirteen years old David Stewart Jones was reared in Tennessee, where he attended the public schools in pursuit of an education. In 1884 he came to California and in young manhood took charge of his mother's farm on Owens creek, Merced county, where he remained for some years. He then bought a farm at Raymond in the mountains, where he engaged in the cattle business for four years, after which he located on the San Joaquin river, two miles west of Lane's Bridge, in Madera county, where he engaged in the cultivation of grain on one hundred and sixty acres of land. In 1904 he bought the old Lane home of eighty acres at Lane's Bridge, upon which he located, and now conducts the two farms, as well as renting considerable land, making in all sixteen hundred acres devoted to grain and alfalfa.

In Fresno Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Della Walker, a native of San Joaquin county, and the daughter of J. N. Walker, the first sheriff of Fresno county, and one of the prominent men of this section. (For more complete details concerning Mr. Walker refer to his biography, which appears elsewhere in this volume.) To Mr. and Mrs. Jones were born the following children: Zella, Orville and Zolo. Mr. Jones is independent in politics but takes a keen interest in the welfare of the community. At various times he has served as school trustee and has given his best efforts to advance educational interests.

JOHN McDONALD WILMANS, a native of Plumas county, Cal., was born in Quincy March 29, 1858, a son of David I. and Martha (Bass) Wilmans, natives respectively of Philadelphia, Pa., and Potosi, Mo. His paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, born on the River Rhine, and in manhood was occupied as an importer of silks and wines. A member of an old and honored family he secured a splendid education and became a prominent citizen in whatever locality he made his home. He immigrated to America and followed merchandising in Philadelphia and afterwards in St. Joseph, Mo. His death occurred at the age of seventy years. His son, David I. Wilmans, who became a pork packer and merchant of that city, came to California with the gold seekers in 1849, organizing a train of about sixty men, well armed and well equipped, coming by way of Utah. Upon his arrival in California he settled in Marysville, or rather founded that town, putting up the first frame building and establishing a store. Disposing of these interests he went to Quincy, Plumas county, in 1850, and became a leading miner and merchant on Nelson creek, where he made a fortune in gold mining and merchandising. He died in Gila county, Arizona, where he was engaged in a mercantile enterprise, at the age of sixty-seven years. His name was well known over the entire west. He was a personal friend of George C. Gorham, Judge Stephen J. Field, United States Senator Jones, Senator Sharron, and others equally well known in the west, a man of honor and probity and great ability. In his political affiliations he was a Democrat, and fraternaly was a member of the Masonic order, in which work he was quite active in early life. He married Martha J. Bass, a native of Missouri, and a descendant of English ancestry related to the old and distinguished Bass family of England. With her brothers, Stephen D. and Richard S., both of whom were partners of David I. Wilmans, she came overland to California in 1853 and was married in Quincy. She died at "Woodside," the country ranch of the Wilmans, at the age of seventy-one years. Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilmans, three reached maturity, namely: F. W., J. M., and S. C., of whom the last named died August 6, 1901, at the age of thirty-five years, leaving a wife and three children. F. W. resides at Seattle, Wash.

John McDonald Wilmans was educated in Nevada, principally. From the time he was fourteen years old he engaged in mining, for the greater part being located in Nevada, and was a successful miner even at that age. After he left Nevada in 1876 he was head distributor in the San Francisco postoffice in the paper department for three years, after which, on account of failing eyesight, he went to Gila county, Ariz., and engaged in mining. As before he met with success. He remained in that locality about eight years, half of the time being spent as a merchant. He was also a contractor and managed several other mining properties, making Globe, Ariz., his headquarters. For a part of this time he was also interested in the cattle business. In 1888 he went to Park City, Utah, thirty-five miles south of Salt Lake City, where he took a lease on a mine, in partnership with his brother, F. W. Wilmans, the two taking out $620,000 in gold in ten months. The lease being for twelve months they disposed of the other two months for $47,000. This mine is now known as the Silver King and has produced $15,000,000 worth of gold. After disposing of his interest in this mine Mr. Wilmans located his family in San Francisco. He there became interested with James L. Pearsall, in Monte Cristo, Wash., in mining in the Monte Cristo and other mines, and again met with success. Although he eventually disposed of a part of his interests to John D. Rockefeller, he acts as manager of and owns the controlling interest on a forty-seven mile railroad, which cost about $3,000,000. His brother, F. W., is president. Since his identification with the Monte Cristo mine, the improvements made have been remarkable, while several million dollars' worth of gold has been taken out. Mr. Wilmans owns a one-third interest in the Monte Cristo mine and is also interested in mines in Alaska.

"Woodside" ranch was bought in 1900, when it was practically a desert, and the improvements since made have demonstrated both the ability and taste of the owner. About eighteen hundred acres are under cultivation and irrigation and in alfalfa. A portion of this ranch has been sold to W. B. Witcher. Mr. Wilmans was married in Arizona to Clara James, a native of Logan, Iowa. She is the mother of two children, Irma and Frederick S. Mr. Wilmans is a prominent Mason, being a member of Golden Gate Commandery, K. T., and Islam Temple, N. M. S. Politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, in which faith he was reared. He has shown himself to be a man of enterprise and ability and has done much toward advancing the best interests of the community in which he makes his home. He was instrumental in securing the rural telephone, thus connecting his ranch by long distance with San Francisco and other places of importance. In the matter of improvements on his ranch he has exercised his most intelligent efforts to bring his broad fields to a high state of cultivation and make them rank among the most profitable of this section of the country. Some idea may be gained when it is known that the ranch was bought at the rate of $55 per acre and is now worth at least $200, renting for $12.50 per acre. He is interested in dairying and has a number of Holstein and Durham cattle. At one time he was much interested in sheep raising, importing from France sheep that cost as high as $1,000 per head, twenty-six being purchased for $17,000. He has since sold his sheep and now gives considerable time and attention to the raising of fine horses.

HIRAM FORD. A resident of Fresno since 1887, Hiram Ford was born in Ohio county, Indiana, April 28, 1850, and is a son of Darius and Margaret (Brown) Ford, natives respectively of Rutland, Vt., and Indiana. The maternal grandfather, David Brown, was born in Pennsylvania and in an early day identified himself with the then frontier region of Switzerland county, Indiana, where he cleared a tract of raw land. After settling in Ohio county, Indiana, Darius Ford followed the tanning business for some years, but eventually turned his attention to flour milling and continued in that industry until his death. Both he and his wife spent their last days in Indiana. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, all of whom are still living, Hiram being the only member of the family to settle on the Pacific coast. His younger brother, Oliver P. M. Ford, M. D., was reared under his supervision and he paid the expenses of his education in the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated. At this writing he is a successful physician at Rising Sun, Ind.

In the county where he was born, Hiram Ford passed uneventfully the years of boyhood and youth, receiving meager advantages in neighboring schools, but acquiring through reading and observation a large fund of valuable information. Under his father he learned the milling and stone dressing business and after his father's death he operated the mill for a year, when it was sold. Thereupon he turned his attention to the carpenter's trade. About this time he married Miss Sophia C. Cooper, who was born and reared in Ohio county, Indiana, and whose cooperation has been of great assistance to him in all of his active life. After his marriage he engaged in the mercantile business at Bennington, Ind., for seven years, and on selling out resumed work as a carpenter.

When Mr. Ford came to Fresno in 1887 the town had only one three-story brick building. During the next three years the building business was active, carpenters were in constant demand, and he had no difficulty in securing steady work. In 1891 he took up contracting, his first contract being for the building of a large fruit cannery in Fresno. Since then his business has grown steadily, and now during the busy seasons he gives employment to about thirty hands. Scores of elegant residences in various parts of the city have been built under his supervision. Among other buildings for which he had the contract are the Baptist church, Union high school at Clovis, Kirk school house in Fresno and the John Brown colony school house in Madera county. Not only does he understand every detail and department of the contracting business, but he is further fortunate in being able to handle his workmen without friction, a matter of no small importance in these days of constant conflict between capital and labor. He makes his home in a residence that he built on the corner of K and San Benito streets. In his family there are six children, namely: Margaret A., wife of Alvin G. Lorbeer, who is now living at Tucson, Ariz.; Flora A., at home; Harrison H., a farmer of Fresno county; Grace G., wife of Thomas C. Edgar, of Reedley; Charles W., who is employed as foreman of his father's building operations; and Stephen L., a box-maker.

On the organization of the Citizens' Alliance Mr. Ford became one of its charter members, and he is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce. Politically he is a believer in Republican principles. On the organization of the local lodge, Woodmen of the World, he became a charter member. About 1873 he was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows while a resident of Indiana and since coming to the coast he has affiliated with Fresno Lodge No. 186, of which he is secretary at this writing. For two terms he has been past chief patriarch of the encampment of Fresno, and also officiates as clerk of the canton of this city. When the Builders' Exchange was established he became a charter member and now serves as secretary of the governing board. He took a warm interest in the organization of the Contractors' Association and was honored by the members with the office of president, which he has filled with fidelity and efficiency.

WILLIAM McINDOO. The most extensive dairy business of Fresno county is conducted by William McIndoo, who, as president of the Jersey Farm Dairy (incorporated), is giving his best efforts toward the success of the enterprise. He was born near Peterboro, Ontario, April 1, 1846, the eldest son in a family of six sons and five daughters, of whom nine attained maturity and are living. Three brothers, Robert, Matthew and James, are also located in Fresno. His father, Matthew McIndoo, was a native of Ontario, where he was engaged as a farmer until his death, which occurred in 1902 at the age of eighty-three years. He was a descendant of Irish ancestry, his father, William McIndoo, having immigrated from that country in 1815 and became a farmer in Ontario. Matthew McIndoo married Mary Carter, a native of Peterboro, Ontario, and the daughter of Robert Carter, who came to Ontario from the north of Ireland, where the family had been located by Scotch ancestors. Mrs. McIndoo still survives her husband and makes her home in the old residence in Ontario.

William McIndoo was reared on the paternal farm, while receiving his education in the public schools and the military academy at Toronto. When twenty-one years old he began farming for himself, continuing in that occupation for three or four years, when he sold out and engaged in the cattle business. For the following five or six years he engaged in the exportation of beef cattle for New York and Buffalo markets. In 1886 he came to California and located in Fresno county, where he engaged in mining above Fish camp in the Sierras. He prospected for about six months, when he went to Oakland and engaged in the restaurant business. After eighteen months he came to Fresno, locating here in January, 1888. He first worked at the fruit business in the Scandinavian Colony, having charge of a vineyard until it was sold, and four months later he moved into Fresno. Shortly after this he began the dairy business, which has since occupied his attention, he being the first to introduce this work as a means of livelihood. He began with one cow and gradually increased his herd until two years later he moved to a farm two miles out of the city, where he conducted his enterprise for several years. His dairy farm is now located on Kearney avenue six miles west of Fresno, where he has thoroughbred Jersey and Holstein stock, about three hundred in number, his ranch having two hundred and eleven acres devoted to alfalfa. In February, 1903, the business was incorporated under the name of the Jersey Farm Dairy, with Mr. McIndoo as president and manager. They run five wagons in delivery, while the balance is manufactured into butter at their creamery. Mr. McIndoo also owns an eighty-acre farm on section 18, three miles east of Fresno, and leases five hundred acres of the Newhall estate adjoining, where he raises hay and grain. He also leases the East Fresno tract, where he is engaged in the raising of hay and grain. At Lindsay, Tulare county, he improved an orange grove, consisting of fifty acres, thirty of which are bearing navels. He is one of three interested in the Lindsay Independent Packing Company, incorporated, Mr. McIndoo being vice-president. They have a packing house in Lindsay and a fine grove of oranges and are meeting with satisfactory success in the enterprise.

Near Gadridge, Ontario, Mr. McIndoo was united in marriage with Charlotte Graham, a native of that place, and the daughter of James Graham, a blacksmith and carriage manufacturer, now residing in Fresno. They are the parents of three children: Edith, Ivan Carter and Claribel. Fraternaly Mr. McIndoo is associated with the Masons, having been made a member of this organization in Wingham, Ontario, and is now a Royal Arch Mason, belonging to the lodge in Fresno. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically Mr. McIndoo is a staunch Republican. In the line of his business he belongs to the Milkmen's Association.

J. B. CHINN was born in Kentucky November 29, 1830, a son of Joel H. and Caroline (Blackwell) Chinn. The grandfather, John Chinn, was a native of Virginia, of English descent. Later in life he removed to Kentucky, locating near Lexington, where he engaged in general farming. He married a Miss Higgins and became the father of eighteen children. Being a great believer in education he did much for his family in that direction. He was an ardent admirer of Henry Clay. The father of our subject was engaged in the manufacture of hemp, and also carried on farming. In 1852 he moved to Missouri and followed farming until his death, in 1874, being seventy-three years of age. He was the father of nine children, J. B. being the eldest of the family.

J. B. Chinn was reared in Kentucky and at the age of sixteen began teaching, which vocation he followed for nearly four years, meanwhile spending some time in St. Louis and two winters in the Gulf states, returning from the south in the spring of 1850. In September following he matriculated as a student in Bethany College, in Virginia, of which Alexander Campbell was president, and pursued his collegiate studies until the beginning of 1854. On the first of May of that year he started across the plains in company with four other young men, bringing through some twenty-five head of selected horses. The trip was a long and trying one, each man in the party being compelled to stand guard every night two hours to protect the stock. Finally, having had one Indian fight on the Humboldt, they arrived at Sacramento September 15. After casting about for awhile J. B. Chinn accepted a position as teacher in San Jose, taught out the term, and February 4, 1855, left for what was then thought to be a great mining field, the Kern river. He and Wharton M. Moore, a college chum, fitted up with provisions and mining outfit, rockers, long toms, etc., and leaving San Jose, passed through the Pacheco Pass into the then seemingly limitless San Joaquin valley. Crossing Kings river near Visalia, they passed on by where is now the beautiful village of Portersville, and down to Posey creek at the base of the Sierra, on which stream they mined for two days, getting from $1 to $2 per day. At this place the range was crossed to Kern river. Gold could be found in many places in small quantities, but not in quantities to justify working.

After an interesting trip through an uninhabited region, abounding in wild horses, bear, elk, deer, antelope and Indians they arrived at San Jose May 1. On the third of the same month Mr. Chinn left for Iowa Hill, Placer county, where the summer was spent in fluming the American river. The venture was unsuccessful and in February, 1856, he took charge of the school in Butte county and taught without cessation in Oroville and Yolo county until November, 1861, at which time he went to the famous Comstock silver lode. For several years he was engaged in the lumber business and subsequently carried on farming in Carson valley, and was among the first in the then territory to plant alfalfa. In 1867, when the Overland Railroad had penetrated the heart of the Sierra, he located on the same and engaged in the wood and lumber business for twenty-two consecutive years, a business which proved to be very lucrative. Meanwhile, in 1884, he interested himself in a fruit and cattle ranch near Vacaville, in which he beguiled himself during the winter months when lumbering could not be carried on. The railroad got the lion's share of the profits, and it is his belief it has continued to get it during the long intervening years. Much money was spent fruitlessly, as many another man in the same calling, fruit-raising, would testify. Being tired of working for carriers and middlemen, and having heard of the resources of Tulare county, he went to Portersville in 1887, and engaged in alfalfa and cattle raising and general farming. He has enjoyed life in the exploiting of the great resources of this county.

Though verging on to seventy-five years Mr. Chinn is still active in the details of his business and alive to every move looking to the betterment of the community in which he lives. He is one of those who believe that employment is only another name of enjoyment. Religiously he is a believer in the fundamental principles set forth in the sacred oracles, and that the adherence to them builds up the best and highest type of civilization. Politically he thinks that all public utilities should be used for the benefit of the people, and not for a few persons.

LEVI HUNT. The name of Levi Hunt is associated with all that is honorable and progressive in the ranching vicinity of Bakersfield, where he owns sixty acres of land on the Kern Island canal, and is engaged in horticulture and stock-raising. Comparatively speaking he is a new comer to the vicinity, having arrived in 1899 to pasture stock raised on his ranch in San Luis Obispo county. So favorably impressed was he with the advantages at the disposal of the rancher of Kern county that he bought his ranch a year later, after disposing of the majority of his large herd. Naturally, he found many improvements on the property, but he is a progressive and wide-awake man, and the next few years will doubtless see many modern changes as the direct result of his investigation and advancement.

Mr. Hunt has spent all but nine years of his life in California and he comes of one of the pioneer families of 1852 which added brawn and useful endeavor to the unsettled conditions of that time. Born in Gentry county, Mo., October 5, 1841, he is a son of John Hunt, a native of Ohio, a natural mechanic, and who for many years was an engineer on boats plying the Missouri and Mississippi rivers. Mr. Hunt brought his family overland in 1852 with wagons and ox-teams, and after a journey of five months settled at Petaluma, Sonoma county, and ran a blacksmith shop for a couple of years. He then removed north to Oregon, remained a year, and upon returning to California took up his residence in Monterey county, where he operated a blacksmith shop for many years. His next home was near Watsonville, and in 1882 he settled near Rio Grande, San Luis Obispo county, and ran a shop until selling out in 1900. Mr. Hunt then came to live with his son, Levi, where he still makes his home, and where, at the age of eighty-six, he still finds pleasure and profit in the carrying on a small blacksmith shop. His wife, a native of Kentucky, shared his uphill early fortunes and later prosperity, and reared his four sons to be conscientious and capable men. Mrs. Hunt lived to be seventy-seven years of age.

Until his twenty-first year Levi Hunt remained in his father's home, but much earlier than that learned the miller's trade, at which he worked in San Luis Obispo county for about ten years. In Santa Cruz county he married Miss Frances Haynes, a native of Chili, South America, and six children have been born of the union. The oldest son, Edward, owns a paying mine known as the Rocky Mountain Mine, near Randsburg, in which his father has an interest; George holds the responsible position of cattle boss on the Ta Jone ranch, Kern county; Albert is part owner of the mine with his brother Edward. Ida is the wife of William Branch, a rancher of this county; Alice is the wife of Mr. Collins, a plumber and gas fitter of Kern City; and Fannie is living at home.

Giving up his trade in San Luis Obispo county, Mr. Hunt engaged in the cattle business there, owning sometimes as high as five hundred head. During the dry season of 1899 he came here to pasture his cattle, with the result that he has become one of the most promising ranchers of the vicinity of Bakersfield. He takes pardonable interest in the politics of his neighborhood, voting the Republican ticket, but stanchly refusing official recognition. Fraternally he is a Mason.

HON. JAMES NULL WALKER. One of the pioneers of the San Joaquin valley, and a man who has ever had the interests of the people at heart, is James Null Walker, who was born February 7, 1829, in DeSoto, Mo., a son of William G. and Elizabeth (Null) Walker, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Missouri, whose parents came to that state from Pennsylvania. William C. Walker settled in Missouri in 1824 and engaged in the stock business on an extensive scale, marketing his stock in New Orleans. James Null Walker comes from sturdy German parentage and was reared on a farm and received his education in the subscription schools. He early became interested in the handling of stock. At the age of fifteen he was sent to New Orleans in charge of his father's stock, and as he grew older was taken into partnership with him and became prominent as a drover in the southern city. He made his last trip to that city in 1849 and his share of the proceeds enabled him to purchase an outfit to come to California, which he did in 1850, making the long trip overland with ox-teams and arriving in Sacramento in August of that year. He followed mining in Grass valley and also in Mariposa county, and engaged in merchandising in Coarse Gold Gulch, Fresno county, conducting a large business with the miners and extending credit, so that in 1860, when the mines gave out, he had to close out the business at a heavy loss. He then embarked in ranching at Fine Gold and in 1863 went to the foothills. He purchased cattle at $4 per head to stock his range there. In 1867 he located on his present place on the north side of the San Joaquin river in what is now Madera county. He has a fine place, well improved and devoted to the raising of cattle and alfalfa. A meadow one and a quarter miles by a half mile, is a special feature, being one of the best in the valley. He has added from time to time until he now owns thirteen hundred acres on the river. His first stock venture was in raising mules, after which he engaged in the sheep business for twelve years, and since then has devoted his time almost exclusively to the cattle business. He also owns one hundred and sixty acres set to vines near Malaga and one year's yield gave him one hundred and forty-eight tons of raisins. As he has prospered in his business ventures he has gained the confidence of his fellow townsmen and in 1861 was elected to the state legislature and served two terms. In 1866 he was elected sheriff of Fresno county and served one term, was re-elected for a second term without opposition, and refused a third term. In 1870 he was again elected to the state legislature and served one term.

In Fresno county Mr. Walker was united in marriage with Agnes Cranmer, a native of Calaveras county, Cal., and they have had seven children: Clarence; J. N.; William; Belle, the wife of D. S. Jones; Sallie, the wife of John Patten; Addie; and Minfer, all residents of the San Joaquin valley. Mr. Walker was made a member of Lodge No. 186, I. O. O. F. of Millerton, then transferred to Fresno, but is not an active member. In politics a Democrat, he has served officially, and it is said by his friends that as sheriff of the county he was the best official the county ever had.

In looking over the past Mr. Walker calls to mind the condition of the country when he first came to the San Joaquin valley. The settlers of that period are nearly all gone, and he is one of five men now left of the early settlers of Fresno county. The friends of Mr. Walker have taken pleasure in according him a place in the annals of the state that has claimed him as a resident for over half a century.

LINDSAY PARKER TIMMINS. Born October 8, 1864, near Ottawa, Canada, Lindsay Parker Timmins is a son of John and Margaret (Donnelly) Timmins, who are living on a farm near Ottawa; the former a native of La Shute, is a son of Andrew Timmins, who was born in the north of Ireland of English ancestry, settled in the Province of Quebec and later removed to a farm near Ottawa, where he died. John Timmins was a member of the town council in earlier days, and in his religious views is a Methodist. L. P. Timmins is the fifth child in a family of eleven children, nine of whom are living. He was educated in the district and high schools and learned the blacksmith's trade on the home farm. In 1881 he went to Michigan and the same year to Minnesota. Deciding to come to California, in 1882 he made the trip and settled in Fresno county, where he found employment on a ranch near Fowler, then ran a derrick fork on a thresher in the season of '83, and that fall began work at his trade in Fresno. He conducted a successful business until 1886, when he sold out and engaged in getting out logs by contract for Judge Donohoo and later for Musick & Son. This he followed until 1892. In the meantime in 1887 he had married, in Fresno, Emma Studor, a native of Yonkers, N. Y. In 1892 Mr. Timmins purchased a ranch of twenty acres on Blackstone avenue, which he set out in vineyard. January, 1893, he was appointed outside deputy under sheriff Scott, and gave his entire time to the performance of the duties of that position for six years. The fall before Mr. Scott took the office, Sontag and Evans had committed their several crimes, and were still at large. The incoming officer took up the hunt, which terminated in the fight at Stone Corral, by the Fresno posse. Mr. Timmins having originated the plan of capture, was detained from being present by the Heath case then on trial, and where considerable courage was a necessity as feeling ran high and revolvers were drawn several times. That evening with a comrade, Mr. Timmins left for Stone Corral, where the fight had taken place. Sontag had received seven wounds, from the effects of which he afterward died, and Evans was very badly wounded. Not making the capture the desperadoes made their way to the ranch of E. H. Perkins in Wilcox valley and sent Mr. Perkins' son to Visalia with an offer of surrender if the reward would be equally divided with Mrs. Evans. When the Fresno officers left Visalia the officers of that city refused to go into the mountains as they had already lost so many men, but they agreed to watch Evans' house in case he should go back there. When the offer to surrender reached them they could not withstand the temptation of a capture and securing fast teams, passed the Fresno men who also increased their speed and arrived as the others entered the room, where the robbers were staying. Jay Scott's advice being heeded that night prevented bloodshed between the rival posses. Sontag died in the county jail, and Evans afterward made his escape with the aid of Murello, an ex-convict, who was employed at the restaurant that furnished meals to Evans. This was done by the ruse of a suspected train hold-up at Goshen. Mr. Timmins and the other deputies went to the scene, during which time Evans and Murello escaped to the mountains. Pursuit was made at once and continued day and night, the party gradually lessening to Timmins, Henry and Peck, who determined to effect the capture or give up their lives in the attempt. They persistently followed and searched the mountains, swimming the streams and exposing themselves many times to the outlaws, who knew the mountains and were in advance, until after two months when the cabin was reached and set on fire, and then a running fire and chase began towards the plains, and, Visalia being reached, they found their men had surrendered about thirty minutes before. The criminals were sentenced for life, and Evans frequently stated that Murello had drawn a bead on Mr. Timmins several times as they passed them hidden in the bushes, but was induced by Evans to spare his life as he had been kind to him while a prisoner and was attentive to his children when they came to see him. During his terms in office the Dilwood and James gangs were run down, about fifteen receiving sentence. Also the Saunders case, in which Mr. Timmins secured the evidence which caused conviction. In 1899 he left the sheriff's office and entered the police department as a private detective and special officer. February, 1901, he was appointed deputy United States marshal of the southern district of California, by H. Z. Osborne, of Los Angeles, having under his charge the following counties in the northern division of that district: Merced, Madera, Mariposa, Fresno, Kings, Tulare, Kern and Inyo, discharging the duties of his office without favor. He stands high in the esteem of his superiors and the citizens of Fresno.

By his marriage three children have been born, Mabel Margaret, Claude Walter and Alice. Mr. Timmins is a member and past master workman of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of the Maccabees. He is a Republican and a member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce. In all matters that have had for their object the advancement of the county, Mr. Timmins has been a liberal supporter. In the pursuit of his duties he has shown himself a fearless officer and by his kindly manners has gathered about him a host of friends.

A. C. MAUDE, who, at the time of his death, September 27, 1904, was an esteemed citizen of Bakersfield, Kern county, was born in Derbyshire, England, August 13, 1839. In the spring of 1859, when nearly twenty years of age, he came to the United States, landing in Boston, where he followed any occupation that offered an honest livelihood. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, he gave his services and was employed in various capacities, but did not regularly enlist until August, 1863, when he became sergeant of Company B, Seventeenth New York Veteran Volunteers. When in front of Atlanta, under Sherman, in July of 1864, he was promoted to be second lieutenant. He was with his regiment in Virginia, then down the Mississippi, and from Vicksburg to Meridian and return, up the Red river with the Banks expedition, then with Sherman to Atlanta, later helped to head off General Hood, then on to the sea, from there through North Carolina, and finally, in July of 1865, after the Grand Review, received an honorable discharge at Washington.

At the close of the war Mr. Maude entered the freight office of the Rensselaer & Saratoga Railroad Company, at Green Island, N. Y., but soon went to Richmond, Va., where he worked in the sutler's department, and thence to Jackson, Miss., where he became a post trader and army sutler, later following the same occupation in Tennessee and Louisville, Ky., during the reconstruction period, in connection with the Seventh Cavalry and Fourth Infantry. His work took him at different times to all the military posts between Natchez and Louisville. On the abandonment of the reconstruction policy and the disbanding of the army, he came west, stopping meanwhile at different posts. He came to what is now Bakersfield in July of 1872, and took up government land six miles away, on what is now Bellevue ranch, engaging there in ranching and general stock pursuits. In 1874 he sold his property for $4,000 to J. B. Haggin, who afterward sold it to the Kern County Land Company.

From 1875 to 1879 Mr. Maude was engaged in the real estate and insurance business. During the latter year he purchased the Weekly Californian, and in 1880 established a daily edition of the paper, the first daily newspaper to be established in Kern county, managing and owning the same until the spring of 1882, when he sold out. Subsequently he conducted a real estate and insurance business, although meanwhile he had other interests, especially from 1894 to 1902, when he owned and published the Kern Standard of Kern City. At various times he erected buildings in Bakersfield, and the destruction of some of these in the great fire of July, 1889, entailed upon him a loss of $30,000. In Bakersfield he married Miss Helen E. Lechner, who was born in Indiana, and they became the parents of three children, Harry E., an employe of the Southern Pacific Railway Company; Sarah Helen and Martha M., who are students in the Bakersfield schools.

Upon the organization of the local lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks Mr. Maude became one of its charter members, and he was also connected with the Masonic fraternity. He was ever a staunch Republican, active in the political life of every community where he made his home. For fifteen years he served as United States commissioner, and for twenty years acted as a notary public. He was interested in educational matters and served on the school board for one term. The death of a city trustee, T. E. Harding, in November, 1902, causing a vacancy on the board, he was appointed to fill the same, and in April, 1903, was duly elected to the office. As chairman and secretary of the Republican County Central Committee at various times he was enabled to do effective work for his party, especially during campaigns and at elections. For six years he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee. At his death Mr. Maude left many friends as he was held in high esteem by all with whom he had had either business or social relations.

JAMES FRIKKA. While the identification of Mr. Frikka with the citizenship of California covers a comparatively brief period only, he has established a reputation for honesty and energy among his neighbors in Fresno county and conducts with characteristic thrift the property on which he has established his home. The date of his arrival in California was 1874, but he came then as a prospector rather than as a permanent settler, and during the following years he had many interesting experiences in the mines of northern California. When he came to the coast the second time it was in company with his family and with the intention of establishing a permanent home in the west. Since then he has operated a very large tract of land situated seven miles east of Clovis, where he is engaged in raising wheat and barley. In the cultivation of his lands he uses three ten-horse teams and the work of harvesting the crops is carried forward by means of a combined harvester requiring thirty head of horses.

The native land of Mr. Frikka is Denmark, and he was born at Dalby, Jutland, Jylland, October 18, 1848, being a son of Hans and Maria (Randoup) Larsen, natives respectively of Schleswig and Jylland. He was one of two sons, his brother, George, being a farmer in the state of Washington. His father served as a soldier in the Danish army during the struggle of 1848 and later engaged in the milling business at Kolding, where both he and his wife died at the age of seventy-two years. In religion they were faithful members of the Lutheran Church. At the time of removing to Kolding their son, James, was a youth of eighteen years, strong, alert, energetic and well educated in the Danish language. With a view to improving his opportunities, in 1873 he crossed the ocean to America. After a year at Oxford, N. J., he came to the Pacific coast and spent five years in the mines of California. During 1879 he went to Arizona, where he was engaged as shift boss for the Tombstone Milling and Mining Company. On resigning that position, in 1884 he returned to the home of his boyhood, where he enjoyed a visit amid the scenes familiar to him from his earliest recollections. After a year at the old home he returned to his former position in Tombstone, Ariz. In a few months, however, he went back to Denmark and purchased a hotel and farm at Bramdrop. In addition to managing the hotel he conducted the farm, but later sold that place and bought another farm. An experience of some years in Denmark proved not altogether profitable nor congenial, and in the fall of 1902 he again came to the new world, this time to cast his fortunes with the agriculturists of California. Shortly after his arrival in Fresno county he leased the ranch of D. C. Sample, comprising twenty-three hundred acres, and on this immense tract he has since conducted extensive farm operations. In all of his plans he has the co-operation of his wife, who was Christine Peterson, a native of Bramdrop, Denmark, and the two labor in sympathy and with ceaseless energy in order to secure good advantages for their children and establish the family fortunes upon a substantial basis. Both are earnest members of the Lutheran Church and give to movements for the religious upbuilding of their community. In fraternal matters Mr. Frikka holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Devoted to the welfare of his adopted country, he may always be found upon the side of progress, justice and religion. Of his children the eldest, Maria, is the wife of James Thompson of Enterprise, and the others, Carrie, Hans, Johanna and Andrew, remain with their parents on the home farm.

O. H. P. DUNCAN. As a pioneer citizen of worth and ability, O. H. P. Duncan is remembered by all and honored for the qualities which distinguished his manhood. He was born in Illinois October 16, 1836, and when only sixteen years old started across the plains to California. Through a painful and severe accident—the breaking of his thigh—he was compelled to remain a year in Salt Lake City. The following year he came on to California and went to mining in Placerville. After four years of this life he came to Tulare county and engaged in the sheep business, and the following year (1858) he bought eighty acres of land on Deep creek. After his marriage, which occurred in December, 1860, he located on his wife's land, five miles east of Visalia, removing in 1866 to that city while he served as deputy sheriff. In 1867 he went to Kings river, near Kingston, and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres and bought eighty acres adjoining, making that location his home until the spring of 1872. He then moved to Lemon Cove and bought all of the land, seven hundred and forty acres, which he sold in 1874, then located in Springville. He there purchased eighty acres, including the hotel and springs, and engaged in stock-raising for two years. In December, 1876, he went to the South Tule district and bought one hundred and sixty acres and pre-empted a like number, and also secured eighty acres from the railway company. This continued to be his home until his death, which occurred in June, 1889, after a long and lingering illness following a paralytic stroke.

Mr. Duncan's widow was in maidenhood Matilda Swanson, a native of Peru, La Salle county, Ill., where she was born February 20, 1843. Her father, John Swanson, was a native of Union county, Ind., who came to Illinois and located in Putnam county, where he conducted a flour mill. Later he engaged in farming, in 1850 crossing the plains to California by means of ox teams. Upon his arrival he engaged in mining in Eldorado county until the following year, when he returned east for his family, which he brought back in 1852. They left their home in the Prairie state March 5, and arrived in Placerville in August. There the father engaged in mining for a time, in the same year locating at Knights Ferry on Stanislaus river, where he conducted a store in conjunction with his mining operations. He eventually went to Suisun City, Solano county, and took up land, which he found was a Spanish grant, so in June, 1854, he located near Visalia, Tulare county, where he bought four hundred and eighty acres of land. Later he added two hundred acres of school land, and in 1858 bought the seven hundred and forty acres which comprise Lemon Cove. He there built the Lemon Cove ditch and did much toward the development and upbuilding of this section. The freshest of 1861 and '62 washed out everything in this section, and he afterward sold the property. His death occurred in August, 1863. His wife, formerly Hannah Sherman, of Ohio, also died near Visalia. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Duncan, to whom all the property was deeded, took charge of the land and conducted it for a time, finally disposing of all but one hundred and twelve acres, which is devoted to general farming and stock-raising. To herself and husband were born the following children: John W., of Portersville; Oliver K.; Clara V.; May M.; Pelham; Rey M.; Ada I., the wife of D. Pratt, of the North district; Hayne; and Claude. Four children are deceased, Oliver K., Clara V., May M. and Hayne. The others are located in the vicinity of their childhood's home, while Claude is living with his mother and caring for the home property. Mr. Duncan was always active in the counsels of the Democratic party.

When Mrs. Duncan first came to Tulare county the Indians were very troublesome and had massacred many of the settlers. They were met at Kaweah Bridge and at Woodville by Indians, who told them not to cross. Her father traded and made friends with them, so they came on to Cameron creek. She learned the Indian language and for some years the Indians were her only playmates. In 1855, on one of her trips to the Indian camp all the squaws were gone, and shortly afterward an Indian girl came to see her and told her that the Indians were going to kill all the white people. In a panic the little white pioneer girl ran with the news to older people, and thus the settlers of that section escaped, the Tulare county Indian war following. She has witnessed great changes during her long residence in the west and has taken an active part, with her husband, in the progress and development of this section.

EDWARD E. BUSH. The industrial history of Hanford lies parallel to and absorbs the life history of Edward E. Bush. This leading real estate man of Kings county, who has probably done more to stimulate varied activity in this particular part of the state than any other single agency, and who is widely known as the organizer of the Hanford Abstract Company, organizer and manager of the Hanford Gas & Power Company, hardware merchant, oil promoter, developer of extensive vineyards, and all-around successful business man, has been a resident of this section since his fifth year, and at one time used to drive cattle over the desert upon which Hanford has since risen to importance. He was born at Waukon, Allamakee county, Iowa, June 25, 1859, a son of Moses D. Bush, whose association with the pioneer industries of Kings county furnished a notable example of industry, public spirit, and the old fashioned virtues of kindness, generosity and humanity.

Moses D. Bush was born and reared on a Hudson river farm in New York state, and, being left an orphan at the age of nine, was obliged to early assume the responsibility of self-support. When grown to maturity he went west to the shores of Lake Michigan, and where Chicago now astonishes the world purchased a hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which he lived and ran a boarding house for a few years. From Chicago he returned east and married Emily E. Randall, and upon his return located in Allamakee county, Iowa, where he helped to survey the boundary line of the state, and subsequently practiced surveying in connection with the cultivation of a large farm. In 1864 he came overland to California, and after running a small foundry at San Jose for three years, sold out and came to what is now Kings county and took up land upon which the town of Lemoore now stands. When the railroad made the town a possibility he removed to an adjoining quarter-section and engaged in farming and stock-raising with great success, at the same time exerting his influence to acquire for himself and neighbors the advantages enjoyed by the agriculturists in the settled communities of the east. When he first arrived in the county Samuel Wright and H. F. Bicknell were the only other settlers, a few stock-raisers temporarily availing themselves of the grazing advantages, completing the inhabitants. Mr. Bush became enthusiastic in praise of the county, and was the means of inducing many emigrants to settle within its boundaries. As an inducement he allowed them to live on his farm without pay until such time as they could investigate and select a place of residence, in the meantime sharing his vegetables and grain with them, and otherwise holding out encouragement and assistance. With four or five others he started the first ditch in Kings county, taking water from Kings river; and when the lower Kings river ditch company was organized he was one of the foremost of its promoters, sharing with the other settlers the labor of digging the ditch with shovels, and with them receiving compensation by taking stock in the new enterprise. He lived on his second farm until 1879, when he located on four hundred acres eight miles south of Hanford in the Lakeside district, and engaged in farming and dairying. In 1884 he sold his farm and retired from active life in Hanford, where his death occurred November 16, 1893, at the age of seventy-six years. Politically he was a Democrat, and though never an office seeker, held a number of local offices. His wife, who survived him until eighty-two years of age, and who spent her last years with her son, Edward E., was a member of the Adventist Church, which he attended but never joined. But two or three men who shared with him the rigors of the crude pioneer days are living at the present time, but these are loud in their praise of his honesty, his unselfishness and his practical common sense.

When his family came to Tulare, or what is now Kings county, Edward E. Bush was eight years old, and it may be imagined his educational and other opportunities were extremely limited. He distinctly recalls walking five miles to the nearest school house, over plains covered with wild cattle, and of assisting with the clearing of the farm as soon as his strength permitted. In 1881 he started on an independent farming enterprise, but the following year came to Hanford and started a livery business on a small scale. He was successful in the latter capacity, increased his equipment and trade and disposed of his business in 1890 at a gratifying profit. From then until the present time he has been engaged in a real estate business in Hanford and vicinity, and has probably held out greater inducements to settlers than any other man similarly employed in the county. He has never stopped to consider the cost of any departure calculated to make this county a pleasant and profitable place in which to live, and has often advanced or given money when the requisite funds were not forthcoming. This tendency on his part was particularly noticeable when the question of extending the Santa Fe Railroad from Fresno to the Kern county line arose, and it was principally owing to the generosity and untiring zeal of Mr. Bush that Hanford was able to profit by the passing through of the road.

At an early stage of the country's development Mr. Bush ascertained its particular adaptability to vine growing, and after most satisfactory experiments, started, in 1889, the Del Monte Vineyard Company, which set out one hundred and sixty acres in vines and trees. In 1890 he organized the Banner Vineyard Company, which purchased three hundred and twenty acres, set the land out in vines and trees, and disposed of it the same year. A few months later he bought the Grangeville Vineyard of one hundred and sixty acres, set out vines and sold the second year. About the same time he bought a section of land in the Foster section, half of which he set out in vines and sold to P. McRae, in 1891 planting the other half and disposing of it to the Ormona Orchard & Vineyard Company. In the fall of 1891 he went to Butte, Mont., and organized the Silver Bar Vineyard & Orchard Company, set out two hundred and forty acres in orchard and vineyard, and disposed of entire to the company. In the spring of 1892 he set out half a section of land in prunes and peaches near Butte City, went into partnership with seven other men, the same year inducing eastern men of capital to come west and purchase the property. In 1890 he purchased and platted the Reddington Addition of forty lots in Hanford, and soon after bought an additional twenty acres in the northern part of the town, platted half of it, and has since seen it develop into the most exclusive residence section of the city. Another twenty acres was purchased in the town about the same time, and sold in one tract.

Mr. Bush's active interest in oil began in the early '90s, and in 1896 he organized the Consolidated Oil & Development Company with a capital stock of $100,000. The company bought a section of land in the Kroyenhagen district, sank a well and found oil, but not a producer. He then organized the Caribou Oil Company in the Coalinga country for $100,000, became superintendent and manager of the same, and with C. C. and W. A. Spinks bought a section of land in Kings county. A portion of this land was afterward sold to the Peerless Oil Company, eighty acres to the Merced Oil Company, and eighty acres to the Great Northern Oil Company. The land still owned by the original company has five wells in operation and is yielding its promoters a handsome yearly income. In the Kern River country Mr. Bush organized the Provident Oil Company, with a capital stock of $200,000, developed sixty acres in oil, but suspended operations owing to cheap oil. He also organized the McFadden Oil & Mining Company with a capital stock of $100,000, put down a well, and, although operations have since been suspended, the company retains possession of the land. In both of these companies Mr. Bush owns a controlling interest. A still more ambitious effort at oil production was his organization of the Del Rey Oil Company for $1,000,000, the company owning four hundred acres, forty of which are in the heart of the Kern river field. Seven producing wells are the result of this combination of capital, and during the development of the wells Mr. Bush was superintendent and general manager, and still owns stock in the company, as well as hundreds of acres of undeveloped lands in the same world-famed locality. While his coal interests have been on a comparatively small scale, Mr. Bush has been instrumental in interesting many in this future great resource of the county. In 1898 he organized the Del Monte Coal Company, which developed coal lands in the western part of the county, but owing to exorbitant shipment rates was obliged to suspend operations.

The Hanford Abstract Company was organized with a paid up capital of $10,000, and since November, 1901, Mr. Bush has been superintendent and manager, at the same time owning a controlling interest in the stock. He has been directly concerned with the majority of the improvements which have marked the growth of Hanford from a village to a thriving industrial community, one of his most noteworthy efforts having been in connection with supplying the town with gas. With four stockholders he organized the Hanford Gas & Power Company, of which he is secretary and general manager, and which company has erected one of the finest plants in the state of California at a cost of $60,000. The plant has been running for about seven months, and during that time has demonstrated its utility and money-making advantages. Although a staunch Democrat, Mr. Bush has invariably refused official recognition, but has served as secretary of the last central committee, and has been a delegate to numerous conventions. In the fall of 1892 he was one of those most interested in the division of Kings from Tulare county, generously contributing time and money to secure so manifest an advantage for the settlers of the county. He was appointed a member of the committee on organization by the governor, the other members being S. E. Biddle, John Malone, W. J. Newport, William Ogden and G. K. Wendling.

In Tulare county, December 21, 1884, Mr. Bush was united in marriage with Emma L. Byrd, a native of California, and they have four children: Ruby Pearl, Clarence E., Moses Lyman and Grover L. Mr. Bush is a welcome member of various fraternal organizations, including the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Independent Order of Foresters. Politically he is a Democrat. As a type of the captains of industry who have planted civilization in its highest form in the country west of the Rocky Mountains, Mr. Bush is entitled to a place in the remarkable history of a resurrected desert, and the manner in which he has exploited the opportunities offered by the state of California may well serve as a model for future commercial, industrial and social advancement.

GEORGE W. STIMPSON. For some generations the Stimpson family resided in Maine. George Washington Stimpson, Sr., who was a native of that state, removed to Michigan and settled at Cheboygan, where he embarked in the lumbering business. A few years later he removed to the present site of Mackinaw, Cheboygan county, where, at old Fort Mitchell, had once occurred a terrible Indian massacre. He was the first white man to settle there, built the first house and the wharves, and then began fishing, sending out many boats on the lake and employing over one hundred hands. When the fishing season came to an end he engaged in lumbering until the opening of spring again permitted the pursuit of his favorite occupation. Along the entire shore of the lake there was no shipper who sent out as large consignments as he, and his success was recognized among all who were familiar with the fishing business. Politically he was a Democrat. Elected the first justice of peace in Mackinaw, he held the office until his death, which occurred at sixty-three years of age. During the Civil war he served as a quartermaster-general in the Federal army, his headquarters being at Fortress Monroe. His wife, Elvira A. Pillsbury, was born in New Hampshire of an old family of that state, and now makes her home in Mackinaw, Mich. Of their four sons and two daughters all are living but one son. Of these, George W., Jr., was next to the youngest and is the only one on the Pacific coast. He was born in St. Albans, Me., August 15, 1859, and at seven years of age accompanied his parents to Cheboygan, Mich., three years later going to Mackinaw with the family. After completing the studies of the public schools he entered the Northern Indiana Normal at Valparaiso, Ind., and after completing a course of study there took up veterinary surgery. In 1880 he matriculated in the Ontario Veterinary College at Toronto, from which he was graduated in 1883, with the highest honors of his class, and the degree of Member of the Ontario College of Veterinary Surgeons.

Believing Quincy, Ill., would offer excellent advantages for his work, Dr. Stimpson settled there, an entire stranger to everyone. Notwithstanding this disadvantage, he soon had established a valuable practice and won a reputation for skill in veterinary science. The high opinion held of his skill is evidenced by his appointment, unsolicited, as assistant state veterinarian of Illinois; and is further proved by his credentials from the board of live stock commissioners. After three years of service in the office of assistant veterinarian he resigned upon leaving the state. While his practice in Quincy aggregated $9,000 per year, the health of his wife was such that a change of climate seemed imperative, and he therefore brought the family to California in February of 1888. As soon as they were west of the Rockies she commenced to improve and after settling at Oakland soon regained her health. Meanwhile Dr. Stimpson established himself in practice in Oakland, where he built and conducted a hospital for animals on Nineteenth street and San Pablo avenue. In addition he responded to call from the large ranches in that part of the state and was given the charge also of many fine standard and race horses. After a time, devotion to his practice undermined his strength and he was obliged to seek a different climate; therefore in February, 1903, came to Fresno, where he is now a leading veterinary and also engaged in breeding and raising standard-bred horses. He is the owner of Kohlan King, ten years old, a Wilkes, Sidney, Strathmore, Hambletonian trotting stallion, combining the greatest blood lines of the present day; and further owns Kohlan Prince, sired by Kohlan King, five years old, and considered by competent judges without a superior in the west.

Politically Dr. Stimpson is a Democrat, a believer in the principles championed by William Jennings Bryan and a promoter of the same by his influence and ballot. While living in Quincy he married Miss Emma Kibby, who was born in Palmyra, Mo., and by her he has three children, Earl, Ruby and Mildred. His connection with Masonry dates from his residence in Quincy, when he entered the blue lodge and was raised to the Royal Arch degree in Quincy Chapter No. 5. Since coming to California he and his wife have been identified with the Order of the Eastern Star. His fraternal relations are further extended by his association with the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM FRISBIE LEWIS, M. D. The first immigrant of the Lewis family came to America from Belfast in 1650, the time of Cromwell's entrance into Ireland, whence two sisters of this Thomas Lewis fled to Holland for refuge. Thomas Lewis was born in Belfast in 1628 and landed in New Amsterdam in March, 1650, and in that city became engaged in shipping and merchandising. In conjunction with Frederick Philipse and Thomas Delaval, he purchased the territory which became known as the Manor of Philipseburgh, now the city of Yonkers, stretching sixteen miles along the Hudson river. This property remained in the family until after Mr. Lewis' death, which occurred in his home on the northeast corner of Hanover Square and William street, New York City, in 1686, his widow, a year later, selling out these interests. His wife was formerly Geesji Barent, a native of Holland, who made her home in Beverwyck, now Albany, N. Y. Of their family a son, Leonard, born August 3, 1667, rose to prominence in New York City, serving in various public capacities, being alderman from 1696 to 1700, then governor-general of New York. Afterward he removed to Dutchess county, where he was the first resident representative in the Colonial Assembly, and the first judge and the first treasurer of Dutchess county. He was associated with Johannes Hardenburgh in the purchase of the great patent of land in Ulster county, N. Y. A man of much ability and a strong and upright character, he won the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. On December 23, 1772, by order of the New York legislature, he was awarded nine ounces and fifteen pennyweights of silver plate "for his services done at Albany in an expedition against the French in the Molawcks country." He married Elizabeth Hardenburgh, the daughter of J. Gerrit and Jalpje (Scheppmors) Hardenburgh, both natives of Holland. A son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, Gerardus, born January 2, 1698, became allied through marriage with one of the oldest and most prominent families of the eastern states, his wife being in maidenhood Rachel Kip. She was a descendant of the De Kype family (as the spelling of the name was originally given), which was prominent in the early history of France. Ruloff

De Kype, a sixteenth century ancestor, resided near Alencon, in Bretagne, where he took a prominent part in the civil war between the Catholics and Protestants, being a warm adherent of the Guises. Upon the triumph of the Protestants under Conde in 1562, his chateau was burned and he was forced to leave the country. He took refuge in the Low Countries with his three sons, where they lived for several years under an assumed name. Later he fought in the interests of his native country and was killed in the battle of La Charante. His son, Ruloff, remained in the Low Countries and eventually became a Protestant, locating in Amsterdam, where the family name (from which the French prefix De was dropped) flourished until nearly the middle of the seventeenth century. In 1635 Henry Kype came to New Amsterdam and brought his family with him, but later returned to Holland, while his sons remained and became important factors in the upbuilding of the western country. Of these sons Isaac became a prominent citizen of New York and acquired large landed property, including what now forms Central Park. Nassau street was then called Kip street in his honor and is so laid down in the early maps. Under the Great Burgher Right introduced into New Amsterdam by Governor Stuyvesant, Isaac Kip's name is to be found, being one of twenty which composed the aristocracy of New York at that time. He married Catalina de Suyers and reared a large family, of whom Rachel Kip became the wife of Gerardus Lewis. One of her brothers, Jacobus, born August 25, 1666, was especially prominent in the history of that time, being copatentee of the Manor of Kipsburg, which remained in the family for several generations. One-fifth of this afterward passed into the possession of the Livingston family, through the inheritance of the mother of Chancellor Livingston, the granddaughter of Col. Henry Beckman, to whom it was sold. Jacobus Kip left a son, Samuel, who was a Royalist during the Revolutionary war and served in the British army as a captain, having raised a company of cavalry, which he commanded in a valiant and daring manner. He survived the war, although he was severely wounded. Johannes, a son of Gerardus and Rachel (Kip) Lewis, married Anetjie Hendrickson, whose father located in New York state in 1631. Of their family a son, Gradus Lewis, married Angelica Gonsaulus, of Spanish descent. The founder of the Gonsaulus family came from Spain and located in Schenectady, N. Y., in 1684. He was a member of Captain Merrill Teunises' military company at Kingston, while his descendants became prominent in the French and Indian wars. A son of Gradus Lewis, John by name, married Ann Eliza Frisbie, a daughter of Dr. William and Elizabeth (Davidson) Frisbie, of Vermont, where he practiced medicine, following it later, however, in Phelps, N. Y. The Frisbie family is of English and Scotch descent, and the Davidsons of Scotch ancestry, the great-grandfather of both families serving in the Revolutionary war, the maternal ancestor taking part in the battle of Saratoga and dying in Vermont, while a Davidson served as a member on the Committee of Safety. John Lewis graduated in Albany Medical College with the degree of M. D., after which he practiced in Clyde, Wayne county, N. Y., until his death at the age of thirty-eight years. His wife, surviving him, married William D. Wylie. Her death occurred in Walworth, N. Y. By her first marriage she had two children.

Born October 3, 1829, in Clyde, Wayne county, N. Y., William Frisbie Lewis was reared to young manhood in that town and Phelps, receiving his preliminary education in the Phelps Academy, from which he was graduated. Deciding to take up the profession of his father, he spent the first two years in this study at Rush Medical College, Chicago, his third year being passed in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in New York City. From this latter institution he was graduated in 1854, with the degree of M. D., and practiced for a time in New York City. Following this he visited the hospitals of Europe when he went to Edinburgh, Scotland, to attend a course of lectures. In 1856 he located in Mankato, Minn., practicing medicine only a short time until he became interested in the land and banking business in that city. He was one of the first bankers of the city, his business being conducted for many years under the firm name of Lewis & Shaubut. On account of impaired health he was finally forced to give up his many business interests. While a resident of that locality in 1857 he was appointed captain of a company of forty men who went to quell the Indians that had taken part in the Spirit Lake massacre, and a battle was fought near Mankato. Seeking recuperation Dr. Lewis came to California and located in Oakland in 1887, since which time he has virtually retired from the active cares of life. The greater part of his time is spent in traveling, having been abroad four times, once around the world, all through India, Asia Minor and Egypt, as well as in nearly every state in the Union. Interested in the state of his adoption, he has purchased two fruit ranches in Tulare county.

In Vienna, Walworth county, Wis., June 15, 1857, Dr. Lewis was united in marriage with Albertine E. Cowham, a native of New York City. The family came originally from England, where her grandfather, James Murray Cowham, was an admiral in the British navy. His son, Joel F. Cowham, was a native of London, England, and a commander of a ship. In New York he married Mary Albertine Mellgren, a native of Gothenburg, Sweden, and in that state located his family while he continued to follow the sea until his death on the Isle of St. Thomas, in the West Indies. After her mother's death Mrs. Lewis went to Wisconsin and lived in Burlington with an uncle, receiving her education in the Female College of Milwaukee. To the doctor and his wife were born the following children: Irving C., engaged in the cattle business and a resident of Oakland; John Mellgren, a prominent attorney of San Francisco; Louisa; and Bertina, the wife of S. E. Grove of Oakland. Dr. Lewis is a Royal Arch Mason and politically adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Mrs. Lewis is a member of the Presbyterian Church. The doctor and his wife have several grandchildren, Irving C. Lewis having one son, Phillip Frisbie, born August 26, 1892, in Oakland, and Mrs. Grove the following children: Albertina, born August 14, 1885, at Spirit Lake, Iowa, and who will graduate at the Tulara high school this spring; Irene, born December 14, 1886, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and will graduate in two years; Mabel, born May 3, 1891, in Oakland, and is now attending the grammar schools; and Ruth, born November 6, 1896, in Oakland.

DAVID T. CURTIS. Although a resident of Oakland, making his home at No. 126 Ninth street, facing Madison Square, David T. Curtis is properly named among the representative citizens of the San Joaquin valley, where so large a part of his active life has been passed. A native of Warren county, Pa., he was born April 26, 1843, in the city of Columbus, a son of James and grandson of David Curtis. The latter was a native of France, who immigrated to the United States during the Revolutionary war, taking part in the struggle under Lafayette. Upon the close of hostilities he located in New York state, near Sherburne, where he engaged as a farmer and surveyor. He finally removed to Warren county, Pa., taking with him a large number of people who formed a colony in what was then a wilderness. He established the town of Columbus, where he owned the extensive lumber mills, and also engaged as a farmer and surveyor. His death occurred in the town and colony he had established, removing from the community an important factor in its development and progress. His son, James Curtis, was born in Chenango, N. Y., in 1813, and in boyhood was brought to Pennsylvania by his father. He was reared in the latter state, and in manhood became a farmer, removing to Iowa in 1852 and locating in Mitchell county. He followed farming in that location until he came to California, making the trip across the plains by ox teams. He left his family in Iowa, with the exception of David T. Curtis, of this review, whom he brought with him. They located at West Point, Calaveras county, Cal., where they both mined for two years, then located in Lathrop, San Joaquin county, and engaged in farming. In 1863 Mr. Curtis returned to Iowa and engaged again in farming near Frankville, Winneshek county. Once more locating in California in 1869, he made his home with David T. Curtis until 1872, when he removed to Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, Cal. He lived retired in that city until his death, which occurred in 1902, at the advanced age of ninety years. His wife, formerly Alzina Hill, of New York state, died in 1892. They were the parents of four sons and five daughters, of whom David T. was the eldest son.

David T. Curtis received a rather limited education in the common schools of Pennsylvania and Iowa, the knowledge which is his to-day being the result of his efforts in later years—his contact with the world, his reading on broad lines, and the mental training to which he has bent his mind. He came to California with his father when only sixteen years old, experiencing the dangers and hardships of the journey across the plains, and afterward engaging as a miner for two years. Coming to the San Joaquin valley in 1861, he engaged in farming in the vicinity of Lathrop, and in 1863 located eight miles west of Modesto, Stanislaus county, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he still owns. He engaged in its improvement and cultivation and now owns in that tract three hundred and twenty acres. In 1868 he bought six hundred and forty acres which is in the Turlock irrigation district. He remained in Stanislaus county until 1878, in which year he came to Fresno and bought section 4, at Del Rey, Fresno county, where for six years he engaged in general farming. In the year of his settlement in Fresno county he bought twenty-eight hundred and eighty acres adjoining Reedley on the south, and in 1890 colonized this land under the name of the Level Orchard Land Colony, which he sold to sixty-two people, retaining nine hundred acres, which is devoted to alfalfa and wheat. This is in the Alta Irrigation district and is well improved, being thoroughly well fenced, and is highly cultivated. In 1885 Mr. Curtis bought his Mountain View ranch twelve miles east of Reedley, along the foothills, consisting of twenty-five hundred and sixty acres of wheat and grazing land, where he raises cattle, a large per cent of his four hundred head of stock being Durham. He also owns six hundred and forty acres six miles south and one mile east of Reedley, which is devoted to alfalfa and pasture land; six hundred and forty acres in the Lake country devoted to pasture; and eighty acres adjoining the town site of Salida. On his Turlock ranch he has a fine Holstein dairy, and is at present interesting himself in the sugar beet industry on his Reedley ranch. He is very successful in his work, is a large land owner in the San Joaquin valley, and a supporter of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of this section.

In Frankville, Iowa, Mr. Curtis was united in marriage with E. Luella Hollaway, a native of La Porte, Ind. She is the daughter of Henry Hollaway, who died early, leaving his widow, Susan (Pagan) Hollaway, to rear her family. She was a woman of remarkable strength of character and intellect, a historian of no little note, and a temperance worker who did much for the cause. Mrs. Curtis is also interested in the temperance movement in Oakland, and was a delegate to the convention at Buffalo. She is a woman of rare personality, broad-minded and liberal, and possessing qualities which peculiarly adapt her for this work. She is a member of the Congregational Church of Oakland. Mr. Curtis is a staunch Republican politically, and gives his support to the advancement of this party.
